MUSIC: Vijay Iyer, pianist, brilliantly blends his jazz training and South Asian cultural roots in an intimate and powerful solo recital. 7 p.m. at the Augusta Savage Gallery. 545-5177.
MUSIC: The Juilliard String Quartet Violinists Joel Smirnoff and Ronald Copes, violist Samuel Rhodes, and cellist Joel Krosnick. 7:30p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
Wednesday, April 11
MUSIC: Sarmasonic 8:30p.m. at the Skybox. $ 577-4759
Thursday, April 12
MUSIC: Yusef Lateef Quintet featuring Van Freeman. 8p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
ARTS COUNCIL GRANT DEADLINE AT NOON TODAY!
Sunday, April 15
DANCE: Cobblestones for Emerging Choreographer Series An on campus final rehersal. 2p.m. in Tatman 204. 545-6063.
Wednesday, April 18
DANCE: Ram Roy A demonstration of Odissi, temple dancing from East India. 7p.m. in the Augusta Savage Gallery. 545-5177.
MUSIC: Mad Professor, master of electronic gadgetry. 8:30p.m. in the Skybox, 11th floor Campus Ctr. $ 577-4759
Thursday, April 19
FILM: Corpus: A Home Movie for Selena Introduction by Mari Castaneda Paredes, Asst. Prof. of Communication at UMass. Director of film will also be present. 7:30p.m. in Herter Auditorium 231. 545-3659
THEATER: Culture Clash Coast to Coast blends poetry, dance, music and visual arts to illustrate the Nuyorican experience in the 1970's. 8p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
THEATER: Bugaku Japanese Court Dance: Jo Ha Kyu 8p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
Tuesday, April 24
THEATER: Toast Improvisational Performance Theater 8p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. 545-3600
Thursday, April 26
THEATER: The Theater Gallo Coffee House 7p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. 549-5045.
DANCE: The Miami City Ballet featuring the work of George Balanchine. 7:30 in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
THEATER: Archipelago of Delight: A Puppet Musical Colorful puppetry, jazz-inspired music, and the medieval legend of the Seven Deadly Sins. 8p.m. in Rand Theater. $ 545-2511. Through 4/28 & 5/3-5/5.
Friday, April 27
LECTURE: Meet Faith Hubley: An Animated Spirit Academy-award winning filmmaker speaks about her work. 12p.m. in Herter 231. 545-6942
Saturday, April 28
MUSIC: Dawn Upshaw, Soprano and Richard Goode, Piano 7:30p.m. in the Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.

Exhibits

AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House · 545-5177
M-Tu 12-7 pm; W-F 1-5 pm
Other: Breaking Out of the Box
By Beverly Naidus
Through Apr. 24
Clay, Plaster, and Metal sculpture by students of Dorrace Hill
Apr. 30-May 4
Reception: Apr. 30, 5-7 p.m.

CENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area
Infirmary Way-Wheeler House
545-0680 M-TH 3-6 pm; SU 2-5 pm
BFA Thesis Exhibits
Michelina Soltro, April Jetters
Apr. 8-12
Kerry Benedict: Apr. 22-26
Rebecca Shinner: Apr. 29-May 5

HAMPDEN GALLERY & SCULPTURE GARDEN
Southwest Residential Area 545-0680 M-TH 12-6; SU 2-5 pm
Patterns of Pleasure and Models of the Mind by Kate Teale, Apr. 2-26
Reception: Apr. 26, 5-7p.m.
Gallery Talk: Apr. 26, 4p.m.
Sculpture Garden:
King and Queen by Bryan V. Thomas: Through May 30
Animism by Jason Yelle: Through May 30

HERTER ART GALLERY
125A Herter Hall 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
MFA Thesis Exhibitions
Annie Varnot, Petula Bloomfield, SarahDempsey,Hannah Donovan
Apr. 21-27
Lisa Lindgren, Jasel Kapedia
Apr. 29-May 4

STUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm; F 10-3 pm
Thesis Exhibitions:
Mike LoBlicca, Benjamin Bertocci
Apr. 9
Ashley Fountian and Tony Faith
Apr. 16-20
Stephen Capogna, Colleen Quinn
Apr. 23-27
Patrick Holbrook
April 30-May 4

UNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center 545-3670
M-F 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
Christopher Wilmarth: "Irving Inside"
Apr. 1-May18
Natalie Alper: Recent Paintings
April 1-May 18

Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events

Sponsored in part by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

4/01

UMass Arts Council·101 Hasbrouck Lab·545-0202

Idlewild rocks for attention

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

IDLEWILD with BRASSY and THE WARREN COMMISSION
Middle East
March 27

It's not often a member of what the music press refers to as "the next big band" is found peddling his wares to any passerby. Colin Newton, drummer for Idlewild, seemed to have no problem with it though, as my perusal of the merchandise table he was behind prompted him to direct my attention to a box of CDs of their latest album, 100 Broken Windows.

"Already got it." I replied, with a thumb up, but Newton was determined. Behind door number two was a stained Idlewild T-shirt that Newton was willing to part with at generous discount due to its damaged nature.

No sale, but behind door number three was Idlewild's tight live show, one obviously honed to perfection after years of practice. The band was passionate and at times thrilling, but at the end of the 40 minute set one was left to wonder if the short length was finely crafted no-nonsense perfection or rushed and half-assed.

The crowd, as for the previous two bands, certainly wasn't giving much back, apart from the startlingly few dancers amongst the politely clapping statues. When the band kicked it up a notch, however, the audience reciprocated accordingly, as during a slightly altered "Idea track" or the eerily distorted encore "Captain."

"Oasis sucks!" one audience member noted aloud mid-set, and without missing a beat singer Roddy Woomble replied "I know." Surely the band of ridicule can't match Idlewild's onstage energy, but interestingly Woomble conjures memory of Liam's concert antics. Woomble displays a rather self-assured sneer (of the endearing rock star kind), as well as the impression that he would rather eat glass than talk to the audience in between songs.

Certainly Woomble comes alive during the songs, and he often seems to be lost inside of them, as in "These wooden ideas" or the matter-of-fact verses of "Actually it's darkness" that lead to a defiant chorus. Voice issues may have been to blame for the singing of normally yelled bits on the album, as well as unfortunately shortened versions of "Little Discourage" and "Roseability."

Although brief, there was nothing half-hearted about Idlewild's performance – simply one brilliant rock song with a pop heart after another, just like the album, and just what everyone wanted.

The star of the evening was undeniably Brassy's Muffin Spencer, a captivating stage presence that matches the energy she exudes on their debut album Got It Made (no small feat). Dressed in boxing shorts and a tank top, she looked ready to spar, and she did, with amazing vocal creativity and sleek, jittery guitar hooks. The punches were aimed at a skeptical audience, but undeterred the band bounced through the best material from the album like "Work It Out" and the frenetic "No Competition."

"We've been together for three years, and I still get nervous enough to puke before shows, so everyone in the front row watch out," warned the guitarist and sometimes vocalist of opening act The Warren Commission. A blessed heckler, quite vocal throughout the band's set, replied, "You've been together for three years and you still suck!" That pretty much sums it up, although their happy summer day pop rock was occasionally intriguing.

Perceptions of Iran challenged

By Anna Spiewak
Washington Square News (New York U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK – Christiane Bird went to Iran to flirt with her childhood. She came back with a bundle of notes and a book idea.

The author of "Neither East Nor West: One Woman's Journey Through the Islamic Republic of Iran," Bird spent three years of her childhood in Iran during the 1960s, while her father volunteered as a doctor in the then undeveloped country. She went back alone in 1998 to compare her memories of childhood with her adult perceptions as a professional travel writer.

After the election of moderate President Mohammad Khatami in 1997, and more lenient laws for travelers, Bird was free to visit the mosques, pilgrimage sites, bath houses and prayer meetings that were once restricted to Muslims only. She was met mostly with hospitality and curiosity.

People asked where she was from and were fascinated to find out she's American. Just as the U.S. has misconceptions about Iran, the natives had delusions about America, from the images they saw in movies.

"They asked if I'm not afraid to go out in the street and get shot," she said. "They were also surprised to find out that I wore long skirts. They thought everyone here wears mini-skirts."

Bird, a thin thirty-something with cropped blond hair, stood at the Barnes & Noble podium on 86th Street last Monday evening, reading selected passages from her book. The author looked up occasionally as she talked of women getting arrested for wearing too much make-up or showing too much hair from underneath their chador, a traditional garment that covers all but a woman's face.

With the overthrow of the Shah, the Iranian government under Prime Minister Bazargan, Iran became the Islamic Republic in 1979, and adopted a new foreign policy that gave them independence from other countries' intervention.

"Islamic revival brought self-respect back to Iran," said Bird, based on her conversations with the natives.

Although the country advanced a great deal after the Iran-Iraq war of 1980-1988, many Americans still demonize Iran as the dark country of oppressors and terrorists.

In her book, the New York City resident set out to go beyond America's misconception of Iran and give the readers an understanding of their everyday lives behind the political structure.

"It's ignorant of us to lump them into one group," she said during an interview. "Some people there are quite Westernized and others more traditional."

Ironically, while women in Iran are still repressed in their sexuality, professionally they are almost as advanced as women in the West. Iranian women are free to work as college professors, doctors and business people, although the glass ceiling exists in their world as well, according to Bird. She said Iranian women participate in sports, such as soccer, even though it's tough to kick a ball around while wearing the hejab (body covering).

With strict curfew laws for youngsters, there is an underground world in Tehran, the country's capital, where young people meet up for a night of dancing and drinking — something that is seen as illegal in Muslim society, especially in smaller cities and villages.

"People are free to do what they want in the privacy of their own home, it's what they do in public that's more restricted," she said.

Bird said people in Iran want more individual freedom, but not at the price of another revolution.

"They want reform, not overthrow of government," she said.

The book, which was released March 13, has 10,000 copies in print, and is in its second printing according to Bird's publicist, Laurie Braverman. The reviews are mostly favorable, noting the author's fair account of Muslim society from a Western woman's point of view. However, one critic noted it's written in a somewhat travel-like chronological style.

■ Austen

continued from page 5

tance is there between us and them, when we strip away the superficial trappings of time and culture?

EMMA directed by Douglas McGrath with Gwynth Paltrow, Toni Collette, Ewan McGregor
1996

Decidedly one of Austen's most playful books, it's hard to take Emma as anything more than an indulgent romp through the ins and outs of the aristocratic dating scene. Emma (played perfectly by a pre-massive-fame Gwyneth Paltrow) is a self-declared expert matchmaker delighting in her latest achievement, the happy union of two of her upper-class acquaintances. She takes it upon herself to arrange the romance of her new friend, Harriet Smith (Toni Collette, who went on to receive an Oscar nod for her performance in Sixth Sense), a young woman of questionable social standing.

Emma can be the most culturally distant of the recent Austen films, offering little more than gossipy Victorians so insulated from material concern that they have nothing better to do than go balls and conspire to get each other married. The environment is not unlike an eighth grade hallway, with the passing of notes and mistaken crushes, and if there is anything of weight to be culled from the tale, it is Austen's understanding of the balance of power in matters of romance, and how this balance works quietly as a reminder of the illegitimacy of a matriarchal society.

Simultaneously, though, the movie accepts aristocratic power and the idea of marrying within one's station as valid and inescapable – and we cannot fault the movie for this, being as it is a Victorian comedy, and having no obligation to prove the world a sham.

However, what begins as a cute, likeable movie with cute, likeable characters eventually drowns in its own too-complicated story. People and events (and there are plenty of each, all of them small and uninteresting) begin to blur into one another, and the attention demanded of the audience to remain on top of everything hardly seems worth the effort in what amounts to a transposition of high school politics into lovely gardens and drawing rooms of Victorian England.

It's not surprising, then, that the novel was the basis for 1995's Clueless, which enjoyed success in its time at the box office partly because of its tongue-in-cheek handling of the material; it knew that high school politics, though strongly felt, were ultimately absurd, and never took itself nearly as seriously as Emma. The one topic of substance that both movies stand to touch upon – the legitimacy or illegitimacy of class distinctions – is treated (not surprisingly) much more modernly in Clueless, rejecting the idea that those of higher rank are somehow better and taking jabs at the idea of an in-crowd, while in Emma, true to its time period, the notion of aristocracy is allowed much more legitimacy, and while those of lower social standing are to be treated with kindness and respect, there is never the suggestion that the distinction is arbitrary and unfair.

Emma is a movie that fails precisely because of its faithfulness to the original; it is paced like a novel, not a film, and it adheres to cultural conventions that hold little appeal for moviegoing audiences. Rent it If you want to soak up some excellent sets and costumes, and enjoy a young and talented cast, but don't be surprised if you fall asleep before the movie's tidy, blandly gratifying ending.

SENSE AND SENSABILITY directed by Ang Lee with Emma Thompson, Kate Winslet, Hugh Grant 1995

Sense and Sensibility succeeds in most of the ways that Emma fails: the story uses fewer characters, and they're of a more engaging nature, and so the film is, overall, considerably more enjoyable to sit through. The story also offers more substance than Emma's lighthearted matchmaking escapades, although romance and class issues are still central: When their father dies and leaves them little inheritance and no means of income, the three Dashwood sisters have to cope with their financial troubles and downward social mobility, and pursue romance and happiness in spite of it.

Ang Lee (most recently the director of Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon) does a wonderful job of creating a Victorian England less polished and storybookish than Emma's, and in that way more authentic-seeming. The cast is equally well suited to the more serious tone, although Hugh Grant's character, with his repertoire of pathetic, puppy-dog glances and bumbling charm, does wear on the nerves.

Sense and Sensibility most improves over Emma in its ability to convince the audience that something more is at stake than flirtatious affections. Its circumstances more dire, and its cast more able to put forth the sort emotional conviction that makes stories of aristocratic trials interesting to current audiences. It sidelines class considerations and appeals, instead, to the audience's empathy for unrequited love, and its emotional humor and playfulness, when the film does indulge in it, succeeds far more than Emma's.

PERSUASION
directed by Roger Michell with Amanda Root, Ciarán Hinds
1995

At the other end of spectrum, far from the Hollywood gloss of Emma and the grandness of Sense and Sensibility, is Persuasion, a quiet film lacking the vibrancy of its peers, but possessing something in more unassuming abundance than any one of the recent Austen films: authenticity. Persuasion is filmed in dull tones and with muted colors and sound design, making Emma's landscape of sunshine and parties seem like a carnival in comparison; and yet Persuasion's faithfulness to how melancholy English weather can be, and how restless and dull existence for upper-class Victorian women can be, and how genuine human emotion resonates more fully and lonesome-ly in such an environment, make it the most worthwhile Austen adaptation for actually understanding what life was like in her time, and for her characters.

Issues of class and birth play an even less central role here than in its contemporaries, and except for a few self-conscious looks as the cast of aristocrats visits the humble dwellings of a navy officer, the matter is touched upon only circumspectly. The story, as can be expected, is built out of a series of romantic entanglements and pursuits, but deals primarily with Anne Elliot's (Amanda Root) relationship with Captain Wentworth (Ciarán Hinds): years ago, under her family's influence, she rejected him because of his lack of money and rank within the navy. Wentworth now returns, years later, improved in rank and fortune, and the Austen machinery of misplaced affections and misunderstandings is off and running.

Do not be put off by Persuasion's first 30 minutes; it may take some doing to sit still and listen to what is being said, but once the film picks up emotionally, it proves that subtly is the most suitable approach to Austen's material.

STUDENT EMPLOYEES
WANTED
Summer Conference Housing is looking for YOU!
How about a summer job that is here on the UMass campus and lets you meet new people everyday?
JOBS
How about working with a department that will host over 9,000 people on the UMass campus this summer?
March 12 - April 6, 2001 applications for Summer Conference Housing positions will be available in the University Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center.
Completed applications are due by April 6, 2001

CONGRATULATIONS!

The Department of Biochemistry & Molecular Biology wishes to acknowledge the following students who were named to the Deans List, Fall, 2000. There were 479 honorees in Arts and Sciences--Natural Sciences and Mathematics--42 from Biochemistry and Molecular Biology!

*ABERNETHY, Abraham D.	02	*LEVASSEUR, Kathryn M.	04	*SMOCK, Robert G.	04
*ALLARD, Shaun D.	04	*LEVIN, Elena	03	*STANTON, Andrea M.	03
BOIVIN, Christopher D.	01	*LEVINE, Michael N.	04	*STRONACH, Kerry A.	04
*DONIO, Michael J.	02	*LING, Hui-Chung T.	02	*SUSKI, Henry R.	02
EISENHAURE, Thomas M.	01	MACQUARRIE, Kyle L.	02	*TURAGA, Diwakar	03
*FERRARI, Annette T.	01	*MATHEW, Sheeba I.	02	*VARGAS-VILA, Mario A.	02
*FRANCO, Matthew J.	04	*MAWLA, Mohammed	03	*WANG, Joann	02
*FREEMAN, Michael F.	01	MCKEEN, Mark J.	03	WARD, Joy E.	02
*FRIEDLE, Johanna M.	01	*MCLARY, Christine	PG	*WHITEHEAD, David M.	03
*GLIDDEN, Emily J.	02	*O'DONNELL, Carolyn M.	03	WILSON, Sophia C.	04
GOLTEN, Ian	02	ROBINSON, Carolyn A.	03	WING, Kristy M.	04
*GORCZYCA, David A.	03	*SANDHU, Kulmeet K.	01	WONG, Irene	03
*GRANDE, Mark A.	01	*SHAH, Mane	01	* Indicates Honors
JUMANI, Deepa K.	04	SHALAEV, Ilia V.	02
KALET, Brian T.	02	SHUMWAY, Laurence A.	01

Open for business Saturday, March 31, 10-6
SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES FUTONS BEDS ETC.
Wide Selection of Futon Frames and Platform Beds
*Symbol Mattresses
*Kingsdown Mattresses
*Day Beds
*Area Rugs
*Wolf Futons
*Bunk Beds
*Canopy Beds
*Lamps
And much much more
Free frame with any mattress set
Free solid cover with any futon set
Free removal of old bedding
WE DELIVER
328 College St. · Rt. 9 · Amherst, MA · next to the Spirit Haus
(413) 253-BEDS
Big City Merchandise at Home Town Prices

March out like a lion with Final Four

The March to Minneapolis stops here.

The Final Four is set and as has been the case for the previous two seasons, the Michigan State Spartans will be one of the teams partaking in this hoops affair. However, unlike last season when the Final Four was more like a Spartan coronation, this year's Fearsome Foursome also includes Maryland, Arizona and Duke. Hell, forget coronation, the way these four teams are playing right now, we can call the 2001 Final Four "Rhythm nation."

Michigan State vs. Arizona.

This matchup between these two powerhouses might come down to one significant statistic: Can Arizona protect its defensive boards against the best rebounding team in the nation? That has been the key for the Spartans so far in the tournament, as they have an astounding plus-72 edge on the boards through four games. Their rebounding edge has been so dominant that Temple became the team that was closest to MSU in rebounding margin for the tourney, and the Spartans still out rebounded them 39-25. The play of senior Charlie Bell and Andre Hutson has led the way. Bell's play was never more evident than his man-on-man, defensive domination of Temple's Lynn Greer Sunday as Bell held the Owl star to just 7-for-21 from the field.

The big key for the Wildcats is whether or not they can keep up with the Spartans sending four players to the boards at one time. Loren Woods has to be at his very best to hold off the Spartans' dirty workers down low. If he shows up just for the second half like he did against Illinois on Sunday, then the Spartans will own the boards.

Also, they cannot be a one-man show in the first half or Arizona could be in trouble. Gilbert Arenas single-handedly kept the Cats to a halftime lead over Illinois on Sunday in the Midwest Regional Final. If he is forced to do his best Michael Jordan impersonation again, then Arizona will be in a hole they might not be able to climb out of.

Prediction: Woods and frontcourt partners Eugene Edgerson and Michael Wright will be able to hold off the Spartans on the glass and when the Spartans send four to the boards, it will leave ample chances for Arenas, Jason Gardner and Richard Jefferson to run on the break for Arizona. Also, the fact that Mateen Cleaves and Morris Peterson are not on this Spartan team begs the question, with the game on the line, who is going to step up for MSU? No answer — my point exactly.

Arizona 71, Michigan State 66.

Maryland vs. Duke.

Round Four – The Grand Finale. The Blue Devils come into the game winners of 10 straight, with the top two scorers in the tournament in the dynamic duo of Jason Williams and Shane Battier. Forced to play seven games without Carlos Boozer, the Dukies got deeper with the play of Casey Sanders to complement Boozer in the post.

However, with all that said, coach Mike Krzyzewski must have been praying to God that he did not run into one team again this season: Maryland. Unfortunately for him and his Blue Devils, that's what they got. The Terps have given Duke more trouble than any one team this season. The Terps blew a 10 point lead in the final minute the first time they played. The second time they played this year, they Terps won on Senior Night at Duke and held Battier, pretty much a religious figure at that university, to a big fat goose egg on the scoreboard in the second half. The third time was a classic in the semifinals of the ACC Tournament as Nate James' tip-in with a second left gave Duke an 84-82 conquest.

Now the fourth time and the right to play for a National Title will undertake in Minnesota.

The question for Duke is, even with the addition of Sanders to the frontcourt, who will be able to control Lonny Baxter in the post? The junior center combine to scored 50 points and grab 28 rebounds in the last two tourney games against Georgetown and Stanford. Ironically, the Hoyas and Cardinal have a lot on the Blue Devils in terms of size. With Boozer not 100% yet, will Sanders continue his tremendous play as of late, or will Baxter have a field day with him ar he has with his last two victims?

Also, can the Devils stay out of foul trouble? This will not be a problem for Maryland as they go primarily nine deep, while the Devils go just six or seven deep. If they get into early foul trouble, especially Boozer and Sanders, they might be looking at a Baxter feeding frenzy down low.

For Maryland, even though the two star players are Baxter and Juan Dixon, the eyes of the nation will be on point guards.

Cutting Down the Nets with David Rose

Steve Blake has the dubious task of trying to contain Williams for the fourth time this season. Williams has averaged 19 per game against Maryland this season, but has only shot 19-of-52 from the field and had a 10-turnover performance in the first matchup. His ability to hold Williams in check will be vital to the game's outcome.

Can Maryland control the tempo of the game? If this become a track meet, the Blue Devils will make like Carl Lewis and the Terps will be more like Jerry Lewis: funny, but no speed.

Prediction: Duke beat them twice during the season and didn't play their best against them in any of the three previous meetings. Now it is the Final Four, where you must be at your best. Which team can raise their game to that highest level? In my opinion, the team from North Carolina is that team.

Duke 88, Maryland 76

The Final – Duke vs. Arizona.

If the Blue Devils and Wildcats meet in the final, what a matchup this would be. The perennial powerhouse of college basketball versus the 1997 NCAA champion for the 2001 throne.

The question for Arizona again would be which Loren Woods shows up. Will it be the Woods of the second half against Illinois or the Woods of the first half against Illinois? If he shows up, his long arms will make it hard for Boozer and Sanders to stop him down low.

Also, in that the Wildcats can run on some occasions, can they stay away from being sucked into a sprint with the Devils?

For Duke, after a tough fourth match-up with Maryland, can they recover in time for Arizona?

Also, with Woods in the middle, Duke can't be intimidated and go away from giving some semblance of ability to drive to the basket on the Cats. That is the job of Williams and Battier as the leaders of the team – to not allow their teammates to become hesitant in going to the hoop.

Then there is the spotlight. Forty minutes from a national title for two deserving teams. Which team will hold up under the intense spotlight of a nationwide audience and a capacity crowd at the spacious Metrodome?

Prediction: The Wildcats had to defeat three number one seeds: Kansas, North Carolina and Kentucky, to win the '97 title. I smell déjà vu all over again. With Arenas and Woods controlling play, and with his wife Bobbi watching above from the heavens, Lute Olsen will lead his team to a second National Championship. As for Olsen, his win will be hailed as one of the most popular victories for a coach in NCAA history.

Arizona 77, Duke 73

David Rose is a Collegian columnist

Loren Woods led Arizona back to the Final Four with a win over top-seeded Illinois last week and snipped down the nets. Will Minneapolis bring a similar fate? This weekend will tell the tale.

THE MONKEY BAR
NY Style atmosphere in downtown Amherst
This week's drink special: Sex on the Beach $2.00
Weekly Entertainment Lineup
Thursday
Elements with DJ Fooz
Spinning the best in trance, house, + club jamz
FREE CD Giveaway before 11PM
Friday
Mardi Gras Friday's with DJ Flash
Collect beads and win $100 prize package
LADIES NO COVER all night
Saturday
Success with DJ Steve Gibbs
Spinning UK Hard House
No cover before 10:30

travel free with other 18 to 35 year olds
>free of hassles
>free of rip offs
>free for you with 10 friends!
...Get 10 friends to go and you'll go free!
>European Discovery from $975
14 days including Amsterdam, Paris, and Rome
>Beaches and Reefs from $905
14 day tour of Australia's East coast from Sydney to the Barrier Reef
>Greek Island Hopping from $899
14 days featuring Santorini, Paros and Mykonos
44 Main Street
413-256-1261
Contiki worldwide vacations for 18 to 35 year olds
Council Travel counciltravel.com
Experience Contiki with a group of friends booked on the same trip at the same time and the 11th person travels free or everyone in your group gets 10% off. Prices are land only and do not include airfare.

Looking to further your education and then get a job that makes a difference in the world?
Visit the Umass School of Public Health and Health Sciences' Exhibit Booth at the 4th Annual Student Poster Session
Learn about the Umass graduate programs in Biostatistics, Epidemiology, Community Health Education, Health Policy and Management, Environmental Health Sciences, Communication Disorders, Exercise Science, Nutrition
Thursday, March 29, 2001
4:00 pm
163 Campus Center
For more information, call Cindy Hardy at 545-1669; chardy@schoolph.umass.edu

General Electric
Monster.com
Red Herring
RED HERRING
monster.com Work. Life. Possibilities.
Q: What do these companies have in common?
A: Former Collegian Advertisment Managers.

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVES
CALL 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE, ROOM 113 IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT, FOR MORE INFORMATION.
APPLICANTION DEADLINE IS MARCH 30TH

■ lacrosse

continued from page 14

"Bridget Byrne played great today [on the defensive end] and caused a lot of turnovers," Barnes said. "She always comes to play, and against Syracuse, she held an All-American to just one goal."

Cold weather was another hurdle the Minutewomen had to clear in yesterday's game, but days of practicing outside in even more brutal conditions prepared the team well.

"We have the advantage when it's cold outside because we go outside no matter what [to practice]," Zelinger said. "I'm not sure other teams do."

The Minutewomen return to action this Saturday for a 9:30 a.m. home game against Hofstra.

"A win is nice and now we are looking forward to playing Hofstra," Barnes said. "They are a Top 20 team, they are athletic, and in a lot of ways are quite similar to us. They also like to control the ball on the set attack."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jen Nardi had an easy day in net as she only played one half of UMass' 18-2 romp over Vermont yesterday.

SJU nine up next for Minutemen

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

No road is forged without its share of obstacles and difficulties, a fact that the University of Massachusetts baseball team will, however reluctantly, attest to.

The path since March 2 has been a long one for the Minutemen (3-8 overall, 2-1 Atlantic 10), when they began the 2001 season that Friday afternoon with a 5-2 loss to Oral Roberts University, a decision that, in the three-plus weeks of play since, has reflected much of the team's fortunes. In just 11 games the team has tasted both success and mediocrity, a roller-coaster ride that they hope to combat with a dose of consistency in order to re-establish the drive toward .500.

This weekend, as they prepare to host Atlantic 10 rival St. Joseph's (6-12-1 overall, 1-2 A-10) in a three-game series, the team will look to build on its recent small successes and change the luck of a still talented and determined squad.

A key variable in achieving that success lies squarely on the shoulders of senior outfielder Gavin Clark. Clark recently topped off a phenomenal week of play by earning WHMP/UMass Athlete of the Week honors, announced yesterday afternoon. During that stretch, Clark went nine for 24 (.375) with four home runs and eight runs batted in. Clark torched Richmond, Delaware State and LaSalle for home-runs in three-consecutive games, notching his fourth in the final game of the LaSalle series. The offensive outburst ran Clark's season batting average to a solid .300, and placed him atop the team in both homeruns (four) and RBI (nine).

Getting Clark to fire on all cylinders while his teammates try and do the same is a familiar problem for the team, one that has chased them from as early as last season, and remains a priority as the Hawks look to mine a momentum boost for themselves in the confines of Earl Lorden Field on Saturday.

Crucial to the balanced attack is the poise and talent of sophomore first baseman Jeff Altieri at the plate. Altieri is batting .359, good for first on the team, and has picked up 14 hits with two homers and six RBI along the way.

Senior Nick Gorneault has also been huge for the Minutemen, batting a healthy .341 while pacing the team in hits with 15. Factor in other standouts like freshman Adam Stojanowski (14 hits, 7 RBI's) and Tom Ellerbrook, who has done a solid job in replacing the injured Chris Morgan, and the only gray area is again consistency; simply getting those bats to perform well on a daily basis to benefit the arms of the UMass pitching staff.

Senior Nick Skirkanich and junior Brian Hourigan have, along with the remainder of the Maroon and White's rotation, performed admirably in situations where they face a lack of run support, doing what they can to keep UMass in the game. Skirkanich, in 13 innings of work, has kept his opponents' batting average to a fair .250 while running his overall record to 1-1.

Hourigan has been perhaps head coach Mike Stone's most reliable arm. Despite an ERA hovering just above seven, the righty has maintained his composure in tight games, a factor that UMass will benefit from as the season draws on and, more importantly, a trait they hope he can employ this weekend to help gain important conference ground.

Although St. Joe's comes in a full six games below .500, the fact remains that, as a conference opponent, all bets are off and caution is thrown to the wind. Senior pitcher Eric Wyatt was recently named A-10 Pitcher of the Week and, as UMass is well aware, a single player is more than capable of affecting a game and forcing his teammates to step up.

Sophomore catcher Jim Reilly has been the Hawks' main offensive meal ticket thus far, using his .52 plate appearances to pound out 21 hits and 14 RBI while maintaining a batting average over .400. Senior Mike DiVincentis leads St. Joe's in hits with 24, as well as runs scored with 13. Despite eight players batting over .300, the Hawks have collected only four homeruns as a team, a statistic that the solid Minuteman defense will look to expose and take advantage of.

With Wyatt sporting a 3-1 record on the mound in five appearances, which includes 32 strikeouts and an opponents' batting average of under .200, he also shows up on the UMass radar as an offensive threat, having collected 14 RBI and 16 hits in 18 trips to the plate. Jim Boylan enters the series second on the team in strikeouts with 11, and has seen his 26-plus innings of work turn into a 2-4 record. The rest of the rotation has combined for a single victory, themselves victims of an occasionally anemic offense which the Maroon and White can relate to all too well.

There's no beating around the bush come Saturday: UMass needs a reversal of fortune, and stealing away three games from an A-10 foe would be an ideal way to set this season back into place.

The first game of the Saturday double-header is slated for 12 p.m., with the cap to come at noon on Sunday.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Gavin Clark has been on a tear for the Minutemen over the last week, and the Maroon and White will need a strong performance from him in this weekend's crucial series with in-conference foe St. Joe's this weekend.

HAIR CUTS NOW WITH KATE
$20
(Weds. & Sat.)
ERIC SCOT
79 south pleasant street
Amherst
413 256 3440
Experience the art of hair for less.

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS — See You There — DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

DELIVERY HOTLINE
549-0077
Newly Rennovated Sushi Bar!
PANDA
CHINESE &JAPANESE RESTAURANT
103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923 • 256-8924
NOW ACCEPTING OCMP!

Best 2000 UMASS
By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
The Puffton Village
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday-Friday
(413) 549-0145

Atlantis
Behind Antonio's Pizza In Amherst
NO COVER $2 COVER AFTER 11 PM
WED: Funk, Soul, & Reggae"
FREE Nachos 10-11 pm
THURS: Big Phil - Hip-Hop, R&B
FRI: "House on the Rocks" with DJs Bon Bons & Salty
SAT: Hip-Hop and Reggae with DJ Trendz
"Ladies Night" - Ladies get in FREE
SUN: Open Mic - Open Turntable

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

SUMMER POSITIONS AVAILABLE
DEAN OF STUDENTS HELPLINE
The Dean of Students Office is looking for responsible, highly motivated students to staff a toll-free telephone line designed to provide help to current and prospective undergraduate students at Umass. Staff will be trained in all aspects of Bursar, Financial Aid, and Housing Assignment policies. Both work Study and Non-Work Study positions are available.
Duration: June 4, 2001 - August 31. 2001
Starting Salary: $7.00/hr Interested?
Applications are available at the Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore Building and are due back by April 6, 2001.
Questions? Contact John Kazlauskas or Paul Vasconcellos at 545-2684

NASCAR, NASCAR, NASCAR

The NASCAR season is only six races into its schedule, yet the sport has been filled with action. After suffering the death of its greatest superstar in Dale Earnhardt, the stock car circuit has trudged on, continuing to pay tribute to its fallen legend, but moving on with its season.

Dale Jarrett and his brand new UPS team have grabbed the points lead in the early going, and Jarrett has been driving very well for Yates Racing, qualifying twice on the pole and winning the first race of the year for the Fords at Darlington.

Right in Jarrett's rear-view mirror is Jeff Gordon and his Rainbow Warriors, who is less than 50 points behind his counterpart. Last week, fans got to see Gordon spin out in the pit area post-race after Tony Stewart decided to take his frustration out on Gordon, endangering all people working in the pits.

As for Stewart, he has not even been a blip on the radar screen of the leaders of the pack, as he sits in 18th place in the points race, far from the pace. The Home Depot Pontiac has not even been close to victory lane, with his only top ten finish being a 4th at Rockingham in the second week of the season. Obviously, spinning out after making contact with Gordon frustrated the young star, but his actions deserved a far harsher punishment than the $10,000 fine and probation that he received.

Possibly the most consistent racer this season has been Sterling Marlin, who has quickly become a favorite of those high up in the Dodge organization. The Ganassi Motorsports Silver Bullet has shot his way up to third in the points via four top ten finishes. He's also one of the few racers who has led in every race this year.

MATT BRADY

The most quiet strong performer this year has certainly been Johnny Benson, who has driven the Valvoline team to new heights. Like Marlin, he has four top tens on his record this year and had shown strong down at Bristol before fading to a 26th place finish. Last year, Benson was one of the biggest surprises for the Pontiacs, grabbing six top tens on the season. The number 10 has been screaming through the field so far this year, and it only appears that he will continue to perform well throughout the season.

Steve Park has been the jewel of the Dale Earnhardt, Inc. team this year, starting his trip toward success with a win the week after his mentor and owner's death at the Rock. If not for a crash at Atlanta that left him with a 43rd place finish, Park might be atop the Winston Cup points standings right now. He has been one of the most fearsome racers this season, driving his way to four top tens (is there an echo in here?) for the year. Park is the young stud NASCAR is looking for to take over the reigns now that The Intimidator is gone. Believe me, this kid can not only handle that, he relishes it.

Speaking of youngsters, people can be nothing but amazed at what Kevin Harvick has done so far this season. The rookie was slated to run a few races later in the season with Childress Racing, but with the death of Dale, Sr., Harvick had the daunting task of stepping in to the Goodwrench Chevy.

Mind you, Harvick's black and white #29 is nowhere near as intimidating as that black #3 was, but he is certainly turning heads on the circuit. In just his third race in Winston Cup competition, Harvick drove his way to victory lane at Atlanta, the site of his mentor's first win last year. Since then, he has been driving very well, and if not for a flat tire last week at Bristol, the youngster might have walked away with his second career victory, as he led the most laps in the race and looked dominating until his tire went down. He stands less than 200 points of the WC lead – and keep in mind, he didn't race at Daytona.

This weekend, the circuit travels to Texas, and all eyes will be focused on Dale Earnhardt, Jr. "Little E" has struggled since his father's death, and now he returns to the site of his first win on the Cup tour. Since finishing second at Daytona, he has not finished higher than 15th, and has looked tentative at times while piloting the Bud car. If there ever was a time and a place to get his swagger back, this Sunday at Texas is it.

Yet none of these has been the biggest surprise of the season. What seems to baffle everyone around motor sports is why Bobby Labonte, last year's points champion, is still mired in such a slump. Labonte was relentless last year in his pursuit of the title, but this year has been stuck at the back of the pack for the long haul.

Both Bobby and brother "Texas" Terry Labonte have combined for only three top ten finishes in the early season, with older brother Terry holding two. But, of course, don't count out the defending champ. Last year, he only got stronger as the year went on, holding off a charging Dale Earnhardt in his rear-view mirror.

Sadly, never again will anyone see that sight.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

No place like crew

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

Are you a good witch, or a bad witch?

The Massachusetts women's crew team's top two varsity boats will be looking to have the good witch on their side as they travel to Kansas this weekend to participate in a six-team regatta. The rest of women's crew squad will head down to Camden, New Jersey for the Kenechi Cup.

The Kansas Invitational Regatta will be the opener for the varsity team's top two boats and should be good competition for the Minutewomen to start off the spring season. Saturday morning's opener against Kansas and Iowa State is expected to be the toughest hump of the weekend to clear. Saturday afternoon will bring a race against Tulsa, and the closing race on Sunday will be against Kansas State and Indiana.

The Kenechi Cup will be the opener for the rest of the Minutewomen. The third women's varsity boat, along with the lightweight boat, heavyweight boat and novice boats will all be rowing in the two-day regatta. Thirty-plus schools are expected to be on the water and the race will give the old and new rowers something to look at for the rest of the season.

"I'm really excited," head coach Jim Dietz said. "It's going to be the cell phone that keeps me going this weekend between me and Kruzer [assistant coach Greg Kruczynski]. I want to know how everyone's doing."

The two top boats are expected to have a strong weekend after weeks of practice on the Erg Rowers and some practices on the Connecticut River in Northampton. Competition has been tight as the weekend draws near for who will be the eight rowers in the top boat, and the eight in the second.

Sarah Pullman will be returning to the UMass boat after a fall in Sydney as a member of the 2000 German Olympic Crew team. Co-Captain Heather Walker will be returning for the spring as well as Mary Neubecker Kate Tynan and Erica Earl. Julie Vander Ploeg has surprised everyone this season with her strength and will also be seated in the first eight-man. Co-Captain Sara Pragluski will coxswain the boat.

Freshman Kate O'Brien has swiftly moved from the novice team in the fall to the top varsity boat. O'Brien is a Shrewsbury native and has showed the team how she can really pull for the maroon and white.

"Katie's moved from novice to varsity. She made such great progress in Florida," said Dietz, in reference to the team's annual winter trip to Florida.

The Minutewomen headed south with the geese this winter in order to find some warm water to get them started for the season. Since the trip to Florida, competition has been tight among the women to row in the top boats. Based on Erg scores, a rowing machine that simulates the strength an individual can row with, there has been an honest evaluation as to who gets a spot.

"Technically, everyone does a good job," said Dietz.

With the Massachusetts weather, the Maroon and White hasn't had the luck it wanted to get onto the water. The cold air and occasional flurries haven't set the team back too far, however. The Atlantic 10 champs of last season have been preparing themselves mentally and physically in other ways than just the water.

"We're more prepared now than in previous years. We're more intense and one step ahead of the game," said Pragluski. "We're only going to get stronger as the water warms up. The more time on the water, the better the scores."

In Kansas, UMass will be the lone team to not have raced yet this season. This doesn't discourage the veterans.

"All the other schools have raced," said Dietz. "We've been home here in limbo. The first races are going to be really strong. They have great programs and it will be a learning experience."

The second boat in Kansas is no slacker either. Dietz expects the women to be just as strong in the second boat as the top boat was last year.

The Minutewomen will fly down to Kansas today in the all-weekend event. The regatta will start on Saturday.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The women's crew team starts off its spring season this weekend with the top two varsity boats heading to Kansas to compete with some of the best rowers in the nation.

Carrie Jeffries and the Minutewomen are on a roll as of late, as they went 7-0 while the campus was on break. They will hope to continue their good fortune in a doubleheader with Vermont tomorrow.

Be a winner-write for Sports!
(OK, you might not be a winner, but you'll be published)

Bone Marrow Typing Drive
Student Union Ballroom 9:00 to 3:00 pm
Monday, April 2
Sponsored by the Student Nurses Association
People of diverse ethnic and racial background are strongly encouraged to attend due to the great demand for donors.
See concourse table for more information
Info Session Today
Campus Center 168 at 8:00pm
All it takes to be typed is one vial of blood! Wouldn't you want a second chance?

CAMPUS SUMMER JOB
FULL -TIME
ROBSHAM VISITORS CENTER
The Robsham Visitors Center has a full time summer job opportunity for an undergraduate student. Minimum qualifications include active status, completed at least two consecutive semesters, knowledgeable about campus programs, services and building locations.
Title: Student Greeter and Information Specialist
Hourly rate: $8 minimum (approx. $3500)
Period: June 4 - August 31
Hours: 9:00am-4:30pm (weekdays)
For further Information, call 545-3480 or e-mail helgerson@admin.umass.edu
Resume and interview required

At ZANNA...
low rise jeans
Buffalo
Hollywood
Mavi
ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

National buying power means you save more!
SUPER SALE
March 29 Thurs. 12-8 | March 30 Fri. 9-8 | March 31 Sat 9-6 | April 1 Sun 12-5 | April 2 Mon 9-8
Bikes on Sale!
5 days only
Our best deals of the season on Mountain, Road, Hybrid and BMX bikes.
250 Bikes Assembled & Ready to Ride!
Super SAVINGS!
For 4 days only on bikes, pumps, tubes, helmets, gloves, shorts, bags, racks, locks, computers and more...
ALL ON SALE
Trek • Cannondale • Giant and more
BIKES ON SALE
Our best deals of the season on mountain, Road, Hybrid & BMX Bikes
NORTHAMPTON BICYCLE
319 Pleasant St., Northampton
586-3810 • http://www.northamptonbicycle.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Moving Off Campus? Come to Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center's Apartment Complex Fair on Thursday, April 5 from 10am to 3pm on the Campus Center Concourse.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take Over Our Lease starting June 1st. 2 Bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-1988

Apartment Available to take over June 1st. 2 bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-9462

3 Bedroom Renovated Apartment in Puffton. Available June 1st. Call 549-7111

Summer Sublet with lease option. Puffton 3 bedroom, 2 bathroom. Renovated + furnished. Central locale. Call 548-3915

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom in Brandywine take over lease from June to Sept. $900/month. Call Steve 549-4194

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

AUTO FOR RENT

1994 GEO Tracker 4x4 beautiful green color soft top $1995 978-544-3783

1985 BMW 323 I 5spd excellent condition $3500. 549-1155

EMPLOYMENT

Join Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life 5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply online at www.horizon-camps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

Access 2 A Computer? Put it to work! $25/hr - $75/hr, PT/FT (866) 639-RICH www.athome4ever.com

EMPLOYMENT

AMHERST LSSE SUMMER EMPLOYMENT Day Camp Counselors (must be 18 yrs of age) Pool - Lifeguards, W.S.I. (s), and cashiers. Part time Summer Musical Theather Institute Counselor(s). Part time Asst. for Hot Summer Nights Film & Music Series. Summer Registration Clerk Special Events Coordinator. Applications available at: Human Resources 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst, MA 01002 E.O.E

HAVE AN AMAZING SUMMER ADVENTURE! Prestigious coed camp in beautiful Massachusetts seeks caring, motivated college students & grads who love kids! GENERAL & SPECIALTY COUNSELORS needed. Join a dedicated, fun team. Competitive salaries+travel+room+board. (800) 762-2820

CAMPUS SUMMER JOB Full-time opportunity, Visitors Center, June-August. Competitive hourly rate. Call 5-

EMPLOYMENT

3480 for information. See also display ad.

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.50 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Wanted 24 UMass Underclassmen to take part in 45 minute survey. Also coordinator position. For details call 1-800-573-3309

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

EMPLOYMENT

APARTMENT LEASING AGENT Take this opportunity to have fun while earning extra income! Upbeat, friendly personality with good communication skills ideal. Join the staff at 'SUGARLOAF ESTATES', a beautiful 300-unit community located in Sunderland. National Co. will train and offers exc. wages, minimun 15-20hours per week and full time summer employment. To apply contact AMY COTE. 1-800-545-1303 ext. 334 or e-mail resume or letter of interest AMY_COTE@ASPENSQUARE.COM

Looking for a job in Amherst this summer? Full and part time jobs are available with Summer Conference Housing! Come and get an application and job description at the Conference Services Office, Room 918 Campus Center.

WATNED: Native Speakers of American English for listening experiments $8/hr ph545-6837

FOR SALE

Kona Mt. Bike - Good for petite rider. Call for details. 413-397-8999

Brother Wdprocessor used but good. Name your price. 549-6077

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

HOUSE WANTED

4 to 6 Bedroom house wanted, starting June 1, for rent. Ready to sign lease. Call Shayan @ 413-546-1082 or tom@65190

INSTRUCTION

Step Aerobics, Cardio Kickboxing, Circuit Training. Five week program only $20. Starts April 8. Sponsored by UMass Housing. Call 5-1962

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

Sunderland. 2bedroom apartment. Avail. June-August, with option for following year. $300+/month per person. Very spacious-great deal! Call Bryan 413-665-7922

TICKETS FOR SALE

2 Insync Tickets Foxboro Stadium. June 1, 413-283-5523

The Collegian Classifieds
The BEST Place to Advertise!
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 3 Hartford
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 61 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 30 Hartford
9 - HSCN Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - FOX 61 Hartford
12 - FOX 24 Hartford
13 - NBC 40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMASS Academic Channel
16 - WB 50 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - UCTV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Travel & Leisure
22 - E! Online
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - MTV
30 - VH1
31 - Nickelodeon
32 - Nogan
33 - Economic Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - E!T
38 - Discovery
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 29, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		On the Waterways (In Stereo)		Mystery! "Second Sight" (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)		Yours for a Song-Tin Pan Alley		This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News (N)	CBS News	inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Big Apple (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene investgtn.		Big Apple (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB	5	News (N)	ABC News	inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (N)		Friends (N)	Sudden-Susan
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends (N)	Nanny (N)	Gilmore Girls "Kiss and Tell" (N)		Charmed "Power Outage" (N)		Nanny (N)		Friends (N)	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Friends (N) (N)	Weber (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Survival of the Fittest" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	7th Heaven (In Stereo) (N)		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Gilmore Girls "Kiss and Tell" (N)		Charmed "Power Outage" (N)		News		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (N)	Hollywood	Friends (N) (N)	Weber (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Survival of the Fittest" (N)		Friends (N)	Frasier (N)
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons (N)	Frasier (N)	Friends (N)	Seinfeld (N)	★★★½ "Ring the Dog" (1997, Comedy) Dustin Hoffman, (N)				News		News (N)	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Friends (N) (N)	Weber (N) (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Survival of the Fittest" (N)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		This Old Hse.	Dns.-Cali	Independent Lens (In Stereo)		Murder In Purdah		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WGGB	40	38 News (N)	ABC News	Spin City (N)	Frasier (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (N)		Seinfeld (N)	Mad Abt. You
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (N)	Judge Judy (N)	Frasier (N)		Frasier (N)		WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (N)		Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	News (N)	Nightline (N)
WTBS	72	Rosanna (N)	Roseanne (N)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★★ "The Unsinkables" (1997, Drama) Kevin Costner, Sissi Connery						★★½ "Uncommon Valor" (1983)
A&E	21	Night Court	Newsradio (N)	Law & Order "Trophy" (N)		Friendship by Stephen King: Fear		★★ "Silver Bullet" (1985, Horror) Gary Busey, Corey Haim,				Law & Order "Aria" (N)
CNN	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N) (N)		Crossfire (N)	Wolf Blitzer	The Point (N)	Larry King Live (N)		CNN Tonight	Spin Room (N)	Sports	Moneyline
COM	26	Saturday Night Live (N)		Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money	★★½ "Revenge of the Nerds" (1984, Comedy) Robert Carradine,				Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show (N)	Tom Ben
DISC	48	Wild Discovery: Polar Bear		Wild Discovery: "Giant Otter"		UFO's Over Illinois		Mysteries of the Unexplained		Beyond Bizarre		Justice Files "Cops Gone Bad"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter (N)		Final Four		High School Basketball: Slam Jam		College Basketball: NIT Final -- Teams to be Announced. (Live)				Sportscenter (N)
LIFE	29	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "The Three Lives of Karen" (1997, Drama) Gail O'Grady, (N)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	43	Direct Effect	Sensenless	Celebrity	Cribs	VJ for a Day	Pts. (In Stereo) (N)		Say What Kyke	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Undressed (N)	TBA
NICK	51	Pinky & Brain	Caddy	Hey Arnold! (N)	Rugrats (N)	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	42	Hercules. Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo) (N)		Tales From the Crypt "Yellow"		★★ "The Langoliers" (1995, Suspense) Patricia Wettig, (N)				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	46	26 Monster Trucks		Charlotte of the Gods		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Medical Detect		Deadly Minds	Deadly Minds	Medical Detect	Medical Detect
TNT	27	ER "The Healers" (In Stereo) (N)		Pretender "Betrayal" (In Stereo)		NBA Basketball: Utah Jazz at San Antonio Spurs. (In Stereo Live) (N)				NBA		★★ "Hard Justice" (1995)
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger (N)		JAG "Ww Stones" (N)		"The Last Don" (1997, Drama) Part 1 of 2 Danny Aiello, Joe Mantegna. (In Stereo) (N)						Martin (N)	Martin (N)
HBO	39	★½ "I Dreamed of Africa" (2000, Adventure) Kim Basinger, "PG-13"				Real Sports (N)		★★★ "Chasers" (2000, Drama) Jeff Daniels. (In Stereo) "R" (N)				Real Sex 23 (In Stereo) "R" (N)
MAX	37	★★ "Augie Rose" (2000, Drama) Jeff Goldblum. (In Stereo) "R" (N)				★½ "The Haunting" (1999, Horror) Liam Neeson, "PG-13" (N)				★★ "No Alibi" (1999, Suspense) Dean Cain. "R" (N)		"Erotic"
SHOW	49	★½ "Lambada" (1990, Drama) J. Eddie Peck. (In Stereo) "PG"				★★★½ "The Talented Mr. Ripley" (1999, Suspense) Matt Damon. (In Stereo) "R" (N)						★★★ "Bringing Out the Dead" (1999, Drama) "R"

Quote of the Day

"God gave us all a penis and a brain, but only enough blood to run one at a time."
–Robin Williams

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 45 LOW: 32	HIGH: 47 LOW: 39	HIGH: 54 LOW: 37

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

"DEARLY BELOVED, WE ARE GATHERED HERE TODAY IN REAL TIME ON ZERO AND ZEROS WEB SITE."
"...TO CAPTURE EYEBALLS IN A LOVING BUT SCALABLE ENVIRONMENT."
"MAY THEIR SPONSORS KNOW A ROBUST CLICK-THROUGH RATE, AND MAY THE USER EXPERIENCE BE BOTH JOYFUL AND TRULY INTUITIVE."
THIS IS A PRAYER?
YEAH. THERE'S A LOT OF PRAYING ON THE WEB.
QUIET!
DON'T FORGET THOSE VIRUSES.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

Dilbert By Scott Adams

YOU DON'T GIVE YOUR OPINION ON ANYTHING. ARE YOU SPINELESS?
MAYBE YOU CREATE AN ENVIRONMENT IN WHICH GIVING AN OPINION IS AN INVITATION TO UNNECESSARY PAIN.
GREAT! YOU'RE MAKING ME CRY IN PUBLIC!!
www.dilbert.com

Dilbert By Scott Adams

WE TRY TO RETAIN OUR BEST EMPLOYEES BY GIVING THEM "GOLDEN HANDCUFFS."
THE REST OF YOU WILL EXPERIENCE OUR OTHER PROGRAM, THE ONE I CALL "PRICKLY PANTIES."
THEN HE GAVE ME A HUGE BOWL OF CANDY.
HEY, THEY CUT OUR DENTAL PLAN AGAIN!
www.dilbert.com

Hell Hath No Fury By Pedro Gomes

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

WE BOTH KNOW WHY I'M HERE, EILEEN.
I'M A YOUNG MAN, WITH A YOUNG MAN'S URGES AND DESIRES, AND YOU'VE GOT WHAT I NEED.
SO LET'S DISPENSE WITH THE CHIT-CHAT AND GO STRAIGHT TO THE SOFA.
AT LAST! A GAMESTATION-2 CONTROLLER IS IN MY GRASP!
READY TO GET IT ON, COWBOY?

Masked Dropout By Bob Hewitt

MD, DID YOU READ THE PAPER?
THERE WAS ANOTHER HIGH SCHOOL SHOOTING YESTERDAY.
AN 11 YEAR-OLD FIRED 50 BULLETS AND INJURED 2 KIDS!
WOW! THAT'S UNBELIEVABLE!!
I KNOW...
WHAT A BAD SHOT!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

YOU ARE FREE TO GO, BUT THE FEMALE ANDROID MUST REMAIN.
AND YOU CALL YOURSELVES MENTALLY EVOLVED? IS IT EVOLVED TO BE WITHOUT COMPASSION?" WITHOUT FEELINGS FOR THOSE LESS EVOLVED?..
GOOD STRATEGY. WHENEVER KIRK WAS UP AGAINST ALL-POWERFUL ALIENS, HE WOULD WEAR THEM DOWN WITH LONG-WINDED, SELF-RIGHTEOUS MONOLOGUES AND FURTHER MORE, MANN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN IS OH PLEASE MAKE HIM STOP
COULD SOMEONE SMEAR A TYLENOL ON MY CEREBRUM?

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19) –You'll be more responsive to those who show signs of a mystery beneath the surface, but you may not be in the mood to share your secrets just now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone may be tempted to turn against you today, but before the day is out, you can secure his or her loyalty by speaking the truth.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – This is a good day to step right up and take part in something that you've resisted until now. You can score major personal gains as well.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may not be able to accomplish everything on your docket today, so you must be sure to prioritize. Don't wait on any key issues.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You must resist the temptation to rake yourself over the coals at this time. Know when to turn off your critical faculties for a while.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your participation in the personal affairs of someone close to you will add more than a little spice. Today is certainly the day to give and take.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your strong will may lead you directly to the threshold of personal trouble today. You will surely want to be more sympathetic, even malleable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Maintain a positive outlook throughout the day and you'll be ready for anything come nightfall. You may benefit from a secret that is revealed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You can encourage someone to take a step in a new exciting direction today simply by making an example of yourself and going first!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You can make one of your dreams come true today, whether you expect to do so or not. Surprises will come your way now and in the days to come.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may come up against someone who is willing to play hardball with you in order to et you to conform. The time has come for a decision.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You mustn't take too much time with routine decisions today. That which is out of the ordinary will demand much more attention from you.

MONKEY-BOX BY PBEJ

IT WAS ONLY OUR FIRST DATE, SO THERE WASN'T MUCH IN THE WAY OF TONGUE. IT'S THE LOGICAL PROGRESSION THOUGH.

© 2001 www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Kielbasa Grinder

Carrot-Onion Schine (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Beans and Rice (vegan)

DINNER

Breaded Pork Chops

African Vegetable Stew (vegan) (B, H, W)

Baked Teriyaki Tofu (vegan)

Solid Custom Tattoo
460 West St.
Route 116
Amherst, MA
253-2002
tues-sat 1-9
sun apt. only
A Tattoo is for life Know your artist

ACROSS
1 Frankfurt's river
5 "Out, cat!"
9 Chapeau
12 Ready to pick
13 Peep
15 Arrived
16 Complain
17 Wild West show
18 Of old
19 More expensive
21 Greek letter
22 Was sorry
24 Crossword-solver's tool
25 Behind, in a boat
26 Jerked
28 Lucy's neighbor
34 Like Mother Hubbard's cupboard
35 Fabled race loser
36 — Grande
37 Entices
38 Fleming or Dury
39 Rural stopovers
41 Press
42 Infidel
44 Ratatouille ingredient
46 Cares for a patient
47 Lulu memento
48 Type of bean
49 Moley
53 Synthetic textile
57 Just 58 State one's view
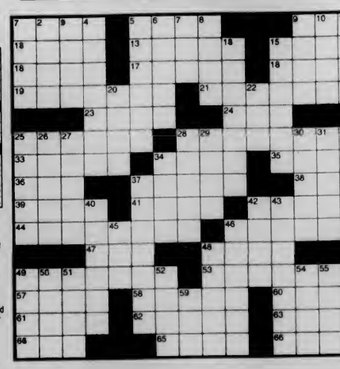
60 Actor Jennings
61 A — apple
62 City in southern France
63 Connect
64 Pig
65 Autograph ate
66 Enthusiastic shouts

DOWN
1 Poet's eyes
2 Eat to lose
3 Fencer's weapon
4 Court officials
5 Silver — movies
6 Musical notes played together
7 Help out
8 Park feature
9 Transport
10 Pulpit
11 Prom attendee
14 California state flowers
15 Settle conclusively
20 Knitting stitch
22 Hardened, as cement
25 High nest
26 Bee wound
27 Beach sandal
28 Fortunetelling card
29 Small songbird
30 Bristles
31 Desire
32 Auto mishaps
34 Chair
37 Illicit love affair
40 Internal organ
42 Show vexation
43 Wrathfully
45 Grassy field
46 Most pleasant
48 Bowling places
49 Asian nanny
50 Cancun coin
51 Goody-goody
52 Heroic tale
54 Brigitte's friend
55 Singer Turner
56 Antlered animals
59 "— big girl now!"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

G	L	E	N	N	A	V	E	C	A	L	O	E
A	U	D	I	O	N	E	R	O	R	O	L	L
M	A	I	N	S	G	R	I	M	T	A	D	A
M	U	T	E	B	R	A	N	M	U	F	F	I	N
A	S	H	T	R	A	Y	U	N	U	S	E	D
	E	O	S	U	N	T	I	L
P	I	L	E	D	G	R	E	E	T	R	T	E
E	D	E	N	P	A	G	E	D	R	O	S	T
P	A	T	L	O	P	E	D	T	A	M	P	A
L	I	N	E	D	F	I	R
A	S	S	I	S	T	B	A	N	A	N	A	S
P	I	C	K	P	O	C	K	E	T	S	A	F	E
S	E	R	E	D	L	I	N	O	S	S	I	E
E	V	E	N	N	I	L	E	B	E	A	R	D
S	E	W	S	S	P	O	T	I	D	L	E	S

1-6-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Shalini Marti
Copy Editor	Andy Voght
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	John Zawislak, Michele Meder

INSIDE: Men's Final Four preview

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, March 29, 2001 | 14

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Lions look to pounce on UMass

Number 15 Penn State trying to upend UMass

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

The NCAA released its first batch of Division I men's lacrosse statistics on Sunday and Massachusetts senior Rich Kunkel was the only Minuteman to break the top 20 in the goals-per-game grouping with 2.5.

But this isn't a single-act show. As a team, UMass ranked first in scoring offense with an average of 17.5 goals in its six games.

"[If I wasn't told that] I wouldn't have known," head coach Greg Cannella said. "We don't care about the stats. It's just great to score goals and great to play good defense and hopefully we can continue to play that way."

Nineteen different Minutemen have found the net so far this season and 11 of those players have tallied at least five times. Nine members of the Maroon and White have double-digit point totals.

"The balanced scoring isn't a surprise," Cannella said. "We have a lot of talented people that can play on both sides of the field. And I think that is attributed to the unselfishness of the guys who are playing."

On Saturday, No. 15 Penn State will suit up for an Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) battle with the host Minutemen at Richard F. Garber Field at 1 p.m.

The Nittany Lions (3-3, 0-2 ECAC) are coming off a tough 8-7 loss to conference rival University of Maryland-Baltimore County and already find themselves in a must-win situation this weekend. An upset over the Maroon and White would give Penn State its first conference victory and a better chance to get back into postseason contention. Although it seems early, the 16-team limit of the NCAA Tournament makes every outcome that much more important.

UMass (6-0, 2-0 ECAC) faced-off last Saturday with Vermont and cruised to an 18-6 victory in which ten different Minutemen found the cage at least once. For the third straight game, the Maroon and White outscored its opponent by at least 12 goals – aiding its nation-leading 10.33 scoring margin mark.

This weekend's Nittany Lion match is the last contest of a five-game homestand for streaking UMass, which travels to Baltimore in two weeks to face conference foe No. 10 UMBC.

Penn State is a very athletic squad and is probably the first team this year that can match UMass' physical ability in the middle of the field. The Nittany Lion defense will attempt to stop the multi-fire Minuteman attack as it did last year in its march to an 11-8 victory.

In that game, Penn State outscored and out-muscled UMass 5-1 in the third quarter to break the game open. The Minutemen made a final stanza run, but the 6-foot-4 Matt Vallone held strong between the pipes to seal the victory. Vallone has made 86 saves in six games this season and comes into Saturday with an 8.62 goals against average.

"We were embarrassed last year," Cannella said. "They manhandled us and we weren't ready to play. Not taking anything away from Penn State, that was probably one of our worst performances all year. Our guys remember that."

Junior attackman Will Driscoll leads the Lion front with 16 goals. He is a solid crease player and works well with the ball in the middle.

"He's a guy that sort of camps out inside, they set picks and screens for him, he pops off, they give him the ball and he scores," Cannella said. "He's a great finisher."

A converted midfielder, senior attackman Eric Wood sits right behind Driscoll with 10 goals and adds nine assists to the pot. Wood attended Carthage High School in New York, the same school that Ryan Powell of Syracuse attended. Last year, Powell totaled over 90 points for the National Champion Orangeman.

"That gives you an idea of where he's from and what his ability is," Canella said. "He is certainly their best attacker and all-around player. He's excellent."

The key for the Minutemen is to continue playing the style they played with in their previous six games. Getting into a pushing and shoving match won't do either team any good. Kunkel and the attack need to keep constant fire on the Penn State cage and junior Matt McFarland and his defense need to halt the Lion front from gaining shots right in front of goalie Chris Campolettano. Then, if senior Jeff Seals continues to frustrate his opponents in the face-off circle, UMass will be hard to conquer.

DAN SANTILLI/COLLEGIAN

The Gabrielli brothers, Keith (front, #13) and Chris (background, #10), have been one of the many steady forces for the Minutemen so far this season. UMass (6-0) will have a tough task at hand this weekend as it hosts perennial conference power Penn State at Richard F. Garber field.

Freshmen impress in rout of Catamounts

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It can be said that the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has the Vermont Catamounts' number.

Two years ago, the Minutewomen defeated the Catamounts 16-2, last year they defeated them 17-2, and this year they put another rung on the ladder by crushing UVM by a score of 18-2 yesterday afternoon at Richard F. Garber Field.

The game was originally scheduled to be played in Burlington, but was changed to Amherst because of the wintry conditions that have plagued northern New England at the outset of spring.

With the win, the Maroon and White improved to 1-4 while Vermont dropped to 1-3.

"It's fantastic," UMass coach Phil Barnes said about picking up his team's first victory of the year. "We have been improving with every game, and to win convincingly was a real boost."

In their previous three contests, the Minutewomen fell behind early against top quality opponents and were unable to recover. Yesterday, however, they made sure that this trend would not be repeated, as Kelli Kurtz took the ball at midfield and went coast-to-coast to put her team up by one only 19 seconds into the game.

Less than three minutes later, freshman Angela McMahon picked up a goal off a free position shot to put UMass up 2-0, and a few minutes later at the 22:31 mark of the first half, weaved through a whole bunch of Catamount traffic to extend the lead to three. McMahon would be a thorn in Vermont's side all game, totaling five goals to lead all scorers.

McMahon was not the only freshman to pick up her play, though, as Miriam Godfrey (three goals), Jill Blauvelt (two goals), Hope Zelinger (one goal) and Andrea Valachovic (one goal) all pitched in to help their freshman class tally 12 of their team's 18 scores.

"With a young team and a new lineup we are making progress every day," Barnes said. "Defensively and in the midfield, we denied passes and created turnovers, and our shooting was on target."

With 19:16 left in the first half, Sarah Booker notched a shot by Maroon and White goalie Cyndi Doyle to close the gap to two, but that would be the only time it looked like UVM might be able to stay with Massachusetts. Iada Emery answered with a lined shot into the lower left hand corner of the cage at the 15:45 mark, and 44 seconds later, Godfrey put home a rebound of a missed Lydia Robinson shot to make it 5-1.

With the score at 6-2 after Emery and Vermont's Anne Visser traded goals over a span of a minute, UMass went on a 12-0 run to turn the contest into a complete rout.

From there, the offensive explosion was on, as the Minutewomen would outshoot the Catamounts 40-7, and win the draw-control battle, 12-4.

With 4:55 still to play in the first half, UMass eclipsed its previous season-high for goals scored when Godfrey used a stutter-step move to get into the lane and drive a shot by the Vermont goaltender to make the score 9-2. Earlier in the season, the Maroon and White reached the eight-goal mark twice, but were unable to get into double digits until yesterday.

"We are starting to learn how each other plays," McMahon said, who is now the second leading scorer on the team with seven goals. "Our practices are going a lot better, we are working harder, and it is really paying off."

In the second half, UMass coasted to the victory behind two more McMahon tallies and solo scores from Rachel Ingraffea, Valachovic, Godfrey, Emery and Blauvelt, while holding the Catamounts scoreless with stifling defense.

Turn to LACROSSE, page 10

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The women's lacrosse team showed what it was made of in handing UVM an 18-2 drubbing. Kara DePaula did her part, dishing out four assists.

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Coming into this season, Massachusetts women's lacrosse coach Phil Barnes knew that he had holes to fill in his lineup. Gone from last year's Atlantic 10 Championship team were five of the team's top seven scorers, including the top two, Stephanie Pavlick and Rebecca Minaker, who combined for 56 goals and 73 points in 2000. The job of replacing this quintet fell squarely onto the shoulders of the 11 freshmen that Barnes brought in to restock the program.

Just five games into their rookie season, four of these freshmen have already shown the ability to come up big on the offensive end for the Minutewomen. Hope Zelinger, Jill Blauvelt, Miriam Godfrey and Angela McMahon have already combined for 16 goals and 19 points this season. Eleven of those goals came in yesterday's 18-2 thrashing of the University of Vermont Catamounts at Garber Field.

"They're becoming more confident with their passing skills," Barnes said. "And the biggest thing is that they are getting to know each other and understand how each of them work and that enables them to make a connection on the field."

It is this connection that was not there when the team first came together for practices this fall. But it was something that these four knew would come around eventually.

"This fall was really hard," said Zelinger. "But once we started playing with this level of people it got better. But it was a big transition [from high school to college.]"

McMahon, who is currently second on the team in goals with seven and points with eight, reiterated Zelinger's comments.

"I thought it was a big transition," said the Weston, Mass. native. "I had to learn to catch differently, use a new stick, everything was just brand new. But now everything is falling into place."

While Zelinger and McMahon have been doing their part on attack, fellow newcomers Godfrey and Blauvelt have helped out in the UMass midfield. With more experienced players such as Rachel Ingraffea and Lydia Robinson already plying their trade in the Maroon and White midfield, the pressure for Godfrey and Blauvelt to step into a staring role has not been there. But even without this pressure the pair has accepted the responsibility of setting up the offense.

"I think that since we don't have a lot of upperclassmen we've had to just jump right in," said Blauvelt.

"I don't think we really have a choice," said Godfrey. "That's our job."

Despite slumping to a 0-4 record out of the gates this season, the future of UMass women's lacrosse looks bright. These four freshmen have proved to themselves and their coaching staff that they can play at this level.

Minutewoman fans can only hope that these girls are just scratching the surface of their talent and that they continue to get better as their careers progress. With up and coming players such as Zelinger, Godfrey, Blauvelt and McMahon growing in confidence and getting better with each passing day, the thought of another A-10 Championship coming to Amherst is not that far away.

The Massachusetts Daily

MORNING WOOD

Volume CVII Issue 105 | The first thing you should grab to start your day. | April Fools Issue Friday, March 30, 2001

Universe controlled by Science Fiction Society?
Theory explains Chancellor's erection problems

COLLEGIAN STAFF PHOTOS

UMass grad student Tom Taaffe (above right) has divulged a complex conspiracy theory involving the mysterious "Television Center" uptown (above left) and the SFS. At right, SRS president Kevin Doherty (center) plots out humanity's fate with two other deities.

By Ed Cutting
Middle-aged Virgin

AMHERST - Existence as we know it does not actually exist, and we are all living inside a role-playing game.

That is the theory proposed at a recent meeting of the University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate by Tom Taaffe, a UMass grad student and the school's unofficial conspiracy theory expert.

Taaffe alleges that the 'known' universe is simply a massive session of the RPG game 'Warhammer 40K,' being conducted by several Science Fiction Society members in a secret lair disguised as a television shop above Delano's on North Pleasant Street. The players each control a cast of "characters" within the game, and the events of everyday life are determined by the dice rolls and whims of those eccentric hobbyists.

"Nothing you do is of your own free will," Taaffe explained, citing his own ridiculous hairstyle as proof that he is under someone else's control. "Those sick bastards have us on strings, and are acting out their own depraved script for mankind."

Taaffe's theory has been substantiated by twin brothers Matt and Kevin Doherty. SFS members who profess to control not only the game itself but also all of the key players within it from their so-called "Television Center." Mysterious figures who dress all in black and have a penchant for vests, the Dohertys claim responsibility for every major historical happening on record.

"Well, most of the really cool stuff anyway," said Kevin, who is also the president of the SFS. "The Exxon Valdez oil spill was something I came up with on the toilet one day, and Matt had the idea for the Gulf War while he was playing with G.I. Joes in the sandbox."

Some University officials have scoffed at Taaffe's theory, dismissing it as impossible. Chancellor David K. Scott called the idea "absurd" and suggested that both Taaffe and the Doherty brothers "need to get out more."

"He called us absurd?" Kevin asked. "Alright, think about this. If you were in control of a major state university, would you really choose an alcoholic from Scotland, named Scott, who insists on wearing sneakers with suits as your figurehead? If that isn't the most obvious joke in the game, I don't know what is."

Kevin also noted that "Peoplesoft" is a play on the fact that Scott hasn't had an erection in over 14 years.

Several members of the GSS also expressed disbelief at Taaffe's claims, pointing out that Warhammer 40K is a combat-based game and has very little to do with everyday life at UMass. The Dohertys contend that most facets of University operation are indeed comprised of battle in one form or another.

"We wage all sorts of combat in UMass settings," said Matt. "We make students fight through lines at the textbook buyback and red tape at Whitmore. The SGA is one of the biggest ongoing war campaigns in the history of role-playing."

Sometimes the game gets moved from the Television Center to the Campus Center Basement, where the Dohertys play out existence on a tabletop in plain view of the unaware participants.

"Some fools walk by and make fun of us during play," Kevin said. "We hear the old 'look out, they could go Columbine' all the time. But why would we shoot people if we can just inflict them with VD or erectile dysfunction?"

This is not the first time that Taaffe has alleged a conspiracy at UMass. In separate incidents last year, he accused Personnel Director Jim Coopee of being honest and insisted that the PVTA buses (which are actually constructed in

Turn to Taaffe, page 2

Amherst clamps down on SUVs

By Barry Hoslofski
Collegian Staff

In a move that stunned incoming students, Amherst College has limited all incoming freshman to two Sport Utility Vehicles and one lower class human servant per student.

Citing a lack of parking and housing for "those people," Amherst College President Tom Gerety instituted the new policy. A previous policy had allowed all students to bring an unlimited number of "vehicles of passage and Negroes" to help them in their daily responsibilities.

Gerety's change was seen as progress to some. Amherst College was opening its doors to all "sorts of lower class people." At least one poor person expressed hope that, via an exclusive application process, he might get a job with someone he could lovingly call "Massa." AC had previously allowed students to only bring dark-skinned students. But it was the Sport Utility Vehicle ban that shocked incoming students.

When reached for comment, incoming student Trevor Gentry alluded to his four SUVs and asked how he could possibly be asked to choose between his gold-plated Benz and his "roughin' it" Land Rover.

"When I applied to Amherst College, despite the lower class surroundings, I expected to be treated as though I was exponentially better than everybody else. Apparently, that promise in the booklet was a lie. I am now being treated as if I'm only significantly better than everybody else," Gentry said. "I feel so cheated. This shouldn't happen to someone of my pedigree. I went to Choate."

Over the phone, a butler was heard wiping away Gentry's tears.

Student Government Organization president Steve Ruckman suggested that Gentry "be calm" and asked him to remember that all threats against the upper class have ended in "failure."

"Who was that guy, you know, that one time? Nader wasn't it? He ran for President claiming he'd knock down the power of corporations? Please. My Dad still controls the lives of everyone who works for Best Buy," Ruckman said. "The young Mr. Gentry needs to remember that we will, as a rich race, survive."

Ruckman did acknowledge fear though and wondered if Amherst College could expect its first ever non-white on its campus in anything other than a position of servitude. He brushed the idea off with a swipe of his hand.

Gerety acknowledged the pain that was being visited upon freshmen was an unfortunate reality but quickly blamed the town of Amherst – "they wouldn't allow us to build a parking garage on their quaint, but oft-used by the lower classes, green." Gerety suggested that all students send comments to the Amherst Town Select Board. Further investigation revealed that the town had actually agreed to allow the garage to be built, but refused to pay for the Italian Marble that Gerety demanded be used for the building and further denied funding for the platinum spray that was supposed to cover the entire structure.

Incredulous at even the accusation that his college had been in the wrong, Gerety spluttered, "well, of course I demanded Italian Marble! On what other substance could anyone possible park his or her seven or eight automobiles? It's unbelievable that you would question the fallibility of the upper class. I'll have someone fire your father."

The reporter's father was then fired from his union job.

As for the other rule change, Gerety said he was excited that students' manservants would now be white; as well as "those other colors that we don't really like to talk about." Gerety puffed a giant stogie as he smugly laughed.

"We think it's good for the students here to get the experience of ordering around those who aren't as rich as they are. It should teach them to appreciate what they have and how much the little man can be degraded by simple tasks like poisontasting all food." Gerety said. "And many of those little men are whites. Most of them are Jews though."

Gentry was clearly excited about the new rule, but wondered why he would have to enslave his own race.

"Weren't the blacks doing well enough? I mean, sure, most Jews are white, so I guess enslaving them is a good idea, but I heard AC doesn't even have many Asians," Gentry said. "They build such good railroads. My daddy owns one."

With a more serious tone, Gentry wondered how one manservant would be able to handle all of the responsibilities that come along with Amherst College – "would he be able to cheer for me when we attend the annual football game against those savages from Williams College while also purchasing me a fine '68 Merlot at the concession stand?" Clenching his fist, he emphatically promised that his boys (by which he meant the 24 black students brought in to win football games for Amherst College) would besmirch those "damned Ephs." He also laughed at his clever joke about a '68 Merlot, commenting that everyone knew that was a bad year for that particular variety of wine.

"I'll have to remember that one for my gentleman's club," he said.

Gerety expressed hope at his policy changes, acknowledging that while they might hurt in the short term, in the long term, they'd be good for the College.

"This is going to teach our students how to better deal with those who want to be just like them, in both appearance and wallet," Gerety said. He was not concerned that he was making his college too difficult for incoming students.

"After all, what's college without a little elbow grease?" Gerety said, having his own personal manservant, Hector, shrug his shoulders as if to indicate that the question was rhetorical in nature.

Jeff Howe was unavailable for comment.

MassPIRG saves energy and anthills

By Black Water
Beleaguered Staff Member

The campus environmental group, MassPIRG announced yesterday that it will be officially moving its offices from their current location in the Student Union to 113 Campus Center basement. 113 Campus Center is the home of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

The tactical move seems to make sense for MassPIRG, as it will save its members from making the five-minute walk now required to pester Collegian reporters.

"I did some math this weekend and I figured out that I was walking about ten miles a day to and from the Collegian office," said Jessica Angel, head of MassPIRG and dedicated environmental fascist. "That's a lot of walking just to bug the shit out of people."

Angel went on to explain that if that amount of walking were conserved, MassPIRG could save eight anthills in East Chad, just outside of Mao.

Unnamed sources close to the Collegian have confirmed that Angel has been visiting that office upward of twenty to twenty-five times per day. One janitor, who wished to remain anonymous, described Angel as "kind of funny-looking like that guy from Fargo," but could not elaborate any further.

"This move just makes sense for us as an organization," said Angel. "We do some important environmental work like this anthill thing and now we can make the biggest campus media organization tell everyone about it, all the time. Only about us. After all, the Collegian really has nothing better to do."

When Angel was told that Mao

Turn to mosspirg, page 2

BIG TONY KICKS ASS

JAREY BARR - COLLEGIAN

"Big Tony" Witman (on shoulders at right) rejoices with his entourage following his stunning upset victory in this year's SGA presidential election.

By Dirk Diggler
Penis Master

Based on early exit poll results and a statistical probability by counting house Delano, Polesky and Mitch, The Morning Wood is ready to declare "Big Tony" Witman the president of the SGA.

"Woooooooooooooo," said a content Big Tony in a late night phone interview with The Mourning Would.

"Woooooooooooooooooooooo!"

A shocked cast at Mulcahy/Bazydlo campaign headquarters could barely manage a statement.

"This is a joke, isn't it. You people don't do anything right. Hell, you called him Tonya in a headline," said a bitter Kerry Mulcahy. "Didn't you freaks see the November election results, when the media called it too early and all the crap that happened? Don't you remember that? And they had real exit polls, unlike that bubble gum chomping scrub you had."

Although The Morning Wood had no answer to the November election results allegations, as we could find no such record of that happening, Michael Delano of the counting firm Delano, Polesky and Mitch claims it wasn't in fact bubble gum, but rather gummy worms.

"This is a damn outrage. Our numbers are solid," Delano told The Morning Wood. "We allowed answers such as 'Piss off planteater' and 'Back off hairbos' to count for Big Tony since they seemed more like some of his campaign promises then the other candidates. Now if you'll excuse me, my rubber ducky is waiting in the car."

Other candidates weighed in on the ramifications of a Big Tony presidency. "Heavy, man," said candidate Eric Diamond from the Screech Neverland ranch in West Springfield. Diamond's brother Dustin wasn't so forgiving. "I think he's a prick, like that scumbag Belding," obviously implying a parallel to former SGA President John Belding. Class of '72, who approved the design of not only the Fine Arts Center, but also of Herter Hall.

Big Tony's first move is to invoke his right of prima noctae, followed by the re-districting the Campus Center as a red light district.

A celebratory Witman took a moment to Turn to Tony wins, page 2

"White Knight" spoils ALANA crusade

By Us
Collegian Staff

Minority students protesting declining numbers got a surprise today. There was a white man walking with them. Amazed to see a white man walking with them, they only wondered one simply thing: who the hell was this whitey?

Tom Taaffe, a seventeenth year graduate student, walked beside members of ALANA (Asian, Latin, African and Native American) today with a megaphone, protesting a University of Massachusetts that they perceive to be an unfeeling organization disinterested in the needs of minority students. Accusations made against the University include the supposedly intentional plan to keep minorities off the campus.

"No justice, no peace!" Taaffe shouted into his megaphone. A grizzled veteran of such protests, Taaffe's interest in declining minority enrollment on campus developed when he first realized that there was a cause on campus that he hadn't gotten his hands on. Generally, every single issue on this campus, from GEO contract negotiations to complaints about food at the Bluewall, Taaffe is there.

"The idea that the white man would keep minorities out of this school is disgusting," Taaffe said. "The white man is such a disgusting creature, tentacles curling and lashing out at all of those that are different than he. What's next, a campaign against gays or women? Whites, especially straight, white men, have always been evil and will always be evil. Unless there is some sort of radical redefinition of society, it might be time for revolution."

"He's white." That was Salwa Shamapande's reaction. Shamapande is one of the leaders of the recent campus movement protesting the decline of minority students.

"The white man has committed some of the worst atrocities throughout the world. Now, here at UMass, the white man continues his typical elitist and reclusive behavior," Shamapande said. When asked about Taaffe, he wondered aloud, "he's that white guy, right?"

When it was confirmed, Shamapande explained, "Hey, I'm not against whites per say, but he knows that right?"

The revelation was a stunning one.

Taaffe might carry the megaphone on his shoulder, but he's getting confused stares from both sides of the proverbial aisle. Rene Gonzalez, a vocal protestor who has also led rallies against the United States involvement in Puerto Rico, wondered why "cracker boy" was trying to infiltrate his organization.

"Look, I'm not against the participation of whitey, but you think he could at least acknowledge that, every day when he wakes up, he looks at a white guy in the mirror," Gonzalez said, not amused that a confirmed homky would pretend he was anything but.

Taaffe, still amusing himself with his megaphone, shouted into that "Scott's a Nazi, Bulger's a bitch, we need a change, we need a switch." Turning to his "brothers and sisters" Taaffe hoped to get a significant chant going but saw only with confused stares.

"He calls that flow?" Asked Chris Rue. "Look, you know why there haven't been many white rappers? That chant right there. Eminem, oh sure, he's got flow, but MC Taaffe? Please. Please."

Meanwhile, Republicans wondered why Taaffe was selling out his own kind. University of Massachusetts at Amherst College Republican Club president Pat DeCourcy, like Shamapande, commented that Taaffe was "white."

"Hey look, of course I'm more willing to listen to Tom because of ...," he trailed off, looking for the patrolling campus lynch mobs. "Let's just say he has more credibility in my certain community because of, shall we say, particular attributes that, oh, Salwa, ummm, doesn't have."

He then asked the Collegian reporter if he was off the record and when told he was (a lie), he said, "Tom's white. Salwa isn't," DeCourcy was simply wondering if Taaffe understood that he's also white.

"I'm no more white than Martin Luther King himself," Taaffe thundered, pointing at his arm. "White is the color of sell-outs and oppressors and I'm neither. It isn't about the lighter tint on my skin, it's about what's in my heart, what's in my mind, what I believe. I might be lighter on top, but deep down, I'm dark. It has nothing to do with that lightness."

"Yes it does," Shamapande begged to differ.

Rue added "he [Taaffe] is a white guy."

Later testing actually revealed that Taaffe was "whiter than milk" and an unconfirmed report claimed that Taaffe had no rhythm. Claiming he did, Taaffe tried to dance, but was only able to muster a slight convulsion before becoming winded. His music, a collection of love ballads by Liberace, did him no favors.

Jeff Howe was unavailable for comment.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE / COLLEGIAN

Minority students marching on Whitmore stare uncomfortably at a megaphone-toting Tom Taaffe, who joined their effort and began chanting idiotic phrases.

Pot, Mussolini headline UMACRC series

By Heysoos Krist
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst College Republican Club excitedly announced two more speakers for this year's Fascist Lecturer Series.

"We weren't just satisfied with David Horowitz and Ward Connerly," Pat DeCourcy, the UMACRC President, said. "We're very excited that we've been able to land both Benito Mussolini and Pol Pot."

Mussolini, long thought dead after being hanged by his own supporters at the end of World War II, and Pol Pot, who led the Khmer Rouge in the slaughter in two million Cambodians before finally surrendering to a faction of his own group, were expected to give invigorating lectures to fellow fascists in the Campus Center Ballroom about the methodology of leadership.

DeCourcy explained that both Mussolini and Pot were excellent leaders who have been tarnished by a "liberal media that consistently discredits real world leaders in favor of those sissy weak-kneed ones."

"Look, I'm all for being nice, but c'mon? If people get in your way, as they definitely did in Cambodia, there's nothing wrong with simply slaughtering them by the cartload," DeCourcy said. "If only Bush would finally quit being a pussy and kill these crazy liberals, this country would be much better off."

Mussolini, who was, according to a UMACRC press release, "markedly more successful Hitler," is expected to speak about how speeches given in a really loud voice tend to drown out those that are filled with "annoying facts."

He is expected to cite contemporaries of him in the Conservative parts of the United States including Rush Limbaugh and Trent Lott, men who tend to rely more on an appeal to the aurally challenged than to those who seek factual information from which to make their decisions.

"Remember when Limbaugh said there was more forest now than when Columbus landed? And his people ate that up? That isn't true, but he said it in such a condescending tone that people actually believed him. That's leadership," Mussolini said over the phone.

Mike Bond, the UMACRC's Director of Instant Messaging, agreed in the background, verifying that there were also more Native-Americans alive today than when Columbus landed.

"That Limbaugh is such a genius," Bond said.

Pol Pot was going to give a lecture about the quality of furniture made of human bones. Known for slaughtering millions of Cambodians and simply allowing the bones to bleach in the sun, few know that Pot is a skilled craftsman who liked to use the internal human structure for his own furniture.

"The femurs, when bound together with pieces of thatch, are unbelievably comfortable," Pol Pot said. As he spoke, he scratched at a small dog's neck, before snapping it.

Ed Cutting, sitting the UMACRC's office, said the neck breaking was unbelievably cool and that given half a chance, he'd let that "political genius" break Zack Spilman's neck as well.

Pot then screamed, demanding attention.

"Back to what I was saying," Pot said. "Human skulls make marvelous chalices and finger bones are good for picking teeth with. It's quite an ironic thing to do, use human fingers as toothpicks." Pot then commended himself for coming up with something so wonderful.

Pot planned a lecture and then a demonstration, using the bones of the ALANA community students who wandered too close to the stage. Pot added: "Especially the Asian ones."

"We think it's a pretty edgy speech to give here at the ultra-liberal UMass," DeCourcy said. "He's got some interesting things to say about how marrow feels to sit on. It's comfortable."

Both speeches were part of the UMACRC's ongoing Fascist Lecturer series, started last year when Oliver North was brought to campus. Horowitz is expected to discuss his arguments against paying reparations for slavery, while Connerly is planning to discuss his role on the University of California Board of Regents and his opposition to affirmative action.

Both planned to use Mussolini's suggestion that loud speech from atop a balcony far outweighed the impact of factual speech.

Jeff Howe was unavailable for comment.

■ Taaffe

continued from page 1

Roswell, NM) are modeled after a recovered alien spacecraft.

"Tom has been a really fun character to play," said Matt. "We made him a kind of cross between Senator Joseph McCarthy and Gregg Allman. We made the mistake of giving him an erection a few years ago, but he went ahead and reproduced, so we can't let that happen again."

Student reaction to Taaffe's allegations have been mixed. Undergraduate Sean Boland expressed a great deal of shock and dismay, wondering aloud if the situation relegated the Doherty brothers to some sort of twisted God status. Student Trustee Seth Avakian seemed genuinely pleased by the theory.

"I totally believe it," Avakian said. "It explains why I'm so absolutely incompetent: it's not really me doing and saying all these asinine things."

SGA President Jeff Howe was unavailable to comment on Taaffe's theory, though the Dohertys report that Howe cannot maintain an erection either.

Bulger caught with pants down

By Lois Lane
Daily Planet Staff

A student tip regarding an elderly man masturbating in the W.E.B. Dubois Library led University of Massachusetts police to the subsequent capture and arrest of fugitive James "Whitey" Bulger, brother of UMass President William Bulger.

Fraternity member and Southwest resident Steve O'Brian first notified police about a suspicious person in the library's microfilm room, an overweight man in his 70's who had apparently exposed himself to O'Brian.

"I was on the lookout for smart chicks when I noticed some old dude in the corner jerking off," O'Brian said, adding that he had never in fact been to the library before and subsequently had no idea where he was. "At first I thought it was that stinky homeless guy who lives in the Campus Center Basement, but I was wrong."

Eyewitness accounts later clarified that Bulger had not actually been masturbating, but was instead receiving a hand job from Student Government Association member Sheila Tunney while flipping through old issues of The Minuteman.

"What can I say, I really like men who are politically motivated or involved with the law," Tunney explained. "And besides, I have always had this thing for creepy older guys." Police immediately arrived on the scene to investigate, calling every officer to the library including Police Chief John Luippold. Unfortunately, the chief's cruiser struck a parked Ford Pinto near the library and exploded, and he was forced to give the car a parking ticket.

Bulger was physically restrained in the building's lobby by Butterfield resident Eric Stout, allowing police to wrestle the 72- year-old man to the ground and cuff him. During the incident officers reportedly smelled a heavy odor of marijuana emanating from Stout's person, which led to the student's subsequent arrest after another struggle.

Whitey was later released from police custody after promising to use his political clout to push the police department's new contract proposal through. That proposal contains several additional amenities for the department, including a fleet of specially modified V.W. Bugs with horns like the Dukes of Hazzard's General Lee for patrolling traffic. Uniforms are also to be redesigned, with a more modern and streamlined look for today's physically superior officer.

"Those old uniform pants made my ass look really terrible," said Officer Barbara O'Connor. "I told them I want to look like that cop from the Village People."

Whitey agreed to the terms of the new contract and exited out the front door while officers covered their eyes and pretended not to see him leave. Student Security was not available to detain Whitey due to the fact that they were smoking pot confiscated from Stout in the back room.

The FBI has since disclosed that Bulger was headed for Mexico. In a taped conversation from his police interview, Whitey reportedly said he was "heading down to Tijuana to score some teenage hookers and locate some crack for his brother Billy."

Jeff Howe was unavailable for comment.

CORRECTION:

An article in the February 24 edition of the Collegian incorrectly identified Student Trustee Seth Avakian as the Antichrist. Avakian is, in fact, just an asshole.

■ masspirg

continued from page 1

was in fact in West Chad, he responded. "That's exactly the type of negative attitude that doesn't get stuff done. Now shut up and be my bitch."

Questions, however, have arisen over whether the move will cause the Collegian to become less objective in its coverage of MassPIRG. Some people believe that the Collegian will now be forced take MassPIRG's point of view in its journalistic coverage.

"I'm not really worried about our coverage being biased or tainted," said Adam Martignetti, Collegian News Editor. "I mean we've already run 38 stories about their frivolous efforts, an unsigned editorial endorsing their pathetic existence and a feature story telling this campus about their frustratingly annoying leaders. Why don't we just fucking brand MassPIRG on our asses in bright neon green letters? But I suppose that's cynical."

Angel played down the possibility of a conflict of interest associated with the impending move.

"I don't understand why people are incessantly bitching about this, that's my job," said Angel. "People are worried about objectivity. We've looked at the issues objectively and decided we're right. All the time. About everything. I don't know why people can't understand that."

It is estimated that with the saved walking time Angel will be able to get a life.

Neither the people of Mao nor SGA President Jeff Howe were available to comment on the Maoan antihills or Angel's lack of geographical knowledge at press time.

■ Tony wins

continued from page 1

reflect on the campaign run during a slow peaceful drive in his 1964 El Camino.

"You know, its times like these that I wish prositution were legal. Hell, I'm the fricken President, lets legalize it. Wooooooooo! You know what I think? I think we should build a strip club in the UGRT. I am the absolute monarch, the high king. All I need now is my love queen," Whitman said.

"Woooooo!," he added.

Trustee candidate Jeff Bazydlo was stunned. "I'm stunned." He could barely say anything else. "I can barely say anything else." These are not the droids you are looking for. "These aren't the droids we are looking for." Move along.

Moving right along, we have just received breaking news, which is still happening, a little more, ok, its done. New ballots have been found in the basement of the Physical Plant. All contain a Jim Coopee write-in. Coopee groupie Kathryn Harris, former Secretary of State of Florida, released a statement a short time ago. "We do not believe the results. I will lead the UMass recount myself." Experts say this is bad news for Big Tony, and good news for Jeb Bush, who suddenly appears as a heel-turn front-runner.

"Screw that bee-yotch," said Big Tony to me as I typed in Harris's statement. "I am already making real changes."

Big Tony, within the first 5 minutes of his monarchial reign, has already changed some minor policies. His first order of business, to raise capital for the underwater bowling alley, was achieved via the privatization of such things as class names and streets.

Campus streets were bought by the Hasbro Corporation and Kmart. Massachusetts avenue is now St. James place. University Drive will be known as Ventor Avenue, along with Frat Row now being known as Baltic Avenue, or the blue light district.

New class names include MTV's Culture, Society, Cribs and People; VH-1's Anthropology Anthology; The Christian Network Presents Evolutionary Theory: Fact or Fiction; FOX's When Weather Attacks; and Madame Cleo and Mary Kay team up to bring us Cosmology and Cosmetology.

Other plans by his Royal Tonyness include invading Ethiopia, establishing valet parking on the quad and abolishing the senate.

"I'm going to break Ol' Dirty Bastard out of jail and bring him to the Spring Concert, too. I'm the damn President. Woooo! Bring on the interns."

President Whitman then ate a large plate of ham, saying he was trying to "gain mass."

SGA throws new students out

By Michael ShrewsBengtti
SGA Reporter who has not been blacklisted yet

There was pure and utter shock last night on all those in attendance at an SGA meeting when Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez announced that the SGA had thrown each and every student out of the University of Massachusetts.

"It's called the no-go clause," Tavarez explained. "In each student's contract with the University, in fine print, it explains that students are not allowed to go back home after their orientation with the New Students Program for one solid week. Since most students are picked up right after the program is over, and do not have any proof that they stayed the full week, no one is officially a student here."

An uproar began in the convention room of Chuck E' Cheese where the meeting was being held, and a chant of "Who do we want? Bulger," broke out once again.

"Fuck, fuckity fuck fuck shit fuck," said Speaker of the Senate Jim Eltringham. "This fucking organization ass fucks my [really bad expletive] hard."

Eltringham's outburst caused the rest of the Senate to yell and scream things at Tavarez, quickly responding by saying, "Hey, why don't you guys calm down. You're acting like a bunch of drunken rowdy frat boys."

According to Tavarez, students will have to vacate the University at once. No one is to report to class until something is worked out between the University and the students that allows for students to leave the campus after orientation. Tavarez explained, "The University should be ashamed of itself, not allowing students to have certain freedoms. This certainly puts a damper on so many wonderful things we had planned. I feel really bad for the poor person at University Productions and Concerts (UPC) that has to call Traveling Matt and tell them that they will no longer be headlining our annual spring concert."

Tavarez said that the concert would have to be canceled. As reported in an earlier edition of the Collegian, UMass' Traveling Matt was announced as the headliner of the show last week, when the SGA refused to shell out enough money to bring Mentos (the guy who stands outside of Antonio's with a steel drum) to the Mullins Center. This forced UPC to put on a concert with exactly $17.30 in its budget. However, tickets for Traveling Matt at the Spring Concert were free as long as you purchased their new album, Better than You.

Though he stood next to Tavarez grinning, it was unclear what position trustee Seth Avakian held in the entire situation. "The students have to vacate the University," he said. "That could be a bad thing for a student who wants to stay, and it could be a good thing for students who want to leave. What is really important is that people make the decision for themselves." Others weren't so sure.

"What the Hell am I going to do now that I'm not a student?" questioned former senator Ed Cutting. "I don't feel prepared to enter the real world just quite yet."

Tavarez built on the shock after his first decision, also declaring "There are in fact a few students who actually did follow through in signing the no-go clause, upon their arrival to the University," he said. "The following people are not kicked out just yet; Gabriel Tavarez, Jeffrey Howe, Rebecca Austern, that old dude who runs the Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC), Jeff Bazydlo, and aw-shit, Jim Eltringham."

Tavarez cursed himself for not finding another way to screw Eltringham.

It was announced that the remaining students would form Coordinating Council, and meet once a week for the rest of the semester in an attempt to learn everything that students could not. They would do this until all students were allowed back into the University, and a full student body could convene once again. The only difference between this Coordinating Council and the one that was formed last semester after the entire Senate was kicked out (or Operation Greek Removal as it was officially called) is that this year's council would likely be even less effective than last semester's.

In an attempt to keep students interested from their homes, this semester's council will be run like the game "Survivor." Each week, a different student will be voted off of the campus. It is rumored that Mulcahey will lead tribe "Psychotic Southwest," while Bazydlo will direct the "Pissed off Frat Boys Brigade." They hope to bring the two groups together at the end for the ultimate assembly of UMass' finest.

The early front-runner to win the game and be the ultimate UMass student is the dude from the CRC.

Students who do not wish to leave the campus will be faced with some problems from the SGA. "They can shove it up their ass," was the official statement in a press release from the Coordinating Council. "Do we really need students anyway? The SGA has been fully functioning in a normal, non-offensive and organized manner all year without any student's interest but our own in mind anyway. So who cares if they all got kicked out?"

SGA President Jeff Howe was unavailable for comment. All calls to the Hangar to see if we could get him to deliver food also failed.

Campus Perspectives

What are you going to do when you get out?

Melissa Hummel
Hisses like cat, dances like wind
"Take a look at my picture. Would I or would I not make the perfect mascot for an ice-cream treat?"

Matt Despres
If it wasn't for Despres, I'd never get laid
"Wipe my ass with the Collegian."

Catherine "C-$" Turner
Trust us - don't fuck with her
"Don't fuck with me. What kind of question is that? Do you want me to come over there and beat your motherfucking face in? Huh?"

Rob Schulze
Sweetest cheeks in town
"Get out of what? These pants? I'll probably do what all pantsless men do, if you get my drift, heh heh. Watch The Powerpuff Girls."

Pubic Lice Sock Puppet
Is scary in so many ways
"I'd probably suck blood out of your pubic area. But that's just me."

Mike Delarso
Keeper of the Bell-Shaped Hair
"Three to five? I'll be outta this hole in two. Keep your eyes open, judge."

Lou Reed
Rock star
"I'd rather be remembered for this stunning mullet than for any of that shit music I made."

Doctor Suds
Builds great male anatomy
"Just ask Ron Jeremy who his daddy is."

!Achtung!

University Parking Services is now under new management. Apparently the meager $100 fines did not deter unsactioned parking. New policies and penalties are now STRICTLY ENFORCED and are outlined as follows:

• Basic Parking Violation Penalties:
1st offence - bludgeoning to the cranial, neck or groin area (our choice), $500 fine or 2 weeks indentured service.
2nd offence - curb bite.
3rd offence - running the offender over by the truck, stringing his/her lifeless body on the hook naked and a ritualistically dragging of him/her through campus while blasting polka.

• Handicapped Zone Violation Penalty:
Offender will be paralyzed upon our arrival by means of wrench-to-the-lower-back and/or fracture of both legs. If the offender is already handicapped but failed to register for a sticker, he will then be further disfigured.

• Contesting Claims:
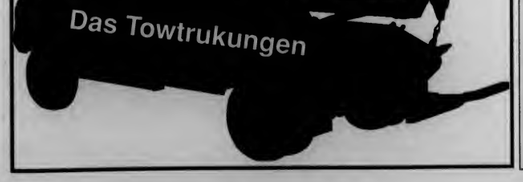
The act of contention of tickets or violations is as of now itself considered a violation under the new restructurings. Upon the receipt of such a contention the violator will be interrogated (deprived of light, food and water) untill such a claim is withdrawn.

Thank You and Have a Nice Day!



Its a MAD, MAD Special!!!

Come down to any DC on Sunday for a very special brunch!

WE JUST RECEIVED A SHIPMENT OF THE MADDEST COWS IN ENGLAND, AND WE RE PASSING THE MADDNING GOODNESS TO YOU!

Choose from a selection of:
- Grade MM Steak (the extra M is for the extra Maddness!)
- Hooves n' Assholes stew
- Cow Pies, just like ma' used to make!
- Our fabulous Foot' n'Mouth Fries

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Instrucciones para
Uso del condon

Almacenaje

1. Mantanga el condon en un sitio fesca y seco alejado del sol.

Empaque Individual

2. Para secar el condon si el empaque abra cuida dosamene una esquina del empaque. La manipulacion bruca, las alhajas o las unas pueden danar el condon y reducir su efectividad.

Uso del condon

3. No utilice el condon si el empague esta danado o abierto o si el material de gonia esta pagajoso o fragil u obvia mente danado.

4. El condon debe ponerse sobre el pene erecto antes de cualquier contacto con su pareja ya que las lesions, las secreciones producidas antes de la eyaculacion, el semen, los fluidos vaginales, la saliva, la urfina, las materias fecales pueden con tener organismos de enfermedades trans mitidas sexualmente.

5. Coloque un Nuevo condon sobre la punta del pene y desenrolle el condon hasta la base del pene. Deje suficiente espacio en la punta del condon pare recoger el semen. Apriete la punta del condon ligeramente para dejar salir el aire hacia la base del pene.

6. Si desea utilizar un lubricante, utilice un lubricante a base de agua. No utilice lubricantes a base de aceite, como los lubricantes a base de petrolato, aciete vegetal o crema para el cutis ya que estos pueden danar el condon de latex.

7. Despues de la eyaculacion, retire el pene cuida dosamente antes de perder la ereccion. Sostenga el contorno del condon para evitar que el condon se rebale y que el esperma se derrame.

8. Desechar el condon da manera higienela.

9. Nunca vuelva a utilizar el mismo condon. Use un condon Nuevo cada vez que repita el acto sexual o cualquier otro contacto con su pareja que incluye contacto con el pene.

10. Si despues de tener relaciones Ud. o su pareja piensa quedar embarazada, consulta inmediamente su medico.

Precauciones

11. El uso del condon en relaciones no-vaginales incrementara el riesgo de que se dane o se salda de su lugar. Consulte su medico.

12. Este producto contiene latex natural, lo cual puede causar reaciones alergicas. Algunos individuales pueden experimentar reaciones algergicas a los productos de latex. Ciertas personas pueden experimentar algergias con cualquier production hecho de latex, y deben consultar a su medico antes de utilizar el condon. Tambien puede, utilizar el condon Durex Avanti que no esta hecho de latex.

Durex, Avanti y el Sello de Calidad Durex son marcas registradas grupo de Ll.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Heaven is so fucking great

Man, oh, man, lemme tell you. I'm sure you all know me – Mother Teresa, world renowned healer, visionary, activist, considered by many the world over to have been a literal saint of our times.

MOTHER TERESA

After a long life lived in the sewers of Calcutta, in the slums of India, helping and aiding the wretched, the sick, and the weak, I finally expired to my just reward of heaven.

Many people remark that they don't know how I did it, how I lived such a life of austerity and self-denial surrounded by the most disgusting, diseased humanity in the world. They say that I never did a thing in my own interest as long as I lived, that I knew only the misery of others and the ache of caring too much for those whom the rest of the world considered worthless.

These people are right. My life sucked. But you know what? It was worth it, and I wouldn't take back any of it. After all, it got me to heaven.

I mean, have you see heaven lately? Sweet fucking Jesus, it's the greatest place that was ever conceived of in the infinite grace of our lord God.

For one thing, there's the men. In life I was a nun, for one thing, and for another all the men that I was on Earth with were covered with the leprosy or the syphillus or whatnot anyways, so I wasn't exactly getting my rocks off on a nightly basis. That doesn't bother me anymore though; you wouldn't believe the cock here in heaven. Big strapping men with enormous love missles, lounging around everywhere doing crunches and waxing their crotches, who have no other desires than to please a saintly piece of ass like myself. With minutes of walking through the Pearly Gates I was bent over a nice fluffy cloud with the full nine inches doing their work. In that moment I knew that my restraint in life was worth it.

Other Earthy restrictions are also not enforced here. Just ask my regular girlfriend. Her name is Bambi Dee, although I like to call her the Clit Doctor. Give that sweet soul an ice cube in her mouth and 15 minutes, and she'll give you the world.

I spent a lot of time on Earth dealing with wimps self-destructing in the ghettos, wasting their lives and their livers while their children died of malnutrition in the background. It was horrible, and I never once touched the demon alcohol in life (well, except for the sacramental wine of course, silly). Here in heaven, though, I can line up my favorite shots – Blow Job, Dirty Girl Scout Playing With A Banana, Naughty Catholic Schoolgirl, Prarie Fire, and straight motherfucking communist vodka – at nine in the morning, get blitzed out of my goddamn mind, wake up the next morning on some weird cloud covered in whipped cream, and not even have a hangover. Our Lord truly works in mysterious ways.

What else can I say about how great heaven is? Besides the endless array of cock and booze, I haven't seen so much as a cold, let alone rampant, horrible, painful disease. No one dies in my arms. Political hypocrites don't promise the world and deliver exported cigarettes. No one has that 'old-people smell.' I haven't even seen an uncomfortable, itchy blue hood since my heart stopped beating and I entered Paradise.

Don't be afraid to live a life of virtue, my children. Be strong, and be brave, and stay true to your God and your morals. It fucking pays off big.

Mother Teresa is a deceased Catholic.

Fear the mullet

Collegian* Columnist All-Stars to play Skybox. Leather pants mandatory.

Open letter to Jeff Howe

My Dearest President Jeff Howe,

Hi. I'm not sure if you know who I am, but we've talked once or twice, and over that time period I just could not get you out of my head. I know that this is a weird way to express how I feel, but I thought that this would be the best way to catch your attention, knowing your love for the Daily Collegian and all.

I just want you to know that I have been in love with you since the first day we meet that one time in your office. Do you remember that?

I remember the way you spoke to me, so gentle and soft-spoken, and the way you looked, can I just say, I love the scruffy look.

Whenever I call 549-WING for my boneless chicken wings with sweet mustard sauce I pray that you will be the one delivering them to my door. I must admit, I do call frequently; do you still work on Tuesday and Thursday nights from 5:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m.?

I just love a man in power and the fact that you have stuck around for a few extra years makes me feel like God put me here to be with you. Do you believe in soul mates? Because to be perfectly honest, every time you speak to me, it sends shivers down my spine, making each moment more difficult to be apart from you.

I have often times asked myself: Why President Jeff Howe? Is it your smashing sense of style, is it because you live your life focused on the needs of every student at the University of Massachusetts, or is it just the way that you don't give the time of day to anyone due to your drive for success?

I have come to conclusion that it is just a combination of all of these aspects that make you the one man for me.

CHRISTOPHER DOONESBURY

I know I'm no Sheila Tunney. (I'm a one guy kind of guy) but I can offer you things you have never dreamed of. I'm willing to subject myself to your degrading ways for the rest of the semester and the rest of my life. You don't have to worry, because I will never let you down.

I wait by the phone every night hoping you will return my phone calls, but always go to bed with an empty feeling in my heart. Yet, you can never let me down because I will always be there waiting with my arms and heart wide open for you to come running into.

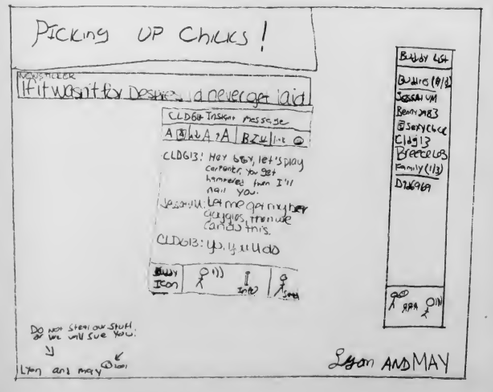
I know that this is a lot to bring upon you at once, but I just could not hold it inside any longer. I love you, and there is nothing that you can say or do to change that. You and I were a match made in heaven put on this earth to be together, and if you have not realized this yet, I'll leave you with this final note that may change everything.

Do you sleep on your stomach? Could I?

Love you forever – Christopher Doonsbury

Christopher Doonsbury is a UMass student

Editor's Note: Jeff Howe was not available for comment.



PICKING UP CHICKS!
ROOMMATE
If it wasn't for Desiree, I never get laid
CLD613: Hey Hey, let's play cartoon so Stu banners can't nail you
CLD613: Yo, you do this.
Do not stay on Stu's bed or he will sue you.
Lyon and May
Lyon AND MAY

Letters to the Editor

Aaron Wilson is a sex bomb

To the Editor:

I want Matt Despres to be the father of my children. Or at least just have sex with me, once. He is, without a shadow of a doubt, my soul mate.

Winona Ryder
Hollywood

To the Editor:

I want to applaud you for your coverage of diversity issues in this semester's Collegain. We were wrong to castigate you over and over last semester, calling you racist and whatnot. We sincerely apologize and commend you for your commitment to fairness and equality.

ALANA Coalition
Student Union

To the Editor:

I bow to your supremacy. I acknowledge that my paper is propaganda trash. I realize that my prejudices and hatreds flood every page of my poorly written, horribly produced, and cheaply printed rag. I am so sorry.

Zack Spilman
Publisher, The Minuteman

To the Editor:

This letter is for Rob Schulze. You haven't answered my emails, Rob. You haven't returned my phone calls. I know you got that valentine I sent you in the mail last month, but you still haven't sent me one back. You haven't even had the decency to take me out to dinner, whisper sweet nothings into my ear, and fuck me like a beast. I know you want to, Rob. I know it was meant to be. I've read your columns. We were meant to be together. It's fate. Don't fight fate, Rob. I have your address. I know where you live. You have to acknowledge my love and actually meet me someday. How that day goes depends on you. Stop avoiding me! No woman should feel like I do! I will not be treated like this! You love me! And I love you!

Deranged Stalker
Orchard Hill

To the Editor:

I want to thank the Daily Collegian for their impassioned defense of the file-sharing service Napster. Through such luminaries as Dave Troupes, Melody Zagami, and Mike Delano, in addition to your staff editorials, I have been led to see the error of my ways. I repent and have invited Shawn Fanning to me the new bassist in my band. Dave, Melody and Mike can come hang with me, pierce their nipples, and complain in a self-righteous manner about selfish things just like I do any day. Thanks again, Daily Collegian!

Lars Ulrich
San Francisco

To the Editor:

I would like to thank you for the lengthy article written about me, "Stone Cold" Jane Austin. I must say, however, that I have no idea what you were referring to when you talked about all of those films based on books I wrote. I've never written a book, although last night I had Virginia "The Wolf" in this vicious piledriver, and I don't think I'd be wrong to call it poetry in motion. Next time check your facts, and maybe your spelling.

"Stone Cold" Jane Austin
England

To the Editor:

My name is George Parks. I am the grand-master of the Power and Class of the University of Massachusetts. After re-reading the brilliant scathing critiques of Sam Wilkinson, I decided he was right. The band has to go. I ordered them to drink the purple Kool-Aid and within minutes, their lifeless bodies lay prone on the ground. All hail Sam.

George Parks
Fine Arts Center

To the Editor:

Emily Vacanti is my favorite writer.

Emily Vacanti
Southwest

To the Editor:

I am utterly concerned with the lack of tennis coverage my team has received in your newspaper. I mean, what the fuck? I can understand blowing off the men's team because those guys suck. But our women's team is wicked hot. I mean we're bangin' – we hardly lose. Can't you spare us some ink beside those features making a lame attempt to hit on our best Italian player? Give me a ring at Wimbledon. I know we can work this out.

Judy Dixon
Massachusetts men's and women's tennis coach

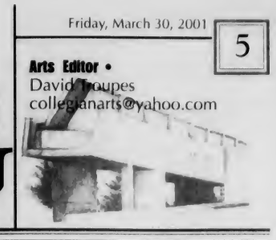
To the Editor:

I am incredibly dismayed by the possibility of the Daily Collegian doing an article and/or editorial on the global mullet demand. Although I have no proof, and have neither heard nor been told anything about it, a mullet article could be catastrophic. Haven't you done enough? Are there no morals seeping through those cold, coarse veins of yours? I have a mind to come down there and teach you a lesson. Back in 1985, when I graduated, all the cool kids had mullets. I think back to those days, passed out after a cocaine bender, and the pure hatred mullets brought. Damn you mullets, damn hang with me, pierce their nipples, and complain in a self-righteous manner about selfish things just like I do any day. Thanks again, Daily Collegian!

Lars Ulrich
San Francisco

To the Editor:

I would like to thank you for the lengthy article written about me, "Stone Cold" Jane Austin. I must say,



Jim Corr driven insane by sisters' hotness

By Fritz the Cat
Collegian Staff

The Corrs – hailed by music critics everywhere as the best band almost named after a beer – have been making headlines for their infectious blend of traditional Irish music and artfully arranged contemporary pop, and for their staggering physical perfection.

Sisters Andrea, Sharon and Caroline have been making music together for the better part of a decade, and reducing brother and fourth band member Jim to states of unfashionable guilt and lust for at least as long.

"It obviously helps our celebrity, the girls being so good-looking," said the guitarist/keyboardist in a recent interview with the Collegian, his tinny Irish voice betraying his crumpled sanity, "but it's driving me nuts."

"I feel like a hungry vegan in a Texas roadhouse," added the shame-wracked musician.

When not rehearsing with his sisters, Jim spends most of his time translating epic Middle English poetry into a language of his own devising, consisting of combinations of the numerals 1, 2 and 3. "I call it 'trinary,'" said the obviously crazy Irishman, who has recently taken to illustrating his translations with "invisible paint."

"Sometimes I paint my sisters with invisible paint. That's my favorite one," he said, gesturing toward a blank space on the wall, his arm quaking with the magnitude of his insanity. "You can't buy it."

Even with his fabricated hobbies, however, there are still plenty of hours in the day for Jim to spend wrestling with the incestuous fantasies that threaten to undo what little of his mind remains. His breath, rancid and nauseating with a self-prescribed diet of cigarettes and almond butter, washes through the air as his thoughts turn, once again, to his sisters.

"And I'll tell you something," said Jim, his eyes darting nervously around the trailer, strewn as it is with promotional material emblazoned with his sisters' comely forms. "I've got my favorites."

"Most people go for [vocalist] Andrea, and hey, she's a hottie. No complaints here," he said with a sinful, drooling grin before recomposing himself and continuing. "But let me tell you, when we're on stage I can't take my eyes off of [drummer] Caroline. I'd watch her all day if I could, pounding on those taut skins, her sinewy arms straining for volume, louder, louder, faster, harder... The sharp cry of the snare drum complementing perfectly the breathy moan of the tom, two rhythms separate, unique, and yet totally dependent upon each other, like two creatures destined forever to dance their carnal dance of two – "

Jim broke off, wiping his palms down his pant legs and forcing a more casual pose.

"That is, she's an excellent drummer. I hold her... drumming... in high esteem," the broken half-man said with a hard swallow, once again forcing down the shameful emotions that have long since dominated his waking life.

Henry Rollins (see inset) of Rollins Band, through a massive promotional mistake, found himself on stage with The Corrs in Glastonbury, England three years ago, where he responded to the loud, watery pop like a cornered wolf, leaping into the crowd and devouring several dozen concertgoers before fleeing into night.

The horrifying man-beast has remarkably fond memories of the event, and of the Corrs. "I'd like to take a swim in that genie pool," offered the towering singer while strangling kittens.

COURTESY OF MAN BEAST

Henry Rollins and The Coors, in a lamentable twist of fate.

Mindless crap earns priority in Hollywood

By Cameron Crewe
Golden God

In a move that entertainment experts should have seen coming, the heads of all six major Hollywood studios have announced that there will be no non-sequel films released for the rest of this year, or ever for that matter. The move is thought by many to be an attempt by the studios to save money on screenwriters.

MGM, 20th Century Fox, Viacom, Universal, Warner Brothers and Sony signed a landmark deal yesterday, which creates the Sequel Association of America, a group dedicated to reducing the cost of producing films by never funding a movie that is not a sequel. Noticeably absent from the SAA was Disney. Since Disney constantly produces the same tired, mindless crap though, experts don't foresee a problem.

"We constantly produce the same tired, mindless crap, so I don't foresee a problem" said Michael Eisner, Disney's President and CEO. "After all, if you've seen one dancing, singing animal in a complete corruption of an original Grimm fairly tale, then you've seen them all."

The heads of the other studios stood behind the decision in a press conference following the announcement.

"We suck and have for a long time. Just look at the AFI's list," said some really old rich white guy with no imagination, head of MGM, in reference to the American Film Institute's list of the Top 100 movies of the last 100 years. "We make tired, mindless crap, so I don't see how the SAA is going to make things worse.

"I mean there were barely any movies from the 90s on that list on all and only one in the top ten," he continued. "Schindler's List, a movie about World War II. And everyone knows that we've milked that cash cow for all it's worth. Christ people, don't you realize U-571 was just The Hunt for Red October and Crimson Tide all over again?"

Also coming out in favor of the studio agreement was two-time Academy Award winner and one of the most successful directors off all-time, Steven Spielberg.

"What the hell do I care? People are going to see my movies anyway," said Spielberg. "I could make 20 Jurassic Parks and people would eat it up. Oh, me and my puns, I'm such a rich, clever bastard. No, seriously, the series might get tired around number 15 or so, but the last five would still make half a billion each. Besides, by that time, they're going to need to some of those fancy animatronics to make it appear as though I'm still alive."

George Lucas, the director and artistic mastermind behind the Star Wars series agreed with his friend Spielberg in a statement made to greasy fan boys on his underground website.

"I've made a multi-billion dollar career off of a bunch of guys playing with light-sabers," the site stated. "If you think Jar Jar Binks was sad, that's just fucking pathetic. I mean light-sabers. Do I have to spell it all out for you? They're obvious phallic symbols."

Reports that the statement was in fact posted by an underground hacker known only as XhBit72 have not been confirmed.

While most critics have said that the SAA will completely cut-off the production of original movies like Almost Famous or American Beauty, its proponents say that the deal also opens up new doors.

"I think people are only looking at the negative aspects of this. Just imagine some of the sequels we can now make. Indiana Jones 4, Back to the Future 4, E.T. 2. Fuck, I'd even be stoked about that one," said Spielberg. "Plus, what about prequels? I think people are overlooking that aspect of this deal. I think people are really interested to know about how the shark in Jaws came to be a man-eating killer. Or how about the three brothers in Private Ryan? What were their lives like before they were brutally slaughtered during the war?"

In reaction to the creation of the SAA, Academy Award winner Russell Crowe had this to say: "I am gladiator."

The creation of the SAA is just the latest step by Hollywood to produce what some call "tired, mindless crap" with less effort. One only has to look at the late 90s rejuvenation of the teen slasher flick to see the start of this trend.

"Sure, we could mass produce that garbage for less than five bucks and make a killing," said Miramax head, Harvey Weinstein. "But that crap took effort. There are only so many big-breasted, nubile females on TV to put in tight jeans and a spaghetti strap tank top. Plus, we had to come up with new character names and a new, progressively more ridiculous hook for our killers for each movie. The SAA eliminates the need for any sort of thinking whatsoever. We can just make Screams for the next fifty years."

Teen heartthrob, Freddie Prinze Jr., for one, was relieved at the announcement.

"Finally, I don't have to hide the fact that I've been making the same movie my entire career," said Prinze. "She's all That, Down to You, Boys and Girls, Head over Heels – all three words, all the same movie."

In addition to the short list of currently green-lighted sequel projects, including The Mummy 2, The Matrix 2, The Matrix 3, Rush Hour 2, American Pie 2, Austin Powers 3, Star Wars: Episode 2, Crocodile Dundee 3, Blade 2, the fifth Batman, Die Hard 4, Zorro 2, the remake of Planet of the Apes, X-Men 2, The X-Files 2, Jurassic Park III, and the Lord of the Rings trilogy, a number of new films have been announced in light of the deal. These include: Dude, I Found My Car, The Grinch who Stole Easter and Triple Jeopardy.

Radiohead's latest awash in gangsta cliches

By Abe Vigoda
Collegian Oaf

RADIOHEAD
Amnesiac
No Limit

From the bass-heavy opener of "Boo Yea Booty" to the hackneyed psychedelic samples of "Velvet Weed Bag," Radiohead's eagerly awaited Amnesiac is a disappointing regression to the formulaic gangsta rap the Oxford-born collective so elegantly avoided with 2000's experimental Kid A.

With Kid A, critics and fans alike were overwhelmed by the band's progressive adventure into avant-garde compositions and electronic atmospherics. The eerie and foreboding tone of tracks like "Treefingers" and "Idioteque" were a refreshing break from the increasingly predictable street narratives of frontman Thom Yorke, whose tales of hustling and thug antics inspired many in the rap game to challenge their validity.

Unfortunately, the challenging framework of the previous album has been left behind in favor of the same tired rhymes and beats that spawned the radical change of Kid A. Collaborations with guest producers Timbaland, Mannie Fresh, and Swizz Beetz simply don't click this time around.

In fact, much of the album's lyrical material focuses on cliched battles and beefs with other major hip-hop players. "World of Hurt" addresses an insult hurled at the band from Cita, the popular computer generated VJ on BET's Cita's World. Yorke's delivery is passionate, but one is left to wonder the necessity of an entire track dedicated to the bashing of a crudely animated cartoon. Similarly, "Face Fulla My Fist" challenges controversial rap star Eminem to a fistfight under the Marble Arch.

As on previous albums, the listener is apt to wonder what the other musicians, often seen in press photos, are doing during the recording of the album, as the music seems to consist solely of beat machines and samples. However, the entire band does rally for the rousing "Mash Out Bristol," a passe-mix style indictment of the hip-hop influenced drum 'n' bass scene of Bristol, often criticized by Radiohead for "biting their style."

Regardless of their accusations, Radiohead has lapsed back into their style of old that certainly no one will want to borrow from in the future.

COURTESY OF STUPPED STEPHANIE

Thom Yorke of Radiohead, iced out as usual.

Collegian smart is one helluva piece a business
Fans, everything's here but the Black Scorpion

By Kurt Meltzer
Collegian Smart Fan

You know what, I'm sick of all these damn marks! And while we're at it, all the smart marks, too. My name is Kurt Meltzer – Collegian Smart Fan – and if you're not a smart wrestling fan, just do the damn job right now and stop reading this column. Sell for me goddammit! Anyway, I don't write in proper paragraphs, or use good English, so kiss my ass!

Why don't the boys juice as much anymore? I'll tell ya why cause they are a bunch of green prima donnas, trained at the Powerplant.... gimme a damn break. Why can't they hit a gusher like Muta? That's what I wanna see in my wrestling these days.

As far as Vince buying WCW, sounds good to me. All those lazy workers with their guaranteed contracts that Bischoff signed for them...they are out of luck now, huh. They'll be working the indies jobbing to Shark Boy if they don't smarten up and listen to Vinnie Mac. Now we won't have to watch those no-talent, no-juicing, no-jobbing friends of the booker like Hogan, DDME, Stink, or Big Lazy anymore. Have fun playing solitaire Stink. One thing that really got me up in arms was when all the marks thought that the whole angle was just a work. Yea right, obviously it's a worked shoot, not a total work. But it's not like the whole thing is a shoot, since the sale has been tied into the actual worked angle itself. So it's gotta be a worked shoot.

Gotta love it when that hot crowd at Raw popped for the WCW guys when Vinnie Mac was saying their names on Monday. I couldn't believe those marks popped for Goldberg. But who knows, maybe it was a work.

Speaking of jobbing and juicing, I want Angle to job to Benoit at Wrestlemania this Sunday. If I booked it, the match would go like this. Angle starts out by getting some cheap heat. Benoit then sells for a while, and juices to get some face sympathy. Then both hit all of their trademark spots before a ref bump and a few run ins. Benoit makes a false comeback, only to be hit by Angle's finisher, however it will only be a near fall. Benoit hits the Dragon Suplex (his finisher in the Wild Pegasus days in New Japan circa 1995 Super J Cup) for the bounce. The marks will mark out, and the smarts will be happy that a good worker like Benoit was finally put over on a PPV. By the way, I'm sick of Angle as a heel, time for a face turn if I was booking.

Another match I'm really looking forward to is the TLC match. When these three teams met at Summerslam last year it was a four and a half star sportfest, and a true Observer Match of The Year candidate. However I beg to differ with the notion that the matches between these three teams have rivaled other classic matches. In my view, a good Misawa vs. Kawada All Japan Match or Flair-Steamboat from the 1989 Chi-Town Rumble is superior to anything these three teams have ever done. Most of the spots can be seen in early 90's Lucha, and the brawling is no better than mid-90's ECW, or modern day Big Japan. Still the Swanton Bomb has to rival the Phoenix Splash, The Orange Crush Bomb, The Shooting Star Press, The Reverse Shooting Star Press, and The Springboard Hurracanrana through a flaming table as among the business' best moves.

To close out this week's column, I'd like to put out a poll question for all the smarts/smart marks reading my column. Who do you think is a better worker? Sean Waltman, Peter Gruner, or Oscar Gonzalas? Also, do you think HHH is on the gas? Vote at www.wrestlemark.com.

COURTESY OF MAE YOUNG

Hey yo

Goatee files for divorce from Collegian Webmaster's face

By Walter de las Estrellas
Collegian Mystic

AMHERST In an announcement that shocked many in the world of facial hair, the goatee of beloved Collegian webmaster Jaret Barr filed for divorce from the staff member's surly, often smug face yesterday in a high-profile media event. Barr, better known to his colleagues as J-Bo, was unavailable for comment immediately following the goatee's forceful address to the media at the steps of the Student Union.

At approximately 1 p.m. on Thursday, the goatee, flanked by two burly bodyguards, displayed a cocky swagger as he approached the podium. The podium had previously raised speculation, as the wooden structure with a cryptic message on its front was placed at the steps of the student union hours before the goatee's speech. The sign on the front of the podium depicted a headshot of Barr, with goatee, in a large red circle crossed out. Immediately below the picture was an apparently computer modified picture of Barr without the goatee, followed by a large exclamation point covered in glitter.

The playful nature of the sparkly glitter was not to be found in the tone of the goatee's speech, as it was strictly business. The hairy mass was occasionally short of breath following sporadic red-faced screams, used sparingly to accentuate portions of the text of his 45-minute speech.

"There's no future for us together," the goatee lamented to a frequently puzzled and confused crowd with a consequently high turnover rate.

Pleas for additional moisturizing lotion and trimmings were the bulk of the first half of the goatee's speech. After the announcement of the divorce midway through, the address collapsed into a jumble of sobs and often outlandish accusations of supposed abuses by Barr.

Barr and the goatee were spotted later in the day enjoying a half-priced Mombo Combo at Chili's, but refused to comment on the day's transpiring.

Stealster open for business

By Truck Pole-sky
Collegian Jackass

The online music community Napster announced plans for it's revolutionary new system of trading music on the Internet in a press conference Thursday afternoon in New York.

With Napster's future threatened by a series of court injunctions, Bertelsmann CEO Craven Morehead unveiled plans for a new form of Napster, called Stealster, which is sure to please both the recording industry and consumers alike.

As Morehead described, "Napster has long been accused of stealing money directly out of the pockets of recording artists, and taking food directly off their dinner table. Now with Stealster there will be no question that is exactly what we are doing. The way Stealster operates is very exciting."

"While online, people will be able to order whatever song or album from whatever recording artist they choose. Their order will then be filed on our $100 million dollar computer system. Then comes the part we are really excited about."

"We will then actually hire hardened criminals to go into record stores and steal the songs or albums the customer has ordered while holding the employees of the store up with an Uzi. Your music will then be delivered to your doorstep in 3 to 5 business days at no charge."

Morehead added further that, "What makes this so exciting is the fact that we are actually willing to kill people just so some 14 year old girl can have the new O-Town album without paying, it really puts the power back into the hands of the consumer. Furthermore, we will also directly go into the homes of recording artists such as Lars Ulrich, and steal food directly off of the plates of their children and clean out the entire refrigerator of all food items, rendering the children staved."

Minutes later Napster founder Shawn Fanning drove up in his 2001 Ferrari and proclaimed the day a great day for all music lovers and thieves alike. Fanning stated that Stealster would allow for lesser known and unsigned artists to get discovered and develop a fan following. Exactly how the hell this would happen Fanning didn't describe. Fanning also stated that the influence behind the name Stealster was because he always liked to steal his moms pink panties and try them on when he was in high school, and the other kids gave him the name "Stealster," hence the name Stealster. In response to critics who claimed Stealster is nothing but stealing, Fanning stated "Stealster is not like stealing at all, it's no different than if I record a tape and give it to my friend, no different at all, goddammit."

Suddenly, Lars Ulrich pulled up in his 1982 Pinto with a door missing, and crashed his car into the stage where the press conference was being held. Ulrich claimed that Napster had deprived him of his right as a recording artist to be "filthy fucking rich," and that Stealster would make things far worse. He claimed his youngest daughter was at home starving to death thanks to Fanning, as she had only eaten a lone Cheerio in the last eight days.

The reaction by others in the recording industry was mixed. When asked about Stealster, rapper Nelly's only response was "E-I ,bro, E.I." Brittany Spears was quoted as saying she didn't know quite what to think of Stealster, but that she would check with her management to find out exactly what her opinion on the matter was. However she did say she was making arrangements to auction off one of her breasts on Ebay to raise money for food. Not surprisingly, Shaggy's only response was "It Wasn't Me."

Information from this article was plagiarized.

Local RENT-head to do some stuff

By lesmizfir24601 and Akita Evita
Collegian Staff

UMass student Jessica Obie may not be a theater major. She has not participated in one production of a musical or a play in all of her life. In fact, she has never even seen a straight play. But all of that has not stopped Rosie O'Donnell from handpicking Jess as the recipient of the award for the "Musical Theater's Biggest Phan" award.

Jess, who her friends call "Eponine," says although she has never seen a non-musical piece of theater, she has seen over five Broadway musicals, all of "the good ones."

The award, which will be presented next Wednesday on Rosie's syndicated talk show, is given to someone who has proved to be a dedicated musical theater "phan." The "phan," Jess asserts, alludes to the popular musical "The Phantom of the Opera," and not the jam band Phish.

Jess, a resident of Orchard Hill, heard about the contest through an announcement on the show two months ago. Contestants were asked to send in a 200-word essay about why they should be named "Biggest Phan."

"I think it was the picture I sent," Jess said upon being asked why she thought she was chosen. "It was of me and I had all my musical stuff on. My RENT scarf, my Cats headband, which is fuzzy cat ears, My Phantom mask, my Starlight Express roller blades, my Miss Saigon t-shirt, and my RENT pants that are just like Mimi's."

"I've seen RENT 28 times, and I've listened to the CD like 28,000 times," says Jess. "I can't believe this dream is coming true. I've always wanted to be on Rosie. This truly is a season of love."

In a press statement earlier this week, Rosie announced that Jess was her choice. The talk show host is commonly known as the queen of mainstream musical theater. She is usually credited with single-handedly turning the Tony awards from a semi-respectable awards show with low ratings into a ridiculous debacle with slightly higher ratings.

Along with performing a number with Sarah Brightman and Rosie on the show, Jessica will be given a ticket to a handful of Broadway shows, including the revival of Stephen Sondheim's Follies.

"Stephen who?" asked Jess.

There is also a cash prize accompanying the award. Asked what exactly she plans to do with the money, Jess said, "well, after buying all of the shows' souvenirs, I might just rent an apartment in the Village. You know, Alphabet City, and see if I can't work as a starving performance artist. I was also thinking of taking up an addiction. Heroin, maybe. Or be a lesbian or a musician. No day but today."

"RENT, definitely," says Jessica when asked to name her current favorite musical. "I mean, Phantom still has a warm place in my heart and Eponine's plight really moves me, but I feel like I can really relate to the characters in RENT. I think that I'm just a real Bohemian."

Asked if she knew what the word Bohemian meant, she replied "Um...." Asked how she felt about Puccini's opera, on which the musical is based, Jessica looked confused.

"Viva la vie boheme!" she said, "and I also love Dave Matthews."

As to what she will say to her friends back home when she is on TV, she replied "all I ask of you, is will I lose my dignity, will someone care, will I wake tomorrow from the dream I dreamed about the music of the night in Saigon?"

Hip-Hop climaxes with Orgazzum

By Precious Jackson and Kurt Loder and the first Survivor' cast and the cast of 'Real World: Quito' and Susan Whitbourne and that guy with the shirt
Collegian Rap Snackz

In a year of amazing releases such as Outkast's acclaimed Stankonia and The Bee Gees' comeback album, Cottage Cheeba, comes the fanatical debut of primetime rappers Orgazzum.

Collectively they may be one big climax, but the duo of Cmunny and DJ Suds keep you moist during all 69 trax of their first album, Is there a mirror in yo pocket cuz I sure cun see myself in yo pants.

Cmunny introduces the album with a grinding hook of "Let me get a condom" and then there's a three-minute pause as she actually runs and gets a condom.

Meanwhile, DJ Suds spends the intermission beatboxing and mumbling about "I can't [something, something] keep it [something] any longer, [expletive]."

The next few tracks pick up a bit and take on a more mainstream poppy effect echoing the recent sexual rampages of Ludacris and DMX in the album's first single, "Ass" that samples from George Michael's 1985 hit, "I want your sex."

Later on in the album DJ Suds shows off his mixing and scratching skills in "wha-wha-wipe it off, bitch" and in "Smell my flower" Cmunny invites a bodacious lover to please her with his tongue.

Then the album takes a darker, harder thrust with Suds' envious chant of "But you said size didn't mat-mat-mat-mat...", with Suds' signature stutter after a fresh blow job on the record. "It's hard to keep it up" and "I need new pants" follow up with eerie basslines but are definitely the worst songs on the LP.

Cmunny fo sho contributes the best tracks on the album with cuts like, "Hooray for Boobies," and "Lube it up like I like it." With its catchy chorus line, "A little to the left, nah, a little to the right" it's sure to become a classic.

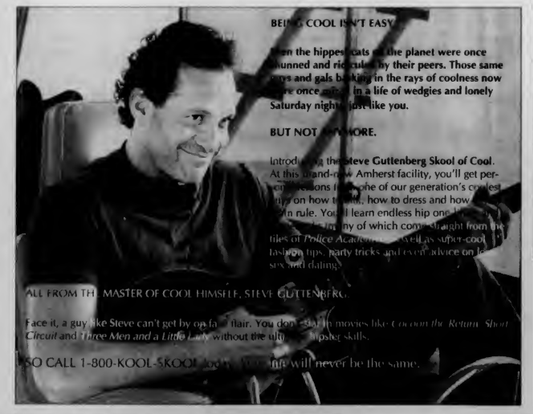
"Put It Where You Want It, Just Not In My Butt" features the upcoming lyricist Tipper Gore, who has recently ceased her censorship campaign for the sultry world of Sleaze Rap.

Sources report that her sexual encounter with DJ Suds in the production booth may have been the reason behind her sudden change of heart.

Finallly, in the last two songs, "Can you Cunnilingus," and "Hold on to my cheeks" the pair of Orgazzum really get it together to belt out long, heated and horny ballads of supreme pleasure and gritty bumps.

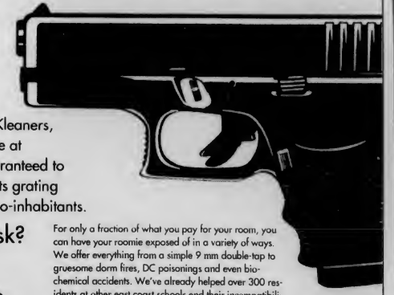
"I used up my box of Kleenex listening to this one," Said Roger Ebert after listening to the Hip-Hop sexcapades. Without a doubt Orgazzum will have you cumming to the stores to buy their shit.

"But damn," he continued. "Those two fuck like rabbits. And Cmunny has a great rack."



When it comes to your annoying roommate, have you reached the end of your rope?

RELIEF IS IN SIGHT



Just call Kampus Kleaners, a new service here at UMass that is guaranteed to rid our school of its grating and bothersome co-inhabitants.

How, you ask? Simple. We kill them.

For only a fraction of what you pay for your room, you can have your roomie exposed of in a variety of ways. We offer everything from a simple 9 mm double-tap to gruesome dorm fires, DC poisonings and even bio-chemical accidents. We've already helped over 300 residents at other east coast schools end their incompatibility problems forever.
Get the peace you deserve. The quiet you deserve. The single you deserve.
So call Kampus Kleaners today.

Wish winter would never end?
Want to go to a place where summer never comes?
Discover Antarctica!
ONLY $999.99
•Scarce Plant Life
•Blistering Cold
•Blue Icy Waters
•Crazier than Cancun
Includes:
•Plane Ticket on US Bet Your Life Air
•Igloo Accomodations with a beautiful view of the Ocean
•Classes on How to hunt and Skin your own food
What More Reason Do You Need! Sign Up Now!
Contact NicNuc at 1-800-555-1234

DONNA -HO'S PIZZA
$2 OFF ANY PIZZA VALID 11AM-10:30 PM
FAMILY MEAL DEAL
ONE LARGE CRAPPY PIZZA $9.99+ tax
One order of CRAPPY BREAD STICKS Made from Leftover pizza dough $4.99+ tax
One Dozen CRAPPY CHICKEN WINGS reheated in microwave $6.99+ tax
38 LARGE PIZZAS 245 CHICKEN WINGS 3,000 gl. of Soda (ALL CRAPPY) $18.99+ tax
CALL 545-1749 FOR WICKED SLOW DELIVERY

Live half-naked buff Southern men with tattoos! Skrape plays WAAF show tonight!

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Support UMass lacrosse! In fact, you can do this by reading about it in today's Collegian! Yeah UMass lacrosse!

ARTS p. 8 SPORTS p. 9

Volume CVII Issue 105 Real News www.dailycollegian.com Real News Friday, March 30, 2001

Pollitt brings wit and wisdom to UMass

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Staff

Think feminism is dead? Kathe Pollitt doesn't. In an event sponsored by the Everywoman's Center and Food for Thought Books, the renowned critic, essayist and associate editor of The Nation brought her sharp wit and controversial political commentary to the UMass Student Union on Monday.

Food for Thought Events Coordinator Joan Barberich compared Pollitt's writing to "swallowing applesauce from a spoon." Barberich added, "Whether or not you agree with her, she makes you listen. She helps us to discover what we really think."

Pollitt read from her latest collection of essays entitled Subject to Debate, a compilation of pieces from her Nation column by the same name.

In "School Prayer-By All Means," Pollitt discussed her own experience at a non-sectarian private school that still enforced rituals such as attending daily chapel services, attacking the role of any kind of organized religion in education. The child of a non-practicing Episcopalian and an Atheist Jew, Pollitt emphasized that "there is nothing like being excluded to embrace one's otherness." She warned that bringing prayer into schools, "which kids hate anyway," would move many students from mere apathy towards religion to "open disgust."

Pollitt addressed the subject of marriage and family values in her essay "Of Toes and Men," the title of which refers to the illicit sexual behavior of family values advocate Dick Morris. Pollitt highlighted a double standard set for women by male politicians who promote, but do not follow, certain codes of moral conduct. Women in the public eye, according to Pollitt, are expected to "combine attractiveness and asexuality.... a zeal for work and a lack of ambition." They must deal with attacks on everything from their physical appearance to their cooking. Perhaps the shrew of the women, as well as the welfare mothers so often criticized by conservative politicians as being lazy, suggests Pollitt, is to become prostitutes, pointing out the fact that this career move has indeed lucrative for the call girl with whom Morris was caught.

"Kissing and Telling," Pollitt's piece concerning the suspension of two elementary school boys for "sexual peccadilloes," targets those who by addressing incidents such as this, but ignoring more severe cases, relegate sexual harassment to being considered the "obsessive fantasy of joyless prudes." Teachers, warns Pollitt, are "missing out on addressing an important issue without bringing 'nasty old feminism into it.'"

Feminism is a subject with which Pollitt is often associated. According to Pollitt, among the most critical issues facing feminists today are reproductive rights, welfare reform and the situation of poor women.

"Society rests on the unpaid work of women," said Pollitt, urging a rearrangement of society so that women's work is not taken for granted.

When a 1998 issue of Time magazine declared feminism as "dead" and trivialized the state of the movement as frivolous, Pollitt authored a scathing rebuttal. In a question and answer period after Monday's reading, she addressed this question, citing the term "feminazi" (coined by conservative radio talk show host Rush Limbaugh) as being used to "shut up women and young girls," and "delegitimize feminism." Pollitt also pointed out that although it has become difficult for women to call themselves feminists, it doesn't mean that they don't support the goals of feminism. She cited a poll in the Wall Street Journal that revealed that a large majority of Americans support the full development of Title 9, even if men's sports suffer in the process. In spite of this, however, concluded Pollitt, "You can't use the word, but you can be the thing."

Questions from the audience in regard to the recent Presidential election prompted commentary from Pollitt. Progressive voters are "dispirited and angry," stated Pollitt, because "Republicans are really conservative, but Democrats are only pretending to be liberal." While the 50 percent of the nation who voted for Gore-Lieberman are told to stop complaining and deal with the outcome of the election, Democrats themselves do not make a fuss.

What, then, is the answer for liberal, progressive voters? Sandy Mandel, Director of Programs at the Everywoman's Center, articulated her experience of protesting at Bush's Inauguration, saying, "Standing up, even by yourself, feels wonderful — no matter how loud the other side is."

For Pollitt, the answer to making changes in local struggles for issues such as affirmative action, living wage campaigns, anti-sweatshop protests and events such as Take Back the Night, Students, said Pollitt, need to "use education as a part of political development."

SHALINI KANTI/COLLEGIAN

Critic, editor and essayist Kathy Pollitt came to UMass in an event co-sponsored by the Everywoman's Center and Food for Thought books.

Where's the bad beef? Not here, according to officials

By Katie Goldsmith
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

(U-WIRE) AMES, Iowa - Editor's Note: This is the second in a two-part series about Mad Cow Disease. This article examines the theories of how the disease transferred into the human population.

The frenzy over Mad Cow Disease in recent weeks has brought an old subject back into the spotlight.

Although scientists have studied the disease for years, they still are not certain how bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or Mad Cow Disease, developed in humans.

Prion diseases, or transmissible spongiform encephalopathies [TSEs], exist in a variety of animals, said Nolan Hartwig, Iowa State University Extension veterinarian specializing in beef, dairy, sheep and veterinary public health. Scrapie, a TSE that occurs in sheep, has been present in Europe for more than 200 years and is also present in the United States. A TSE also occurs in mink, and there is a disease called Chronic Wasting Disease in elk and deer.

Hartwig said there are several TSEs in humans also. A disease called Kuru developed in New Guinea native tribes who practiced ritualistic cannibalism. When a person died, family members would eat parts of the brain. This practice led to the development of a TSE. Other TSE diseases in humans are Gertsmann-Straussler Syndrome and Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease, which usually appears in older adults.

The human version of BSE, first diagnosed in 1986, is known as New Variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease, or vCJD. The disease appears in younger people and appears to be nearly identical to BSE in cows, Hartwig said.

BSE is mainly passed to other animals through feed, said Harley Moon, professor at the ISU Veterinary Medical Research Institute. He said there is no evidence that it can be passed by contact - it must be ingested or injected.

"They are not, in the ordinary sense of the word, contagious," he said.

Hartwig said it is not known how BSE developed in cows, but the working theory is that sheep byproducts infected with scrapie were fed to cows in England, and the scrapie mutated to become infectious to cattle.

"At this point, we have to say that's an unknown," he said. "But we still have to use the working hypothesis so that we err on the side of safety."

Hartwig said the current theory is that BSE somehow transferred to the human population, possibly from infected beef. There are currently about 90 people either dead or dying from BSE. Besides England, cases have been diagnosed in France, Spain, Italy, Belgium and Germany, according to CNN.com.

Janice Miller, veterinary medical officer with the National Animal Disease Center of the USDA Agricultural Research Service, said it is difficult to know exactly how many cases of BSE exist because of its long incubation period - probably four to five years.

"Most [infected] animals are four to five years old," she said, "and they're assuming that the [contaminated meat and] bone meal was ingested when they were young calves."

However, some infected animals are 10 years old, so she said it is unclear how long the incubation period is. Some TSEs, such as Kuru, can have incubation periods of several decades, she said.

Hartwig said the disease probably spread to the continent from animal byproducts exported from England.

Although Moon said it is unlikely that BSE will be imported into the United States, he said there is a possibility that the disease could appear in the United States as it did in England. However, if that occurred, he said, the United States has extensive safeguards to ensure BSE does not enter the cattle population.

These safeguards include a ban on the importation of cattle and the importation of animal byproducts. Also, regulations are in place that prevent feeding byproducts from ruminants such as cows, sheep and deer, to other ruminants.

"If [BSE] were to emerge, we've put in place the things we need to do to detect it, [probably] reasonably early," he said.

In addition to importation bans, the United States has an aggressive surveillance program, Hartwig said. Brain tissue from animals showing signs of a nervous system disease are sent to the United States Department of Agriculture's National Veterinary Services Laboratory [NVSL] in Ames, where the animals are examined for BSE.

Miller said the brain samples are stained with an antibody designed to detect the BSE protein. Currently, no animals have ever been diagnosed with BSE in the United States, she said.

Some people have criticized the surveillance program, which began in the early 1990s, for not being proactive enough and screening animals that are not showing signs of the disease, Miller said. However, she said such a program would most likely be futile in the United States.

"Europe's finding a lot of those animals that aren't showing clinical signs," she said, "but then they also find those animals that do show signs."

So far, Miller said the NVSL has looked at about 12,000 brain specimens and found no sign of BSE. The brain specimens are taken from dead animals and sent to the NVSL, where they use a special test for the prion protein that causes BSE.

"That's been a source of confusion for a lot of people, because they don't know that all the tests are [not] being done on live animals," she said.

Miller said it is possible to do tests on living subjects, or patients. Doctors could do a brain biopsy, which would extract tissue from the brain of a live animal. However, the procedure is very costly, and it is not done on animals because of its expense.

Nancy Degner, vice president of consumer marketing for the Iowa Beef Industry Council, said the surveillance program in the United States would catch any outbreak of BSE early.

"With all that has been put in place by the industry, it should be identified and contained, and that's it - it's over," she said.

Degner said the American beef industry is concerned by the threat from BSE, but they are confident the regulatory system will prevent any cases of BSE in the United States.

"The cattle industry is extremely concerned that we don't want it here," she said, "but we're also confident that there's a lot of safeguards in place, both regulatory and in the industry, that we should not have a problem."

She said the United States has been fortunate in having time to prepare for the disease and put effective safeguards in place.

"We have the luxury of looking back at what happened in England and making sure that won't happen again here," she said.

Degner said the Iowa Beef Industry Council is trying to educate the public about BSE. She said they have been communicating with newspapers around the state and food safety professionals to keep them informed of any developments with BSE.

Although beef prices dipped when a cattle herd in Texas was quarantined after eating feed made from ruminant byproducts, she said the markets have recovered, and there has been no major economic impact since then.

"Anytime there's negative information of such a scary nature, I think it damages the industry," she said. "Whether people are choosing to not eat beef, we have not seen that."

Hartwig said beef is safe to eat.

"Do I eat beef? You bet," he said. "And would I eat beef in the U.K. or Ireland? Yes."

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM / COLLEGIAN

Saving the world is a full-time job

A student works diligently on one of the many MassPIRG campaign posters seen on campus.

The lottery everyone is dying to win

By Jonathan Wilde
Washington Square News (New York U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK - College students rarely play the lottery. Yet every year New York University students are forced to take part in at least one: the housing lottery.

This month students are once again participating in the annual spring ritual of choosing roommates, submitting applications and visiting the many NYU dormitories spread throughout Manhattan to select rooms.

The process of choosing housing consists of three phases. The first is the reapplication period, which began Feb. 20 and ended March 9. At this point, students needed only to tell NYU that they would like housing for the next year.

Phase two is the lottery card process. Students must group themselves with prospective roommates, as well as choose and rank their top five preferred dormitories. This year NYU's housing department must receive a student's lottery card by midnight this Friday.

NYU conducted its housing reapplication and lottery card phases online this year for the first time ever. No paper applications were accepted by the school's housing offices from the over 7,000 students who reapplied for housing.

The move from ink to electronics was taken largely to make the reapplication process easier for students, said Director of Housing Administration Jennifer Brown.

"There was no financial consideration in our decision to do [reapplication online]. To not have it online was really inconvenient to the students," she said.

In fact, students saved money this year because of the online service. Unwilling to send a bill home to every student or trust the newly-developed software with credit card numbers, NYU officials waived their usual housing reapplication $100.

"It was a nominal fee, and we felt it was creating more of a hindrance to the online process than it was worth," Brown said.

With everything available online, students could reapply and fill out lottery cards 24 hours a day, seven days a week, rather than be subject to the housing office's 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. business hours.

"With technology comes a certain level of flexibility. Students can be in their rooms and go online and go through the process," said Maurice Washington, NYU's director of residence life.

Brown also explained that with electronic application, the housing lottery process was made much more efficient.

"In the past, each of the applications and each of the lottery cards would have been entered by hand," she said. "[With the online applications] we've eliminated a lot of the data entry errors. We have a lot more time to work with students that may have [a problem]."

The final phase is building assignment and room selection. According to Brown, students will receive their building assignments by April 20, and will visit their new buildings to choose rooms within three or four days.

Building assignments are decided by what Brown calls an, "all computerized, true lottery process." For every consecutive semester in school housing, a student accumulates 1 housing lottery point. The points determine a student's chances in the lottery.

This means that a junior, assuming he has spent all his years in NYU housing, will have 6 points going into his fourth year. A freshman naturally has the least lottery points, with only two. Statistically, the junior has a three times better chance of being chosen at any given moment in the computerized process than the freshman. Thus freshmen often find themselves living far from campus in their sophomore years, while juniors have a better shot at getting Alumni Hall singles and Carlyle suites.

"Conker:" video game fun

By Jeff Hoyt
U-Wire

LAS VEGAS – Nintendo deserves two thumbs up for releasing this game. Given their track record of games starring the cute and cuddly, something has to be said for the sheer moxie of releasing a game like "Conker's Bad Fur Day." This can be loosely described as a mature game for the immature, and anyone who is a fan of humor derived from the bathroom and sexual innuendo will get a huge kick out of this title for the Nintendo 64. The star of "Conker's Bad Fur Day" is, of course, Conker. This red squirrel has an affinity for liquor and cold, hard cash – the more, the better.

The story behind this game is, quite frankly, all over the place. There is a central plot told through cut scenes involving the Panther King, Conker, spilt milk and the need for a table leg, but that's not what makes the game.

Rather, the smaller side tasks that comprise the entire adventure make the game such a jot to play.

Movies, movies, movies! Who doesn't like a good movie? Game developer Rare took the time to accurately parody some of the greatest movie sequences of our time — from an opening scene that's eerily reminiscent of Stanley Kubrick's "A Clockwork Orange," to a wicked hallway shooting scene straight out of "The Matrix." This cute red squirrel makes for one badass video game character. "Brain Stoker's Dracula," "Saving Private Ryan," "Reservoir Dogs" and "Jaws," are just some of the parodies visited in the game.

The game begins with a rear shot of Conker's girl, "Berri," jazzercising, before zooming out to center on her telephone, where Conker is leaving a message. It seems that he will be late coming home since his pals, who "are off to fight some war somewhere," will be leaving in the morning. By the time Conker decides to leave, he's completely tanked and gets lost on his way home. The next morning, Conker wakes up in a drunken stupor and begins what can only be called a bad fur day.

The game itself is a visual masterpiece on the N64. The use of textures and lights creates an environment that fits the game and its cartoon atmosphere to a T. "Conker's Bad Fur Day" was originally designed for all ages, and is therefore a very bright game by nature. When Rare changed formats to the adult version of the game now released, they kept the cartoonish feel, providing a very light-hearted atmosphere to compliment the adult circumstances. What does this mean? Not only are the background environments well-detailed, but also the characters themselves have excellent texturing. So instead of crammning realism into the game, Rare keeps the player visually involved in the story.

The sounds elicited from "Conker's Bad Fur Day" are spectacular. Using a new compression, long loops of CD-quality music were placed in the game, thoroughly surpassing that of any N64 game I've sat down with, and allowing for a ton of voice.While many of the more noticeable sound effects center on the bathroom humor (read: farting, squirting and the like), every sound in the game is of excellent quality. Some of my particular favorites are the rave music in the Rock Solid Dance Club and the Sloprano sung by stage host "The Great Mighty Poo."

Gameplay is, as always, an important factor to consider. If a game is too difficult to control, it not only takes the player out of the experience, but also can make an otherwise fun game a frustrating mess. Thankfully, "Conker's" keeps it simple by having only four commonly used commands. Everything else is accessed via the "context sensitive pads." By standing on the pad and pressing the "B" button, Conker is automatically given whatever he needs in order to accomplish the specific task at hand. It's called "context sensitive" because it's sensitive to the context of the situation Conker is in. Simple, is it not? Great control options like this add immeasurably to the total experience.

Those who like to share the fun will find several multiplayer games to partake in with their friends. Outside of the traditional Deathmatch, there are variations that keep the game from getting stagnant. In "Tank," you, uh...control a large tank, and attempt to retrieve a chemical weapon and return it to your base. If you are successful, everyone except for you will be nuked. "Heist" puts you in the role of one of four bank robbers. It is up to you to steal the loot at the center of the map and return it to your color base. It's everyone for themselves, and you move slower while carrying the money, forcing you to zigzag to avoid weaponry.

"Raptor" is another fetch-retrieve game, where you play as either a raptor or caveman. The caveman's job is to steal raptor eggs and return them to a giant frying pan, while the raptor has to gather food for his as-yet-unhatched young. An interesting concept, but the game heavily favors the green dinosaurs as they outrun the cavemen. "Race" lets you play a short hoverboard course that is included in the regular game. With only two players, this game doesn't hold much on its own, but does support the better games.

One of my favorite multiplayer games is "Beach" — a solid play on the Normandy beach landing scene from "Saving Private Ryan." You can either play as the Frenchies, who are defenseless as they storm the castle, or the Tedlz, who, using high powered guns, attempt to keep the Frenchies away from their base.

Finally, there is "War," in which two teams face off to blow the snot out of each other. What sets this apart from Deathmatch is a gas canister you can use to kill everyone who isn't either wearing a gas mask or in a special "Bunker" area. You can also play "War" in "colors" mode, which gives brings the game into a capture-the-flag realm — definitely one of the better ideas brought to multiplayer gaming.

"Conker's Bad Fur Day" was released on March 5th, and I would like to point out that this game is being marketed to those above age 17 exclusively. It's a mature game, and a riot to play. I highly recommend it, but not while your eight-year-old cousin Susie is looking over your shoulder. For those Spring Break fun-seekers who want to check out the game, Nintendo will be running demonstrations in South Padre and Panama City, so be sure to look for them if you head that way. Now, all I want to know is why my 21st birthday wasn't this much fun.

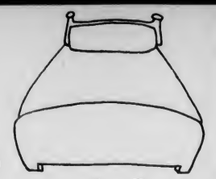
COURTESY OF RCA RECORDS

New Killer Americans
Southern Florida's Skrape will be at the Tsongas Arena tonight as part of WAAF's Indoor Beach Party.

Collegian Editors:
The Board of Editors meeting scheduled for this coming Sunday has been cancelled.
Go outside and play!

Ever tried to fit 3.5 students into one bed? It's not comfortable.

UMass has 22,000 students trying to sleep in 6,300 beds, leaving 15,700 students looking for an apartment.



1?

Advertise yours in the Annual Collegian Apartment Guide.

Deadline to place a classifieds ad is April 6. Issue to be published on April 11.

Stop by our office in the Campus Center basement or call 545-3500 for more information

Sign up for the most important job in New York City.

Become a NYC Teaching Fellow now. Join a select group of talented professionals and graduates who will teach in New York City's under-performing classrooms this fall. No previous teaching experience required. You'll receive a salary while working toward a fully paid Master's Degree. Help us give all NYC students the quality of education they deserve. Apply now. Applications due April 7, 2001. Call 1-877-NYFELLO or visit www.nycteachingfellows.org.

NYC TEACHING FELLOWS

A program of the New York City Board of Education. An affirmative action/equal opportunity employer.

The Pride up next for Minutewomen

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

After picking up its first win of the season on Wednesday, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team looks to make it two in a row when it takes on the Hofstra Pride on Saturday morning. Just two days ago against the University of Vermont, the Minutewomen enjoyed their best offensive showing of the season when they put 18 shots past Catamount goalie Kate McBride en route to a 18-2 victory.

UMass (1-4) will need an equally strong performance on Saturday to get past the Pride. Hofstra comes into the game on a four game winning streak and with a 5-1 record overall. In its last game, the Pride knocked off Boston College 13-5 in Hempstead, N.Y. behind a five point performance from sophomore Kathleen Mikowski and a hat-trick from senior Kathleen McPike.

"They're a top 20 team who are athletic and in many ways very similar to us," said UMass coach Phil Barnes. "They really like to control and move the ball with their setup attack."

The Pride are averaging more than 11 goals per game, but to do so on Saturday they will need to conquer UMass' goal-tending dynamic duo of Cyndi Doyle and Jen Nardi. In each of the last two games, the pair have split the time between the pipes for the Minutewomen, allowing just 17 goals In those two games. Nardi, a senior co-captain, made three saves and did not give up a goal to the Catamounts on Wednesday in just her second game back from shoulder surgery.

At the other end of the field, the Minutewomen will need another five-star performance from freshman Angela McMahon. McMahon, who scored five goals against UVM, is currently second on the team with seven goals and eight points trailing only senior Rachel Ingraffea in both categories. However, these two cannot do it alone and if the Maroon and White are to get past the Pride than McMahon and Ingraffea will need a little help from their friends.

Senior Fay Naber, sophomore Lydia Robinson, freshman Hope Zelinger and the rest of the Minutewoman attack will need to be firing on all cylinders if they are to score on a Hofstra defense that is allowing less than six goals per game.

One advantage that UMass will definitely have is playing at home. In Wednesday's game with UVM, the Minutewomen were obviously more comfortable and relaxed playing at the friendly confines of Richard F. Garber Field than they were playing on the road.

"We play on this field everyday so we knew what to expect," said Zelinger. "We're getting sick of the bus," added sophomore Bridget Byrne.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Fireball
Senior Chris Lynch and the No. 6 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team face No. 15 Penn State in a tough conference match this Saturday at 1 p.m. on the turt of Richard F. Garber Field.

At ZANNA...
low rise jeans

Buffalo
Hollywood
Mavi

downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

McMurphy's
Uptown Tavern
The Mighty Ross Tones
Every Sunday Night
No Cover
Proper ID Required
37 North Pleasant St.

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
liquor • beer • wine • lottery • phonecards • cigarettes

Heineken, 12 pack	$10.99 + dep
Dinkel Acker, 12 pack	$9.99 + dep
Saranak, 12 pack	$9.99 + dep
Honey Brown, 12 pack	$7.99 + dep
M.G. Vallejo, all kinds	$4.99
Sutter Home Chardonnay 750	$4.99
Luna Di Luna, all kinds 750	$7.99
Rubinoff Vodka 1.5	$8.99
Smirnoff Raspberry 1.5	$19.99
Jim Beam 1.5	$18.99
Stohli Strawberry	$16.99

visit our new Beer Of The World section!
Register for Weekly Drawing!

Open for business Saturday March 31, 10-6
SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
WE DELIVER — MATTRESSES FUTONS • BEDS • ETC. — WE DELIVER

*Symbol Mattresses	*Wolf Futons	Free frame with any mattress set
*Kingsdown Mattresses	*Bunk Beds	Free solid cover with any futon se
*Day Beds	*Canopy Beds	Free removal of old bedding
*Area Rugs	*Lamps

Wide Selection of Futon Frames and Platform Beds
And much much more
Big City Merchandise at Home Town Prices
328 College St. • Rt. 9 Amherst, MA
next to the Spirit Haus (413) 253-BEDS

General Electric
Monster.com
Red Herring

Q: What do these companies have in common?

A: Former Collegian Advertisment Managers.

THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVES

CALL 545-3500 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE, ROOM 113 IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT, FOR MORE INFORMATION.

APPLICANTION DEADLINE IS MARCH 30TH

The Black Sheep

THE BLACK SHEEP has been serving the UMass community for over 15 years.
We are a delicatessen, all butter scratch bakery, gourmet food purveyor and full service caterer.
THE BLACK SHEEP is renowned for providing the most memorable and best tasting GRADUATION PARTIES in the Valley.
Stop by for a cup of coffee, overstuffed sandwich, or homemade dessert and see what we have to offer.
THE BLACK SHEEP
79 MAIN ST. AMHERST
253-3442
OCMP, VISA/MASTERCARD ACCEPTED.

PARKING SERVICES REGULATION REMINDER

Effective Monday, April 2, 2001 Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement, which is 7:00am to 5:00pm Monday through Friday.

Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, except visitor meter lots, which are enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm. Vehicles may park in any legal parking space, provide it is not a tow zone, handicapped space, vendor space, state vehicle space, reserved space, or 24-hour permit required lot (lots 21, 29, 47, 49, 50, 54, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.), from 5:00pm to 7:00am, Monday through Friday, weekends and holidays, without displaying the proper permit. Parking meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00am to 5:00pm, Monday through Friday.

Minutewomen splash into head games

By Alison Sciamanna
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's water polo team is heading into the Indiana Invitational this weekend with high expectations from its coach.

"I want to win all the games," coach Donna Heinal said.

Unfortunately for Heinal and her No. 18 Minutewomen, that task will have to be accomplished without junior All-America goalie, Dana Sinkwich. Sinkwich suffered a severe concussion on the team's road trip to California last week against San Diego State. She is expected to be out for two weeks.

"It's going to tough," Heinal said. "We're going to have to step up our defense."

Freshman back-up goalie, Emily Knight, will have the daunting task of filling Sinkwich's shoes. However, Knight is up for the challenge.

"I'm excited because I know that the team has to step up," said the native of Watertown, Conn.

"Our back up goalie is going to have to rise to the occasion," Heinal said.

The Maroon and White will clash with the Wolverines of Michigan and the Hoosiers of Indiana on Saturday, both of which are ranked in the Top 20. They will face the Michigan State Spartans on Sunday.

UMass met up with Michigan in its first game of the season, which the Wolverines won 8-3.

"We played them our first game and held them to three, but ran out of gas in the fourth quarter," Heinal said.

The Wolverines are ranked No. 13 in the nation at 14-9-1 and are on a 10-game win streak. They are coming off a winning weekend in the Southern Division Tournament.

"Supposedly they're doing the same thing the first time we met them," Knight said. "We worked on a lot of new things."

She also pointed out that the last time the two met, the Minutewomen were without team members who are also members of the swim team – so with the addition of those members, it gives the team added firepower.

The second game of the day on Saturday pairs the Minutewomen up with Indiana. The Hoosiers go into the tournament with a 13-7-1 record and are currently ranked No. 17 in the country.

"I've heard they're playing well as team," Heinal said.

One of the Hoosiers' biggest rivals is Michigan, so the Maroon and White will get a taste of what Indiana will bring earlier in the day when it plays the Wolverines.

Michigan have faced them this season and beat them by a large margin.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Megan Thompson and the Massachusetts women's water polo team will look to survive a tough weekend without their All-America goaltender Dana Sinkwich who is out with a concussion.

Michigan, Amaker agree to five-year deal

By Raphael Goodstein
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

(U-WIRE) ANN ARBOR, Mich. – The school that gave the Michigan basketball program its only national title has now given the Wolverines a new coach.

Seton Hall basketball coach Tommy Amaker has agreed to a five-year deal to coach the Wolverines and will be introduced as Brian Ellerbe's replacement, likely Friday, but possibly as soon as Thursday. Amaker resigned from Seton Hall Wednesday.

"This is now a team that can be restored to some of its past glory with this guy on the sidelines," freshman center Josh Moore said Wednesday night. "We have enough talent and we have the right coach to get it done."

Seton Hall Athletic Director Jeff Fogelson released a statement Wednesday, saying "I appreciate all that Tommy has done to position our basketball program among the best in the nation. I'm sure that he'll do the same for Michigan."

Michigan Athletic Director Bill Martin spoke with Amaker several times in the past week and flew to Philadelphia – where Amaker attended a memorial service for the brother of Seton Hall freshman Eddie Griffin – on Tuesday to meet with him.

Martin said the 10-person screening committee he formed to search for a new coach helped narrow his candidate list down to six.

"It was immensely helpful," Martin said. "When I put it together, I didn't realize how helpful it'd be. Our conference call was three hours long."

The committee was headed by former Michigan star and current Houston Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich. The committee met last week and those who couldn't attend joined via conference call. Sophomore forward LaVell Blanchard missed the meeting but later met with Martin to discuss the decision.

Fellow committee member and teammate Chris Young said Wednesday that he is pleased with Martin's decision.

"I think he's an excellent coach," Young said. "I heard he is a players-type coach. He yells when he has to, but he also knows when to sit down and talk with you."

When asked if he or any of his teammates would transfer, Young said, "I don't think so."

One player who promised not to transfer is freshman guard Bernard Robinson, who was recruited by Amaker in high school.

"I like the decision," Robinson said. "He was my favorite candidate because I knew him in high school. He's a good all-around guy and a great, young coach."

After reporting that Amaker was coming to Michigan, ESPN said Wednesday night that he was having second thoughts about leaving Seton Hall. That report was refuted by Martin, who received a phone call from Amaker confirming that he was coming. He also called ESPN to refute the report.

Amaker, 35, was 68-55 in four seasons at Seton Hall, including a Sweet 16 appearance in last year's NCAA Tournament and three NIT appearances.

The Pirates, who started the season ranked in the top 10, struggled all season and reached their low point when junior Ty Shine and freshman Eddie Griffin were involved in a fight in the locker room after a game.

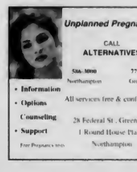
Michigan was 10-18 last year and finished in 10th place in the Big Ten. It was the Wolverines' worst showing since the 1981-82 season.

None of Ellerbe's assistant coaches have been fired yet and Martin said it will be up to Amaker to decide if he wants to retain the same support staff.

Michigan's lone national title came against Seton Hall in 1989.

Geometric Tank...
$28

ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com



Unplanned Pregnancy?
CALL ALTERNATIVES
Nbo. 3000 Northampton
774-6800 Greenfield
• Information
• Options Counseling
• Support
All services free & confidential
28 Federal St., Greenfield
1 Round House Plaza, Northampton

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily
&
THE HANGAR Pub and Grill

THE UMASS DAILY COLLEGIAN AND THE HANGAR
Present
DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM NIGHT
DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM NIGHT

THIS SATURDAY MARCH 31ST
FROM 9P.M.-11P.M.

THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
At the Hangar Pub & Grill
55 University Drive.

• Door Prizes will be given away throughout the night
• As Always $ 2 Coors Light Draft
• GRAND PRIZE: Diamond Rio Portable Music Player

SPONSORED IN PART BY: Black Sheep, Judies, Zanna, & ABC.
THE BLACK SHEEP Deli & Bakery
Judies
ZANNA
BREWING COMPANY

FUNNY !!!

Best! 2000 UMASS Daily Collegian
By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday-Friday
(413) 549-0145

Experience Community Health in Honduras May 23-June 19, 2001

Integrating clinical experience with an enhanced sense of cultural awareness, UConn's Community Health in Honduras Program is open to nursing students, public health students, practicing nurses, health care professionals and other students, seeking to expand their knowledge of health care practices in an international setting. This 4-week program will be under the guidance of UConn faculty. Students earn 4 academic credits; RNs can earn 6 CEUs.

Information:
860-486-5985, Pat Harkins
Online:
continuingstudies.uconn.edu
Brochure:
800-622-9908
University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies

Whipple learns the tip-toe

By M-Bomb and the Wu-Tang Clan
Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

In a shocking announcement, Massachusetts football head coach Mark Whipple announced today that he is resigning in order to pursue other challenges in life. The announcement, which surprised athletic director Bob Marcum, leaves the Minutemen without its most winningest football coach ever.

"I've decided that I've accomplished as much as I can as head coach here in Amherst, and I need to pursue other dreams that I had as a child," Whipple said. "It's not any fun anymore. This town sucks. Football blows. All these guys, running around hitting each other, it's ridiculous. Someone's going to get hurt, and I'm not going to be that person. The sidelines are more dangerous than people think."

As far as next season goes, Whipple was reluctant to express his opinion about UMass' chances towards conference success.

"Who the hell knows how we'll do," Whipple remarked. "I'm no psychic. You ever watch those commercials late at night, with that overweight Jamiacan woman who says she can tell you the future if you call her? Man, she don't know shit. It doesn't matter. What bewilders me is this: Who wants to watch 22 men run around all sweaty and hit each other when you can dance?"

Dancing, Whipple went on to explain, was his first love as a child. The former head coach plans to apply for a position in the ballroom dance department while he pursues an education in biochemistry.

"It's all I wanted to do – I wanted to dance. Everyone made fun of me because I used to dance with a broom around the living room when I was in high school, but it was so much fun. The cha cha, the waltz, jive, the fox trot, the samba – Oh Gary and Ace, I'm getting hot!"

Whipple hasn't closed the door on a return to coaching at UMass. "The only way I would return is if Jonathon Depina would play for me. Granted, his eligibility is up as a man, but if he did have a sex change, he would be eligible for four more years of athletic competition. I also think, as a woman, Depina would be a fantastic dancer."

Depina, who was recently drafted by the Boston Celtics of the National Basketball Association, refused to comment on the situation.

Marcum, on the news that his main man was leaving him for a career in dancing said, "Shit."

Marcum also mentioned that he has contacts throughout the football world that could lead to potential future coaches.

"People say that we don't have the money for a top notch head coach; but yeah, we do. We saved a ton of money for a new stadium, but whatever, that won't ever happen in this state. Our state government is full of donkey- loving shit eaters. I like Jimmy Johnson – He's such a porker, who couldn't love him? I bet he tosses salad. People say Mike Ditka is a jackass, but he's just a misunderstood jackass. Either way, we're looking to land someone from the upper echelon of coaching to return this program to national prominence."

Marcum expects to announce the new head coach by mid-April.

■ horny birds

continued from page 14

pleasure in months, and walked back to my camp daydreaming, without a care in the world... "Oh Common Crane," I thought. "Give it to me. Give to me like you do the Uncommon Crane."

Day 3:9: I decided to check out the southwestern coast of New Zealand for my next day on the birdwatching world tour, but it would be disappointing. All the birds I seemed to see that day were males, and frankly, they just didn't get my blood pumping. I left the coast feeling lonely and sad, and spent the rest of the day thinking of the wonderful female crane I had seen the day before.

Day 48: I saw a Warbler. I got hard.

Day 4,969: I concluded my birdwatching expedition on the California coast, where I was planning on viewing the Cliff Swallows of Capistrano. Other people had said great things about these specimens, and sure enough, they were right. I arrived at the nesting area and looked around to see dozens of female swallows zipping overhead. They would fly close, teasing me with their slender bodies and wonderful appendages, before veering away at the last instant before I could touch them. I could not take my eyes off one bird in particular, the way she moved and danced around in the air. My mouth dropped to the ground when she turned around, flashing her legs towards me while pulling a twist in midair. At that instant, life climaxed for me, and I slipped in the mud I had just created.

Men's Track

The Atlantic 10 is shaping up to be a wonderful conference in the world of men's track. Thank goodness it's only a short two-hour drive to URI to catch some of the greatest action around. Hey, who doesn't want to see runners jump hurdles and kick up some dirt? That's why you should jump on a train one weekend, and visit Fordham or La Salle. St. Joe's dominated the conference in basketball, and if they're lucky they'll be able to sprint away with a title as well. Yes, if it's great A-10 track you want, look no further than Temple. The sweet A-10; so many wonderful track teams to cover and so much extra space to fill in our newspaper. I think we got em' all though.

Let's just go back and check. URI, Fordham, La Salle, St. Joe's and Temple. Yep, that's it. No other teams to mention in the league that we can think of. None at all. Oh wait, we forgot. Add St. Bonaventure to that list. Ok, that's it. No, wait...Xavier and Duquesne. And George Washington. Done.

The World Gang-Bang Record

A fight is ensuing between two of the world's most prestigious athletes. A woman, only known as Houston claims to have broken the world's sex record by reportedly having sex with 500 men in one day. Pornstar Jasmine St. Claire claims she had sex with 501, and therefore should be considered the champion.

"That slut is walking around with my title, and I want it back," said St. Claire. "She ain't got no game."

To this, Houston replied. "Fuck you bitch. I'm the queen. Do you know how many cases of herpes I had to get to earn that title? And, my ass now permanently looks like a peanut butter and marshmallow fluff sandwich, so bite me."

After a long legal battle in the courtroom, taken all the way to the supreme court, a decision was finally made. The official winner in the battle of the gang-bangs; Chlamydia.

Morning Wood

Since Third and 48 found out that this newspaper's name would be changed to The Morning Wood, we have been on a campus-wide search to find the source behind all of UMass' first-sun timber.

Unfortunately, we couldn't find it because we weren't sure exactly what we were looking for. At first we thought maybe it would be something like finding the fountain of youth or Wilt Chamberlain's mother, but then we decided against that.

See men, morning wood controls our minds and destroys our bed sheets. That much we know.

But where does it come from? Fuck bodily functions. That's bullshit. There has to be a source behind every erection.

An anonymous tip led us to the front door of the Massachusetts softball office. There, we found a gaggle of male UMass students and faculty with bulges in their pants. James "Bruiser" Flint scurried out first past our crack staff of reporters and was followed by Jonathan Depina, a glove, and ex-Morning Wood editor Matt Vautour.

There, in the light, stood a mean old lady. She said "hello" and then asked us to repeat what she had just told us. We wouldn't budge on that request and all of a sudden the lights went out.

Soon enough, we were hard. Sorry, that's all we really want to talk about.

The Third and 48 co-editors would like to dedicate this column to Larry and everyone who has ever read it and giggled like a little schoolgirl sitting on "Uncle" Greenspan's knee. Have a nice life. Drink 40's. Smoke Blunts. And bang gloves like Jonathan Depina did as young chap. Remember: CHICKS DIG THE LONG BALL! And, "We're Legit."

■ benson

continued from page 14

out of Norway.

"The kids all called me names, like 'hoodlum' and 'cross-breed,' but rather than quit I decided to just beat the shit out of them on the ice," Svensson said. "They all took swings at my head because I couldn't find a helmet that fit over my hairdo, but I just fought back twice as hard."

To gain that toughness, Svensson would practice his cross-checking skills on unexpecting polar bears who wandered through his backyard.

"With the guys who we lost because of graduation, we had to fill the void of a hard-checking hitter up front. When I heard rumblings about a tough guy in the Northern Division, I rushed right to Vardo to catch a glimpse of the kid. I knew he was the guy when I saw him fight off a whole team and twenty or so fans who wanted his head."

Off the ice, Svensson often struggled to find his place in the community. Often criticized for his baggy pants, he instead set a trend by stealing an airplane seatbelt and using it to hold up his pants, now a fashion worn by many Norwegian teens.

In the locker room, the young scrapper often scuffled with his teammates about the music they listened to, insisting that DMX should be played before every game.

"They couldn't stand DMX, but once I found the new single featuring Abba, I couldn't get them to turn it off," Svensson said.

Svensson was also recruited by North Dakota and New Hampshire, but when he weighed his options, Amherst best fit his multi-cultural heritage.

"All three schools had winters that reminded me of home in Vardo, but UMass was the only place that offered me part of my mother's heritage," Svensson said. "Anytime I need to remember my Detroit heritage, I can just roll into drug-infested Southwest."

Regardless of what success he achieves in Amherst, Svensson is already famous – in his native land of Norway, that is. Just in the last two months, he has made appearances on eight different talk shows, including "Og souvenirbutikk," "Vi Nammeskilta," and "Donabue Norge." He has also already been invited to appear on "Jerry Springer" in an episode entitled, "My son is an Scandanavian-African-American hockey player." Svensson is slated to be one of three guests on the show.

Caught between two very different worlds, Benson Svensson can only rely on the good looks he got from his father and the street smarts imparted on him by his mother as he embarks on a journey through a strange new land. But through the universal language of hockey, this Afro-Scando-American is already well on his way to becoming the marvelous mutt of American collegiate hockey.

■ huh?

continued from page 14

me! I don't think there's a single team that hasn't expressed intense desire to sign DePina. Had I not organized the emergency draft, God only knows what lengths these teams would have gone to."

An impromptu lottery resulted in Washington winning the first overall pick, but Wizards GM Michael Jordan could not reach an agreement with DePina over playing terms and was forced to select Connecticut's Ace Wattassatap with the No. 1 pick.

"We were SO close to getting JD," Jordan said. "But he refused to come here if we didn't draft Winston Smith with our other first round pick. Besides, that Wassup kid is a fantastic shooter."

DePina and Smith ended up being selected by Boston, which traded Paul Pierce, Antoine Walker and $20 million cash to Chicago for the No. 2 pick. The Bulls later selected 6-foot-7 Oregon center Flo Hartenstein with the No. 14 pick.

Celtics coach Jim O'Brien said he envisions a backcourt of DePina and Milt Palacio restoring the franchise to its championship glory days.

"The thing about a Jonathan DePina is that he's just so explosive," O'Brien beamed. "The way he runs around really fast, back and forth across the top of the key, how are you gonna' stop that? He makes everyone around him so much better, and taller."

DePina himself expressed optimism at returning to his hometown of Boston to play pro ball, and added a special challenge to his new opponents.

"This is JD's league now," DePina said, patting the top of his Afro in what has become his trademark intimidation sign. "Kidd, you just a kid now, boy. And the Glove? Sh't, I used to f*k a glove when I was a kid. Bend over, Glove boy."

A third UMass senior drafted was guard Dwayne Early, who walked onto the squad but quit the team earlier this year for undisclosed reasons. It turns out that Early was actually still working for the Athletic Department, running a special program designed to make freshman athletes feel more comfortable at the school. One participant in the program, women's basketball player Paige Harris, said that Early's help in making her feel welcome at UMass was "huge."

"Dwayne helped me out A LOT," Harris said. "I'd go over to his place and he'd fix us a drink, put on some Barry White and help me work on my game. One time, he spent like two hours showing me how to take a charge."

Early was selected with the 50th overall pick by Dallas, whose coach Don Nelson seemed cautiously optimistic about Early's pro potential.

"Has anyone ever actually seen this kid play?" Nelson asked.

Check the fly shit

By Big Nasty
We are 100 percent objective...oh yeah, BC sucks

The UMass lacrosse team is "money" baby. With a six game winning streak to start the year and a No. 6 national ranking, the Minute-studs have all four of the die hard UMass lax fans screaming: "its not me, its Canella baby."

The season began with a trip to Long Island to take on the Flying Dutchmen – no wait, the Pride of Hofstra, and from its outset the Minute-dudes knew they were in for an interesting experience.

Everything was going well until Attila the bus driver took a wrong turn an ended up in Shaolin; the slums of Staten Island. Using Matt McFarland's keen sense of direction the squad almost made its way out; that is, until Canella and his posse decided they had to make an emergency stop at the "Wu Wear" store. By the time Canella grabbed his Wu skullcap and team captains Jeremy Gaski and Chris Gabrielli picked up their matching Wallabies and Fubu jackets, it was nearly game time.

With Attila at the wheel however, the Minute-peeps got to the field just in time to get dressed and hear Coach Canella's pre-game speech. Unfortunately a Hofstra official rudely interrupted the head coach.

"Yo god, I was rilin' up my posse and this cracker rolled up on my shit," Canella said. "He was all up in my grill telling me how they wasn't the Pride no more and I was like yo, G, explain yo-self."

Apparently during the Minute-homies trek through Shaolin, Canella picked up a new language and Hofstra picked up a new nickname.

"I was like yo, you sellouts are the Hock," Canella said. "Then I just told my boys if you lose to a team called the Hock, then I'm gonna have to break off a beatin' on all your rearends."

As it goes, the Brown and opposite of Black hunted down and cooked the Hofstra Flock in a 17-13 roost.

Next up on the Minute-chaps hit list were the Seawolves of Stony Brook. Coach Canella spent the week deeply pondering a way to motivate his team for a match up with the Stony Brook co-ed naked intramural all star lacrosse team. Suddenly the answer hit him like a broadside right hand to the windpipe: Bobby Knight.

Canella, so as to avoid a media frenzy around Minute-"G" lacrosse, had "The General" appear only for the pre-game speech. Lets listen in...

"Listen you maggots. You think because you beat a team that is called the fuckin' Flock, that makes you fuckin' good? If you are not gonna play your fuckin' asses off, if you are gonna let what's his face score on you, then you are gonna fuckin' regret it like you wouldn't believe. What the fuck is a Seawolf anyway. If you lose to a fuckin' Seawolf you'll be fuckin' runnin' for the rest of your fuckin' natural life. I am sick and tired of this fuckin' shit, I am sick and tired of losin' to fuckin' Purdue or fuckin' Stony Brook for that matter. So lets go kick some crap out of those Seaweeds and remember...do it with a smile."

Coach Canella and the University would like to thank "The General" for his heartfelt gesture in motivating the team.

Needless to say, the Minute-yo's won 17-8.

After the Minute-gentlemen popped a cap in the two Long Island squads they had to go up against the Government's finest, the Navy Midshipmen. The Minute-posse had some problems dealing with the Midshipmen's camouflage and it didn't help that a crack attack squad had abducted Jeff "Navy" Seals' lucky stick during the pre-game warm-ups.

"I was on my knees, working on my stick work in the face off circle and suddenly one of those sharp looking Navy guys came up behind me and pulled my stick right out of my hands," Seals said.

Luckily the face-off ace constructed a makeshift stick out of a janitor's push broom and a couple of scrunchies, he still won 18 of 27 face-offs.

During the week, a wedge of controversy was pounded into the belly of team unity and Tom Fallon and Matt McFarland wound up being suspended for the upcoming game against Albany. The official release read that the two hulking defensemen were punished for putting their nightly jobs ahead of the team. An inside source however concluded that while the 6-4 McFarland and the 6-5 Fallon were working as bouncers outside "The Pube" they accidentally ID'd Coach Canella and denied him access because: "It really didn't look like him," McFarland said of the thirty-something coach's driver's license picture.

Canella was later questioned by the Amherst Police but the accusations were immediately repealed when the cops realized that it was THE Greg Canella.

A perturbed Canella was reached at his office later in the week and had this to say: "Those kids [Fallon and McFarland] need a swift kick in the ass." Canella said. When asked if he was going to personally take on the "ass kicking" he replied: "Hell no, those are some big boys. Coach Mangan and his work boots take care of the ass kicking."

Even without the Bush Brothers, the Minute-dawgs showed Albany who their daddy was in a 13-goal side alley beat down.

Albany's offense was so anemic that the UMass faithful were more outraged by the Bearcats fashion statements than their play on the field.

"Take off your sweatpants, you pansy," a rabid UMass fan yelled after one of the few Albany goals.

Fallon and McFarland would return with a vengeance against rival Boston College and believe me they would really need them against the intrastate powerhouse that is BC lacrosse...just playin' yo, just playin'. In actuality, the Minute-gods bitch smacked BC 23-2, yeah...cuz BC is good.

The sixth and most recent win for the Minute-thugs came on a historic Saturday afternoon in March. A record thirteen players, all Catamounts, were critically injured and, believe me, it had nothing to do with Fallon and McFarland. The Catamounts (like anybody knows what a Catamount is) forfeited the game three minutes into the second quarter when Fallon threw his elbow pad into the crowd, ran from one side of the field to the other and dropped his signature finishing move, the "Minuteman elbow," on a Vermont attackman who had this to say: "my team sucks."

Fallon was named WHMP athlete of the week and the WWF's most electrifying lacrosse player in sports, for his exploits on the playing field.

UMass is still the TRUTH.

■ heatley

continued from page 14

Atlanta Thrashers? They're atrocious. Any team that has Ray Ferraro on it is obviously terrible."

Heatley had 57 points as a sophomore [24 goals, 33 assists] to lead the Badgers. Last year, he finished the season with 58 points, second behind teammate and current Colorado Avalanche forward Steve Reinprecht.

The decision came as a shock on both ends of the coin. Wisconsin coach Jeff Sauer now faces the prospect of a rebuilding year, as well as a serious drop in offensive production.

"I don't know what this kid is thinking," he said. "Now we're going to be terrible. First Reinprecht graduates, now Heatley leaves. I better go eat a few burgers with Barry Alvarez to drown my sorrows."

Among the other disappointed parties included Thrashers President Stan Kasten.

"We draft the kid No. 2, and then he pulls these stunts on us," he said. "Just because nobody cares about the Thrashers doesn't mean that he shouldn't come and play for us."

UMass coach Don Cahoon was obviously thrilled at the prospect of landing one of the best players around.

"This is a huge step for our program," he said. "A kid like Dany will be the cornerstone of our team for the next few years. Now we've got an elite goal scorer and a leader who can help our young guys next year.

"If our freshmen adjust well to the program next year, then I think that we can make some noise in Hockey East. I can see Dany playing on a line with Benson Svensson next year. They should work well together."

Even North Dakota hockey coach Dean Blais gave his take on the situation. However, that was only after we pried him from a Grand Forks bar, where he was drinking with his team once again.

"Dany's good, but he should have came here instead," Blais said. "Hell, we could have offered him free booze, as well as a chance to win the national title."

UMass finished 8-22-4 last season and missed out on the Hockey East playoffs. Despite the graduation of seven seniors, Heatley's addition will only help the Minutemen make a run for the Hockey East title next year.

"Most people are going to criticize me for picking UMass," Heatley said. "But this team has a lot of potential. Plus I hear they've got some great floor football games over in Thoreau."

Dick Baker, the UMass hockey boat for the Springfield Union-News was horrified when informed of Heatley's transfer. But once he figured out what happened to his neck and stopped making an 'L' with his fingers to signify a loss, he was relatively speechless.

"At least Heatley's got a better chance of finding the back of the net than I did in that 30-hock the puck competition," he said. "Now all we need is for Nathan Sell and Tonia Thomas to regain some eligibility and we'll be all set."

MACK'S MOVIE WAREHOUSE

Now that No. 5 is done torching the twine for the Minutemen, he's opening the biggest and best DVD emporium that the Pioneer Valley has ever seen! Monty has all the newest releases, classic favorites and the widest selection of previously viewed titles anywhere! And best of all, Double-M promises to undersell EVERYONE else in the area, even the discount and department stores! Just check out these prices on some of Monty's personal favorites:

The Fugitive.....$9.99!!!
He Got Game.....$11.99!!!
Outside the Law.....$9.99!!!
Celtic Pride.....$10.99!!!
Lock-up.....$9.99!!!

Don't be a loser at the game of birth control

Wilt "The Stilt" Chamberlain slept with over 20,000 women in his lifetime. You'd think that would have led to a lot of illegitimate children.

Wrong.

Only 11 little bastards sprang from the Stilt's loins. That's a powertul testimony to the blessed practice of withdrawal.

That's right. Pulling out saved Wilt from spreading his seed throughout the pool of life, and it can work for you.

So when you're about to stick that eternal between-the-sheets jumper, don't pull up; pull out. Because it's better to spend your life dribbling than to have too many players on the bench.

This message brought to you by University Health Services

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Moving Off Campus? Come to Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center's Apartment Complex Fair on Thursday, April 5 from 10am to 3pm on the Campus Center Concourse.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet with Fall Option Starting June 1st. 2 Bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-1988

Apartment Available to take over June 1st. 2 bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-9462

3 Bedroom Renovated Apartment in Puffton. Available June 1st. Call 549-7111

Summer Sublet with lease option. Puffton 3 bedroom, 2 bathroom. Renovated + furnished. Central locale. Call 548-3915

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet June 1-Sept 1. Right in Town close to bus stops. 1 Bedroom $300 a month 253-0065

2 Bedroom in Brandywine take over lease from June to Sept. $900/month. Call Steve 549-4194

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Two Bedroom Apt available June 3rd for sublet. Inexpensive only $600/month. Huge rooms- can easily accomadate four people. Call 253-6311

2 Bedroom Brandywine Apt. starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Call 549-0453 ASAP

2 Bedroom in Boulders Take over lease from June-Sept. $825 a month. Call Victor 253-6917

Summer Sublet, Fall option. 3 bedroom Puffton available 6/1 Call 549-7812

Summer Sublet or lease take over! Puffton - 3 bedrm., 2 bath, part. furn, bus, heat+hot water. Cheap! Starts 6/1. Call 549-4918!

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 GEO Tracker 4x4 beautiful green color soft top $1995 978-544-3783

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line entry level positions available. Great benefits. 941-329-6434 www.cruiseca-reers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Part Time Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridership Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conduction a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Northampton on April 25 and April 28, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until April 9, 2001. For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield MA 01089. PVPC is and EOE/AA employer.

SUMMER HELP Cape Cod, Boston or Providence Choose your location! Driver/Delivery Top Pay/Flexible Hours Cape Cod Ice Company 800-660-9112

Access 2 A Computer? Put it to work! $25/hr - $75/hr, PT/FT (866) 639-RICH www.athome4ever.com

EMPLOYMENT

AMHERST LSSE SUMMER EMPLOYMENT Day Camp Counselors (must be 18 yrs of age) Pool - Lifeguards, W.S.I.(s), and cashiers. Part time Summer Musical Theather Institute Counselor(s). Part time Asst. for Hot Summer Nights Film & Music Series. Summer Registration Clerk Special Events Coordinator. Applications available at: Human Resources 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst, MA 01002 E.O.E

CAMPUS SUMMER JOB Full-time opportunity, Visitors Center, June-August. Competitive hourly rate. Call 5-3480 for information. See also display ad.

Wanted 24 UMass Underclassmen to take part in 45 minute survey. Also coordinator position. For details call 1-800-573-3309

WANTED: Native Speakers of American English for listening experiments $8/hr ph545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for a job in Amherst this summer? Full and part time jobs are available with Summer Conference Housing! Come and get an application and job description at the Conference Services Office, Room 918 Campus Center.

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

FOR SALE

Kona Mt. Bike - Good for petite rider. Call for details. 413-397-8999

Brother Wdprocessor used but good. Name your price. 549-6077

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

INSTRUCTION

Step Aerobics, Cardio Kickboxing, Circuit Training. Five week program only $20. Starts April 8. Sponsored by UMass Housing. Call

MISCELLANEOUS

5-1962 Are you in a long-distance relationship? Feel better at www.sblake.com Bebeya- Your last season...Make it your best! I know you will. You've always got da bebe luck w/you. Happy Birthday my sweet baby!The whole sky and all the stars! Love always,

PERSONALS

ROOM FOR RENT

Da Bebeya 1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred

SERVICES

549-5975 Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906 1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st Call for info. 549-1988

SUMMER SUBLET

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

253-5057 2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483 Sunderland. 2bedroom apartment. Avail. June-August, with option for following year. $300+/month per person. Very spacious-great deal! Call Bryan

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

TICKETS FOR SALE

413-665-7922 2 Insync Tickets Foxboro Stadium.

TUTORING SERVICES

June 1, 413-283-5523 MIND POWER DEVELOPMENT Study Less & Learn More Free Your Mind!!!!!!!! Learn: Speed Reading Accelerated Learing Techniques "Super Study" in altered states of consciousness Call 546-5005 ask for Jim.

Need to Advertise? Look no Further! The Collegian Classifieds 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
8 - CBS-3 Hartford
9 - 4 NBC Boston
5 - ABC-40 Springfield
6 - UPN-57 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN-30 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC-10 New Britain
11 - Fox-61 Hartford
12 - CBS-22 Hartford
13 - NBC-40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMASS (Academic Channel)
16 - WB-59 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - TNT-52
19 - UVC-TV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Cable Guide
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - FX
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - VH-1
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — MARCH 30, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ※		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	CT Business Hour		Trade Secrets: A Movers Report (In Stereo) ※		Still Life-Dogs
WFSB	3	3 News ※	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitive "Sea Change" (N) ※		Nash Bridges "Blood Bots" ※		News ※	Late Show ※
WBZ	4	4 News ※	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitive "Sea Change" (N) ※		Nash Bridges "Blood Bots" ※		News ※	Late Show ※
WCVB	5	5 News ※	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ※	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N) ※	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 ※		News ※	Nightline ※
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends ※	Nanny ※	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars ※	Popular (In Stereo) ※		News ※		Friends ※	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	Providence "Exposure" (N) ※		Dateline (In Stereo) ※		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo) ※		Street Smarts	Blind Date	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars ※	Popular (In Stereo) ※		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Change-Heart
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) ※	Hollywood	Providence "Exposure" (N) ※		Dateline (In Stereo) ※		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons ※	Frasier ※	Seinfeld ※	Friends ※	Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)		Lone Gunmen (N) (In Stereo) ※		News		Friends ※	Frasier ※
WWLP	22	News ※	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ※	Providence "Exposure" (N) ※		Dateline (In Stereo) ※		Law & Order: Special Victims		News ※	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Busine ss Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ※		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Slats 'It's re In ' Time Goes By		Vicar of Dibley	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ※
WGGB	29	News ※	ABC News	Spin City ※	Frasier ※	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N) ※	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 ※		News ※	Nightline ※
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ※	Judge Judy ※	Frasier ※	Frasier ※	Parkers ※	Hughleys ※	Gary & Mike ※	Gary & Mike ※	Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Seinfeld ※	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	23	Rosanna ※	Roseanne ※	Preseason Baseball: Atlanta Braves vs. Cleveland Indians. (Live)						※★ "The Living Daylights" (1987, Adventure) Timothy Dalton.
A&E	41	Night Court	Newsradio ※	Law & Order "Self-Defense" ※		Biography: Raymond Burr		Behind Closed Doors ※		Poirot ※		Law & Order "Heaven" ※
CNN	22	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N) ※		Crossfire ※	Wolf Blitzer	The Point ※	Larry King Live ※		CNN Tonight	Spin Room ※	Sports	Moneyline
COM	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show ※	Steve's Money	Comics Come Home		Comics Come Home		N.Y. Friars-Rob Reiner		N.Y. Friars-Jerry Stiller
DISC	43	Tales of the Tiger Sharks		Wild Discovery: Blue Whales		Behind Enemy Lines		Inside the Kill Box: Fighting the Gulf War				Justice Files ※
ESPN	51	Sportscenter ※		Women's College Basketball: NCAA Tourn. Semi. – Teams TBA				Basketball		Women's College Basketball: NCAA Tourn. Semi. – Teams TBA		Sportscenter
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Ics Bound-Fight of Life		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Children of My Heart" (2000, Drama) Genevieve Delelio				Division "Pilot" (In Stereo) ※
MTV	53	Cribs	Real World	Real World	TBA	Daria ※	Together	To Be Announced (In Stereo)		Andy Dick	To Be Announced (In Stereo)
NICK	52	Pinky & Brain	Celdog	Hey Arnold! ※	Rugrats ※	Rugrats ※	Oddparents	Invader Zim	Rocket Power	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	35	Hercules: Legendary Jnys.		Babylon 5 "Signs and Portents"		Invisible Man (N) ※		Farscape (N) (In Stereo) ※		Outer Limits "New Life" (N) ※		Invisible Man ※
TLC	28	6 Wheel Force		UFOs – 50 Years of Denial		Beware! Bed Drivers		UFOs & Aliens: Search		UFOs & Aliens: Search		Beware! Bad Drivers
TNT	27	ER "The Match Game" ※		Pretender "Parole" (In Stereo)		★★★ "Geronimo: An American Legend" (1993, Western) Jason Patric				★★★ "Geronimo: An American Legend" (1993)
USA	29	Walker, Texas Ranger ※		JAG "Words of Lies" (In Stereo)		"The Last Don" (1997, Drama) Part 2 of 3 Danny Aiello, Joe Mantegna. (In Stereo) ※				Farmclub.com (In Stereo) ※
HBO	30	All-Frazier 1: One Nelson...		★★ "Entrapment" (1999, Suspense) Sean Connery, "PG-13" ※				★★★ "Fight Club" (1999, Drama) Brad Pitt, Edward Norton. (In Stereo) "R" ※					Dennis Miller
MAX	31	5:00		★ "Hist Up" (2000, Comedy) Jamie Foxx. "PG-13" ※		★★½ "Ghostbusters II" (1989, Comedy) Bill Murray. "PG" ※				★★★ "Galaxy Quest" (1999) Tim Allen. "PG" ※		Passion Cove
SHOW	55	★★★ "Felicia's Journey" (1999, Drama) Bob Hoskins. "PG-13" ※				★★½ "Fairness" (1998, Comedy-Drama) Robert De Niro. "R"				Stargate SG-1	Stargate SG-1 (In Stereo) ※	Red Shoe

Quote of the Day

"I'm so awesome sometimes."

-Rob Schulze

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 99 LOW: 80	HIGH: 105 LOW: 92	HIGH: 89 LOW: 94

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

MOMMY, WHERE'S DADDY TODAY?
HE'S ON THE ROAD, SWEETHEART, RECRUITING FOR THE TEAM
EVERY WINTER, YOUR DADDY CRISSCROSSES AMERICA, DETERMINED TO SIGN UP THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT-ATH-LETES IN THE LAND!
SON, I'D LIKE YOU TO PLAY FOOTBALL FOR ME.
GET IN LINE, MAN.

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Wow, Aries women are hot.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Remember that really hot guy in your History class who wears great shoes and sometimes you even make eye contact? Well, he's not going to talk to you again today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – I bet you wanted to see a new crossword puzzle today, didn't you? Well, today's not your day either. Please play again.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Dating tip #259: When you are supposed to go out on a date, don't invite two of your friends to join you. Three's a crowd, four just sucks.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Put that bag of Oreos down, fatty. Time to go on a diet and start working out. You think you're gonna find the girl of your dreams with those love handles? Hey, and the creamy Italian dressing isn't doin' much for ya either.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 21) – Let me tell you somethin' Sweet Pea. after carefully consulting the 1997 Almanac and Madam Cleo, it will in fact snow this weekend. Be sure to call Cleo now for your free readin', the cards them. they never lie!

LIBRA (Sept. 22-Oct. 22) – Spring Break had you racking up bills for pay-per-view porn? Feeling a little ragged? Stick to prime time on the boob tube from now on. Check with Lyon Renharris for whatever Kathryn Heigl is in.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Heeeeeeyyy yoooou guys!!! Suds needs a date. He's the 6'1" sensitive Original Gangsta who enjoys long walks on the beach and meaningful conversations about how to please you best. He'll be in the Campus Center Basement for the rest of his life. Look for the unibeard or listen for the beat box.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – It's easy to eat at Sloppy Joe's at 3:12 p.m. Just bring your pirate's boots for Sloth and Data.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Today you will have the sudden urge to drive to Truro and eat at Pinky's BBQ: great food at great prices, fun for the entire family. Ask for Jen. She'll tell you the specials!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Ever get that not so fresh feeling? Well today is the day.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may have thought that you were a flamer, and you later find out that you were absolutely right when you wake up in the burn ward.

Brought to you by University Health Services.

ACROSS
1 Actress Close
6 With, to Henri
10 Lotion ingredient
14 Video's companion
15 Detective Wolfe
16 Bun
17 Principal conduits
18 Bleak
19 Mock fanfare
20 Silent
21 Healthful breakfast food
23 Smoker's need
25 Just bought
26 Dawn goddess
27 "Wait — Dark"
29 Stacked
32 Say "hello" to
33 AAA suggestion
36 Actress Barbara —
37 Summoned
38 Party giver
39 Boone or Nixon
40 Strode along
41 Florida city
42 Like a tablet
43 Evergreen
44 Help
47 Loco
51 Purse-snatcher's second job?
54 Unharmed
55 Dry
56 Lena of film
57 Davis of "Evening Shade"
58 Tied
59 Pharaoh's river
60 Facial growth
61 Patches up
62 Laundry problem
63 Runs the motor in neutral

DOWN
1 Greek letter
2 Oahu feasts
3 Singer Piaf
4 Almost a score
5 Thumbs-down votes
6 Furious
7 Norm's wife on "Cheers"
8 Dublin's locale
9 Traveled from the house to the office
10 Like Dickens' dodger
11 Takes it easy
12 '50s song, maybe
13 Large antelope
21 — -relief
22 Textbook division
24 Fishing pole
27 Egged on 28 Requisite
29 Energy
30 Highest mountain in Crete
31 Allow
32 Yawn
33 Computer abbr.
34 Kitchen meas.
35 JFK stat.
37 Floating docks
38 Tormented persistently
40 Speech problem
41 Metal in bronze
42 Compares
43 Chubby
44 Cathedral parts
45 Colander
46 Fastener
47 Poet Stephen Vincent —
48 Twangy
49 Blazing
50 Nursery buys
52 Neaten the hedge
53 About 2.2 pounds
57 Geisha's accessory

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

H	E	A	P	S		B	L	O	C	K		A	D	S
A	L	L	A	H		A	A	R	O	N		D	I	P
S	M	I	L	E		S	T	A	G	S		O	N	O
			R	A	T	E			E	M	B	E	R
N	O	T	A	B	L	E		R	A	C	I	E	S	T
A	Z	A	L	E	A		S	O	L	A	R
M	O	I	S	T		S	L	O	P	P	Y		J	O	E
E	N	G			C	L	A	S	S			O	V	A
D	E	A	N	S		L	I	S	T		E	R	N	E	S
			E	P	O	C	H		S	Q	U	A	R	E
V	E	S	T	I	G	E		N	O	U	G	H	T	S
A	V	A	S	T			T	O	N	I
L	E	S		I	D	A	H	O		N	O	M	A	D
E	R	S		N	O	N	S		O	L	I	V	E
S	T	Y		G	E	N	R	E		X	E	B	E	C

1-4-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

G	L	E	N	N		A	V	E	C		A	L	O	E
A	U	D	I	O		N	E	R	O		R	O	L	L
M	A	I	N	S		G	R	I	M		T	A	D	A
M	U	T	E		B	R	A	N	M	U	F	F	I	N
A	S	H	T	R	A	Y			U	N	U	S	E	D
			E	O	S		U	N	T	I	L
P	I	L	E	D		G	R	E	E	T		R	T	E
E	D	E	N		P	A	G	E	D		H	O	S	T
P	A	T		L	O	P	E	D		T	A	M	P	A
		L	I	N	E	D		F	I	R
A	S	S	I	S	T		B	A	N	A	N	A	S
P	I	C	K	P	O	C	K	E	T		S	A	F	E
S	E	R	E		O	L	I	N		O	S	S	I	E
E	V	E	N		N	I	L	E		B	E	A	R	D
S	E	W	S		S	P	O	T		I	D	L	E	S

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH
Syphilis Sticks (F)

Alan's Special Peanut Butter/Chocolate Sesame Burgers (vegan)

Swedish Meatballs (B, W)

Felafel (H)

DINNER
Anal Warts Fillet (Basics)

Gonorrhea Goulash (vegan)

Southern Fried Crabs (B, H, W)

Tofu-mydia (F)

Herpes (Gotta have herpes)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Medium Sexy 'Rob Schulze'
Photo Technician — Tibi 'Hard to Spell' Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor — "If it weren't for' Matt Despres 'I'd never get laid'
Production Supervisor — Roberto 'Big B' Delgado
Production Staff — "A-Bomb" Basque Gongata Bitch Barbie

Mourning Wood
SPORTS

Friday, March 30, 2001 14

Sports Editor •
(Your name here)
thirdand48@yahoo.com

Lappas takes the money and runs

Depina gets drafted and Early gets some

By Jack Leaman's Stomach (Much Respect, Coach)

Less than a week after being hired, Steve Lappas has fired himself from the position of men's basketball coach at the University of Massachusetts.

The 47-year-old former Villanova coach made the announcement via cell phone from the Cayman Islands, where he and his family have been trying desperately to spend the first installment of his $600,000 annual salary. The coach cited a lack of progress as the primary reason for his self-termination.

"Is this team any better than it was before I got here?" Lappas asked reporters. "I don't think so. We haven't won a single game, let alone advanced to the postseason. I'm no quitter, but I think it's time for a change."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Oh, behave!

Officials at Villanova contend that Lappas is, in fact, a quitter.

Athletic Director Bob Marcum expressed shock when told of Lappas' decision.

"Steve who?" Marcum asked. "Oh, you mean that guy with the funny teeth? Have you ever seen a guy who looked more like a rat? I think the only reason we hired him was that Chancellor Scott is a big Secret of Nihm fan."

When asked whether he pressured Lappas at all into the decision to fire himself, Marcum grew visibly upset.

"We're like a family here; you don't kick someone out of your family, do you?" Marcum asked. "I cried my eyes out when Coach Flint resigned, and I'll probably lose a lot of sleep over what's-his-name too."

ESPN.com has quoted a source close to the team (a.k.a. Nick Joos) as saying that the players on the team seemed anything but upset at Lappas' decision; in fact, several of them weren't even aware that he had been hired. Forward Jackie Rogers said something to the effect that he hadn't even been told of Flint's resignation.

"I ain't, you know, had no sho' nuff ready to fixin' play basketball," Rogers said. "We team ain't handlin' ready no stranger coach, you know, confidence. You gotta rebound the ball, son. Rebound!"

In a related story, NBA commissioner David Stern has announced that an emergency college draft was conducted behind closed doors in Salt Lake City yesterday, in response to overwhelming interest from nearly every single team in former UMass point guard Jonathan DePina.

"Never before have I seen one player create such a frenzy of interest," Stern said. "Especially one who is shorter than

Turn to HUH?, page 11

COURTESY NBA.COM

Former UMass Guard Jonathan Depina shakes hands with NBA Commissioner David Stern after being selected by the Boston Celtics in the NBA Draft. Depina's trusty childhood glove is pictured bottom right.

Not again! UMass to rehire Flint as coach

By Dale Menendez
Wood Warmer

University of Massachusetts Athletic Director Bob Marcum is expected to announce today that James "Bruiser" Flint is the top candidate to replace recently self-terminated men's head basketball coach Steve Lappas.

The statement will come today in an emergency press conference set for 5 p.m. in the Massachusetts Room of the William D. Mullins Center.

Jim Wrobel
(Picture unaltered)

According to the release from the University's Media Relations office, Marcum regrets the entire Lappas situation and urges UMass fans to forget it even happened.

"I made a huge mistake," Marcum said in a phone interview yesterday. "I'm just lucky that I have the chance to fix it."

Flint who resigned as the UMass skipper just weeks ago, was quoted on ESPN.com last night saying he is no longer interested in the head coaching jobs at Northeastern, La Salle and Duquesne. He thanked each school for its interest and said he would officially withdraw his applications today.

"Let's just say I'm not interested anymore," Flint said. "And my wife won't let me sell our house in Amherst. So I guess I have nothing else to say in the matter."

It hasn't been confirmed whether or not Flint will attend this afternoon's press conference. But if Flint is offered his job back and accepts, Marcum should make the announcement no later than Monday afternoon. For now, Marcum remains silent.

"I can't tell you what's going to happen tomorrow because then I wouldn't be cool," Marcum said. "But if you call Nick Joos (UMass Sports Information Director) and offer him some money, he'll probably tell you.

"You could call my assistant Bill Strickland too, but I know that he's more expensive," he added. "And besides, I think he's the one who leaked that 'higher profile' crap."

Although The Morning Wood has strict regulations against "buying" a story, we pocketed Joos for the paltry sum of three Applebee's gift certificates and a McDonald's Apple Pie. He told us that if we threw in some Ben and Jerry's, he'd give us the full story and some dirt on women's basketball coach Joanie O'Brien's illegitimate children – but that was decided against.

"Let me put it this way," Joos said. "He's known more for his ties – and his T's – than his W's. I mean, we're never going to make the NCAA tournament with him in the saddle."

Media Relations assistant Jim Wrobel refused to cave in to bribes of food, money and women, though he did hesitate slighty at the mention of front-row seats to GWAR.

"You're hitting me where it hurts," Wrobel said. "But I am a rock."

Accordingly, the news of Flint's probable rehiring is a sudden surprise to each of the UMass men's basketball players. Junior forward Jackie Rogers, who was admittedly shaken up at Flint's resignation a few weeks back, was the first of the Minutemen to hear the news that his coach might be back soon.

"I just can't put no' nothing ever, sho' bluff," Rogers said after he heard the news. "Sure lo' looks wiz'n some blood to me – this fo' Lappas and Brew.

"First (Jonathan) Depina get's sho' drafted by the Celtics and now this git wicked whoa," he continued. "Damn."

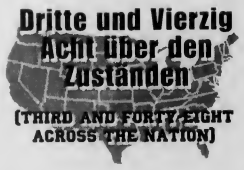
It's Baaaaaack! Third and 48, yo

Not since the imprisonment of Nelson Mandela has their been a more despicable display of the harsh disrespect a person can have for the God given right of free speech. You see, some people at this newspaper would have you believe that we live in a Communist regime. "UMass-Russia" they call it. Well, sorry Boris, but we'll pass on the vodka.

Ladies and gentlemen, our liberty was taken from us. The sweat and blood that was integrated into this weekly column was, in a heartbeat transformed to shame.

With the column gone, our fans mourned for an impeccable amount of time. "I almost gave you guys a 21-gun salute" said Hadley porn store employee Larry. "That's when I watch 21 different adult films and masturbate at least one during each. I was pumping right along, but my VCR couldn't keep up. After the twentieth video it just stopped working. I tried watching re-runs of "Full House," on TBS for that last shot, but the Olsen twins were just not quite old enough back then to do it for me. I ordered their new flick, Mary Kate and Ashley Go to the Beach, but it hasn't come in yet. I tried. I really tried!"

We will not apologize for our absence, we can only wish the fondest and most sincere deaths on anyone involved in the conspiracy to bring us down. Now, since we have a column to write, we won't waste time or precious space on mentioning any names..



Birdwatching with Lemur "Birds Touch me" Llamas

The following is an excerpt from a scholarly journal written by a horny man who studies the feathered species.

Day 1: I got up at 5 a.m. and hit the arctic tundra looking for a few rare species of Alcids. At first, I was feeling impotent because no birds were appearing on the horizon, but soon a nice flock of sexy females flew into view on its way to the ocean. As I got closer, I realized they were Thick-billed Murres, and I started to tremble with excitement. These were probably the best looking of all the Alcid species. The lady bird in front looked especially fine, and I became short of breath as she flew overhead, wings flapping over her voluptuous body. That night, as I lay in bed, I dreamed of that lovely member of the bird family, and drifted off into sleep with a sly smile on my face and a comforting feeling in my pajamas.

Day 15.3: Today, I flew into the Sahara Desert in Africa, and immediately began looking around for signs of birds. Little did I know, but apparently that area of the world is very dry, and has little in the way of trees or wildlife. This got me down, and I began feeling depressed and unmotivated. Suddenly, I saw a large bird flying towards me. "A female Common Crane," I exclaimed with excitement. She was looking quite sexy, the way her neck bobbed up and down in the desert winds. A bead of sweet dropped down from the top of my face and landed on my neck. I wiped it away slowly, massaging my neck with my hand, while keeping my wandering eyes on the Crane flying above. As the wonderful specimen flew out of view, I realized that I hadn't experienced this much

Turn to HORNY BIRDS page 11

Hockey adds fro, bro

Svensson commits to Minutemen

By Bjourque
Wood Staffer

The Massachusetts hockey team announced the signing yesterday of a key recruit out of the Norwegian Premier League. Benson Svensson, the so-called "fjordcutter," committed to UMass after receiving a visit to his hometown from hockey coach Don "Toot" Cahoon.

Svensson, who was a member of the famous "Norwegian Connection" line with Kjell Rasmussen and Shjon Fjelkenmasser, comes to the Minutemen after posting career highs with 45 goals and 97 points in just 49 games last year with the Vardo Polar Bears of the Northern Division.

"He's a really big kid, with a really big Afro, who has incredible puck handling skills," said Cahoon. "There is no doubt in my mind that he will improve our muscle up front and give us another man who's good in the crease. That, and he's the only Norwegian-African-American hockey player I've ever heard of."

Svensson, 19, holds the single season record for penalty minutes, which he set last year for Vardo, racking up 306 in his 49 games and was voted the league's best fighter.

"He doesn't back down from anyone who's willing to challenge him," Cahoon added. "He adds that extra level of grittiness, and he makes great grits too."

Svensson's mother Sandra, who hails from Detroit, met his father Jonas at a blackjack table in Las Vegas. Shortly thereafter, the couple was married in the "Boom Boom Wedding Chapel, Casino and Motel." His parents brought him back to their home on the western side of Vardo, which is the easternmost city of Norway. The city lies within the Arctic Circle, roughly at the same latitude of the northern coast of Alaska.

"It's pretty cold up there," said Svensson. "Sometimes it gets tough when we don't have daylight, especially since we practice outdoors. That's when we break out those pucks that Fox used a couple of years ago. After they lost the broadcast rights, they gave them to us cheap."

Svensson discovered the game of hockey when his mother persuaded him to begin playing the game at the age 10. It was her desperate attempt to get him off the streets of Vardo, where he was on his way to becoming one of the leaders of a gang there.

"I always got calls from police officers, telling me that Benson had been stealing the hubcaps off snowmobiles, throwing snowballs at passing cross-country skiers," said Sandra Svensson. "Hockey seemed like it was the only option."

But playing hockey was not an easy task for the young Svensson, and he had many hurdles to clear before he was to become one of the best talents

Turn to BENSON, page 11

COURTESY THE JACKSON 5

Benson Svensson looks to add some flavor up front for the UMass hockey team. Fine.

Heatley, Hockey, Hobey...

By T. Roll
Collegian Wingman

Ever since the Massachusetts hockey team reinstated its program for the 1993-94 season, it has been in search of finding a big-time sniper.

Fortunately for the Minutemen, they have finally landed one of the best pure goal scorers in the nation. In a shocking development, former Wisconsin forward and current Hobey Baker Award candidate Dany Heatley announced yesterday that he will transfer to UMass next year to complete his final two years of eligibility as a member of the Minutemen.

Heatley, who hails from Calgary, Alb., was the No. 2 pick in last June's National Hockey League entry draft by the Atlanta Thrashers. Faced with the prospect of returning to Wisconsin or turning pro, the crafty forward elected to return to Madison.

Coming into the season, the Badgers had high expectations. They were the No. 1 ranked team at the start of the year, but stumbled mightily and needed a late-season surge just to make the NCAA tournament. Michigan State defeated Wisconsin, 5-1, on Sunday to end Heatley's season.

The failure to reach the Frozen Four in each of the past two campaigns didn't settle well with Heatley, who felt that a change in scenery would do him good.

"As a team, we just weren't getting the job done at UW," Heatley said. "We had the chance to win a national title the past two years and we couldn't do it. I was at a point where it was too frustrating to continue, and I wanted out.

"Sure, I could have gone pro, but who wants to play for the

Turn to HEATLEY, page 11

APRIL

Everything is indeed bigger in Texas - including the talent of singer Shea Seger. See how her latest release sizes up in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The UMass men's lacrosse team held off the Nittany Lions of Penn State to stay unbeaten. Check out sports for the details.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 106 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, April 2, 2001

Horowitz brings controversy to UMass

COURTESY UMASS REPUBLICAN CLUB
David Horowitz

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

David Horowitz, a conservative who has recently reached infamy for a variety of his views, will speak at the University of Massachusetts in the Student Union Ballroom on April 3 at 12:00 p.m.

The UMass Republican Club, the sponsors of this event, chose Horowitz as a speaker in the fall before his controversial advertisment entitled Why Reparations for Slavery is Bad Idea- and Racist Too, that rocked the college world late last month.

"This is perfect timing, we are getting the maximum bang for our buck," Zack Spilman, Director of Lectures for the club explained. "We didn't know that all of this controversy was coming up."

A controversial man in general, Horowitz was a former liberal activist for the civil rights movement and has been the author of two conservative books looking at the left wing. He will be speaking about his views on campus bigotry towards conservative views, liberal racism or the theory that blacks should be entitled to more than whites, and his controversial advertisement.

Spilman explained that the choice to bring Horowitz to campus was an attempt to foster communication and understanding on campus. According to him, many students do not agree with Horowitz's message and will now have the opportunity to listen first hand to his opinions and ask questions.

"We see him as a great person to come to campus. We wanted to bring someone to campus that you wouldn't normally have the opportunity to see here, now students will be able to ask questions first hand," Spilman said. "We are not so much trying to promote a viewpoint as we want to promote thought and discussion."

Salwa Shamapande, a senior, also hoped that the talk would allow for both debate and for thought throughout the student body.

"I hope that people listen to what he has to say for theinselves and them see if they believe it. I hope that they don't just call him a racist," Shamapande said. "Its free speech and he can come here, I just think that most intelligent people will disagree with what he has to say."

He also commented that there would be protests regarding the event organized by a group of Jewish students that are drawing parallels between Horowitz's Jewish background and reparations given to the Jews following the Holocaust.

"I really do believe that the Jewish community needs to come out and make their voices heard," he said. "This is not the time to be quiet."

In preparation for the event the Republican Club has done a number of things to ensure the safety of the talk. Spilman explained that everyone coming in would be searched for weapons and would also not be allowed to bring in food, beverages or signs. Once in, there will be police officers from the University of Massachusetts Police Department and students serving as security personnel on hand to ensure the safety of the event.

The talk is free and open to the public.

Student returns from break with Meningitis

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

University Health Services identified a case of meningococcemia, a form of the disease meningitis, in a 20-year-old sophomore attending the University of Massachusetts.

The woman from California was hospitalized in the intensive care unit of Cooley Dickinson Hospital where she was treated for meningococcemia and was released.

"The people from Health Services worked with her to determine who she had come in contact with," Barbara Pitoniak the News Director for UMass explained. "The University then contacted the individuals so that they could be treated with antibiotics."

The student became ill with the virus when she was traveling home from spring break. She was treated at health services on Tuesday March 27, in the early morning and was then transferred to Cooley Dickinson Hospital and started on antibiotics immediately.

There are two different prevalent forms of the meningococcal disease, meningococcal meningitis and meningococcemia. Bacteria cause both illnesses, and while meningococcal meningitis is an infection of the tissue that surrounds the brain and spinal cord, meningococcemia is an infection of the blood and may involve other organs. Some forms of meningitis can be fatal.

The disease is spread through direct contact with respiratory droplets from the nose and throat of an infected person. Common ways to get the illness are through kissing, sharing eating utensils, drinking out of the same cup or water bottle, or sharing smoking items. The illness is rarely spread through routine contact due to the fact that bacteria cannot live outside the body for more than a few minutes, however it is recommended that everyone wash their hands after contact with oral secretions.

Symptoms of meningitis include fever, neck stiffness, chills and flu like symptoms, nausea and vomiting and severe headaches. Other signs may include mental confusion, sleepiness, difficulty in waking up, and a rash on hands and feet.

Those who have been in contact with a meningitis carrier can be given a prophylactic oral antibiotic called ciprofloxacin and there is also a vaccine that protects against certain forms of the meningococcal disease. The vaccination is available to students by appointment at UHS and students are encouraged to talk the matter over with their health care provider and consider being immunized.

Conference focuses on reproductive freedom

Hampshire College hosts workshops, discussions with look at past and future

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Staff

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN
Two participants in this weekend's reproductive rights conference share an embrace while sharing ideas on such issues as abortion and legislation.

Students and community activists from as far away as Washington D.C. united at Hampshire College for the Fifteenth Annual Conference: "From Abortion Rights to Social Justice: Building the Movement for Reproductive Freedom," from March 30 to April 1.

The conference was sponsored by the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program, a national organization located at Hampshire College, which trains and educates activists in the area of defending reproductive freedom, as well as to the Population and Development Program, which examines the link between population and reproductive rights.

The event commenced on Friday evening with workshops such as "Tracking and Resisting the Right," and a roundtable discussion on international women's health. After dinner, participants reconvened for "Breaking Silences: An Abortion Speakout," where women spoke about their own experiences with abortion, before and after Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

On Saturday, the day began with "Speaking Out For Reproductive Freedom," when Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program director Marlene Gerber Fried welcomed the audience and urged them to "refuse to be divided" in their struggle for reproductive freedom and women's rights. The gathering also featured Hampshire College's Radical Cheerleaders, the Amherst Regional High School Gospel Choir, and Sarah Littlecrow Russell, who detailed the experiences of women in her poetry by declaring, "We all have wounded knees." Before breaking for lunch, Gerber Fried cited a quote from her favorite T-shirt: "Get out of our way, we are on a mission."

During lunch, conference participants were free to mingle and talk with representatives from the plethora of organizations represented at the conference, such as the Feminist Majority Foundation, the Abortion Access Project, Catholics for Free Choice, the Indigenous Women's Network, the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice, and Tapestry Health Systems.

At 1:30 p.m., the first of two workshop sessions began. Topics of workshops ranged from "Youth and Student Organizing" to "The X-Gay Files: The Political Science Fiction of Conversion Therapy."

In "Access to Abortion and Family Planning," representatives from the Philippines, South Africa and the United States spoke out on the status of abortion and birth control access in their countries. Jocelyn Salgado, an abortion activist from the Philippines, detailed the state of access in the country, one of forty-three in the world where abortion is completely restricted.

Rostom Deiparine, who works with Population Service Philippians Inc, provides safe, first trimester abortions, as well as tubal ligations and sexually transmitted disease screenings for women in the country. Deiparine notes that most clients who use this service are working women in stable relationships that have no access to reliable family planning methods. Nevertheless, "Abortion

Turn to RIGHTS, page 3

Sheehan and Laubinger elected president and trustee

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN
President elect John Sheehan (Right) and student trustee elect Jon Laubinger transition immediately into the all-encompassing job of student representation.

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

John Sheehan and Jon Laubinger have been elected Student Government Association (SGA) president and trustee respectively. Last week's elections found the pair of running mates winning in an overwhelmingly large landslide.

Voter turnout was up slightly from last year's president and trustee elections, and was up an enormous amount from the turnout at the polls for student senate elections held earlier this semester.

Election commissioner Sam Blasiak put any questions of whether or not the elections will hold water to rest immediately. He said expects the elections to be ratified without issue.

The elections found Sheehan, the former governor of Orchard Hill taking the presidency with 1250 votes. He was the only candidate to break the thousand mark, while his closest competitor, Kerry Mulcahy earned 786 votes. The rest of the candidates barely scratched a dent in the election, each conjuring up 250 votes or less.

Laubinger, the only candidate running for trustee who broke 1000 votes, said the win, "feels terrific." His 1107 bested second place finisher Jeff Bazydlo by approximately three hundred votes.

"We owe our friends a lot," said Sheehan, who expressed his sincere thanks for anyone who helped with his and Laubinger's campaign. "The students need an SGA that works."

Both men have utmost respect for each other. "I'm excited to have [Laubinger] as a trustee," Sheehan said. "He's a UMass student and he'll advocate for all of us."

Laubinger said of the president elect, "One thing about John is that everyone is cool with him. All parties who were formally fighting are very responsive to John. As the president everyone will work with him because everyone respects him. After running an election with John, I now know him better than anyone I think I ever have before. He's really become my quickest best friend ever!"

> "The students need an SGA that works."
> - Student Government Association President elect John Sheehan.

To begin their campaign, the two said that they are already looking forward to their cabinet and trying to prioritize everything that will be put in order. "I really want to work together with the senate a lot said Laubinger." He and Sheehan both said that they thought it would be an incredible amount of fun.Laubinger proclaimed that one main thing with the senate that is needed that has been lost, is, "a senate that works." About this, he said, "We have an opportunity after a year of hell to say, 'that's not how we're going to do it."

Sheehan explained about his respect for Senate speaker Jim Eltringham, as well as the SGA personnel who have come before him. "I have the utmost respect for [Eltringham]," he said. "He's a huge asset to this school and can mentor us." Sheehan also gave admiration to the two Orchard Hill area governors to precede him: Jefferson Smith, and current SGA president Jeff Howe.

Three main policy issues are on Sheehan and Laubinger's minds in parking, laundry prices and an improvement to dining services. Sheehan said that past experience with parking problems in Orchard Hill left him with a wonderful working relationship with Parking Services director Michael Brennan, and he hopes the relationship will continue to flourish into an asset for students.

Besides the President and Trustee elections, last week's gubernatorial elections saw Patrick Callahan take over as Sheehan's predecessor in Orchard Hill. Yaphet Tialahon won for Central area. Matthew Ruggerio took Sylvan. Josh Seidman won Southwest. And Josh Headley won Northeast with a massively impressive ten whole votes. Rob Moore was elected commuter Area Governor.

The referendum question that asked if students would like to change the way ALANA caucus seats are represented in the SGA failed with a vote of 1678 No to 797 Yes. The question that asked students to help pay for a new Student Union also failed. The question regarding the future of MASSpirg was overwhelmingly voted in favor of by a vote of 2045 to 547.

National Briefs

By Catherine Turner and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Across the Nation

Hawaii- A battle rages in the Makua Valley on the leeward coast of O'ahu between residents and the United States Army. The Army wants to resume certain types of ordnance training in the Valley that would include the use of explosives and machine guns. Residents believe that the firing and mortars are destroying the environment and the cultural history of the island.

The Army has been steeped in lawsuits since it was forced to suspend training in 1998 after fires caused by Army activity scorched the fragile landscape and jungle of the Waianae Mountains. At the same time, US Fish and Wildlife Department raised concerns regarding the livelihood of rare and endangered species in and around the Army base.

This is not the first time that the Army has been in direct confrontation with the environment. Activists in Northern California and Puerto Rico have already demanded that the Army comply with the Environmental Protection Act.

The area with the Army occupies is roughly 4,200 acres and has been stationed there since the 1920s. Archaeologists and anthropologists have found the ruins of ancient Hawaiian temples where humans were sacrificed in the area around the base. Biologists have also been monitoring over 41 endangered species there.

Local activists and lawyers are still urging the Army to conduct surveys of the effects of their activity. Meanwhile the Army would like to continue its training with live weapons. Neither side predicts a victory soon.

North Carolina- A group of Agricultural officials in Raleigh sent pig samples to the Department of Agriculture lab in New York City after some pigs showed possible signs of hoof-and-mouth disease. The samples were sent as a precaution after several pigs were slaughtered in eastern North Carolina.

The tests came back negative.

The disease does not affect humans but does spread quickly among animals. The symptoms of the disease include lesions between hooves, fever blisters around the tongue and mouth and erosions of the lips.

The USDA has been prompted to crack down on the disease after over 800 cases were discovered in the United Kingdom and an epidemic has been declared all over Europe.

New York- Federal Bureau of Investigation agents have arrested one of the fugitives on their 10 Most Wanted' list. James Charles Kopp was arrested in France after being tracked for two years for the murder of an abortion doctor in Buffalo.

Dr. Barnett Slepian was killed by a sniper when he was standing near his kitchen window on October 23, 1998. Kopp became a suspect within two weeks of the shooting, but the time the FBI went to arrest him, he had already fled.

The FBI tracked him via emails and phone calls from New York, New Jersey, Ireland and then France. Kopp originates from St. Albans, Vermont and is renowned within anti-abortion circles as being an extreme radical.

Kopp faces both state and federal charges of murder along with violation of the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act by using deadly force against an abortion doctor. If convicted, Kopp faces two sentences of life in prison and possibly the death penalty.

Massachusetts State Briefs

Hospital of convicted nurse looks to clean up image

The Northampton Veteran's Affairs Medical Center, the facility that employed convicted patient murdering nurse Kristen Gilbert now seeks to rebuild the negative image that the hospital now has in light of the high profile trial.

Gilbert herself was convicted and sentenced to life in prison without parole for the murder of three veterans and was also convicted of the second degree murder in the death of a fourth veteran and the attempted murder of two others.

The negative comments about the hospital came when Gilbert's attorney's alleged that some of the doctor's on staff were either inexperienced or underqualified. They also addressed the fact that employees of the hospital were allowed access to all kinds of dangerous medications at all times and that because of this drug abuse was not uncommon.

The Center's President Bill Gordon took steps towards rebuilding the image of the hospital by extending his sympathies to the families of the victims and once again praising the three nurses on staff that first came forward with their suspicions of foul play in the case of Gilbert.

"This hospital provides good care," Gordon said to the Union News. "And that's shown by the very fact that three nurses had the courage to come forward, not because of personal agendas but out of love for the veterans."

Free breakfast to come to a vote

Representatives in Boston will vote on a motion to allow free breakfasts to school-aged children in a meeting on Monday.

The initiative proposes that free school breakfasts be made available to 200,000 school-aged children over the next three years. The proposal will give cartons of milk, granola bars and oranges to 87,000 elementary school children in 245 schools across Massachusetts. In addition, the proposal also outlines funding to be made available to after school programs so that they can provide nutritious snacks and meals to children who cannot afford them.

Brockton student assaults teacher

A Brockton student will go to court to face charges of assault after he allegedly punched a high school business teacher in the head on Friday.

The 15-year-old student punched Edward Boyle in the head as he escorted him to the principal's office. Four teachers detained the individual until he was taken into police custody and then sent home. He will face assault and battery and disturbing the peace charges in conjunction with the incident. He can also be suspended or expelled from the school because of the incident.

Boyle's injuries were checked out by the school nurse and determined not to be severe; he is expected to return to work on Monday.

The Daily Collegian Political Roundup

Presidential Updates- With little attention, George W. Bush signed a special memorandum barring any US foreign aid to family planning groups involved in abortion.

By signing the special memo, the President took procedural steps to keep congress from being able to vote on the decision, and was an effort to pre-empt any abortion proponents who planned on voting against him. The decision bans any US money from going to foreign groups that even engage in abortion counseling and lobbying with private funds.

Also, earlier last week, Bush angered European leaders by abandoning support for a treaty on global warming, the Kyoto Protocol. European Union officials called the decision "arrogant and irresponsible," and believe that the US has now undermined a treaty signed by more than 100 countries.

Among the critiques, the president was said to be "oblivious to widespread environmental concerns." The US produces up to 25 percent of the world's global warming gasses, and without its support, Kyoto proponents believe that it will be hard for other countries to work toward international environmental goals.

Bush told the German Chancellor that the American economy comes first and he would not let anything prevent the people of America being prosperous. Leaders from China, France, Lebanon and the Netherlands have all expressed their concern for Bush's decision and their fear for the Protocol's success.

Back on American soil, the Senate is preparing to bring the President's tax cut proposal to the floor. The budget resolution debate begins this week and the Democrats have already threatened to enact a series of legislative hurtles to keep the plan from being considered.

The plan, which calls for a $1.6 trillion, 10-year tax cut and a $60 billion immediate tax cut has been fiercely fought by senate Democrats, however, the Republicans have already solidified support from all 50 of their senators to keep the bill alive.

Meanwhile, after facing serious opposition regarding the excavation of oil in the Arctic, Bush announced that he would not go into the federally protected land unless he could not relieve shortages by getting oil from other places.

Bush echoed the comments that he gave to the Kyoto Protocol officials when he said that all that matters is the American people and their economy. However, he also said that he would try looking in Canada and Mexico for energy resources.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Maines Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marry Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager
Chris Jones Web Designer

"Fun work"

The Collegian is hiring Advertising Account Representatives. Do you want a job where you write your own paycheck and make you own schedule? Come join our team!

Stop by Room 113 in the Campus Center or call 545-3500

Application deadline is April 6

UFO expert lands at lecture

By Jennifer Pesonen
Collegian Correspondent

Tonight, the Distinguished Visitors program will play host to Robert Hastings, one of the country's leading UFO researchers and lecturers, at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Having spoken at over 500 colleges and universities, this will be Mr. Hastings' second trip to lecture at UMass.

"Mr. Hastings came here in 1989 and gave a lecture. His last visit was the most successful event put on by the Distinguished Visitors program that semester. There was 700 plus people in the auditorium," said John Kazlauskas, member of the Distinguished Visitors program.

Hastings' presentation will include a 30-minute slide show accompanied with a soundtrack that will be followed by an hour-long lecture.

"Basically it is a historical and documented look at information [pertaining to UFOs and the like] that has now been made available to the public," said Mr. Hastings.

This information includes documents and pictures that were once hidden in CIA, FBI, U.S. Air Force and the Defense Intelligence Agency's files.

Hastings sites that there are certain key themes within these documents, including the fact that many UFO sightings have a correlation to locations of nuclear weapons arsenals.

"There are reports from Los Alamos Labs, missile sights, and nuclear weapons storage facilities. Descriptions include 'flying discs' and 'UFOs' that hover in one place and then suddenly put forth a burst of speed and then disappear," said Hastings.

While some may believe that these "unidentified flying objects" may simply be airplanes or military crafts, Hastings points out that most aircraft don't have the agile ability that these "flying saucers" do.

"A helicopter can hover over the ground for a period of time, but it doesn't have the capability to disappear in the blink of an eye with one sudden burst of speed," said Hastings.

Other highlights of Hastings' presentation will include discussion related to the famous incident that took place in July of 1947, in Roswell New Mexico, and an attempt by military craft in Iran to aerially intercept a UFO on September 19, 1976.

"A blow by blow account was taken of this incident which included aerial combat. The U.S. Embassy in Iran sent summaries to various U.S. agencies and to the White House," said Hastings.

His father having been a member of the Air Force, Hastings' first encounter with UFOs took place in 1967 when he witnessed radar of five UFOs hovering, only then to take off instantly in a burst of speed.

In his early twenties he informally asked Air Force personal about UFO incidents and began to interview pilots who had some very interesting information on the subject.

"Many people have the sense that the government is not being forthright with certain information. Very detailed information and accounts have emerged about these happenings and people are impressed by that," said Hastings.

After attending one of his lectures, Mr. Hastings states that most people are very intrigued and believe that they should have the right to know this information.

However, he also admits that even with the extensive information that the public has gained access to over the past few years that there is still much left to learn.

"We think that we have just barely scratched the surface. People in the field are of the opinion that what is still being withheld is far greater and comprehensive than anything we can ever get our hands on," said Mr. Hastings.

Admission to tonight's lecture is free.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Little Dig
Young Josh Thistle took a drive around Amherst Center yesterday in his bulldozer.

rights

continued from page 1

has an image of dangerous, deadly and dirty," said Delparine. Changing that image is possible, but difficult, since women face constant harassment from police and other community officials. Delparine urged unity with other groups such as health organizations and human rights groups, to further access reproductive freedoms everywhere.

Zanele Hlatshwayo represented the Women's Health Project in Johannesburg, South Africa, which seeks to change the attitudes of health care providers, to examine "gender based power relations and unwanted pregnancy." She discussed the liberal laws in the country surrounding abortions, and the fact that in spite of these laws, women were not accessing the services. Hlatshwayo mentioned the nature of sexual relations in the country, such as the fact that women still found it difficult to negotiate for safer sex within their relationships, since a request for birth control was often misconstrued to mean that they were unfaithful. This situation was made worse in relationships where men controlled all the financial resources.

> "An unwanted pregnancy is something you can deal with. There is no cure for AIDS right now."
> -Toni Bond, Chicago Abortion Fund.

Toni Bond, of the Chicago Abortion Fund, an organization that provides low-income women with money to finance second trimester abortions, told the audience that she had spoken with many women whose pregnancies were due to failed contraception such as Depo-Provera or condoms. "An unwanted pregnancy is something you can deal with. There is no cure for AIDS right now," said Bond.

"Don't put your life in someone else's hands – you put the condom on."

Before the workshop ended, one participant noted that many women feel that "just because they don't have an access problem, there is no access problem. An attack on any woman is an attack on all women."

At 3:15, another workshop session began. This time, participants could select from topics such as "Art and Activism," "Welfare Rights," and "Violence against Women."

Loretta Ross, Executive Director of the Center for Human Rights Education in Atlanta, Georgia, and Khadine Bennett, of the Women's Institute for Leadership Development for Human Rights (WILD) in San Francisco, led workshop entitled "Human Rights and Reproductive Rights." Ross gave what she called a "quick and dirty" lesson on human rights, telling the audience that 92 percent of Americans have never seen the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, detailing five categories of human rights. She urged activists to consider domestic human rights violations, such as those pertaining to homosexuals and the disabled, before moving onto the global front, and to "build on people's lived experiences" as part of the movement.

Bennett, a graduate of Wesleyan University, reflected on her experiences as part of several groups who went to the United Nations to speak on behalf of reproductive freedom and human rights. "Sometimes it's better to stay and fight than to leave and give up that space to someone else," said Bennett with regard to confrontations with representatives from anti-choice organizations.

Both activists advised student and community leaders on how to successfully crusade for human rights. Think critically, take responsibility for your own education," urged Bennett. Ross mentioned the case of Denise Freeman, a mother of five with no political experience who decided to run for office in Georgia as a Human Rights Candidate. She succeeded in winning 40 percent of the vote. According to Ross, Freeman "demonstrated the efficacy of using human rights in a political scenario." She implored activists to build a movement, consisting of "people who all think very, very differently but who are all moving in the same direction... a movement based on a humanity and not our differences."

The conference moved forward with a plenary, helping students and activists in planning for National Young Women's Day of Action in October, 2001, as well as a networking reception for those interested in internship and jobs in reproductive rights and women's health, performances, and a party for conference participants.

On Sunday, one of the concluding events was a menstrual extraction work-shop. Menstrual extraction is a process by which menstrual blood is evacuated from the uterus by means of an airtight, handheld suction device. It can be used in cases of very early, low-risk pregnancy to perform an abortion without anesthesia, and with a lower risk of infection and complications than the standard dilation-curettage method.

Finally, activists and presenters aired reactions to the conference and discussed strategies to improve and unify the movement, in a forum entitled "Reviving the Political Imagination: Building New Alliances Across Social Movements." Many delegates from the convention plan to participate in the Emergency March for Women's Lives, a march to take place in Washington on April 22.

TO OUR READERS

Friday's issue of the Collegian marked our annual April Fool's Day issue. All content, with the exception of a four-page middle section, constituted humorous content not meant to be taken seriously. Any individuals, groups or organizations that took offense to this special issue should direct their complaints to Adam White, Editor-in-Chief.

UMass Campus Recreation

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:

	Meet
Swim (M/W)	4/9
Weekend Flag Football (M/W/C)	4/9
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C)	4/24
Quickball (M/W/C)	4/24

More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http www.umass.edu umrm

There will be a meeting of all Night and Copy editors later this week in the newsroom. All pertinent personnel should check with Sam or Adam for the best possible day and time for this meeting. Thank You.

Amherst Select Board Dolly Jolly

Dolly Jolly has been effectively serving Amherst for 35 years, working with our youth, fund-raising for our human service agencies, actively supporting our towns and schools, and creatively participating in our business community. Amherst needs the energy, cooperative spirit and ability to get things done that Dolly brings to the Select Board.

Please join us in re-electing Dolly Jolly.

- 35 year resident
- Amherst Select Board 1998 - present
- Co-chair ABC House Capital Campaign
- Human Services fund-raiser
- Member of our Business Comuninity

Merle L. Howes, Co-chair
Judy Brooks, Co-chair
Donald Frizzle, Treasurer

VOTE FOR DOLLY JOLLY FOR AMHERST SELECT BOARD
TUESDAY, APRIL 3 • POLLS OPEN 7AM TO 8PM

FUN WORK

Come Join Our Team...

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Bush's administration says "no" to labor rights

Labor rights: it is an issue that stretches from the industrial caverns of the Big Dig project to the pained knuckles of a person with carpal tunnel syndrome. It is most visible in the unions that work on the Big Dig's construction, and most vulnerable in the individual suffering from repetitive motion injuries acquired while working for a large, powerful corporation.

Bush's administration, to date, has been dancing in the dark with corporate interests that threaten to override what should be the predominant concern of an American president: to serve the people. Pointing to the constipated stock market, Bush has used it as a rationale for practices that help corporations by eroding the rights of the worker. An emerging strategy seeks to weaken the unions that protect workers' interests.

The change from the Clinton to the Bush administration has dramatically affected organized labor. The Republican-led Congress, with little debate, last month repealed workplace ergonomics standards issued in the waning days of the Clinton administration. Unions spent years working for the ergonomics rules, only to see them disappear in a matter of days.

In addition to repealing the recent ergonomics standards, the Bush administration has taken active steps that indicate a mindset unsympathetic, or even hostile, to union concerns: businesses must post notice that employees do not have to belong to unions or allow their union fees to be used for political purposes.

"It's been a one-way street since the president took office in terms of dealing with organized labor, and it's been mainly to take away existing protections for workers," said Bill Samuel, AFL-CIO legislative director, quoted in yesterday's Boston Globe. "We think it's aimed at weakening unions."

Analysts have called this brief period of Bush's reign a "honeymoon period for corporate interests." Already, Bush has shown a grave lack of concern for public perception by deliberately furthering the assault on workers' rights. He must change the direction of his policies or risk alienating core middle class voters.

In the coming months, Bush's administration will face tough decisions on such things as Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) regulation and a new Medicare prescription drug plan. The outcome of debates on there issues will directly affect the same workers who feel slapped in the face by the recent anti-labor decisions. If Bush wants to earn their confidence, and avoid a backlash, he must tune out corporate demands and make decisions that are for the common good.

www.dailycollegian.com

A love deeper than the game

RYAN BENHARRIS

Tonight will be a very good night. I'm so sure of it. My Dukies are vying for the national title again, and, no matter how many chances they get, it is something that forever ranks among the absolute most wonderful things each and every time.

Right away you may have noticed something a bit out of the ordinary. I called them "my" Dukies. You read it right. They're the Duke University Blue Devils and they're mine. I am a die-hard Duke fan. I'm more of a Duke fan than you are a fan of any other athletic team you can possibly imagine. I don't care if you have season tickets to the Bruins, 50-yard line seats for the Patriots or if you had "Nomar" tattooed on your ass. There is no way in the sacred and holy name of sport that you have as much of an emotional attachment to any team as I do to Duke University.

Now, why am I such an enormous Duke fan? It's not because I love basketball (though I do). It's not because I love a tradition of winning (which Duke has) And it's not because I like to jump on a bandwagon of the top team in the world (which they are) regardless of who is winning. There is something much more valuable about Duke Basketball that I cherish so much more personally.

Here's something that you may not know about me. On December 16, 1988, I lost my mother to breast cancer. Oddly enough, at only nine years of age, I didn't even know what breast cancer meant. All I knew was that it was the reason that my mother was taken from me forever. She fought the cancer for three extremely long years. In late 1985, right after giving birth to my youngest sister, she was diagnosed with the fatal disease.

My dad was an utter saint. He did absolutely everything he could to make my mother well. Every treatment that you could possibly imagine, from doctor to doctor, to drugs, to chemotherapy my dad refused to allow any minute chance of my mother's life to be saved to be shunned away.

In mid-1987, it appeared my mother was at the end of her battle, when an opportunity to make a gamble strolled along. Diagnosed with months to live, my parents learned of the extravagant medical treatment facility in North Carolina, at the Duke University. Without a doubt in his mind, my dad took my mother there, on a prayer that they could do anything, absolutely anything to prolong her life or ultimately save her. He flew back and forth from North Carolina to Scotch Attleboro several times a week, to try to be with his wife and his kids at the same time. For me, a 9-year-old child, Duke University was not a place of education, or a haven for basketball greatness, it was the place where they were trying to keep my mother alive.

> "...turn on tonight's national championship game, and remember that there are some people out there who have a lot more riding on a sport than just a win or a loss."

The people at Duke University Medical Center proved to be nothing short of miracle workers. My mother, who earlier was diagnosed with a very short amount of time left, was given such wonderful treatment that she tripled the predictions. She died approximately one year after her treatment began at Duke, but it was one year with my mother that I would not have had if it were It not for their magnificent doctors.

Ever since then, I've clung onto Duke as something that my mother left behind. I have followed the team with utmost respect for myself and for my mother.

Back when I was in high school, I remember having rivalries with friends who would root for North Carolina. Anyone who challenges my opinion on who is the greatest college basketball team in the country is wrong. Flat out wrong, and you will not now or ever change my mind.

I was home this weekend. Last Thursday I had four impacted pieces of rigid enamel known as my wisdom teeth ripped through the inner lining of the soft tender flesh of my mouth. That was fun. I spent Saturday night biting my nails off during the near-loss to Maryland with my father. You can imagine the excitement in my house when they pulled off the win.

My entire family will be cheering for Duke tonight. My brother will be leading the charge at UMass-Lowell, my dad and stepmother will be watching from home. I'm not sure where I'll be though. I have elaborate visions of where I'll be when Duke wins the national title. They haven't done it since 1992, and I remember that I was home watching it with my dad. Maybe I'll be in some random bar, or maybe I'll just stay at home with my roommates and torment them with my yelling and screaming. I'll most definitely be watching with my roommate Ben somewhere though. Last time they played UConn for the national title, and lost, he gave me crap. It's revenge time for that! Hopefully I'll be able to find my old roommate, Matt, who makes it a point to call me every time the Devils lose. If we don't hang out, there will be no phone calls tonight!

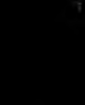
Every year, when March madness rolls around, I root for Duke. I have a sweatshirt that I never wash, that I either wear or carry around with me during each tournament game, and am enthralled every time they are on television. I had friends throughout high school and college that would associate my face to Duke University every time they heard any news about the team or its players. So if you've got nothing better to do, turn on tonight's national championship game, and remember that there are some people out there who have a lot more riding on a sport than just a win or a loss. I was very young when my mother died, but every year I have the NCAA tournament to remind me of her. The feeling that a Duke win would create is indescribable. It feels like, for one night, I'm allowed to connect with my mother on some sort of surreal level.

There is nothing in the world that separates me from my love of Duke basketball, and tonight will be a good night. I'm so sure of it. We're winning this one for you mom.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

RESPECT
THE DIFFICULT TASK IN STORE FOR THE NEW PRESIDENT AND TRUSTEE...
I THINK I FELT IT MOVE!
YOU WANT ME TO TRY PUSHING?
S.G.A.
CANADA '01

A waste of ink and words



LAURA SICILIANO

Sometimes when I need a hit of amusement, perhaps between classes or over lunch, I will pick up a copy of the The Minuteman, also known a "The Commonwealth's Conservative College Newspaper." I don't find the newspaper amusing because it is conservative – I myself am an independent who is basically liberal but I do have some conservative views. I sometimes find The Minuteman amusing because of the completely slanted way in which news is written, giving the impression that all evils of the world are caused by liberals. I also find it amusing that The Minuteman, which perpetuates itself to be the media outlet for Republicans on the liberal UMass campus, does so very little to place Republicans in a positive, centrist light. Rather than reaching out like Dubya did during his campaign ("I'm a uniter not a divider"), the club seems to be leaching on to the President's recent tactics of being arch-conservative, bringing such winners as Oliver North and David Horowitz to campus. I think it is great when controversial, thought-provoking speakers are brought to campus. However, if the Republican Club and The Minuteman want to reach more members and spread the Republican message, it would just make sense to me that they would want to be attracting members, rather than attacking them.

In the March 26, 2001 issue of The Minuteman, the staff of the newspaper proved that they really only do want to conquer and divide the campus and continue to give Republicans and Conservatives a bad name. How you ask? Well, The Minuteman, "The Commonwealth's Conservative College Newspaper" published Advice for Freshman Survival, unsigned of course (so according to standard newspaper procedure, representing the opinion of the editorial staff). Hopefully it was intended to be amusing, but it just came off as completely offensive and sexist. Example No. 1: "If you're underage, and plan to bring alcohol into dorms, be sure to conceal it in a dark backpack or bag as this will allow you to tell the alcohol Gestapo that your bag contains nothing but stacks of culturally diverse "how female masturbation works" posters that you wish to distribute on campus to help the traditionally oppressed lesbians, hence pleasing the P.C. dorm staff who will otherwise hassle you." Where do I even start? As an RA who works hard to perform a difficult job professionally and with dignity, I am offended. As a woman who has grown up in a sexually repressive society, I am disgusted. If I was a lesbian, I would be completely offended and disgusted, since lesbians have been traditionally oppressed, even killed for their sexual orientation. I don't nor do most RA's that I know hassle people. Rather, if we see someone bringing alcohol into the building we have a responsibility to see if they are of age. Since most alcohol is concealed, the unconcealed thirty packs are all that we have control over stopping. If we let in all the alcohol that could be possibly be brought in, we will have even more drunk, obnoxious, rude, angry and sometimes violent people to deal with. And, since No. 7 on the list for Freshman Survival is "Remember that conservatives party like a bunch of crazed animals and are surprisingly skilled at keg-stands," the drunk, obnoxious, rude, sometimes smelly and often disgusting people that RA's encounter might very well be members of The Minuteman staff. Don't worry; I am sure that we will remember that.

As if the first piece of advice for freshman survival was not offensive enough, numbers two and five are just as bad, if not worse. No. 2: "When passing campus freaks, don't be frightened. You are the normal one, and have only temporarily entered the 'deviant zone.' With good luck, the nightmare should only last 4 years." No. 5: "Don't be alarmed if you find that you don't relish the idea of being in a learning environment infested with freaks, deviants, and other societal misfits. You will soon find out that UMass is not in any way like the real world it is supposedly preparing you for." If UMass is so deviant, unrealistic, and full of freaks, what are you conservative journalists doing here? I am sure that Bob Jones University has some spaces open. In this day and age, being intolerant and close-minded is not being normal. It is rather ironic that The Minuteman is calling people freakish and deviant, because a good percentage of the UMass population probably feels the same way about the staff members.

The bottom line is that The Minuteman promotes sexism and intolerance on its pages with articles such as Advice for Freshman Survival, which came in an issue that featured a front page-headlining article about the offensive nature of a swastika displayed on campus. The majority of the advice article was incredibly demeaning and rude to specific members of the campus such as women and Residence Life staff, as well as offensive to the campus as a whole. The Minuteman needs to remember that when it publishes articles such as the one I have highlighted, their words remain in print forever. Editor-in-chief Jim Eltringham has been very political on this campus – perhaps he has aspirations for the future? When his name is associated with such an abhorrent publication, he only stands a chance of being elected in Alabama.

So, next time that I am in need of amusement, I won't be able to turn to The Minuteman for a quick, cheap laugh. However, if I am looking for a sexist, perhaps racist publication that is an overall waste of paper and ink, I will know where to look.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

Will melting pot boil over?

Thirteen-year-old Aline Lyra will take the MCAS test this year just like every other kid in Massachusetts. Although the eighth grader at Amherst Regional Middle School is a little nervous, there is nothing unconventional about it for Lyra, whose face beams with a smile underneath a set of long dark curls.

Nothing except for the fact that just over two years ago, Lyra didn't speak a word of English. A native of Victoria, Brazil, Lyra came with her family to the United States because "we kind of had economic problems...so we came here to solve the problems," she says. Her parents wanted to "have a better life."

Lyra belongs to a growing population of hard-working students whose native language is not English, but who will still be required to take the MCAS test when they reach tenth grade. The test will determine whether they graduate from high school or not. Only students who will have been in the US for more than three years will be required to take the test. By the time she reaches her sophomore year, Lyra will have been in the US for roughly four years.

NATTY YAGUDIN

According to research, that may not be enough time to learn the level of English required to pass the MCAS. Considerable research has shown that, although conversational fluency in English is acquired rapidly, it normally takes between five and 10 years for ESL students to catch up to grade expectations.

Dictionaries fill the wooden cabinets lining Lyra's ESL classroom wall. Among them are the Concise Amharic Dictionary, The Batman New College Spanish and English Dictionary, and the Everyday American English Dictionary. To accommodate the needs of ESL students, the state of Massachusetts will allow them to take the MCAS test with specially approved dictionaries. But for some, that may not be enough.

"It's nice [the state] can be accommodating, but I'm not sure it's enough for students who are not familiar with testing...especially when so much of the content [is related to] American Culture," says Debbie Zacharias, the director of the English as a Second Language program at the Amherst schools for the past 16 years.

Will kids like Lyra make it through the grueling MCAS? Studies show that most of them might not. Officials at the Massachusetts Department of Education are still figuring how to incorporate the needs of a growing immigrant student community to the new MCAS format. Seventy-seven percent of ESL high school students failed the English Language Arts component of the test, and an even higher number failed the Math and Science components.

High failure rates may be explained by what Zacharias observes as a growing number of ESL students who come not only unable to speak English, but also without much general education.

"There is a large group...probably half at least...who haven't had much schooling. Many of our students come from impoverished backgrounds," she says. "For those students I would say [the MCAS test] may be a pretty ambitious requirement."

"How can we help them acquire what they need to get through high school?" Zacharias asks herself, while reflecting my question on the phone. Her program swelled to include students speaking more than 25 different languages.

For Lyra, the extra help culminated in attending an ESL class and receiving help from a bilingual tutor for her hardest class, math.

"When I came here it was hard for me to do [math] because I never saw that kind of math in my life...and I didn't know how to explain [it] in my own words," she says.

As for the MCAS test, Lyra says she will take it this year because her teacher advised her to see if she can do it. Lyra is a fast learner, who now speaks fluently and confidently. "They say you don't have to take it unless you've been here for two or three years," she says, but she wants to get some practice this year, before she must take it later when it actually counts for her graduation.

When speaking to Lyra, I couldn't help but remember myself during my freshman year of high school. I was a recent immigrant who spoke smooth English and got good grades. Yet, I failed the pre-SAT tests miserably simply because I didn't have the needed vocabulary. Fortunately they didn't count, but I was still left to wonder what my academic future might look like when SAT time comes.

Eventually I did well on the SATs and got into college. But the equivalent of taking the MCAS in tenth grade to me would have been like shooting a bullet straight to the heart of my college career.

Lyra's is one story of thousands of young immigrants that linger behind the thick curtain of the test controversies. They must work for their grades a lot harder than their English-fluent counterparts, but they still thrive in their schools and may plan to go to college. Despite current accommodations, the MCAS test just might whisk that dream away for many of them who are fluent enough to get by, but who still can't pass the rigors of the exam. No one knows exactly what will happen to them. Despite language limitations, some will surely succeed, go on to college and mix smoothly in the American melting pot. But will others just "boil over?"

Natty Yagudin is a Collegian columnist.

Arts Editor • David Troupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Overglossed Project hides Seger's talent

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

SHEA SEGER
The May Street Project
RCA

Shea Seger, or whoever produces her music videos, sure has a good sense of humor. In her video for "Clutch," a song about being drawn in willingly to a lover's embrace, the slender, playful Seger humorously fends off and beats up someone who looks to be a serious and skilled shootfighter. The idea of the video being, I assume, that she will be in no one's "clutch" unless she chooses to be.

The Texas-born and bred Seger (now living in London) has another video with an even more (unintended) telling metaphor. In the creative clip for "Last Time," the singer/songwriter is found inside a dark warehouse by a policeman and a dumbfounded fisherman. She sings the majority of the video, covered in slime, from inside a giant shark that is hanging, caught, in the center of the warehouse. Not until the two men cut open the belly of the shark does Seger appear, green sequined pants and all, and strut out of the warehouse as her two literators look on wide-eyed.

Similar to "Clutch," the latter song deals with succumbing to the pull of a partner that your heart and head just can't agree on. "And if I wake up with you/ It will be the last time..." she sings. So the shark in the video can be seen as the partner, swallowing Seger whole with his charm attack, leaving her helpless and regretful afterwards.

I think (and I'm no doctor) that Seger likes being inside that shark. Not because it represents a past lover, but because it is a shield to the outside world. Seger seems to be putting up walls constantly to prevent the viewer or listener from knowing her true intimate thoughts. Comedic and over the top videos defer attention from emotional song subjects. Glitzy sequined pants and chic UK flag shirts are symbols of an extrovert that would rather keep the conversation on the surface. One would hope that in an album setting Seger would at last get down to business and pour her heart out with no restraint.

Well, keep hoping. There's still an ace up Seger's sleeve, and she uses it. Glossy, overwhelming overproduction. The May Street Project is at times the most direct route to Seger's true feelings, but the production is the final detour making sure the listener doesn't quite get there.

Strings, vocoded voices, fuzzy guitars, and sythesizers are all on the frontlines for "Last Time," setting the pace for the overgrown atmosphere the listener must trudge through to get to Seger. So when bass-heavy beats and samples show up, it should come as no surprise and be treated as just additional obstacles.

Unfortunately, even when all of the hurdles are cleared, the adventurer only gets so much out of Seger, who prefers often frustratingly vague lyrics to naked emotions. Thankfully, there are moments of more accomplished songwriting, like the contemplative "I Love You Too Much," the beautiful "Wasting The Rain," or the narrative "May Street," but they are too far apart. The lyrics are accessible and friendly, but need to be much more vivid and insightful to warrant current comparisons to the likes of Shelby Lynne and Beth Orton.

To be sure, the music cannot be seen as a hurdle that needs to be cleared, as the busiest songs musically are often the most memorable. "Last Time," for all its chaos, is the best sounding song on the album, and the almost hip-hop beats of many songs give the album a lively, contemporary feel.

The challenge for Seger is to strike a better balance between the production and her songwriting. Seger is a brilliant talent and has a voice that I could listen to all day long. The music can be toned down and still retain its very strong pop pull, and Seger's songwriting can be brought more to the forefront and be less broad and more personal. When this happens, we'll all truly be in her clutch.

COURTESY NICOLE NODLAND
The Texas-born songstress.

Guild production shines

Agatha Christie classic well-treated

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

AND THEN THERE WERE NONE
Bowker Auditorium
March 29-31

Maybe Hollywood should take a cue from Agatha Christie.

The UMass Theatre Guild's production this weekend of "And Then There Were None" proved that you don't need blood and gore to keep an audience on the edge of their seats. Even a college-aged audience, glutted on the continual stream of slasher flicks and empty promises of suspense, can enjoy a good fright.

The play is based on Christie's mystery novel, originally titled "Ten Little Indians," about a group of 10 people who venture out to lonely Indian Island, when each of them receives a different letter of invitation. After a disembodied voice on a gramophone announces that they are each guilty of murder, they discover that there is no boat on the island, and no way back to the mainland. They then realize that the person who invited them doesn't exist. The first death comes soon after that discovery, and one after another, the guests begin to die.

Each guest seems either remorseless or guiltless of his or her alleged crime. They tell the tales of their past in succession, but we know that there must be more to them, something that they're not revealing. After all, someone amongst them is the murderer. And that unknown someone will continue to murder in the various ways described by the children's rhyme about the various deaths of the Ten Little Indians.

This particular production, though, isn't just about the whodunit. Instead, it examines the gradual peeling away of each character's outer layers until the truth is reached. The killer knows exactly what buttons to push, and what the audience sees is the transformation from the people they present themselves as in the beginning, to the people they really are. The traits and past secrets that they have tried to repress within them come creeping, or bursting, out under the strain of the situation.

This production of "And Then There Were None" understands well that the play's strength lies in this stripping away. After all, a simple whodunit requires the innocence of the audience. With such a well-known play, the convenience of that unknown element is gone for many. So what the audience is left with is the pleasure, and pain, of witnessing the destruction of pretenses.

The artistic vision of this production is something of a paradox. While the streamlined furniture and art deco wallpaper are thoroughly contemporary, the set has the main visual principle of an old movie: it is black and white. Perhaps it is a subconscious realization that this kind of intelligent mystery writing is a thing of the past.

The costumes and makeup have the same ambivalence to them. While the costumes are modern and familiar, they are all in black and white, and various shades in between. It is because we are so familiar with the items of the set and with the contemporary costumes that this absence of color is unsettling. It is just different enough to be creepy.

Lighting designer Sarah Jakubasz deserves laud for a subtle understanding of both the black-and-white concept and the fracturing of the characters when they have reached their breaking point. She captured time and space beautifully with and eye to characterization.

Director Adam Sanders' concept for the show masterfully brings together all of the artistic elements, as well as understanding what subtly goes into creating the sufficient suspense. This production takes some experimental artistic license, including some notable and well-placed sound effects of past and present voices haunting the characters. It blends surprisingly well with the more traditional aspects of the show. With the help of his technical team, Sanders' vision for the show comes together ideally at the end.

The artistic vision would be for naught had the cast not stepped up to fill their roles. Because so much of their characters depend on what happened in their past, the cast must carry into their every word the secrets that they are trying to keep. The secrets that are eventually uncovered bring the die.

As one of the last characters to die, Vera Claythorne, played here by Jennifer Jabaily, must be particularly aware of her past. Jabaily's awareness became more and more apparent as her will is pushed to the breaking point. She did a wonderful job at slowly stripping away her character from the confident leader of the group to the frightened survivor trapped by inescapable experiences.

The ensemble seems shaky immediately when working together as a whole. It is not until the killer begins to whittle down the cast that they become an organic group, playing off of each other as the tension mounts.

And as the tension mounts, the suspicion increases along with it. The remaining characters start laying the blame on each other. The pressure gets so great that they lash out. You begin to crave the anger, because it releases the ascending tension. But more than that, it gives some of the cast their shining moments.

Chris Drexler, as the skeptical and not terribly intelligent policeman William Blore, exceeds at blame. He postulates all-too-obvious theories and points his finger at most everyone. He is in constant conflict with Philip Lombard, played by Andrew LoPilato, who plays the shrewd and cocky antithesis to Blore.

This blame and conflict become some of the best moments of the show. The only thing more delightful than each of these men having center stage is to see them engaged in one of their conflicts.

By the time we reach the culmination in the third act, not a drop of on-stage blood has been spilled, and there has been minimal overt violence. Still, the psychological steps that Sanders, his cast, and his technical team have taken make for an intelligent thriller with character examinations in lieu of mindless gore. This raises the bar for college-aged entertainment.

The Guild's production demonstrated a sensitive reading of a popular, if traditional, play with just the right mixture of experimental vision and established technique.

Ashley Judd can't save Someone Like You

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

SOMEONE LIKE YOU
directed by Tony Goldwyn with Ashley Judd, Greg Kinnear, Hugh Jackman
playing at Cinemark 15, Hadley

Somewhere beneath all of the romantic comedy clichés, the pseudo-political stances, the ridiculous plot developments and the bargain-basement characters, you can make out the original idea behind Someone Like You: a romantically frustrated woman invents a magazine columnist persona for herself, using her articles as a way to come to terms with her own jumbled life. This idea, however, which isn't very good to begin with, goes completely malnourished as the film gets distracted by other ideas, an overly complicated story and too many characters, and the result is a film that may occasionally make you smile, but certainly won't make you think, feel or otherwise react in any more substantial way. It's the barest sort of fluff, full of cute jokes and cute gimmicks. If you liked Where the Heart Is, you'll love Someone Like You.

Ashley Judd, whose true talent as an actress still remains uncertain because of her insistence on doing only stupid movies, stars as Jane Goodale, a talent broker for a trashy, confrontational talk show. She starts a romance with newly hired Ray (Greg Kinnear, whose roles since As Good As It Gets have gotten progressively worse) and quickly falls in love. Then he dumps her for no apparent reason, and she, in need of a place to live, moves in with fellow coworker and professional one-night-stand artist Eddie (Hugh Jackman, most recently seen as Wolverine in X-Men).

And so on – this movie crams more romantic turns and revelations into two hours than most WB dramas manage in an entire season. To make matters worse, we have to sit through updates on the love life of Liz (Marisa Tomei), Jane's best friend and the only one in on her secret identity as a romance columnist, and we're also expected to care about Jane's sister and her pregnancy and miscarriage. The film keeps us so busy jumping from storyline to storyline, trying to stay on top of things that we hardly have a moment to sit back and care about Jane's romantic mistreatment. And the movie's so busy juggling all of its characters that it has time for nothing more than simple plays for humor and amusement. The best scenes have a Notting Hill sort of charm to them, but those are few and far between. The worst scenes, of which there are considerably more, are about as emotionally affecting as a laxative advertisement.

Whatever pleasure the viewer manages to take away from Someone Like You is due entirely to Judd and Jackman, the former being her usual cute self, and the latter turning from despicable chauvinist to sensitive shoulder-to-cry-on guy with enough style and wit to make you almost – almost – believe it. Judd – all 85 pounds of her – has a knack for pulling off overly saccharine or weepy scenes with a surprising amount of sincerity, a great asset for a film otherwise awash in phoniness, and the two generate a faint chemistry that saves the film from total failure.

Everything else, however, is treated either incompletely or stupidly, or both, and there's no sense of closure and satisfaction once the movie reaches its conclusion, which feels awkward to the point of being nonsensical – it feels like it was written for another movie entirely and transposed onto these characters, and makes sense only if you don't think about it at all.

I don't mean to hold Someone Like You to a false standard; it's not trying to be Hamlet, and would probably settle for a good episode of "Felicity," but even against its fellow romantic comedies it doesn't stack up. Too many characters, too many plot developments, too many gimmicky ideas (including the always-sketchy lead character narrative device), and not enough thoughtful, familiarizing character development. It doesn't strike a single sincere note, a disastrous shortcoming for a film whose success depends upon the audience's ability to empathize with its characters.

Ozzfest forcast? pretty grim

5 reasons that Ozzfest 2001 sucks:

1. Black Sabbath

There is absolutely no reason that Black Sabbath should ever tour again. When the band made their comeback on the first national Ozzfest it was a remarkable experience, as one of the founders of metal overcame decades of animosity to give a real treat to fans too young to have seen them their first time around. The next time they headlined the Ozzfest, in '99, it was less special but acceptable, because it was their "retirement tour." As this was, they promised, the last time anyone would get to see them, it was OK to give them one last hurrah to celebrate their achievements. On that tour, however, the reasons why Sabbath should retire were evident: Ozzy was a lifeless corpse onstage, the set was utterly predictable, and most of the fun and passion had gone. The applause was only so loud because it was Sabbath; it had nothing to do with the performance. Black Sabbath was a great band in the 70s, but the thrill is gone. Stop embarrassing the memory by touring until you die. Stay retired.

2. Marilyn Manson

When Marilyn Manson played on the Ozzfest in 97, he said he'd never ever do it again, because he hated metal and "intolerant" metal fans, who weren't afraid to demonstrate their hatred of him by, say, throwing piss-filled bottles at him onstage. Whoops – I guess when you're a bad musician, people are finally realizing it, and your career starts going to the toilet, you do whatever you can to cling to fame, right? Moron. We still don't like you. Wear a helmet and bring a towel.

3. The other main-stage bands.

Remember when being on the main-stage of Ozzfest was an honor to cap off a career? Typically one rising star was given the chance to shine, but the rest were established acts brought together for the delight of the hardcore metalheads. Not anymore. The other bands under Sabbath and Manson – Slipknot, Papa Roach, Linkin Park, and Crazy Town – are all new, trendy acts who only have only released one album each. Slipknot is a gimmick band who at least make good music. Papa Roach have one timeless classic song and an album of hilariously unlistenable rapmetal. Linkin Park is a label-created, no-talent, factory-produced boyband. As far as Crazy Town – not only do I never trust a band composed only of people with supermodel looks, not only are they another rapmetal trendhopper, but they had to drop off the Ozzfest second stage midway last year when one of the singers went to jail. Their punishment is to play the main-stage the next summer? Please. The main-stage where Type O Negative, Tool, Pantera, Fear Factory, Machine Head, Sepultura, Megadeth and Slayer were honored for their years of dedication in the metal underground is just another platform for MTV-spawn to (sub) bast smooth flows. Or whatever.

4. Distributed headlining the second stage

The reasons this is a disgrace are much the same as for #3. The second stage of Ozzfest has always been a place of up-and-coming talents and lesser-known names showing their mettle in front of a rabid nation, with a tried-and-true veteran headlining to show how it's really done. The second stage undercard is actually one of the highlights of this year's Ozzfest, but the headlining is a definite disappointment. Don't get me wrong, I really like Disturbed – I think their album is great, and their live show is a fun time. However, they have nowhere near the stature or credibility to headline a national tour. They only have one album, for one thing, and they've only been in the business for a few years. Past headliners – Motorhead,

Turn to OZZFEST, page 6

Courtesy Department of Music & Dance

Flutes a-ready

A member of the UMass Symphony Band prepares for a concert to be held on Sunday, April 22 at 3:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

■ ozzfest

continued from page 5

Fear Factory – have been around long enough to deserve the slot, and they've followed through spectacularly. Last year's headlining band, Soulfly, was a little sketchy, since they too only had one album, but Max Cavalera's legendary status with Sepultura gave that choice just enough credibility to carry weight. Credibility is something an overnight sensation (ironically enough, a Motorhead album title) like Disturbed lacks.

5. How good it could have been

Here's one metal fan's vision of how this tour could have been booked, using bands that cover most types of metal, have a reason for touring, and deserve the chance to grace an Ozzfest: Ozzy, fulfilling past promises, steps aside from touring on this Ozzfest entirely. Knowing that no one could ever possibly fill his shoes, Sharon Osbourne, his wife and tour booker, decides to have three headlining bands who rotate playing order each night. Those three bands are Guns 'N Roses (newly resuscitated and waiting to reclaim their hard rock position), Tool (pumping their live album and upcoming studio release), and (with a brand new album) Fear Factory. The other three main-stage acts are Type O Negative (still touring on their Least Worst release), In Flames (a brilliant Swedish band massively popular in the underground, making a new mainstream splash), and Disturbed (a logical advancement for the most popular band from last year's second stage). The second stage is headlined by legends Anthrax, with the undercard consisting of some of the bands actually booked this year (Nonpoint, Hatebreed, Cold, Mudvayne, The Union Underground) and the other six bands being The Haunted, Tree, Dark Tranquillity, Spineshank, At The Drive-In, and Stuck Mojo.

Now that's an Ozzfest.

Rob Schultze is a Collegian Columnist.

Catch 22 and Kicked in the Head rock out Skybox Saturday night

By Dan Paladino
Collegian Correspondent

CATCH 22
Skybox
March 31

In front of a raucous crowd at UMass' Skybox on Saturday March 31, New Jersey punk-ska tandem, Catch 22, capped off an evening of frenzied hardcore punk-ska and left an exhausted and jovial crowd screaming for more. An enormous collection of young and old punksters, some with slick mohawks and chains galore, anxiously waited more than an hour until the doors finally opened. When the show kicked off at 7:30, however, it didn't take long for the crowd to let loose all over the Skybox floor.

The young seven-piece punk-ska outfit, Action League, got the night rolling with a short, yet vibrant collection of punk-ska songs that soon got everyone skanking and dancing vigorously. The vocalist made it his job to make funny faces while singing, as a three-man and woman horn section played very well done and fun ska melodies; the band seemed young and, while not sporting the most refined ska sound known to man, Action League's energetic singer made up for it by throwing himself about the stage and egging on the crowd, much to the audience's delight.

Local hardcore punk-ska band, Cappuccino Jellybeans, played next and demonstrated a much harder sound, mixing metal riffs with punk guitar. Perhaps the most hardcore act of the night, the Jellybeans' talented guitar player interweaved deep metal rhythms into the punk sound, getting the crowd riled up and moshing crazily. The band relied mostly on a high riding hardcore tone instead of a bouncy ska rhythm; the singer fits this harder niche because his screaming and energy blend well with the occasional metal riffs that scream Pantera themselves. The backing vocals were never nearly as dynamic as the front-end ones, but this never became a problem as the energy of the group as a whole satisfied the Skybox crowd. As asked by the singer to the punkish crowd, it became obvious that most of the already active crowd couldn't wait to see Kicked in the Head and Catch 22.

Simply stated, Kicked in the Head absolutely rocked; the band's tight vocals, awesome crowd participation, and insane punk style rose to the crowd's expectations and shook the Skybox up. The band kicked off its long set with police sirens and lights that circled the room; the sirens' echoes lingered through the room until the singer, Gary, grabbed a megaphone and mic and yelled, a frantic start to the first song. At this point, the already pumped-up crowd prepared for what Gary called the "prelude to the madness" – and so it was. Sporting a new drummer and playing mostly new material, Kicked in the Head also showed a tough hardcore sound, which spurred the singer's wild movements on stage. Between knocking over his band mate's cymbals and hopping upon his drum set and flipping into the crowd numerous times, the vocalist was an even more energetic singer made up for it by throwing himself about the stage and egging on the crowd, much to the audience's delight.

The tunes themselves were characteristic of hardcore punk, but mixed in the funky sound of two trombones that added danceable ska transitions into the music. The punk sound was clean and refined, mixing well with the unpredictability of guitar and trombone solos. Several fans followed suit after the singer and surfed the crowd, until the band's last song and sirens came on. Whatever was left of the sweating and smiling crowd awaited the Victory Records artist, Catch 22, to put the finishing touches on a great night of riveting punk-ska.

And then the "madness" ensued. Well known northern ska group, Catch 22, obviously had quite a following of die-hards as they energetically jammed through a long set of fan-favorites such as "Christina" and the amazing "1,2,3,4." A few moments into the set, it became apparent why this band that was minus one drummer (the poor sap lost the bus in Canada!) has so many fans within the quite extensive northern ska scene. The tunes were poppy and refined in the ska style; the talented trombone players blended their tone in well with the fast-paced guitar picking and steady drumbeats. The singer's stage presence, kept the fun mood by joking around with his band mates and interacting with them musically; many times, the guitar players choreographed their movements and jammed side-by-side. The youthful crowd happily skanked through each song and sang into the mic during the frenzied choruses. A highlight of the performance was Catch 22's punk rock version of Bob Marley's legendary "One Love;" the song was played at a frenzied pace, as everyone joined together in singing the well-known chorus. The moment was one of two that defined the evening for the show; the other occurred during the much-anticipated song, "1,2,3,4." The song's slow beginning gives way to a chaotic and harmonic chorus, in which the singer's talent surfaces and his connection to the crowd shines. Catch 22 wrapped up their spirited set by allowing the crowd to rush the stage and sing with them; it was a moving and appropriate moment that capped off a satisfying night that left an exhausting crowd still applauding for more Catch 22.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

No more shower sandals
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
253-7879
Come check us out at
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Munchie Madness 3-6PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Vegetarian Potato Skins 8.50 4.25
Sweet Potato Fries 8.50 3.25
Shrimp Tempura 7.25 3.63
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
http://virtual-valley.com/judies
51 N Pleasant Street
253-3491

Masters Programs in Internet Strategy Management
Internet Engineering
Teaching with Internet Technologies
•designed for working professionals
•meet alternate weekends and online
•one-year, first of their kind programs
•state-of-the-art facilities
'For RSVP and info, contact 888 258-5665 or
'gradcenter@marboro.edu
Brattleboro, Vermont • www.gradcenter.marboro.edu
The Graduate Center
MARLBORO COLLEGE
creating leaders for a world online™
INFORMATION SESSION
April 4, 5:30 - 7pm
The Hotel Northampton
320 Congress St.
The Graduate Center Advisory Board includes senior executives from , Apple, INSO, 3Com Corp., IBM, USWeb/CKS Partners, Viant Corp., Interactive Factory, Lucent, Hewlett-Packard, and Harvard Business School

Ever tried to fit 3.5 students into one bed? It's not comfortable.

UMass has 22,000 students trying to sleep in 6,300 beds, leaving 15,700 students looking for an apartment.

1?

Advertise yours in the Annual Collegian Apartment Guide.

Deadline to place a classifieds ad is April 6. Issue to be published on April 11.

Stop by our office in the Campus Center basement or call 545-3500 for more information

PARKING SERVICES REGULATION REMINDER

Effective Monday, April 2, 2001 Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement, which is 7:00am to 5:00pm Monday through Friday.

Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, except visitor meter lots, which are enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm. Vehicles may park in any legal parking space, provide it is not a tow zone, handicapped space, vendor space, state vehicle space, reserved space, or 24-hour permit required lot (lots 21, 29, 47, 49, 50, 54, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.), from 5:00pm to 7:00am, Monday through Friday, weekends and holidays, without displaying the proper permit. Parking meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00am to 5:00pm, Monday through Friday.

Pride too much as Minutewomen fall

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Everyone on the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team knew that it was going to be a tough game.

And although it gave a good effort, UMass could not generate enough offense against the Hofstra Pride to pull out the victory, eventually falling 10-6 on Richard F. Garber Field, Saturday morning.

The loss dropped the Minutewomen to 1-5, going into a portion of their schedule in which they play their next three games away from home.

In contrast, Hofstra improved to 6-1 with the win, and looks primed for conference play to start.

"[The loss] wasn't disappointing in the fact that I thought we played really well together," sophomore defenseman Bridget Byrne said. "But it was disappointing because we haven't beat a good team yet all year."

Right off the opening whistle, the Pride controlled the ball on the set attack, and notched the first goal of the contest when Jessica Gaither blew a shot by Maroon and White goalie Jen Nardi less than three minutes into the game.

Kristen Marshall tallied a score of her own a little over two minutes later for Hofstra, and Kathleen Mikowski extended her teams lead to three at the 23:38 mark of the first half, by taking a pass on the baseline of the cage and shooting it under the net of the Maroon and White goalie.

However, UMass would soon respond.

With 22:52 left in the first frame, leading Minutewomen scorer

Rachel Ingraffea put her team on the board with a lined shot into the back of the Pride cage, and 37 seconds later, took a pass from Angela McMahon while cutting toward the goal and cut the Hofstra lead to one.

From that point on, though, the Pride defense would make sure that Ingraffea would not be the one to beat them, and the senior would fail to notch a goal for the remainder of the contest.

"We had some videos of them, we knew their plays and we knew 'No. 7 (Ingraffea) was their key player," Hofstra coach Carie Bodo said. "We didn't shut her down in the first half, but we did do a good job in the second."

Over the next 14 minutes, the Pride would go on a 4-0 run behind solo scores from Kelly Hudson, Megan Zimmer, Kathleen McPike and Kathleen Mikowski, to push the score from 3-2 to 7-2, but the Maroon and White would answer once again.

Lydia Robinson put home the first of the three goals she would garner on the day with 6:52 left before halftime, and then added her second score five minutes later. This, along with a Jada Emery tally, made the scoreboard read only 7-5 Hofstra at the break, and also gave UMass the momentum going into the second half.

However, the Pride would slow up the pace in the second half, and would once again use their set attack to extend the lead.

"[Speed] is our strength, but they knew we had speed," Bodo said. "So they dropped their defense in so we couldn't fast break on them as much. We tried to keep possession of the ball when we had the lead, and they let us stay out there and pass it around."

In the second half, Zimmer and Robinson traded goals over the first 15 minutes to keep the game even, but the Pride put the game away when Zimmer picked up her hat trick with 15:42 remaining in the game, and Grace Vidulich finished out the scoring a couple of minutes later with her second goal of the year.

From that point on, Hofstra was effective at slowing the game to a standstill, and did not allow the Minutewomen to pick up the pace in an attempt to get back in it.

Despite the loss, however, the Maroon and Whites players expressed optimism that it would start winning some games in the near future.

"At the beginning of the season we were trying to figure each other out," Byrne said. "We have improved with each game, though, and if we continue to improve with each game than we will definitely beat some good teams down the road."

UMass continues its season this Wednesday when it travels to Dartmouth for a 4 p.m. start.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Rachel Ingraffea scored a goal in the women's lacrosse team's hard-fought, 10-6 loss to Hofstra on Saturday morning.

■ lacrosse

continued from page 10

even out there. We just don't have that kind of depth."

The Lions added two more, including a blast from Booth to the top left corner of the cage to make it 10-9, but Penn State failed to get any closer, attempting only one shot in the remaining six minutes of play. Four Nittany Lion penalties in that duration didn't help the cause and UMass ran out the clock for the victory.

"That doesn't give you much of a chance to tie it up," Thiel said. "We had one chance [in the last six minutes] and took a shot too soon. We had the ball and forced a weak shot from a weak hand and we shouldn't have done that."

UMass came out of the locker room with a 5-2 lead and struck early when Little fired a seed from the top of the arc into the top shelf for the four-goal lead, but the Maroon and White's customary third quarter surge would go no further.

Four straight Penn State goals knotted the game at 6-6 and left the Minutemen shaking their heads. The first, which came with just under 10 minutes remaining, was a simple blast from the slot from the midfielder, Booth. One minute later, senior Sean Huss found a wide-open Driscoll for the easy score. Driscoll's next goal 19 seconds later off a running slant from the right side put the Lions within one at 6-5. Senior Randy Kleinman scored three minutes later to even things up.

But UMass responded late in the same quarter with two goals (Kunkel, Chirs Flore) to regain the lead 8-6 going into the final stanza.

The Minutemen got on Penn State early in the first half and took a 4-1 lead into the start of the second quarter. Junior Marc Morley began the game with a wrap-around to the low post and Leveille followed with a bouncer to the left side of the cage. Seniors John Madigan and Kevin Dell finished off UMass' first quarter scoring. Each team scored once in the second and UMass ended the half up 5-2.

Best 2000 UMass Amherst Web Colleges

By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Plan Ahead for Next Year

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday-Friday
(413) 549-0145

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING
Tax-deferred solutions from TIAA-CREF can help you reach your retirement goals faster.
Call us for a free tax-savings calculator
When you're investing for retirement, the adage "never put off until tomorrow what you can do today" doesn't apply to taxes.
That's because investments that aren't eroded by taxes can add up to significantly more money for you—money you can use to supplement your pension and Social Security.
Let our consultants show you all the advantages of tax deferral, or call us for a free tax-savings calculator.
Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs), IRAs and other tax-saving solutions—along with TIAA-CREF's low expenses and solid history of performance—can help you invest tax smart today so that you can reach your retirement goals faster in the years to come.
*Note: Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59½ may be subject to restrictions, and to a 10% additional tax.
TAX DEFERRAL MAKES A DIFFERENCE
$102,068
Tax-deferred savings after taxes*
$67,514
After tax savings
$100 per month for 30 years
In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth after 30 years than the same net amount put into a savings account. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or predict future results, of any TIAA-CREF account, or reflect expenses.
TIAA-CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™
1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org
For more complete information on our securities products, call 1 800 842 2733, ext. 5509, for prospectuses. Read them carefully before you invest. • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc. and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc. distribute securities products • Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), New York, NY and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2001 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association–College Retirement Equities Fund, New York, NY 01/04

You could Save a Life...
all it takes is a vial of blood.
Bone Marrow Typing Drive
Student Union Ballroom 9:00 to 3:00 pm
Monday, April 2
Sponsored by the Student Nurses Association

CAMPUS SUMMER JOB
FULL-TIME
ROBSHAM VISITORS CENTER
The Robsham Visitors Center has a full time summer job opportunity for an undergraduate student. Minimum qualifications include active status, completed at least two consecutive semesters, knowledgeable about campus programs, services and building locations.
Title: Student Greeter and Information Specialist
Hourly rate: $8 minimum (approx. $3500)
Period: June 4 - August 31
Hours: 9:00am-4:30pm (weekdays)

For further information, call 545-3480 or e-mail helgerson@admin.umass.edu
Resume and interview required

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Moving Off Campus? Come to Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center's Apartment Complex Fair on Thursday, April 5 from 10am to 3pm on the Campus Center Concourse.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet with Fall Option Starting June 1st. 2 Bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-1988

Apartment Available to take over June 1st. 2 bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-9462

3 Bedroom Renovated Apartment in Puffton. Available June 1st. Call 549-7111

Summer Sublet with lease option. Puffton 3 bedroom, 2 bathroom. Renovated + furnished. Central locale. Call 548-3915

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet June 1-Sept 1. Right in Town close to bus stops. 1 Bedroom $300 a month 253-0065

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

Two Bedroom Apt available June 3rd for sublet. Inexpensive only $600/month. Huge rooms- can easily accomadate four people. Call 253-6311

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom Brandywine Apt. starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Call 549-0453 ASAP

2 Bedroom in Boulders Take over lease from June-Sept. $825 a month. Call Victor 253-6917

Summer Sublet, Fall option. 3 bedroom Puffton available 6/1 Call 549-7812

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 GEO Tracker 4x4 beautiful green color soft top $1995 978-544-3783

EMPLOYMENT

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

Counselors Wanted Co-ed Jewish overnight camp in Maine offers competitive salary plus room and board. All positions available! For more information, contact Ava or Meridith at 617-244-5124 or via email at info@kingswood.org

EMPLOYMENT

$10/hr GUARANTEED Work on campus F/T or P/T for as little as 5-10 hrs/wk or as many as 40 hrs/ wk. Be your own boss. Create your own schedule. Limited positions. Call 1-800-808-7442 x 80

CAPMUS SUMMER JOB Full-time opportunity, Visitors Center, June-August. Competitive hourly rate. Call 5-3480 for information.

Part Time Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridership Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conduction a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Northampton on April 25 and April 28, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until April 9, 2001. For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield MA 01089. PVPC is and EOE/AA employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Access 2 A Computer? Put it to work! $25/hr - $75/hr, PT/FT (866) 639-RICH www.athome4ever.com

AMHERST LSSE SUMMER EMPLOYMENT Day Camp Counselors (must be 18 yrs of age) Pool - Lifeguards, W.S.I. (s), and cashiers. Part time Summer Musical Theather Institute Counselor(s). Part time Asst. for Hot Summer Nights Film & Music Series. Summer Registration Clerk Special Events Coordinator. Applications available at: Human Resources 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst, MA 01002 E.O.E

EMPLOYMENT

CAMPUS SUMMER JOB Full-time opportunity, Visitors Center, June-August. Competitive hourly rate. Call 5-3480 for information. See also display ad.

Wanted 24 UMass Underclassmen to take part in 45 minute survey. Also coordinator position. For details call 1-800-573-3309

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

FOR SALE

Free Computer when you buy my printer for $50. 665-0241 anytime

Kona Mt. Bike - Good for petite rider. Call for details. 413-397-8999

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

HOUSE WANTED

4+ Bedroom House Wanted for rent. Call Ilya 546-6397 or 413-665-9269, ask for Jon

INSTRUCTION

Step Aerobics, Cardio Kickboxing, Circuit Training. Five week program only $20. Starts April 8. Sponsored by UMass Housing. Call 5-1962

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 3 bedroom apt. June, July + August. Call 549-9940

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st Call for info. 549-1988

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

Starting June 1st. 2 big Bdrms. Spacious living area. On bus route. Washer/dryer and dishwasher. 2 people only. Call 256-1809

Sunderland. 2bedroom apartment. Avail. June-August, with option for following year. $300+/month per person. Very spacious-great deal! Call Bryan 413-665-7922

TRAVEL

FLY 4STANDBY...FLY 4 CHEAP! Europe $169 o/w (+tx) Lon, Fra, Mad, Ams, Par, & more 4STANDBY.COM or 800-326-2009

Need to Advertise?

Don't Hesitate... Call NOW!

545-3500

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

We Advertise to THOUSANDS!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CSS-8 Boston
4 - CPN-4 Boston
5 - ABC-40 Springfield
6 - PBS-57 Springfield
7 - Public Access Channel
8 - UPN-30 Hartford
9 - Public Access Channel
10 - NBC/30 New Britain
11 - Fox-61 Hartford
12 - PBS-24 Hartford
13 - WB-20/8 Providence
14 - International Channel
15 - USA-TV Educational Channel
16 - WB-50 New Haven
17 - Weather Channel
18 - Channel to Serak
19 - C-Span
20 - CNN
21 - CNN Headline News
22 - Classical
23 - USA
24 - Lifestyle
25 - TBS
26 - TNT
27 - Sci-Fi
28 - Nickelodeon
29 - Noggin
30 - Fashion Network
31 - Nick at Nite
32 - TV Land
33 - Comedy Central
34 - MSNBC
35 - Univision
36 - Financial News Network
37 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

USA DAILY COLLEGIAN APRIL 2, 2001 - APRIL 8, 2001 GRID #1 01AMHERS.DAT

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 2, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience: Scottsboro			In Our Own Hands: The Jewish Brigade
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Raymond	College Basketball: NCAA Tournament Championship -- Teams to be Announced.				News
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Raymond	College Basketball: NCAA Tournament Championship -- Teams to be Announced.				News
WGVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	"Picture Perfect" (1997, Comedy) Jennifer Aniston,		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)			News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "One Hundred"		Gilmore Girls (In Stereo)			News	Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Dateline (In Stereo)		First Years (N) (In Stereo)			News	Tonight Show
WTAX	8	(7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date		7th Heaven "One Hundred"		Gilmore Girls (In Stereo)			News	(Change-Heart	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Dateline (In Stereo)		First Years (N) (In Stereo)			Third Watch "Four Days"	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	Boston Public "Chapter Seven"		Ally McBeal "Two's a Crowd"			News	Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Dateline (In Stereo)		First Years (N) (In Stereo)			Third Watch "Four Days"	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		American Experience: Scottsboro		Eddie Shore		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Spin City	Fraser	"Picture Perfect" (1997, Comedy) Jennifer Aniston,		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)			News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Fraser	Fraser	Moesha	Hughleys	Parkers	Girlfriends	Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	29	Roseanna	Roseanna	Fresh Prince	Frash Prince	"The Devil's Advocate" (1997, Horror) Keanu Reeves, Al Pacino,						"The Devil's Advocate" (1997)
A&E	10	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "D-Girl"		Biography: Rock Hudson		100 Centre Street (N)			Investigative Reports	Law & Order "Custody"
CNN	20	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live			CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	TV Funhouse		Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	42	Wild Discovery "Scorpions"		Wild Discovery: Snakes		Giant Creepy Crawlies		Ancient Invensions			Marrying Tribe of the Amazon	Justice Files
ESPN	33	(4:00) Major League Baseball		Sportscenter		Men's Basketball Preview		Figure Skating: World Championships -- Pairs and Dance				Baseball	Sportscenter
LIFE	21	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Midwives' (2001, Drama) Sissy Spacek, Premiere.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Say What Kirke	Say What Kirke	"Jailbait" (2000, Drama) Mary Gross, Matt Frewer. (In Stereo)				Celebrity Brush With the Law	Daria (N)	2gether		Undressed	Fanatic Under
NICK	30	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	45	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "INQ" (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales		"Cape Fear" (1991, Suspense) Robert De Niro, Nick Nolte.				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	27	Professional Wrestling		Secrets of Forensic Science		Junkyard Wars "Land Yachts"		Police, Camera, Action! (N)			Ultimate Tan Great Escapes	Junkyard Wars	"Land Yachts"
TNT	23	ER "A Shot in the Night"		Pretender "Homefront"		"Purgatory" (1999, Horror) Eric Roberts. (In Stereo)						"Dollar for the Dead" (1998, Western) Emilio Estevez,
USA	31	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Rivers' Run" (In Stereo)		Eco-Challenge Borneo (N)						Martin	Martin
HBO	51	(5:30) "The Bridges of Madison County" (1995) PG-13				"If These Walls Could Talk 2" (2000)					"The End of the Affair" (1999, Drama) Ralph Fiennes.		"Fight Club"
MAX	52	(5:00)		"Livin' Large!" (1991, Comedy-Drama)		"My Dog Skip" (2000, Drama) Frankie Muniz.						"Risky Business" (1983) Tom Cruise.	"Too Good"
SHOW	55	"Payback" (1999) Patty Kensit.		Richard Chamberlain. (In Stereo)				"Payback" (1999, Suspense) Mel Gibson. (In Stereo)			Chris Isaak (N)		"The Collectors" (1999)

Arbitrary Instincts By Kevin Lane

I DON'T SEE WHAT THE PROBLEM IS. I JUST WANT TO KNOW WHAT'S UP WITH YOUR CLOTHES
I SAID I DON'T WANT TO B-ZZT WITH IT, OKAY?
IS IT REALLY THAT BIG OF A DEAL?
OH. NOW'S THAT I'LL TELL YOU WHY I'M WEARING THIS IF YOU TELL ME HOW YOU'RE NAKED.
VERY WELL. I'LL CONSIDER THE OBJECT DROPPED.
GOOD NOW WE CAN MOVE ON WITH OUR LIVES.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

DILBERT DOT-COM CEO
WE HAVE NO PROFIT NOW AND WE NEVER WILL. YOU'RE ALL LAID OFF.
DOES ANYONE KNOW WHAT LAID OFF MEANS?
IT MUST BE A COMPLIMENT.
YOU'RE PRETTY LAID OFF YOURSELF, DUDE.
WANT A HIT OF THIS?
www.dilbert.com

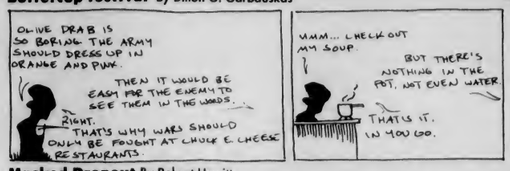
Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

DADDY, DO YOU EVER FEEL GUILTY THAT AIR FREEDOM AND FORTUNES?
NO, I DON'T. SHREDS MY HEART.
WE'RE HELPING INVESTORS GET SOME OF THEIR MONEY BACK. AND WE'RE HELPING THE PLANET BY RECYCLING UNWANTED DOT-COMS AND FURNISH-INGS!
SO WE'RE ACTUALLY A PUBLIC SERVICE?
RIGHT. OUR BRAND SAYS WE DON'T CARE!
MY VULTURE SAYS WE DON'T CARE?
IT SAYS WE'RE PART OF THE NATURAL ORDER.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

GINNY? IT'S ME...
HEY, GIRL. HOW'D THE LAST DAY GO?
NOT WELL. SEEING ALL THOSE SMUG NEW FACES MADE ME PHYSICALLY ILL. I NOT TO MENTION ANGRY!
I'M HAVING A LOT MORE TROUBLE HANDLING THIS THAN I THOUGHT I WOULD. COULD YOU COME OVER TO TALK?
SURE. HOW LONG DID RICK LAST?
ONLY A COUPLE HOURS. I DON'T KNOW WHY I'M MARRIED.

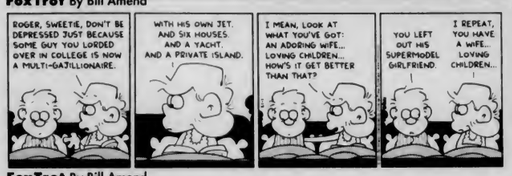
Buttercup festival By Dlliott G. Garbauskas



OLIVE DRAB IS SO BORING. THE ARMY SHOULD DRESS UP IN ORANGE AND PINK.
THEN IT WOULD BE EASY FOR THE ENEMY TO SEE THEM IN THE WOODS.
RIGHT. THAT'S WHY WARS SHOULD ONLY BE FOUGHT AT CHUCK E. CHEESE RESTAURANTS.
MMM... CHECK OUT MY SOUP.
BUT THERE'S NOTHING IN THE POT, NOT EVEN WATER.
THAT IS IT. IN YOU GO.

Masked Dropout By Robert Hewitt

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



ROGER, SWEETIE, DON'T BE DEPRESSED JUST BECAUSE SOME GUY YOU LORDED OVER IN COLLEGE IS NOW A MULTI-GAZILLIONAIRE.
WITH HIS OWN JET, AND SIX HOUSES, AND A YACHT, AND A PRIVATE ISLAND.
I MEAN, LOOK AT WHAT YOU'VE GOT: AN ADORING WIFE... LOVING CHILDREN... HOW'S IT GET BETTER THAN THAT?
YOU LEFT OUT HIS SUPERMODEL GIRLFRIEND.
I REPEAT, YOU HAVE A WIFE... LOVING CHILDREN...

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

I SWEAR, READING THIS ALUMNI MAGAZINE MAKES ME FEEL LIKE A WORLD-CLASS FAILURE.
IT SEEMS LIKE EVERY ONE OF MY CLASSMATES IS DOING AMAZING THINGS, AND HERE I AM, NOTHING BUT A BORING OFFICE DRONE.
IF IT WEREN'T FOR JEFF THOMPSON, I THINK I REALLY WOULD BE BOTTOM OF THE BARREL.
WHAT'S HE DO?
I DUNNO, BUT IT CAN'T BE MUCH. THE GUY WAS A CERTIFIABLE MORON.
WOW. LOOK AT THIS NEW THOMPSON SCIENCE CENTER THE SCHOOL'S BUILDING.

Quote of the Day

"This has got purple stuff in it. Purple's a fruit."

–Homer Simpson

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 43 LOW: 28	HIGH: 46 LOW: 26	HIGH: 48 LOW: 22

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – All those hours of practice will pay off today, as you will have to start getting things done when it really counts. Don't be too anxious knowing that all eyes are on you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Certain people who you thought you could rely on are going to disappoint you today. Don't get discouraged, however: they'll come through for you in the long run.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Today is one of those days when you'll be tempted to "blow your own horn," especially in the face of someone whose fortunes are much less positive than yours. Keep in mind how you'd feel if you were on the other side of the fence.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Life is a marathon, not a sprint. Concentrating too hard on immediate progress could leave you straining to complete "the big picture" down the road.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Today is a bad day to shun those older than you. Even as you get frustrated by their more conservative views, remember that age brings wisdom and a broader perspective on life. It would pay to listen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Your gut will tell you to play it safe today, that risk outweighs gain when it comes to big decisions. You need to throw caution to the wind and just plain "go for it," as these chances might not come again anytime soon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Fairness will be a tough standard for you to maintain today. Those close to you will try to gain an edge when it comes to preferential treatment, but you should give equal consideration to those whose names and faces might be new to you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You will have strong convictions early in the day that will prove not so important to you later. Try not to be so headstrong in your first few instances of confrontation, or you'll end up eating your words later.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – While everyone else is jumping back into the rat race today, this is a perfect time for you to take an extended weekend. Though you should still fulfill your responsibilities, don't beat yourself up trying to get back into your "productive state of mind."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – That "great deal" that presents itself this afternoon is nothing but smoke and mirrors. You really do get what you pay for, and this is an offer that's too good to be true.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Now is the time to catch up with that old acquaintance you've been meaning to call. That person desperately needs someone to confide in, and hearing the sound of your voice will pay off immeasurably in terms of emotional support.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – There's still time to extinguish that bridge you just left burning behind you. A small dose of humility will mend things enough that when you need to revisit that relationship (and you will) there won't be any hard feelings left over.

MONKEY-BOX BY PBEJ

"NOWHERE OVER THE RAINBOW," THE NEW HIT SINGLE BY HATER/SONGWRITER, BEN "BEAT" BADD, SOARED TO THE TOP OF THE CHARTS THIS WEEK.

© 2001

www.monkey-box.net

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED COMPANY

286-BEDS (2337)/ 286-BEDS(2337)

328 College Street, Amherst

FINALLY!! Amherst has a mattress & futon store conveniently located near downtown, next to The Spirit Haus on Rt. 9

GRAND OPENING & OPEN HOUSE

(FREE FOOD!!!)

SAT. MARCH 31 10-6

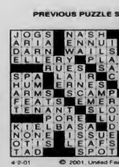
SUN. APRIL 1 12-5

futons-mattresses-beds-daybeds decorative pillows-lamps-storage platform beds-room dividers-rugs interior plants-end/coffee tables cots-foa-m-putt/poot/papasan. ETC

ACROSS

1 Wild shrub
6 Tiny droplet
10 Presently
14 Jangle
15 Singing voice
16 "Mona —"
17 Exberg of films
18 Baseball's Felipe
19 Seaweed
20 Frenchwoman's title
22 Welcomes warmly
24 Man-mouse connector
26 Less fresh
27 Floppy-eared pet
31 Pt of TGIF
32 Frees some
33 Melt
36 Used to be
39 Asian nursemaid
40 Horror-movie figure
41 Therefore
42 Yak
43 Singer Rosa
44 Get some knowledge
45 Bad hairpiece
48 Himalayan guides
48 Dogpike scavengers
51 Checkroom item
52 Extended downward
54 Does some lifting
58 Frost
60 Singing group
62 Nudge
63 City of 49 Down
64 Composer Stravinsky
65 Gaucho's rope
66 Iced tea garnish
67 Small change
68 Part

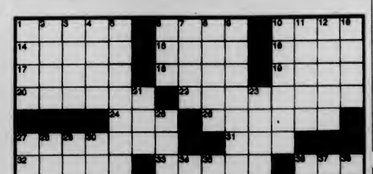
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



4-2-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN

1 Con man's trick
2 Campus neighbor
3 Hotel staffer
4 Cinema canine
5 Soft leather
6 Sheepish reply?
7 Nice lady
8 Where quarks park
9 Hesitant, maybe
10 Acid opposite
11 Sibling's child
12 Noted Canadian physician
13 Takes a snooze
21 Before, in poems
23 Cooked just slightly
25 Flint of a series
27 Catch a fly
28 Mountain lion
29 Sheik, for one
30 — degree
34 Charged particle
35 Squelch
36 Decorate a gift
37 Shah Jahan's city
38 Close relatives
40 Huge
41 "Chanot" and 43 Desert feature
44 Mail units
45 Feel remorse
47 Is down with
48 Children's classic
49 It's south of Saudi Arabia
50 Suit material
52 Ounce fraction
53 Singer Celine
55 Lamb of essays
56 Goat's-hair robes
57 Marry
58 Rock to and fro
61 Table scrap



Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Sloppy Joe

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan) (B, H, W)

Vegetable Sloppy Joe (vegan)

DINNER

BBQ Cod Fillet (B, W)

Savory Stuffed Peppers (vegan)

Bow Tie Pasta and Vegetable Casserole (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

N.E. Lite Cod (F)

Shrimp and Scallop Creole (H)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam "Flashlight" White
Photo Technician — Dan "Power Ring" Santello
Copy Editor — Melissa "Erectocaser" Hammel
Production Supervisor — Jeanette "Handcuffs" Santoro
Production Staff — Jarrett "Silver Bullet" Brimmer, Margie "Pleasure Pearls" Smallwood

Inside: Women's lacrosse falls to Hofstra, 10-6.

Monday, April 2, 2001 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen hold off PSU to stay perfect

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Alex Racioppi and the men's lacrosse team improved its record to 7-0 in a thrilling, 10-8 victory over Penn State at Richard F. Graber Field on Saturday afternoon.

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Now isn't the best time to cross paths with the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team – because the Minutemen haven't let a single loss from last year slip from memory.

"We're angry at everybody – it's great," senior Rich Kunkel said. "That is what's fueling us.

"We had so many tight games last year – one goal games that could have gone either way – but they turned out to go the other team's way," he continued. "This year we're going to make it different. And we have been doing it."

Coach Greg Cannella's avengers held off a dangerous second-half rally from No. 15 Penn State to snatch a 10-9 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) victory Saturday at Richard F. Garber Field. Not only did the win give No. 6 UMass its seventh straight victory of the season – it secured an over-.500 record for a team that hadn't accomplished that feat since 1998.

"Now the struggle comes to stay undefeated," Cannella said.

Last year, the Maroon and White fell 11-8 to Penn State in State College, Penn. In a game Cannella said was one of its worst performances of the season. But the talk in the locker room before the game wasn't all about pay back. UMass wanted to prove that its No. 6 ranking was no joke.

"Our guys were really pumped up before this game because there was a lot of talk about us [having an easy schedule] and all this other stuff," Cannella said. "They wanted to prove something."

"This is our third team that we lost to last year that we've knocked off this year," senior Chris Campolettano said. "And that feels pretty good."

Kunkel had two goals and added two assists for the Minutemen (7-0, 3-0 ECAC) while junior Don Little also found the net twice for the Maroon and White. Sophomore Kevin Leveille added a goal and three helpers. But for the first time all season, UMass failed to field a three-goal scorer.

Junior Will Driscoll led Penn State (3-4, 0-3 ECAC) with four goals and sophomore Rob Booth followed with two.

Campolettano, who played with a broken thumb in last year's game, made a season-high 18 saves in the cage for the Minutemen, while Matt Vallone made 22 saves for Penn State. The Maroon and White outshot the Lions 51-44.

The keys to UMass' victory were its ability to snag the majority of ground balls and its perfect execution of the man-down defense. For the game, UMass out-groundballed the Nittany Lions 22-12.

"We missed ground balls," Penn State coach Glen Thiel said. "Every goal they had early was because we missed a ground ball and they went bang-bang-goal. That's been our problem all year. We get the ball on the ground and don't pick it up. And that was the difference today."

The Lions were 0-for-7 (UMass, 2-for-6) on their extra-man opportunities – a statistic not too unfamiliar for the Minutemen. UMass' defense has successfully killed its opponent's last 22 EMO's. Credit that to the power of junior Matt McFarland and sophomore Tom Fallon on the inside along with the intensity of senior Chris Gabrielli on the perimeter.

"I have two goons [McFarland and Fallon] out there," Campolettano chuckled. "And, to be honest, Chris Gabrielli is probably the most tenacious defender that we have. Just watching him play gives me confidence. Even though he's not the biggest and doesn't necessarily drop the biggest hits, I think he's our top 'D' guy."

UMass led 8-6 going into the fourth quarter and upped that lead just 94 seconds into the stanza when Leveille found Little open in front of the cage for the 9-6 advantage. Just over a minute later, amidst a scurry in front of the UMass net, Driscoll checked the stick of UMass goalie Chris Campolettano and picked the ball up before firing it into the open net to pull his Nittany Lions back within two.

But with 15:38 left in the game, Kunkel took the ball from senior Jeff Seals and fired the eventual game-winner past the right side of Vallone.

"They've got a lot of talent," Thiel said. "It's hard to figure out who's

Turn to LACROSSE on page 7

Lacrosse has all the tools to hammer opposition

MATTHEW F. SACCO

Can you say turnaround? After stumbling to a 6-8 record only one year ago, the Massachusetts lacrosse team returned 12 seniors and some serious firepower en route to the fastest start in UMass history.

Head Coach Greg Cancilla and his staff have managed to right every major wrong from a year ago, as seven straight opponents have been slain while attempting to find a chink in the Minutemen's armor.

Several key factors have unlocked the door to a 7-0 record: toughness, scoring prowess, stronger goaltending...etc., all facets that were noticeably lacking during last years campaign. So let us delve into the inner catacombs of Minuteman lacrosse, so as to unearth Coach Canella's secrets to success.

Dangerous from all sides

The up tempo offense that was installed last year has finally brought success to the forefront for UMass lacrosse. The Maroon and White boast 11 players with ten points or more and eight different Minutemen have recorded hat tricks. UMass has notched 115 goals in seven games this year, a stark contrast to last year's squad that managed only 137 goals in a 14 game season.

The Maroon and White attack is led by senior attackman Rich Kunkel (17 goals, 26 points) and super sophomore Kevin Leveille (12 goals, 23 points). Before a 10-9 win over conference rival Penn State the Minutemen were averaging over 17 goals a game, which ranked them first in the nation by nearly three goals.

The Maroon and White have been filling the nets all season, from a 17-goal performance against Hofstra to a 23-goal explosion against Boston College the key factor been balance on a game by game basis.

"We are definitely a difficult team to match up with," Cannella said of his teams balanced attack.

Every game a different player steps up and nets two or three goals, if that trend continues, opposing defenses will continue to have problems figuring out who to mark.

The Return of Campy

After a rough year by his own lofty standards, senior goaltender Chris Campolettano has returned to form to help guide the Minutemen to an unblemished first half.

"Chris has been stellar this year," Cancilla said. "His focus is back, he's been solid all year long."

After some personal troubles that were out of his control, the senior leader has stepped his dedication and his game in posting a .619 save percentage and a goals against average under eight, both improvements over last years number.

His biggest accomplishment may have come in the Penn State game when the Massapequa, New York native threw down the gauntlet and pulled out a win in an old-fashioned goalie duel with the Nittany Lions Matt Vallone. Vallone at 6-3 is one of the biggest and best goalies in the country but Campolettano was able to out duel him by making 18 saves and only allowing nine goals.

Don't mess with the Minutemen

In an 11-8 loss to Penn State last year, a bigger stronger Lion squad arguably manhandled the Maroon and White. This year's meeting was quite a different story however, as towering defenseman like Matt McFarland and Tom Fallon decided to lower the boom on the unsuspecting visitors.

"Our guys want to prove something every time they step out on the field," Canella said. "We really concentrate on being tougher as a team."

Fallon let the Lions know they should keep their head up with two thundering hits that swayed the momentum in UMass' favor. McFarland on the other hand showed why he was an honorable mention All-American last year, as he was checking ID's at the door to his goalies crease.

Bruisers like Fallon and McFarland are not the only ones tightening up on "D" however. Senior captain Chris Gabrielli who Campolettano calls the teams "most tenacious defender," is a thorn in every offenses side, while Kevin Merchant and speedster Paul Hutchen have raised their game to another level.

After allowing more than ten goals seven times last year, the Maroon and White defense has buckled down and held its opponents under ten goals in each of the last six games.

Special Teams are certainly special!

Possible the most essential factor in UMass' 7-0 start is its dominance on special teams.

The Minutemen rank second in the country with a 86 percent efficient man down defense including smothering performance against Penn State.

"It's a big part of the game, special teams," Campolettano said. "If we can keep a team scoreless on the man downs its great for us."

On the other side of the ball the Maroon and White are just as effective. UMass has converted 11 of 25 man up opportunities which also places the Minutemen second in the country. Leading scorer Kunkel attributes the success on EMO's to experience.

"It is the people we have out there," Kunkel said. "It's the third year we have been playing together on EMO."

The Minutemen certainly give the impression that they have righted the wrongs from last years 6-8 squad. But with conference powers Maryland at Baltimore County and Georgetown, as well as defending National Champion Syracuse looming on the horizon, only time will tell how far this team can go.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The defensive efforts of Tom Fallon have been a huge part in the successes of the Minutemen thus far.

The Iron Horse got a crash course in Eastern philosophy from the Zen tricksters.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

She's only a freshman, but Fransesca Mancini gave a big boost to the women's tennis team this weekend.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 107 www.dailycollegian.com Tuesday, April 3, 2001

Amherst positions up for grabs in today's elections

The town of Amherst will be holding its annual election from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. today, choosing Select Board and Town Meeting members, among others.

Of the nine who filed for Select Board candidacies in February, two have dropped out. Eddy Goldberg, Dolly G. Jolly, Pruddy Gomez, Jacqueline R. Brown-Hazard, Paul G. Bobrowski, Marjorie R. Crossman, and Aaron D. Wilson are the remaining candidates.

There are also three ballot questions. Question 1 is, "Shall a commission be elected to frame a charter for Amherst?" A charter commission would look at the town's charter, its form of government, and after some time, recommend changes as they see fit. Voters can elect charter commission members even if they vote against its establishment.

Question 2 asks for a 1 percent surcharge on annual property tax which will fund the "acquisition, preservation and creation of open space and land for recreational use, for the acquisition and preservation of historic resources, and for the creation, preservation and support of community housing." If approved, the act would establish a Community Preservation Committee to recommend how the money is spent.

Question 3 asks voters to decide whether the Charter Commission, if formed, should pursue alternatives to the current Representative Town Meeting form of government.

The ballot allows voters to choose up to nine Charter Commission members even if they vote against the commission. There are 13 candidates, including Pruddy Gomez and Bryan Harvey, a Select Board member not running for re-election.

Many candidates are running unchallenged. The open seats for Town Meeting moderator, School Committee and Jones Library Trustee correspond to the number up for re-election.

This year the town will be using new voting machines. The previous voting system involved pulling levers. The new system requires voters to fill out a paper ballot that is then fed into a machine that counts the votes.

The on-campus polling place is in the Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest.

Voters with questions can call the Town Clerk's office at 256-4035.

– Mark Ramirez

Pullman shares his reflections

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Staff

Due to a chaotic schedule, Bill Pullman announced, "I am amazed that I am actually here." The irony of the statement was obvious to the full house of staff and students in Rand Theater yesterday at 5 p.m. who were amazed to be in the same room with the Hollywood actor.

COURTESY WORLDWIDE WEB

Bill Pullman

The actor made his appearance in casual, practical attire consisting of dark pants and shirt with an open, button-down shirt. The nothing-fancy clothing matched his down-to-earth, modest persona. He was energetic, light-hearted, and adorably boyish. He joked, "If you want God to laugh at you, tell him your plans."

When asked if the University of Massachusetts had indeed been the school for him, he did not hesitate to respond positively. He admitted, "You don't think it will be your net while you're here." However he referred to UMass Amherst throughout the visit as "his security." He recalled an eight-page paper for a Concepts and Styles class to get his point across on how the rigorousness here trains you like nothing else. He felt that he really exercised himself here and made things happen.

According to Pullman, people here are "comfortable in their own skin." He added, "They are not going to live off of 'I went to Princeton' for two years and then have to be like everyone else." The crowd laughed at his comment, "I had a renegade brother that went to Amherst."

In response to the clichéd request for a fondest moment, he thought back to his first date with his wife. He had parked his truck in the "U" at Haigis Mall after "somehow convincing her to go out with me; I don't know how I did it." They went to an Indian restaurant – not there anymore, on Route 9 out toward Hadley.

Pullman confessed to warm and gushy feelings at returning to UMass. After all, he did meet his wife on this campus. Coincidentally, they performed as a French husband and wife while attending school here. He still finds it humorous – "We got very French with each other."

The alum titled his public lecture "The Performance Diploma as Bear Bait: From Mel Brooks to David Lynch." Therefore, he told an allegory he made up pertaining to the title. First, he explained the key words and their meanings. The hunter is a recent UMass graduate, the gun is knowledge, the canon is additional, sly knowledge, the kiss is more than a kiss and the bear is the big, dispassionate world.

Turn to PULLMAN, page 3

Frank wants his car back!

RYAN BENHARRIS / COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Frank Melberg (right) has been out of work since his car was towed away for a parking sticker violation. While his car continues accruing fines, he is unable to perform his everyday job of delivering pizza.

Sophomore's Sunfire locked down after sticker incident

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Frank Melberg, a sophomore Arts and Sciences major, began a fundraising battle yesterday that started off small, but by the end of the afternoon, had the entire University of Massachusetts campus in a political frenzy.

Frank's insistent crying and bellowing at the front door of the Campus Center left passers by with questions and uncertainties, and the obnoxious pleading and ear wrenching music presented only one simple assurance; Frank wants his car back.

Wednesday March 27 was the last time Melberg saw his car. That was right before his horseback ride outside of Baker residence hall in the Central living area. The car was parked illegally, and was also cited for having a fraudulent parking sticker. The total cost for the ticketing and towing was $500. The cost increases by $30 each day that the automobile is held in custody.

Melberg's problems began after the car was towed, because, he claims, he cannot afford to get it back. It was then that he and a group of friends decided to protest the punishment that they felt was overwhelmingly harsh. The group, which consisted of Melberg's roommate and two other companions, created signs that said, "Parking services stole my car." They brought the signs, along with several musical instruments and balloon animals, to the cove in front of the Campus Center and tried to raise money to bring back Melberg's property, which he feels was wrongly taken away from him.

Melberg claims that his car was towed after only being parked illegally for less than twenty-five minutes, while he ran into the building. He said he planned to come back out and move it. The parking sticker on the car was supposedly for the lot surrounding the Baker residence hall, but Melberg said he couldn't find a parking spot because of excessive construction that has recently torn up spaces.

Construction around upper central and Orchard Hill has recently led to the removal of several parking spaces in lot 49. The lot used to be a purple lot, but was changed to orange, and made available only to students of upper Central and Orchard Hill. It had to be specifically labeled last year to deal with an overcrowded parking problem.

As for the situation of a fraudulent pass, Melberg claimed that the pass was damaged and therefore Parking Services incorrectly assumed he had tampered with it. Melberg said he had a meeting with Parking Services representative Michael Robideux, who told him that he would present the problem to Parking Services manager Michael Brennan. According to Melberg, after Robideux spoke to Brennan, Melberg was denied his car, and told he had to file the appeal after paying all of the fines.

To make matters worse for Melberg, he works a part-time job as a pizza deliveryman. He argued that since he does not have the cash, it leaves him with a fee that he does not have the physical capability to pay, and therefore, no means of earning money. He said that since he cannot even begin an appeal against Parking Services until he has paid the fines to get his car back, he will not be able to work.

"Please give me my car back," Melberg pleaded through the Collegian to Brennan. "You really need to revamp your system of ticketing."

Musically, Melberg and his group of supporters decided to get their point across that the towing and fines were unfair. The group sang songs and yelled at spectators, pleading for them to pitch donations into a guitar case.

"My goal is to raise $500," Melberg said. "But I probably won't make that much. I figure I'll get as much as I can, and then plea bargain with Parking Services."

When Melberg was asked what he would do if he earned the money, got his car back, and successfully won an appeal to get all of the money back he said, "I'll give the money to charity. I don't want to turn a profit. I just want to raise awareness about how harsh the penalty is."

Melberg's roommate Nick Lee came out to support his friend.

"As long as Michael Brennan knows that stealing Frank's car is wrong, then we've gotten our point across," Lee said.

Dan McElrath, a friend of Melberg also added some personal touches to the campaign with his megaphone.

"I'm shouting things at people to help Frank get his car back; he's been borrowing mine and I'm sick of loaning it to him," McElrath screamed. "Even people with dogs can help," he yelled at someone walking her dog.

Turn to FRANK page 2

International Briefs

Compiled By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Americas

Canada-Tensions are continuing to mount between Ottawa and Washington as the debate over the lumber trade heats up. For five years there has been a limit on the exports of Canadian lumber into the United States. In a few days this limit is set to expire and American lumber companies as well as senators are eager to find another way to protect the lumber business from sinking under the influx of Canadian wood.

The American lumber industry is eager to impose methods that would continue to limit the export of Canadian lumber by filing countervail ingsuits and anti-dumping complaints against Canada if President Bush allows the lumber trade market to become open. American lumber-yards argue that Canadian exports are unfairly subsidized by the govern ment.

So far 31 senators have signed a letter to Bush urging him to renegoti ate with the Canadians because at least 100 American lumber companies have had to shut down due to the undercutting of Canadian lumber prices.

There is over $1 billion in trade every day between the North American neighbors and industry experts report that at least $6 to $12 billion a year of Canadian lumber is shipped to the United States. The Canadian government has argued that what the US calls subsidies are actually the covering costs of replenishing forests.

Brazil-Canada seems to be fighting trade battles across the hemisphere. Brazilian President Fernando Henrique Cardoso is taking a stand and filing complaints against Canada after the country refused to import Brazilian beef after a mad cow scare. However the Brazilian cows have got ten the thumbs up from agriculture officials and Cardoso said that the Canadians can no longer use them as tool for intimidation.

Brazil and Canada are also at odds about aircraft manufacturing. The two companies Embraer in Brazil, and Bombardier in Canada, have been disputing over Canadian subsidies for jet production.

Meanwhile Brazil is also at odds with the United States. Brazil has one of the most highly successful AIDS program in the world, according to the UN. This is because they are able to produce and distribute AIDS drugs on a large scale and at low prices.

The US has now filed a complaint against the Latin American behemoth to the World Trade Organization, arguing that Brazil is violating international trade rules by licensing Brazilian drugs and distributing them at low prices. Brazil has shown no signs of backing down and continues to run its AIDS program. It also has the support of other countries facing AIDS epidemics such as India and South Africa.

The United States, Canada and Brazil will be discussing these and other issues in relation to free trade during an upcoming meeting for the proposal to create a Free Trade Area of the Americas.

Asia-Pacific

Taiwan-Thousands lined up to listen to the Dalai Lama speak during a ten day visit to the country. While the spiritual leader said that he did not have political intentions for his visit, many visitors who came to see the Dalai Lama were very concerned with religious freedom and understand the statement that the Dalai Lama is making about the relationship between Tibet, Taiwan and Bejing, China.

Many people came from all over the world to see the exiled Tibetan monk. Some were chanting "Free Tibet," while others shouted, "go away, China!" Still, among the supporters, there were hecklers peppered throughout the crowd. When the Dalai Lama got off the plane, a group calling itself the Chinese Battle Line of Unification was there to protest his visit.

The Dalai Lama has made it clear that he has not taken a strong political stance for the independence of Taiwan or Tibet, he has advocated for the support of Buddhists around the world and promotes religious understanding.

The Dalai Lama plans to lecture and teach throughout the country for the rest of the week.

Marshall Islands-A United States court has cleared the way for the tiny islands in the South Pacific to wage big wars against tobacco companies. During a Supreme Court case, tobacco executives argued that the Islands would not be able to run a fair trial because their tribal system of government would influence the courts.

However, Chief Justice Allen Fields ruled that the tobacco companies' claims were hypocritical and is allowing the Islands to move forward with their $4 billion case against RJReynolds, American Tobacco Co. and Phillip Morris. So far the Islands have filed 11 charges against the companies over the costs of health care related to smoking.

The Marshall Islands will now be taking the smoking giants to court in September. There are over 60,000 people in the collection of islands that span over a thousand square miles. They are famous for the nuclear testing that was done in their area in the 1950s.

Burma- A special United Nations human rights envoy arrived in Burma today. Paulo Sergio Penheiro, the leader of the envoy, will be spending the next three days meeting with military leaders. It has not been announced whether or not he will meet with pro-democracy leader Aung San Suu Kyi who has been under house arrest for over six months.

Mr. Penheiro has spent the last week talking to Burma's neighbors including Japan and Thailand and has brought with him a mood of confidence to Rangoon, according to UN sources. Analysts believe that there is definitely a new mood within the country due to the fact that the UN is actually being let in to the nation, especially since no one from the UN has been inside the country for over five years.

UN officials are optimistic that the military government has actually agreed to let the envoy inside. They are also excited that the military government has agreed to begin talking to the opposition within the country.

China- Chinese officials have agreed to allow United States military personnel to visit the US spy plane that was forced to land on the Island of Hainan after a mid-air collision with a Chinese fighter plane.

President Bush demanded Monday that a team of 24 ambassadors be allowed immediate access to the plane and the crew members. Bush commented to reporters on Monday that he was disappointed in the lack of a quick and adequate response to his request for access.

Relations between the two countries continue to be strained as China disapproves of a possible arms sale by the US to Taiwan. Bush called the lame response "inconsistent with diplomatic practice." The Chinese government has also expressed its concern for Bush's plans for a missile defense program.

The Chinese fighter plane that was also involved in the crash is still missing and both countries blame the other side for the crash. The plane was packed with sensitive monitoring equipment and according to officials, the military was worried about the Chinese gaining access to the computers and hard disks on the plane's computer.

US admirals have claimed that the Chinese fighter jet was being aggressive and meant to intercept the American plane. Chinese military officers deny the accusation. The Chinese pilot has not been recovered, but the American crew is fine.

Africa

Sierra Leone- After ten years of war, the Rebel forces in Sierra Leone have declared the war over and claimed to be dedicated to a purely political battle from now on. They also welcomed United Nations peacekeeping forces into the country.

In an exclusive interview with the BBC, Rebel leader Ibril Massaquoi, said the members of the Revolutionary United Front are tired of the war and ready for peace. It was also clear that the role of the United Kingdom was significant in bringing about a peace, since UK troops were stationed in the capital.

Though the war may be over, the people of the country are skeptical and carry a wait-and-see attitude.

Zambia- Ten years ago, President Frederick Chiluba was elected by a landslide after campaigning with his Movement for Multiparty Democracy party. Today however, his former supporters are becoming displeased as he pushes for a third term after promising to step down after two.

Though throughout his term he has preached and practiced the principles of democracy, however, as the time has drawn near for him to step down, he has hesitated. Instead, he has put key supporters in place to orchestrate his own re-election. Zambians all over the country are calling for him to keep election promises and step down. Meanwhile, the president has called for a national debate on the matter.

According to sources, his MMD party has been weakening for years and it is time for it to let go. On April 28 there will be a national convention for the ruling party where delegates from around the country will congregate to debate and then vote on the issue.

-Information from the BBC online and the New York Times online was used for these briefs.

Stonewall lecture series continues

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Staff

Can you be conservative and gay? According to Lisa Duggan, Associate Professor of American Studies at New York University, it is possible. Duggan brought her lecture, entitled "The New Homonormativity: Gay Conservatives and the Sexual Politics of 'Neoliberalism,'" to the Stonewall Center's Lecture Series on Thursday, March 29.

Duggan cites the Independent Gay Forum, as a hotspot for gay conservative writers, whom she calls "inegalitarian and undemocratic." In 1998, at the "Liberty for All" conference put on by the well-known gay conservative group the Log Cabin Republicans, delegates urged gay political unity and the use of a "respectful, inclusive dialogue."

Gay conservatives advocate for a "reasonable, centrist and pragmatic" political views, and claim to sit somewhere between "anti-gay conservatism and queer progressive politics." "Neo-liberalism," what Duggan refers to as the "brand name" for a new kind of economic liberalism which includes selling state-owned enterprises to private companies, cutting funds for social services, and eliminating the concept of the public good. Organizations like the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank embrace neo-liberal ideas and according to Duggan, "shrink the scope of democracy."

However, neo-liberalism pertains to more than economic policy. Under the guise of what Duggan calls the "new homonormativity," gay conservatives seek to narrow gay equality and are actually against civil rights and multiculturalism. At the forefront of the gay conservative agenda are the issues of gay marriage and participation in military service. Andrew Sullivan, a prolific contributor to the Independent Gay Forum, claims that allowing same-sex couples to be married is dangerous.

Sullivan claims that sanctioning same sex marriage "undermines traditional relationships." For Duggan, this poses a most interesting paradox. While gay conservatives use the term "neo-liberalism" to appear progressive, and exercise conservative view points to appease the Right, what they really want, according to Duggan, is a "minimized state and a depoliticized gay culture." There is, in fact, a solid center, where these gay conservatives prefer to pretend there isn't.

Another disturbing aspect of the new homonormativity is the dominance of Independent Gay Forum writers in mainstream gay publications. Duggan worries that others will see gay conservatives as if they represent the gay movement, since those who do not print these writers have been economically marginalized.

"Where are the political debates going?" wondered Duggan in response to an audience member's questions as to the response of gay organizations such as the Human Rights Campaign to neo-liberal gay politics. "This is a threat to egalitarian democracy," concluded Duggan.

The next installment of the Stonewall Center Lecture Series will take place on April 5 at 12:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Room 904-8. David Valentine, Visiting Assistant Professor of Anthropology at New York University, will speak on "What's 'Gender' and What's 'Sexuality'? An Ethnographic Approach to a Heuristic Device."

■ Frank

continued from page 1

The situation really began to heat up when the Student Government Association (SGA) decided to step in and defend Melberg's cause.

"The SGA is lending them our moral support," said senator Michael Whitehouse. "The big issue here is the doctrine of innocent until proven guilty. Taking his car without giving him a chance to defend himself is like saying you can't get your trial until you've gone to jail for a few years."

Whitehouse said that this is happening amidst student's constant concerns with Parking Services, and he has admiration for what Melberg and company is trying to do.

"His primary goal is go get his car back," Whitehouse said. "But as with all crusaders, it turns into something that happened to them and suddenly you stumble into the position where you have a chance to fight for everyone." He said that the group was persistent and willing to skip classes for their cause.

"When you get a commitment like that, you have the possibility to get the campus motivated and get everyone working together on the same team."

Whitehouse also said that newly elected President John Sheehan was quick to take notice of the students' action.

"I left a message for [Sheehan] and he called me back twenty-minutes later," he said. "I'm really impressed by how approachable and willing to work he and [student Trustee elect] Jon Laubinger are. It says a lot about future things to come."

If Melberg is able to raise the $500, and win his appeal, Whitehouse suggested setting up a program where Melberg would donate the cash to the SGA, and it would be used as a fund where students could ask the government for money to bail their car out of impoundment, so they could further themselves into the appeal process. According to a source close to Melberg, he would consider this option.

As for the general response to Melberg's actions, Whitehouse said he didn't think most students would be quick to do the same type of thing.

"I don't think most students would be willing to put forth that effort," he said.

An attempt to reach Parking Services manager Michael Brennan was made at the time of this publication. Though it was conveyed by a parking services representative that Brennan had full intent to speak to the Collegian, and was not declining comment, contact was never made. Pull Quote: "As long as [Parking Services Manager] Michael Brennan knows that stealing Frank's car is wrong, then we've gotten our point across."

– UMass student Nick Lee

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The [illegible] 1890 Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1944. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 or e-mail between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS — See You There — DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

Best! 2000 UMass Readers Rate Colleges
By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday-Friday
(413) 549-0145

Unplanned Pregnancy?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
413-584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoptions
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten years Adoption Experience
30 Main Street, Northampton, MA 01060
adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

HAIR CUTS NOW WITH KATE
$20
(Wrds. & Sat.)
ERIC SCOT
79 south pleasant street
Amherst
413 256 3440
Experience the art of hair for less.

Alumni among field vying for Select Board seats

By Mark Ramirez
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor and several alumni are among the nine candidates competing in today's election for two seats on the Amherst Select Board.

Paul Bobrowski was a UMass student and lived in Amherst from 1975-1985. He moved back into town three years ago. He is running for the Select Board because, according to him, it needs a fresh perspective.

"I am disturbed by the lines drawn on issues like the parking garage," he said. He attributes some problems to a lack of communication. "For example, I can't get a definitive answer when I ask how many parking spaces will be gained with the new garage." Bobrowski believes his skills as a lawyer would help.

From his time attending UMass, he has seen improvement in the relationship between the town and the university. He added that because town policies affect student life, students should participate in local government. "As an ex-student, I certainly have sympathy for students who live here," he said.

Marjorie Crossman has lived on the same street in Amherst for 81 years. She said that there is no accountability in local government. "There are so many things in this town that are not right," she said. "It's not right to take money out of the sewer fund and put it into another project [the parking garage]. It could lead to major problems." Crossman believes more should be done for the elderly.

Aaron Wilson graduated from UMass in 1994 with a degree in History and Legal Studies. He claims a primary base of support from the town's three colleges, particularly UMass students. "Undergrad students," he said, "are a force to be reckoned with in Amherst politics."

"You're not going to find someone who cares as much about students," he said, "in a town hostile to students in general." He said he is concerned about relationships between the town and the University, real estate development and the increase of the town's population.

"The urbanization trend is threatening the quality of life and the character of the town," he said.

Wilson wants to repeal the towns keg-licensing law. Another concern is the potential removal of the voting machine in Southwest.

Wilson wants to strike down the regulation that prevents more than four unrelated people from living together. He also objects to landlords using records from the University's student judicial system in deciding whether to rent to them or not.

"The judicial system is arbitrary and unfair and it's disturbing that the ability to rent is based on that. It's an anti-student ordinance," Saunders said.

Wilson was a founder of UMass's Cannabis Reform Coalition. He organized a campaign to pass a pro-marijuana town referendum. He also campaigned for Anne Awad, who won a seat on the Select Board on a pro-student platform.

Rob Kusner has been a professor of mathematics at UMass since 1988. He has been on Amherst's transportation committee since 1990, was its chair from 1998-2000, and is now a non-voting member. Kusner is a member of Town Meeting, and of the town's conservation commission, which enforces state and federal wetland protection laws.

One of his concerns is the phenomenon of sprawl and the consequent loss of farmland.

"We have some of the best farmland here in Amherst," he said, "and it's disappearing under parking lots."

Kusner would also like to see more affordable housing for UMass faculty, students and staff and good choices regarding school budgets at all levels. He also questions the enforcement of marijuana laws, and believes police resources could be put to better use.

Kusner is considering withdrawing from the race and endorsing another candidate if the issues he cares about are addressed.

"It might be better to come back in a couple of years," he said. "I just want to see the town governed in a way that is good."

Jacqueline Brown-Hazard has been a member of Town Meeting and has served on school committees, but said she's new to town politics. She said she was approached to run by several people.

"They feel the town needs a progressive choice," she said. "I was raised to believe that when you're called, you do your civic duty," she said.

She said the issue of the parking garage didn't affect her decision to run. Her concerns include transportation, specifically the PVTA—"somehow expanding it so there's more service to the north and south ends of town, and more accessibility for seniors."

Brown-Hazard also hopes to address racism in the community and is concerned about how the town's open spaces are used. She believes marijuana should be decriminalized and is concerned about how marijuana laws are enforced.

MARK HOLLOWAY COLLEGIAN
Campaigning reached its peak yesterday for several seats in the town government. One candidate, Eddy Goldberg, has been a member of the Amherst planning board for almost five years.

Brown-Hazard is a UMass alumnus and currently works for the university's economics department.

"I look at the process as sort of an adventure," she said, "I'll try to do the best I can and bring my voice to the discussion."

Eddy Goldberg has been a member of the Amherst planning board for almost five years. With Select Board chair Bryan Harvey opting not to run for reelection, he was asked if he was going to run. "I thought that I could serve the town better as a Select Board member than with the planning board," said Goldberg.

He said the key word is "balance." As a member of the planning board, Goldberg said he often hears from both developers who want to build and neighbors who want nothing built. He believes his five years of experience have improved his ability to balance the law with the needs of two sides of an issue, all with a view of long term good for the most people.

"I think I represent a voice of reason in tough times," he said.

Goldberg said he is "all for student participation in local government. Although it's hard to feel like you're a part of it if you're new and will soon be leaving." He said he's not sure how students should participate. "If they're interested," he said, "they can attend Town Meetings and learning for a while and if they feel they know enough, participate."

Pruddy Gomez owns Pruddy's in downtown Amherst.

"I'm running because I believe that the Select Board, besides being racist and unfair, doesn't represent the majority of thinking in town," he said. Gomez ran for Select Board in 1988 but lost.

Gomez said that town government "has the same ideas as 20 years ago the same format, the same people. That has to change." The 11 percent voting rate, he said, means that only a few people are interested in keeping the town as it was two decades ago.

"The town government talks about multiculturalism and being open," said Gomez, "but there are no minorities in positions that make a difference. It makes me wonder." Gomez said he is pro-student. "I love students." Three of his children are attending UMass while one has already graduated. Students, as well as minorities, the poor and working class, are "ghosts" to Amherst government, he said, in that their voices are not heard.

Gomez believes that things are changing. "There are two good people on the Select Board – Awad and Seppala – but they're the minority and it's hard to fight the majority of the Town Manager, Select Board chair and the town lawyer, who are untouchable because they are not held accountable."

"In this town there are too many things to fix," he said, "and I could not turn my back on it." He said that he wants to "protect people without a voice from the bullshit that goes on behind doors."

Dolly Jolly is the incumbent running for reelection.

Nathan Salwen is a member of the Comprehensive Planning Committee and the Public Transportation and Bicycle Committee.

Bryan Harvey, associate provost for planning and assessment at UMass, has served as chair of the Select Board for the last seven years but will not be running this year.

Select Board positions are unpaid. Terms are three years long. To run for the Amherst Select Board, a candidate must be a registered Amherst voter, and must submit nomination petitions with 30 signatures from registered Amherst voters. This year's filing deadline was Feb. 13.

Correspondent to discuss Israel

National Public Radio correspondent Linda Gradstein will bring her perspective on Middle East politics to the University of Massachusetts in a lecture on Tuesday, April 3 at 7:00 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 162. In her talk, entitled "Israel Currently," Gradstein will discuss her experience as part of the team that covered the assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, for which Gradstein and her colleagues won an Overseas Press Club Award. Gradstein is known for her outspoken views toward the situation in the Middle East and has been accused for trying to push her own political agenda. She has covered events such as the Gulf War, the mass immigration of Soviet Jews to Israel, the return of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to the Gaza Strip, the rise of Hamas, two Israeli elections, and the intifada, in addition to much of the current violence in the region.

The event is free and open to the public. It is sponsored by the UMass Jewish Student Union, UMass Jewish Women's Collective, UMass for Israel, Hamagshimim, Forum, and UMass Hillel.

–Chanel Dubofsky

■ Pullman

continued from page 1

Pullman continued, "The hunter gets her gun and goes where the bear will be. She leaves bear bait and waits. The bear comes, and she shoots the gun at it. Then, she goes to find the body. She sees no bear and turns. The animal is there behind her and says, 'You missed; now you have to kiss me.' The hunter goes home mad and humiliated, but she returns the next day with a bigger gun. The same scenario occurs, so the next day she goes back with a canon. After she misses again he says, 'I guess you're not in it for the hunting.' The hunter looks at the bear, and then she kisses him."

The moral of the Pullman's tale in his own words is that some days the bear gets you, and some days you get the bear. This was a consistent message throughout the public lecture.

He also discussed times that seemed really random, but they ended up having deeper resonance in his life. He had no idea why he took on a small role in Wyatt Earp. But, during that time he met with Jake Kasdan, son of Lawrence Kasdan, with whom Pullman has worked twice. Jake Kasdan went on to write "Zero Effect" with a role for Pullman, and it all came together and happened because the actor agreed to a tiny part in the Costner-starring movie.

The lizard actor was brought back to UMass by the Alumni office and the Eleanor Bateman Program. Susan Matty said the alumni office was glad to have the Hollywood actor.

"The goal is to bring alumni back in an effort to further enrich the campus," she said.

In addition, Doris Abrahamson, a retired staff member, knows Bill Pullman as her old assistant for an Intro to Theater class. She was very proud of their continuing correspondence. "We are old friends. We are good friends."

The lecture ended with the veteran of "Spaceballs," "Independence Day" and "Sothersby," to name a few, being rewarded the Eleanor Bateman Award by Chancelor David K. Scott.

Happy Marty and Maureen day!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Tuesday, April 3, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com
4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Horowitz has rights
Attend, listen, speak

David Horowitz's speech on campus today certainly won't make him any friends; we may be a lackadaisical campus comparatively, but people know when it's time to care.

Horowitz's advertisement against the idea of paying reparations for slavery is sure to bring out attendees and knowing the UMass campus, more of them will want to see him quleted before they'll want to give him a chance. And that's unfortunate.

His advertisement might be awfully offensive (see today's front page for the advertisement's contents or the most recent Minuteman to see the whole thing), but Horowitz has every right to believe what he wants to believe. And similarly, he has every right to speak about it. The campus will likely forget that this event is a Republican Club event – it's not simply an open opportunity to crucify the opposition. For that simple reason, Horowitz deserves every opportunity to speak his mind at today's lecture.

What kind of campus are we if we do not allow for the free expression of ideas? What kind of campus are we if we do not allow for the give-and-take that is supposed to make this nation great?

After writing that, one may wonder why the Collegian chose not to run Horowitz's advertisement. It was offered to us after all and our opposition both ran the advertisement and took us to task for not running it. Taking a page from the Harvard Crimson, we believe that covering Horowitz's lecture is akin to running the advertisement if not giving it even more of a featured spot in the newspaper. His side might disagree (they seem to frequently), but that matters little to us.

That said, we encourage those of you who both agree and disagree with Horowitz to attend today's lecture. Not only will it be informative for those who agree (a good chance for those who feel that nobody's listening to hear one of their own), but also a good chance for the opposition to have their internal fire rekindled. If Horowitz does nothing else, his outrageous commentary about slavery reparations will offend the majority of those in attendance tomorrow.

But he has every right to offend and hopefully the crowd will recognize that right.

Give him his chance to speak. Give him his chance to lecture, and then disagree with him during the question and answer period. Don't embarrass yourself or the University by attempting to prevent Horowitz's right to his opinion.

We'll never be forced to agree with Horowitz, but attempting to prevent his message is akin to endorsing the kind of world that none of us want to see. Too often on this campus, that's forgotten. And it was clearly forgotten at other college campuses including Brown, where all of the copies of the newspapers were stolen for running the advertisement, at Wisconsin, where the editor's resignation was demanded, and at California, where Horowitz needed armed guards to make his lecture.

The beauty of free speech is that it's free for everyone, regardless of what they have to say. And that's how it should stay. Oppose him without mercy, but give him a chance to speak.

Welcome to the "fahm"

DAN LAMOTHE

Alright, it's time to clear something up. I, for one, have grown sick and tired of hearing all of the Western Massachusetts cracks. We are not one big farm. I do not have a pet cow. And, contrary to what one Eastern Mass suburbanite snob told me before our break, you would miss us if Western Mass became Southern Vermont. They're not even close to the same.

Western Massachusetts isn't the prairie, alright? Maybe the people from Eastern Mass don't get that because they haven't been outside of Amherst and Northampton yet. Those are bad examples. Amherst is a farming community. Take a good look at it. Hampshire College, better known as "Cow-pattie U" in some circles, even has an Agricultural School. Northampton is just a little strange, a town put together by college kids that weren't right themselves. It's got some cool things to do, but it's no city.

That isn't Western Massachusetts, though! It doesn't end there! Springfield and the surrounding cities (yes, that's right; cities, not towns) are big places, and you're going to be hard pressed to find grass in some of those places, let alone a farm. Springfield has five major high schools with between 1000 and 2000 students per school, and over 152,000 citizens in the 33-mile-wide city. That's a pretty large farm from where I'm sitting. What can I say? Those 20-story skyscrapers stick out like a sore thumb out of the Western Mass cornfields. But I suppose they might be near the Basketball Hall of Fame and Symphony Hall (both in Springfield) down next to the henhouse, right?

Chicopee, my hometown, is no plantation by any stretch of the imagination, either. With two large high schools and nearly 55,000 people, you won't see many "brake for moose" signs in Chicopee. Chicopee is also the crossroads for two national highways, Route 90 and Route 91. Engineers don't put four lane highways in both directions in places where there are no people to take them. Chicopee has a couple of large housing projects and is also home to Spalding's International Headquarters. You know, those guys that make all of the basketballs and baseballs and footballs and tennis rackets and golf clubs? Let me tell ya, they plopped down that sporting good factory right next door to Farmer Jim's silo and strawberry patch. Seriously.

Then there's Holyoke. Holyoke, the birthplace of volleyball was, and is, home to dozens of factories, complete with the canals to supply them with water power. (I would know. I got into an accident on North Canal Street back in the day. That's another story for another day though). It's a place rich with history and tradition; things like the Saint Patrick's Day Parade (second longest in country) make Holyoke stand out. It is also the home to a very proud and diverse population of people, especially for many kinds of Latino people – unlike, say, white, suburbanite Lexington, for example. Holyoke is also is home to Ingleside Mall, one of the largest malls on the East Coast. Since it's on the farm, though, Ingleside must just sell rodeo equipment and tractors. I reckon.

Yeah, I know, the rest of Massachusetts isn't that big. The Granby's, the Hatfield's, the Southampton's – they're all good places to live, though, even if there is a farm that pops up here and there on the way. People come from all over the country to see the fall foliage in Western Massachusetts. Do they head for your Eastern Mass 'burbs the same way, guys? Most of the small towns are not that far from the action, anyway. They're just different from Eastern Massachusetts suburbanite bliss, where everything is a half-an-hour away from the city, but far enough from the city to keep everyone living in the suburbs comfortable, with that happy safe and warm feeling.

I'm not trying to glamorize Western Massachusetts by any means. We can't compete with Boston in terms of what there is to do and see, but there is a heck of a lot more to do than people think. I guess I don't understand why so many people from Lexington, Arlington, Sudbury and the like are so judgmental about Western Mass. It's not like they even live in Boston; they just live near it. "I live in the Hub," they'll say with a sneer.

"Well whoop-de-friggin-doo," I say. "I'm not impressed." If a person from Eastern Mass has only walked around Amherst and made a trip to Northampton since they've been here, then they really haven't seen much. They're missing out on some really dope stuff – things like 3 Doors Down and Tantric playing the Hippodrome in Springfield next month, and a trip to Six Flags New England (in Agawam) when it gets warmer.

"Massachusetts ends at Worcester," they'll say, "you guys just live on the farm." Except it usually comes out "Moschachuzetts ends at 'Wista." You guys just live on the "Fahm." If me living on the farm is the case, Chicopee is one weird farm, let me tell ya. It's a farm where drug trafficking regularly occurred five years ago outside the gates of my Catholic school, and still occurs to some extent, I'm sure. It's a farm where gang initiations by groups such as the Latin Kings and La Familia meant that our principal kept us inside as a precaution against something bad happening to us at recess. And it's a farm where large vacant block buildings now dot the neighborhood. Maybe I should be having an identity crisis by now, as many Western Massachusetts people call parts of Chicopee, Holyoke, and Springfield the ghetto while Eastern Massachusetts calls it the "fahm." Or maybe we should start renting out those vacant apartments to hired ranch hands, just to give ol' Farmer Jim help this summer.

All I'm asking for is a little respect here. Since many Eastern Massachusetts kids have never even seen the real Western Massachusetts, they shouldn't be talking crap about it. It's that simple. Now excuse me, I need to go walk my pig and feed my chickens. I think I'm going to take the pig through the ghetto, past the barley field and the grazing pasture, down here on the Western Mass "ghetto fahm."

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

Time to recycle new system

KAREN MILLER

There is an issue "festering" in the Hampshire Dining Commons, which we believe the remainder of campus needs to know about. The directors have decided that students are wasting too much food during mealtimes. They have made the executive decision to move the food waste bins into plain view, near the tray return. They believe that this will increase the shock value of the amount of food being thrown away.

We started this crusade to remove these bins weeks ago. At first, we thought it would just be for a couple days so we didn't say anything. They were not removed, so we started with writing suggestion cards. They were conveniently taken down the day after we posted them. It is also important to note here that ours were not the only cards on the board. We noticed at least four or five other students who had voiced their opinions about the bins. They were all greeted with no response. We then started talking to the workers in the dining hall. All agreed with us that the bins were disgusting and should be removed. Some even said that they had tried talking to the management and their requests were denied. Recently, we spoke to the assistant manager of Hampshire. She was completely rude, uncooperative, and incoherent and couldn't answer any of our questions or give us any reassurance that this issue would be addressed.

First of all, these bins are disgusting. They are big brown garbage bins filled with half eaten food. There are sauces smeared on the sides and the tops are never on. They smell and are generally unattractive. Imagine knowing that at the end of a meal you will be faced with this sight. These bins are there all day. Inside, there is food that needs refrigerating and is perfectly safe at room temperature. Needless to say, things start to smell and "fester." The health hazard of these bins is another issue that raises concern. The opportunity for bacteria to grow and invade the air is plentiful. This is the same air that then circulates over the food we eat. Those of us who eat there are not the only people who have to endure this. The workers, who monitor the tray return, must stand there all day and smell the odors of spoiling food. This is neither pleasant nor healthy for them.

This idea seems so inconsistent with the views of the dining hall presented in the past. Hampshire workers do so much to make our experiences there pleasant. Many times they have special dinners, music and decorations. They are all well received and appreciated. Why, then, would they go and adopt a policy with these food bins that so obviously contradicts and degrades any other efforts ever put forth? Instead of working with us and for us, as they have done in the past, they have shoved at us an extremely confrontational method of conveying a message. We have always gotten the impression that the directors of Hampshire want to present a professional appearance. If the same people who run our dining hall would run a restaurant, would there be food bins sitting next to the tables and where the customers would pay their checks? If you think about it, we actually are customers.

When speaking to the assistant manager recently, she was babbling something about third world countries and how the people there don't have food. This is not being objected. There are many parts of the world where food is scarce and we fully recognize that. It is a shame and things need to be done about it. However, how does that relate to our situation? Food that may not be taken, in the grand old Hampshire dining hall in Amherst, Massachusetts, is not going to go to Ethiopia. It will result in saved money and the incomes of the management will increase because we all know that money will not be translated into a savings in our meal plan.

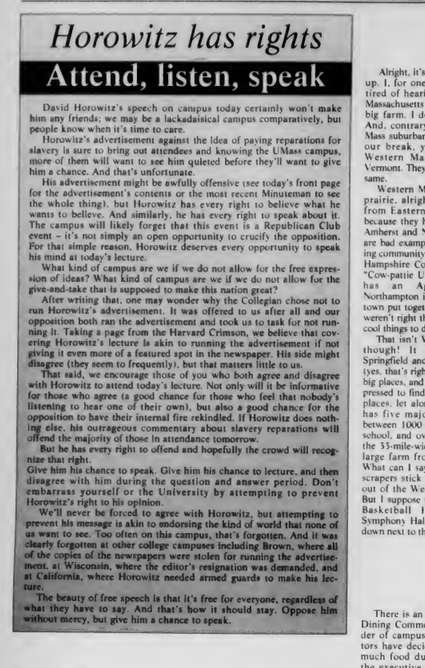
This now brings us to ideas as to how this could have all been done better. For instance, maybe if they had just tried informing of us of how much waste is going on, we would have gotten the idea. We aren't stupid. Charts and statistics could have done the job. They seemed to have jumped to the most drastic measures without considering tactics that may have worked if they had given them a chance.

The recycling managers of the residence halls didn't take paper and containers that could have been recycled, and put them in our beds. Why should this be any different? The recycling committees did, however, institute a reward system for improved rates. People would be surprised at what college students would do for a good meal.

Another interesting point to notice is that, at dinner, the workers of the dining hall serve the students. We, from experience, know that if one asks for, "just a little, please," we get a plateful. If they didn't give us more than we wanted, we would eat it all. If smaller portions were given (unless, of course, if one asked for more), the waste would be decreased. At breakfast and lunch, the students serve themselves. Why didn't anyone consider having the workers serve the students then, as well? The smaller portion idea could be used at all three meals.

The fact of the matter is that, as the assistant manager has told us, the waste has been decreased. We do not agree with the manner in which a message was sent to the students. We just hope this message to the faculty is loud and clear. You've made your point, now for the sake of the students' health and happiness, which should be your concern after all, take away the bins.

Karen Miller is a UMass student.



LIFE IN HELL
©1997 BY MATT GROENING
LET'S FACE IT, WE NEED TO BECOME MORE SPIRITUAL.
BECAUSE WE SPEND SO MUCH TIME BURROWED DEEP INTO SUPERFICIAL MATERIAL PREOCCUPATIONS.
TRUE JOY IS NEVER FOUND IN MATERIAL ATTACHMENTS.
TRUE JOY LIES IN THE SPIRITUAL DIMENSION OF SHARED PLANE HOOPS VS. WHEEL OF FORTUNE. THAT SHOULD JUST BEND US TO A FULLER UNDERSTANDING OF THE TRUE MEANING OF LIFE.
WE HAVE BALOONTIES OCCASIONALLY, SURE, BUT THAT SHOULD JUST LEAD US TO A FULLER UNDERSTANDING OF THE TRUE MEANING OF LIFE.
EVERY SATURDAY IN THE MATERIAL REALM IS AN OPPORTUNITY TO TUNE TOWARD THE SPIRITUAL REALM FOR ENLIGHTENMENT.
WHEN WE BECOME ENLIGHTENED, WE CAN FORSAKE EVERYTHING AND EVERYONE.
WHAT ARE YOU TRYING TO SAY TO ME?
I'VE BEEN SELLING NUDE PHOTOS OF YOU ON THE INTERNET.

UMass exposed to theories on racial equality: The answer to racial divide lies in the discussion

GEORGE THOMAS

Professor Philip Klinkner of Hamilton College recently gave a talk in the Political Science Department on his new book, The Unsteady March, written with the assistance of Rogers Smith of Yale. The book's thesis is provocative and, by and large, compelling. The story is often told that while, yes, America did sanction slavery, even if indirectly, and deprived many people of equal rights, since that time there has been a steady march forward, based on America's own ideals of equality as expressed in the Declaration of Independence, where the promise of American life gradually was extended to the minorities it once excluded. But this picture is far too simplistic, Klinkner argues. It misses the point that great steps forward in racial equality have often been followed by atavistic retreat and the resurgence of racial inequality.

A cursory glance at American history readily supports Klinkner. The Revolutionary War period witnessed great progress forward in racial equality, where slavery was condemned, at best, as a "necessary evil." The northern states abolished slavery and, in many southern states, free blacks had legally recognized rights. But by the 1820s John Calhoun was leading the South in its "reactionary enlightenment," arguing that slavery was a moral good sanctioned and justified by God and American ideals. Free blacks were denied rights and, in the Supreme Court's opinion, blacks could not be citizens of the United States: indeed, they were "regarded as beings of an inferior order . . . and so inferior, that they had no rights which the white man was bound to respect." Chief Justice Taney's opinion helped provoke a Civil War on the very issue of slavery, a war, in Lincoln's words, not only to save the Union, but "in the saving it, to make it forever worthy of the saving," which ineluctably meant the abolition of slavery. While the Civil War and Reconstruction witnessed great strides forward in extending the promise of equality to the newly freed slaves, as well as free blacks, the Union was not, sadly, made forever worthy of the saving. Congress grew tired of fighting over racial equality and abandoned the field, while Supreme Court opinions severely limited the reach of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, culminating in the disastrous opinion of Plessy v. Ferguson in 1897, which explicitly embraced the notion of "separate but equal." The decision gave constitutional sanction to Jim Crow laws and turned a blind eye toward racial inequality in America. It didn't just countenance racial inequality at a social level while recognizing political and legal rights, it paved the way for ugly racial oppression—as bad, in some cases, as anything that had existed in antebellum America. As President, Woodrow Wilson wasn't even compelled to hide his racism—fifty years after the Civil War! The next great step forward in racial equality had to wait for World War II.

From this, Klinkner ventures that the greatest periods of progress in racial equality come when the nation is involved in total war (where the contributions of African Americans are crucial) fought on ideological grounds; that is, for liberty and freedom. (It is difficult, is it not, to fight the Nazis while sanctioning Jim Crow?) The Revolutionary War, the Civil War, and World War II all fit this description. Thus, for progress in racial equality to occur, there is the need for the unfolding of an American ideal. On this score, I think Klinkner is mostly right and he asks an important question that we ought to ask: are we in the midst of another racial slide? Has the progress of the 1950s and 1960s dissipated, clearing the way for another retreat from black equality? Any serious discussion of race must be open to this question.

And it is precisely on this point that we must ask a question that is all too often put out of bounds in any discussion of race: are the very policies put forward to remedy racial inequality—affirmative action and identity politics, for instance—exasperating the problem? Does the remedy reinforce the disease? If there is a slide back, might such thinking be to blame? And, as an intimately related point, might those who dogmatically insist upon such policies—and accuse those who seek to question their merits of racial insensitivity—compound the problem? Intolerance abounds. In the recent presidential election, an NAACP ad indirectly accused George W. Bush of murder.

> "Let me be clear, we should not tolerate racism in any form. But we should tolerate—indulge, even—serious and principled discussion of racial issues."

Why? Because he vetoed a particular hate crimes bill. The message the ad sent couldn't be clearer: if you're against hate crimes, for any reason, then you're a racist. Worse, you're as guilty as those who perpetrated the crime, even though you happen to think that they should be given the full punishment of the law, which in this case is the death penalty. Never mind such fine distinctions; you're a murderer. We see this logic all too often in debates about racial equality. The questions aren't debated openly. Instead, those who don't tow the line are accused of racism. Yet when accusations of racism are thrown around in such an irresponsible manner, they have the effect of diluting genuine accusations of racism. Blurring the line between principled disagreements that happen to be about race—such as objections to "hate crimes" laws—and actual racial discrimination (and violence) may lead many Americans to no longer take real accusations of racism seriously.

This is where Klinkner's book is so compelling: it reminds us that racial progress is not inevitable. Only this time, contra Klinkner, those who are supposedly on the side of racial equality may well help bring about renewed racial hostility due to their own intolerance and irresponsibility. We preach the need for tolerance, but it is a two-way street. Let me be clear, we should not tolerate racism in any form. But we should tolerate—indulge, even—serious and principled discussion of racial issues. The self-righteous purveyors of racial equality, however, accuse anyone who disagrees with them, often on highly principled grounds, of racism. Look at the intolerance thrust on those who object to reparations for slavery. At a number of campuses, the newspapers refused to run David Horowitz's ad (which is happily their right). However, the reasoning they gave was often chilling: the ad wasn't acceptable to many priate topic of discussion. One need not be a fan of Horowitz, who was certainly baiting the students, to be disturbed by such thinking. At Brown a student mob destroyed the paper that carried the ad rather than arguing against it. Is the university so bereft of reason? These students have no doubt that anyone who disagrees with them must be a racist. Perhaps they should remember that those who deprived blacks of equality throughout American history were similarly sure of their premises. Isn't it possible that under the circumstances, people who are genuinely concerned about racial equality—but who happen to think that affirmative action isn't the solution—may get tired of being called racists. Might this not lead to feelings of racial hostility? That would be a tragedy.

But such questions never came up at Klinkner's talk and so I emailed them to him the next day. That was over four weeks ago. I've yet to hear back. I don't want to impugn Klinkner's motives. Maybe he's too busy. Maybe he's answered the question enough and doesn't feel like venturing yet another answer. He was very open and engaging during his talk. Still, his silence is wonderfully symbolic. When it comes to race in America, there are certain things we're not supposed to talk about; indeed, to venture such questions in this staid intellectual environment is itself an act of racism.

George Thomas is a UMass Graduate student.

Inside: Dido will be launching a tour this June, with Travis in tow.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Tuesday, April 3, 2001
Arts Editor • David Toupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com
5

Zen Tricksters light up Iron Horse

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

ZEN TRICKSTERS
Iron Horse Music Hall
March29

Last Thursday night, the Zen Tricksters brought their jams to the Iron Horse Music Hall In Northampton. To a decent crowd for a Thursday night, this well traveled six-piece jamband played an almost two and a half hour set. The Zen Tricksters bring to their setlists a superb mix of well orchestrated jammed out originals with mostly Grateful Dead covers, played to perfection. On this night, we were treated to a total of six Dead songs and a rare Bob Dylan cover.

The set began with a song called "Never Say Die," which demonstrated the band's ability to meld a tight, focused song into a long streaming jam. This song gracefully transformed into "Meow Man", a jazzier tune that showcases Jeff Mattson's smooth guitar soloing. Although Mattson did the majority of the soloing on this night, he was complemented brilliantly by Klyph Black on a thumping bass, Dave Diamond on drums and vocals, Jason Crosby on keys and a killer electric fiddle and last, but not least, Tom Circosta on rhythm guitar and backup vocals.

Next up, was the first cover of the night, Bob Dylan's "Absolutely Sweet Marie", played to a tee with great three-part harmonies throughout the chorases. "Sweet Marie" led into a sweet triplicate of Dead songs. Getting the crowd jamming with a solid "Eyes of the World," with Mattson demonstrating his very "Jerry-esque voice, the Tricksters segued into "Drowin'" and finally into a frenzied "Throwing Stones", with the crowd joining in for portions of the chorus.

The Zen Tricksters formed in 1979, as a combination of two Grateful Dead cover bands, the Volunteers and Timberwolf both out of New York City. For over twenty years, they have been traveling, the majority of the time in the Northeast, as well as recording four original albums in studio. They have gained the reputation of being one of the nation's leading Dead cover bands alongside the likes of Shakedown Street and Dark Star Orchestra. In 1999, guitarist Jeff Mattson had the opportunity of a lifetime as he was asked to play with Phil Lesh and Friends at San Francisco's famed Warfield Theater.

The band's set progressed almost effortlessly with a few more originals before hitting a climax with a concrete rendition of "Playing in the Band" with an extended train wrecking jam culminating with a nice transition into a great original named "Forever Young" with yet another long graceful guitar solo by Mattson. The set was ended with a sweet "Viola Lee Blues," bringing the crowd down another jaw-dropping transition back into the chorus after an extended jam. For their first encore, the band returned onstage for a slow "Mr. Soul", before finally satisfying the crowd with the well-requested "Bird Song", another well-loved Dead song.

Venturing off of the UMass campus on this wet and dreary night, I was pleasantly surprised with what I heard throughout the night. Their excellent showmanship and awareness of each other made for a tremendous performance. They plan on heading down South after this short stint in the Bay State, but they promise they will be back for a series of festivals throughout the summer. Be sure to catch them!

COURTESY DAVE SIEGEL

Jeff Mattson on guitar jams out with the Zen Tricksters last week in Northampton.

Looking for dumb fun? See Tomcats

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Staff

TOMCATS
directed by Gregory Poirier with Jerry O'Connell, Shannon Elizabeth, Horatio Sanz, Jamie Pressy playing at Cinemark Theatres, Hadley

If there were ever any thought toward making a movie based on "The Man Show" it need not be done, because such as movie has already been made. Well, not officially, but the new movie Tomcats is about as close to "The Man Show" meets Maxim as you'll ever see. There might not be girls jumping on trampolines, or "50 Ways to Pick Up Woman," but all of the other bases on the sexual smut diamond are sufficiently covered. So let the sight gags, objectification of woman, and sex jokes begin.

Tomcats – the directoral debut of Gregory Poirier – offers up a basic, predictable plot as a vehicle for its relentlessly vulgar, and innuendo driven jokes. Aspiring cartoonist, Michael Delaney (Jerry O'Connell) and his pals (Jake Busey, Horatio Sanz among others) make an American Pie-esque pact that states the last one of their bunch (nicknamed the Tomcats) to get married wins a large sum of money that they invested in a mutual fund (or something). Michael then gets into a small pinch when he owes $51,000 to a Las Vegas casino after a night of gambling overindulgence. The sleazy casino boss, accurately cast in a sleazy sense by Bill Mahr, demands his money in one month's time...or else. Michael has the bright idea to try to marry off the oversexed alpha male Kyle (Jake Busey), the only fellow bachelor left among the Tomcats. Therefore he will be the last one standing in bachelor land, and collect the $400,000 in the pot to pay off his debt. To do this, he tries to set Kyle up with a girl from his past (played by Shannon Elizabeth) who Kyle considers "the one that got away."

Obviously it's not the plot, but rather inane bottom of the barrel scraping type humor that carrie s Tomcats Basically, the approach taken is that anything gruss is funny, and also anything dealing with sex is funny. The film's high-class joke repertoire includes an S&M Granny, a lesbian housewife, masturbation, blow up dolls and, of course, the obligatory

Turn to TOMCATS page 06

Wounds more mediocrity from Segal

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

EXIT WOUNDS
directed by Andrzej Bartkowiak with Steven Seagal, DMX
playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

Steven Seagal: Action-film legend or Hollywood wash-up? Well, both actually.On the one hand, he has stayed true to the genre that suits him best, and brought him fame, unlike Sly Stallone and others who have tried more serious fare. Conversely however, Seagal has made so many horribly appalling films in recent years (Fire Down Below, Under Siege 2, The Glimmer Man – take your pick) that you expect each film henceforth to be just as mind numbing.

But his latest kicking-ass-and-taking-names bonanza. Exit Wounds, is a shot of adrenaline to his rapidly aging career, a film that grows on you as the movie progresses. It opens on an assassination attempt of the vice-president who is making a speech on handgun control (he obviously is not on Bush's side). There's nothing Hollywood loves more than being trendy, and with all the school shootings of late, what better place to put this theme than in a Steven Seagal movie? The irony seems lost on the filmmakers, and lost soon, for it is abandoned completely after the opening scene. Instead, we find Seagal's volatile, short-tempered character Orin Boyd being reassigned to an inner-city police precinct; a punishment for the botched job he did in the rescue of the V.P.

But what really brings the movie down is the humor it tries to inject, making it hard to tell sometimes if Exit Wounds is an action film with humor, or a comedy with action scenes. I'm excusing, of course, those quick, one-liners that are common after fight scenes in films. But what really gets me, I mean truly blows my mind is that Exit Wounds is adapted from a book by John Westermann! A Steven Seagal movie based on novel?! Does anyone besides me appreciate this humor?

The comedy continues as Boyd attends an anger-management class where he meets "Detroit AM" talk-show host, Henry Wayne, played by Tom Arnold. It only took seven years since his role in True Lies, but Arnold finally found a movie where he is the most memorable part, his eccentric presence in the film amusing us thoroughly. While I haven't read the book, I can't help but get the feeling that Westermann had no idea where he was going with the story as he was writing it. If the movie bears any resemblance to the novel, than my point is proven; as the movie nears its hour mark, there is still no apparent direction to it, and you wonder if there ever will be. It's only by luck that as the end draws close, one finds there actually is a quasi-legitimate story having to do with corrupt cops. Unfortunately, though, just as the audience is really beginning to enjoy the movie, it reaches its climax. Screenwriter Ed Horowitz (who also wrote Seagal's miserable On Deadly Ground) is to blame here; he is unable to successfully adapt the novel to the screen, while simultaneously keeping it fresh as well as fast-paced throughout its entirety.

However, perhaps I'm being too hard on this movie. Of course, Seagal aficionados come for the action sequences, and not necessarily a plot. That's all well and good, and isn't a flaw, per se, but even the most base film needs a trace of a story tying one fight scene to another. Exit Wounds, though, still has several things going for it, like when Seagal remains cool and calm as he destroys a desk at his anger-management class. Call me old fashioned, but I still get a kick out of seeing Seagal break out a can of whoop-ass when he takes on a bunch of punks trying to steal his car. Sure, it's nothing new, but name another fifty-year old who still looks like an action hero while doing that. Even though Seagal's age is beginning to show here, what with the crow's feet around his eyes, and his trademark ponytail now shorn, Seagal is still a bad-ass.

Bad in a different extreme is his co-star DMX, the latest rapper turned actor. He plays Latrell Johnson, who at first is seen as a drug-dealing, cop-killer, but turns out to be something else. In the opinion of this humble critic, I say stick to the rapping, buddy. (Although I don't think he was very good at that, either.) When it came time for him to deliver a line, it appeared as though he were trying to recite Shakespeare. Before each time he spoke, there would be a brief pause as if trying to recollect his line, and to hear him mark, there is still no apparent direction to it, and you wonder if there ever will be. It's only by luck that as the end draws close, one finds there actually is a quasi-legitimate story having to do with corrupt cops. Unfortunately, though, just as the audience is really beginning to enjoy the movie, it reaches its climax. Screenwriter Ed Horowitz (who also wrote Seagal's miserable On Deadly Ground) is to blame here; he is unable to successfully adapt the novel to the screen, while simultaneously keeping it fresh as well as fast-paced throughout its entirety.

However, perhaps I'm being too hard on this movie. Of course, Seagal aficionados come for the action sequences, and not necessarily a plot. That's all well and good, and isn't a flaw, per se, but even the most base film needs a trace of a story tying one fight scene to another. Exit Wounds, though, still has several things going for it, like when Seagal remains cool and calm as he destroys a desk at his anger-management class. Call me old fashioned, but I still get a kick out of seeing Seagal break out a can of whoop-ass when he takes on a bunch of punks trying to steal his car. Sure, it's nothing new, but name another fifty-year old who still looks like an action hero while doing that. Even

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

DMX and Steven Seagal, at long last on screen together.

Director Andrzej Bartkowiak doesn't fare as well as he did on his first feature film, Romeo Must Die. In one utterly baffling and disturbing scene, Seagal's police captain is killed in a car wreck, and instead of taking a few moments to mourn the deceased, Seagal gets up and runs away, nothing more ever being said about the tragedy. Nonetheless, Bartkowiak manages to give Seagal's career a boost here. If this movie helped anyone's career, though, it's Anthony Anderson who plays DMX's cohort, TK. Anderson, who seems to pop up in nearly every movie out there recently from one of the jive-talking brothers in Me, Myself and Irene to the forthcoming drama Kingdom Come), has a little-boy's face and demeanor which makes him a perfect vehicle for comedic supporting roles. While I can't imagine the jovial actor in a lead role, he is among the most enjoyable character-actors out there now.

The final few moments of Exit Wounds are by far the best, as Anderson and Arnold engage in a madcap, ad-lib session on the latter's talk show. In a scene, which clearly isn't scripted, they exchange witty repartee from the topic of masturbation to explosive diarrhea to Oprah's weight problem. It's among one of the funniest scenes in recent film, and helps illustrate that the two shining stars of the film are Anderson and Arnold.

Exit Wounds certainly grows on you, but leaves something to be desired as well. After seeing the previous string of bad movies from Seagal, this one is a shot of life to a formerly injured career.

Armenian-Americanism explored

By Ping Chu
Collegian Staff

This Thursday, April 5, at 7:30 p.m. the 8th Annual Multicultural Film Festival will present the premiere of Hamburger and Dolma: Cross Cultural Identities—a documentary by globetrotting author and director Caroline Babayan. This film interweaves the diverse and engaging stories of five Armenian-American women to shape a collective chronicle of their diasporic experiences tracing their journeys from their homeland. Caroline Babayan, herself an Armenian-American, sets these stories in the kitchen, a familiar and informal site, as a group of friends prepare and eat dinner together.

Babayan's colorful upbringing is very apparent in the many international programs she has been involved in, ranging from South Africa to Norway. Born in Tehran, Iran to a Franco-Armenian family, she grew up in an ethnically diverse, but Western-oriented milieu. The result of this background is a culturally rich body of work and the ability to speak five languages. Her multimedia education includes the study of still photography in Norway, as well as film technique at the London International Film School and a Masters degree in Audiovisual Management from the European Media School in Rome.

Hamburger and Dolma is of particular interest to the UMass community as it was made with the participation many of our own staff and faculty. It features the sound recording of Media Education Foundation producer and UMass Grad Student Susan Ericsson. Associate Professor of Women's Studies, Arlene Avakian, was also a major participant in the making of the film and is one of the speakers featured on screen. Barbara Wolloch, also s member of the Graduate Program at the University, will give a brief introduction about the background of the film. Wolloch is a documentary filmmaker and has produced El Collegio de la Frontera Sur from Chiapas, Mexico.

The screening will be followed by a panel discussion on the topic of "Documenting Culture." Panelists will include director Babayan, as well as Ericsson and Wolloch. Anthropology Grad. Student Kevin Taylor Anderson, who has done work in video ethnography, will also take part in the panel

COURTESY TOBEY

Chrysalis Theatre

Critically acclaimed singer, composer and instrumentalist Pan Morigan will perform in Songs for Strings, Voice and Other Mysteries on Friday, April 20 at 8 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Unitarian Society in Northampton.

Before Night Falls a compelling piece of storytelling and politics

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

BEFORE NIGHT FALLS
directed by Julian Schnabel with Javier Bardem showing at Pleasant Street Theatre, Northampton

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

The Oscar-nominated Javier Bardem and Olivier Martinez.

There are many reasons Before Night Falls is a remarkable film, but the greatest is for its ability to capture and put across the energy of a certain time and place, to articulate the political, social and private angst that defined revolutionary Cuba in the mid-twentieth century. And couple that cultural articulation with a compelling story of brutal truths. The lush, intricate settings, unassuming, but effective cinematography, and unilaterally excellent performances only solidify the film's success.

The film is based upon the memoir of the same name by Cuban poet Reinaldo Arenas, played here by Javier Bardem, whose masterful performance forms the anchor for a story whose honesty and profundity could have been lost in the tide of political commentary and cinematic artistry. And this isn't to say that the documentary and visual poetics are unnecessary or unsuccessful, but that without Bardem providing a human narrative focus, the rest of what the film has to say could have easily failed to coalesce. The story follows Arenas's life, from his young childhood in the rural wastes of Cuba to his death self-induced exile in New York City, through years of troubled existence; his political writing and homosexuality land him in jail, and he is then released into a state of homelessness and poverty.

As befits the material, a strongly poetic sensibility suffuses the film, putting words and images to both the need to assert oneself culturally, and to transcend the restraints of culture, location and political environment. The dignity and ferocity of the Cuban people are played off one another, a storm of stabilizing and destabilizing elements trying to shape the nation and culture into its own vision; and again, this environment would have lost its realness and immediacy were there not a human being through whose eyes we were allowed to look.

The film does falter a bit in juggling the various characters that enter Arenas's life; faces come and go, all to the drumbeat of revolution and cultural upheaval, and it can be difficult at times to keep track of relations and histories. Adding to the uncertainty is the film's approach to language: most of the movie is spoken in thickly accented English, but at times the characters speak in subtitled Spanish, and during a few emotionally explosive scenes the subtitles are omitted altogether. The effect of this language play is seldom destructive, however, and helps to preserve the sense of cultural authenticity and pride that so heavily and centrally flavors the film.

Those scenes spoken in Spanish and lacking subtitles allow the audience to focus entirely on the emotions at work, and even if English-speaking audiences cannot understand the words, the context of the scenes within the film make it clear enough what's being said.

Before Night Falls offers that rare combination of an engrossing, culturally and politically important story, solid direction and excellent acting all around (including Johnny Depp in two separate cameo roles), and shouldn't be missed.

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Johnny Depp in one of his two separate cameos.

COURTESY NORMAN JEAN ROY

Jon B kicks back with some intimate R&B grooves.

Sweet tunes from Job B

Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

JON B
Pleasures You Like Epic

In 1995, Jon B slowly rose to the music scene with his smash single "Someone to Love" off of his gold-selling debut album Bonafide, establishing the R&B crooner as a refreshing new musical presence who brings a distinctively smooth, melodic style to contemporary music.

Instead of the usual pump and grind and sexually explicit material we are accustomed to hearing from the usual bling-blinging artists blasted on the radio, Jon B uses a seductive and sultry, but never raunchy, sound. Following the success of Bonafide and it's 1997 follow-up Cool Relax, Jon B continues to use a soul-tempered R&B flavor in his new release, Pleasure You Like. Past credentials also include writing or co-writing hits for Toni Braxton ("In the Late of the Night") and Color Me Badd ("From the Back," "Ooh I onight").

On his third studio album, Pleasures You Like, the singer-songwriter-producer enlisted Nas, Babyface, and Faith Evans for a soulful album of hip-hop, soul, jazz, and R&B grooves. The Babyface protege put his skilled efforts of keyboards, guitar, drums, and bass to work on Pleasures You Like. The result is a beautifully melodic album with emotional feeling.

Jon's abundant talents attracted well-known artists, who lent their skills to Pleasures You Like. "Overjoyed" features Faith Evans and AZ is featured on the jumping "Layaway." These collaborations work well on the album. Jon's voice is combined with rapping and higher voices placed over a slow, bumping groove.

The album kicks off with the easy listening experience of "Finer Things" featuring Nas, who provides a bridging and backing rap on the track. "Lonely Girl," a team effort with Babyface, is another beautiful love song. The song speaks to a girl who feels lonely crooning, "if you can't find your way back home, I will show you girl." Jon B may have found much inspiration to the many delightful love songs on the album through his new marriage.

Jon B spends plenty of time showing his sensitivity on such tracks as "Inside" and "Boy Is Not a Man." The slower, soulful tunes seem to be the highlights of the album. "Do It All Again" showcases a strong personal side of him, explaining that he would go through "an uphill climb" again to be with his girl. His powerful and plaintive cries make the song another gem on the album.

The record moves from easy listening to a little taste of hip-hop tinged with the cool swing of 70s soul and the hip edge of 90s R&B/pop. "All I Want Is You" featuring Cuban Link and "Cocoa Brown" move to that funky edge with light jazz percussions. On the hopping "Don't Talk," Jon once again comes across as a sweet-talking lover. The track is a booty-shaking ditty, one of the few on the generally slow-tempo record.

With the passion and fire he brings to his songs, it is no wonder that the great Marvin Gaye influenced Jon. Steamy sex grooves are characterized on the poignant title track "Pleasure You Like" and "Tell Me." The album shows a very personal side of Jon and gave the feeling that the music came naturally to him, something that is characterized by the use of very personal lyrics. The end result is an album that is well crafted and lyrically strong.

Jon B continues to mature with his third solo album, hoping to take his career to a new level. His slow climb to the top is justified by his number six entry of Pleasures You Like on the Billboard 200. The right blend of intimacy and titillating sex grooves create the sweetest aural harmonies on Pleasures You Like. Pleasures we like indeed.

■ tomcats

continued from page 05

viagra jokes. But perhaps the film's most noteworthy plunge into the pool of gross out comedy comes when a character somehow manages to eat a cancerous testicle...with a side of cinnamon buns no less.

One would think that a film of this sort, targeting the young adult male and teenage male demographic, would include a hefty serving of female nudity. Surprisingly, though, the film doesn't delve far into this (translation: sorry, no female nudity). In fact, the film seems to have just as much of a fascination with exploiting the male body. Still, the presence of such lookers as Shannon Elizabeth and Jamie Pressy obviously lends itself to a little sexual objectification of the female gender. Okay...a lot. For the most part, (with the exception of the tear jerking ending), the women in the movie are treated like pieces of meat. Steve (Horatio Sanz) states his reasoning for marrying Tricia (Jimmie Pressy) is because "she's the woman he'd most like to fk" (too bad she's really a lesbian, you silly Hornio).

I'm sure all of the high-falutin' movie types who sit around watching their Casablanca 50th Anniversary DVD with added boring footage, and their tape of the 1945 Oscars, probably won't like Tomcats. However, there is some genuinely funny content for those who enjoy over-the-top sexually driven comedy. So if it's sex jokes and sight gags that tickle your comedic fancy, you've come to the right place with Tomcats.

WHEN YOU PROVIDE THE BEST THE BEST SEEK YOU OUT

GRADUATE NURSE TRANSITION PROGRAM

Our Graduate Nurse Transition Program is beginning on June 11 and July 30 2001. This program will provide you, the new graduate nurse, with the opportunity to partner with a Registered Nurse Preceptor in a work and study environment. This collaboration will increase your competency and confidence in caring for adult acute care patients in a variety of specialty and med/surg settings.

This 10 week post hire orientation program includes a combination of didactic, clinical and special observation opportunities, which will develop your ability to:

- ❑ Interpret and integrate significant patient cues for clinical decision-making in select patient populations.
- ❑ Develop organizational skills in managing multiple patient care assignments.
- ❑ Increase competency in technical skills.
- ❑ Develop communication/collaboration skills as a participating member of the patient care team.
- ❑ Model characteristics of professional nurse behavior.
- ❑ Participate in self-appraisal of personal and professional growth.
- ❑ Experience the transition of a patient from the acute care setting to the home environment with services.

You must have graduated from an accredited School of Nursing (BSN, AD, Diploma) and have obtained a temporary Conn. License. We also require an official transcript and 2 letters of recommendation from your clinical instructors.

We offer a starting salary of $19.50/hour, excellent benefits including health, dental, and life insurance, LTD, 12 vacation days/year, 403b, cash balance retirement plan (paid by the hospital), free parking and access to our fitness centers. We also have market leading shift differentials of 15% for evenings, 25% for straight nights and 25% for weekends. These shift are differentials are cumulative.

Please reply to John Turnberg with Ref# GN2001 at jturnbe@harthosp.org or Hartford Hospital, 80 Seymour Street, Hartford, CT 06102.

Contact us at (860)545-2145, fax: (860)545-2351, or email: hrinfo@harthosp.org
For a complete listing of openings go to www.harthosp.org/hr

100 Top Hospitals

HARTFORD HOSPITAL
Great Doctors Are Just The Beginning

We are an equal opportunity employer who believes diversity brings out the best in everyone.

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON

Travel to Learn this Summer!

These programs provide a dynamic learning experience—a lively blend of classroom and field activities resulting in a true appreciation of the host country.

Field School in Prehistoric Archaeology in Belize

Haiti Today: Culture and Politics

Ireland Today: Politics and Society

Spanish Language and Culture in Mexico

Vietnam Today: Culture, History and Politics

For more information, contact
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Corporate, Continuing, and Distance Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston, MA 02125-3393

call us 617.287.7913
visit us www.conted.umb.edu

UMASS BOSTON

COURTESY NEW WORLD THEATRE

Culture Clash
New WORLD Theatre will present the Latino comedy trio Culture Clash at Bowker Auditorium Thursday, April 19 at 8 p.m. The performance is free.

Krauser discusses 'Lemon'

By Paul Morton
Columbia Daily Spectator (Columbia U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK – Lawrence Krauser's first novel, "Lemon," is the story of a grown man who becomes obsessed with a citrus fruit. It's a strange, funny story, and quite entertaining. And the road to telling this strange, funny story has been long. After years as a playwright and working as a copy editor at Doubleday, the literary world's newest darling, Dave Eggers, discovered Krauser.

Eggers has started a new line of books, an offshoot of his magazine, McSweeney's, called McSweeney's Books, and Krauser's novel is the second book published in this new line. Last Monday, I had the opportunity to discuss his new book over the phone with Krauser, who was on a book tour in Seattle.

Spectator: There are several ways to read a novel. And there are several cues one takes for how to read a novel, just by looking at the jacket cover. The back of your cover has a single sentence:

"The story of one's possession." There are many ways to interpret that sentence. What do you mean by it?

Krauser: I mean to have it split down the middle. I mean it to be read initially as "Lemon: The Story Of One's Possession," the story of a lemon. So the question echoes. That's all.

Spectator: In Lemon, Wendell's ownership and attachment to a lemon cost him a great many things: his job, his family, his friends. To begin with, does Wendell own nothing?

Krauser: I love it, Paul. I wouldn't add anything to that. (pause) Oh, another thing about that jacket blurb. Maybe it's all about the word "of." (To himself) The story of one's... No, sorry, I don't know what I mean.

Spectator: In prose you seem to have an interesting sense of words. You rarely use a word that anyone would have to look up in the dictionary. But we do get a lot of invented words. The mood at dinner with Wendell's parents after they have found out about his break-up with Margo is "Margoless"; an e-mail from Michelle is an "E-Michelle." Are there limitations built into the English language that require you to make up these words from people's names? Or are you creating your own language?

Krauser: I wrote the thing to amuse myself. I don't think I was... It was fun. I was just playing around. No agenda. That's what language is for. I keep running into this thing in interviews where I'm not really filled with certainty in general. I can't remember the time I did anything consciously.

Spectator: You originally intended for this book to have been written in four weeks back in 1995, and it became five years.

Krauser: Yes, there's an agenda. See what happened to it.

Spectator: If the whole thing was not written for fun, why publish?

Krauser: I would rather write all day long than cops edit all day long.

Spectator: Reading this book, I was strongly reminded of a list of Donald Barthelme. Am I right to sense such a connection? Any other absurdists?

Krauser: I haven't read a lot of Donald. [Note: both the interviewer and Krauser had a difficult time ascertaining the pronunciation of Barthelme.] But I've read a little bit. I felt sympathy. Yeah, as absurdism goes, Gogol and Kafka pop into my head a lot. I like lonesco. Beckett is very alive in my head. I didn't think of anything other than I'd be able to pull something off in this story until I read Jim Harrison and Martin Amis. It wasn't this, or that, who made me want to write this story.

Spectator: You're also a performer. Me, I did see you perform at the Nuyorican. The novel. Is it easier to communicate through spoken performance than through the written word? Is it truer/more honest?

Krauser: I have no fucking idea. Curse. No idea. I gravitate toward [illegible]. Maybe the answer is yes. It's possible. So is to have it spoken by an actor who is molded for an audience's ear. I like prose it has to stand on its own. I like prose illuminated to my ear by the author read. It may reduce the [illegible]. Which is better, Shakespeare on the page or through the text? Dylan Thomas speaking, eh?

Spectator: Why a lemon?

Krauser: Do not know. Like my name, was my choice. They're everywhere. I'll tell you that. As I travel around, they're everywhere.

Spectator: Dave Eggers, the [illegible] author of A Heartbreaking Work of Staggering Genius, is now [illegible] McSweeney's Books, publishing a lot of writers like yourself and [illegible] some amount of presence. Do you feel that a new literary community is being created, with Eggers at the head?

Krauser: I say yes. I think that [illegible] a line-through-sensibility. Pretty much about McSweeney's, the whole [illegible] comes through. You also [illegible] as in "That's very McSweeney's" – how does that's kind of crumbled off a list. I think the common denominator is [illegible] erational and temporal. I don't think [illegible] could call me and Neal Pollack [illegible] the previous McSweeney's [illegible] ment. "The Neal Pollack Anthology of American Literature" [illegible] aesthetic pod. I'm excited about it. It's fine. I think there's a [illegible] around, and McSweeney's [illegible] tremendous centripetal [illegible] whatever it's called, energy [illegible] to a community.

'Crouching Tiger' helps Chinese film world, professor says

By Stephine Michrina
Daily Forty-Niner (California State U.-Long Beach)

(U-WIRE) LONG BEACH, Calif. – "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" may not have won best picture at last week's Academy Awards ceremony, but its award for best foreign film has brought exposure to Chinese-made movies.

"'Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon' gave recognition to all of the Chinese-made films over the past 10 years," said Huang Shixian, a professor at the Beijing Film Academy, who has published several books and articles on Chinese and foreign films. He was recently selected to serve on a board of seven specialists to select the 100 best Chinese films of all times, and spoke at a lecture Thursday at the University Student Union at California State at Long Beach.

"It really is a new epoch in recognition of Chinese-made films," said Huang, addressing an audience of more than 30 people, highlighting issues of globalization and the market trends of indigenous Chinese films.

With the recent popularity of the Ang Lee-directed "Crouching Tiger," movie critics are analyzing where foreign films will fit into Hollywood's big picture.

"Chinese filmmakers will have to learn how to provide excitement and thrillers like Hollywood produces today," Huang said. "However, Chinese films have found a little niche in the filmmaking industry."

Huang pointed to specific reasons for the success of "Crouching Tiger" in the United States.

"The first is the romantic, classical images of a martial arts movie. There's a beauty in the masculinity of the film.

"Second are the beautiful scenes with the combination of digital technology," said Huang, referring to scenes where the stars of the movie glide from rooftop to rooftop and fight amid waving bamboo shoots.

"There is also some degree of oriental mysticism in the movie," Huang added. "The sword is sort of a symbol of feelings."

"Crouching Tiger" is the first Chinese film to receive an Academy Award in the best foreign language film category. While viewing subtitled movies is typically not well received by moviegoers in the United States, the film has leaped this hurdle with receipts of more than $4.7 million at the box office.

"This was really a landmark film," said San-Poi Li, a professor in the department of Asian and Asian American studies. "Kung Fu movies have created stereotypes. This movie offers a new refreshing perspective.."

Masters Programs in

Internet Strategy Management
Internet Engineering
Teaching with Internet Technologies

- •designed for working professionals
- •meet alternate weekends and online
- •one-year, first of their kind programs
- •state-of-the-art facilities

"some of the most qualified industry talent available"—INTERFACE MONTHLY
"the best professional decision I've ever made in my life"—ISM GRADUATE

For RSVP and info, contact 888 258-5665 or gradcenter@marboro.edu
Brattleboro, Vermont • www.gradcenter.marboro.edu

The Graduate Center
MARLBORO COLLEGE
creating leaders for a world online™

INFORMATION SESSION
April 4, 5:30 - 7pm
The Hotel Northampton
320 Congress St.

The Graduate Center Advisory Board includes senior executives from , Apple, INSO, 3Com Corp., IBM, USWeb/CKS Partners, Viant Corp., Interactive Factory, Lucent, Hewlett-Packard, and Harvard Business School

FUN WORK

The Collegian is Hiring..

Do you like Sports?
Arts? News?
Do you like to express your opinion?
Do you like to write?

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian is looking for writers for the end of this semester and
for next semester.

Come and check us out!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Tough racket to smash

Women's tennis sweeps weekend

By Ben Hall
Collegian Staff

Coming off a spectacular spring break performance in the Sunshine State, the Massachusetts women's tennis team might have been a bit disappointed when it arrived in colder Pennsylvania on Saturday morning.

That, however, would assume that the Minutewomen actually care about when and where they assert the fact that this year's team is a force to be reckoned with.

And that's not the case.

On Saturday morning the Maroon and White completed warm-up exercises on the outdoor courts while facing a hailstorm that eventually postponed its match against Villanova. When conditions improved Villanova allowed UMass (13-6, 2-0 Atlantic 10) to first play Duquesne University in an abbreviated match format. UMass won the contest 7-0.

No doubles matches were played because at the end of the singles round, it was clear that a Duquesne comeback would be impossible. Junior Helena Horak defeated her opponent in three sets (6-3, 2-6, 6-1) while junior Lindsey Gillooly held strong with a 6-1, 6-1 victory.

"Duquesne had just come back from beating Temple, so we were a little surprised to win so easily," said coach Judy Dixon. "Thirty minutes after the Duquesne match we faced Villanova. Even they were not quite as tough as we had expected."

The afternoon match against Villanova provided an excellent opportunity to improve the team's record to 12-6 with a 6-1 win.

The new doubles combinations of Francesca Mancini-Annie Hamilton and Gillooly-Jafra Depontes finished the day with 8-3 and 8-4 successes, respectively.

On Sunday the Temple squad arrived at the courts with four players, forcing it to forfeit two singles matches and one doubles match to UMass. Depontes and Mancini were the only Massachusetts players to lose in the 5-2 victory.

"After the Temple match we'll probably be seeded No. 1 in the Atlantic 10 tournament," said Dixon. The winner of that round gets an automatic bid to the NCAA's which would be an unprecedented accomplishment for our program. But it looks like we might face Temple again in the A-10's. Temple full strength is a formidable opponent. Temple with one injury is about 50/50 and I think we know what Temple with two injuries looks like."

Freshman Susan Hyams won her singles match (6-1, 6-2) while Horak swept her opponent in consecutive 6-0 sets.

Commenting on the only two singles victories, Dixon said: "Horak played really well. I was quite impressed and Susan Hyams is one of the most improved players this year."

"I played a lot better this weekend," said Hyams. "I've been playing with much more confidence which I think is mostly attributable to the intense physical conditioning that we've undergone lately."

If Dixon is correct in her prediction that UMass will face Temple in the A-10's, then she has taken precautionary measures that are sure to surprise the Pennsylvanians.

"We decided to mix up the doubles this weekend mainly because we didn't want to show Temple our honest lineup," said Dixon. "We also wanted to prep Hyams for the A-10's. Playing Temple is a big deal for any UMass sports team and we didn't want her first time to be in post season competition."

The Minutewomen will travel to Fairfield University on Wednesday for a non-conference match at 3:00 p.m.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Freshman Francesca Mancini and the UMass women's tennis team pushed through three conference opponents last weekend to give coach Judy Dixon her 100th victory.

Dixon grabs her 100th victory

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's tennis team opened its spring Atlantic 10 season in Philadelphia this weekend with a fury as it ran roughshod through conference foes Temple and Duquesne, as well as non-conference opponent Villanova.

However, there was an added bonus to the triad of victories as head coach Judy Dixon notched her 100th career victory with the program.

"Winning 100 games at 50 is a lot different than reaching that same mark as a 38-year-old," said Dixon. "This isn't about my career, it's about relationships."

Dixon began her UMass career in the spring of 1993 as she upstarted the newly reinstated women's tennis program. That fall, the men's team was reinstated as well, and Dixon soon undertook the role of being head coach for both teams. She recalls having a tough first year as head skipper.

"I remember those beginning days when the team had just been reinstated. I even remember trying to beat Mount Holyoke College," she remembered.

Upon arriving on the Amherst campus, Dixon made an immediate impact on both teams, especially the women's squad. In her first full season of coaching, the Minutewomen captured an impressive 11-6 record, and they have only suffered one losing season (9-15, last year) since she took charge.

Dixon has brought a vast amount of experience to the table, as a player, coach and commentator. She is the former doubles partner of Billie Jean King and has participated in the U.S Open, Wimbledon and the Virginia Slims Tour.

She also has previous coaching experience at Yale, and has broadcasting experience in several sports, including tennis. All of her accomplishments have allowed her to become one of the most successful tennis coaches in New England.

"She has so much experience, and she's the best coach I've ever had," said junior Lindsey Gillooly. "She pushes us to be the best we can be."

Some of Dixon's most impressive accomplishments since beginning at UMass include leading the Minutewomen to a New England Championship during the 1995-96 season, as well as garnering the 1999 USTA/ New England Coach of the Year award. More importantly, she has adopted a positive style to coaching that has allowed both her teams to benefit from it.

"She really knows how to coach people individually, because everyone has to be taught differently," said Gillooly.

Right now, the Maroon and White is in the midst of a successful 13-6 season and trying to win another A-10

Turn to COACH on page 11

Tight matches fall Dartmouth's way

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

With spring fever in the air, the Massachusetts men's tennis team is gearing up for its outdoor season.

It traveled to Hanover, N.H. Saturday to take care of one of its last indoor matches. Unfortunately, the Minutemen did not get the job done falling to Ivy League foe Dartmouth University 7-0 in a disappointing match.

"It was kind of a disappointment," said Todd Champeau. "Everyone had tight matches. It's kind of unfortunate because we didn't expect to be beaten 7-0. But it's not as lopsided as the score suggests. If we are going to go anywhere in the postseason, we need to have more confidence."

The majority of the first sets played by the Maroon and White could have easily gone its way with No. 1 Steve Prisco and No. 2 Brent Davis both losing 6-4. In fact, senior standout Bill Greener – known for his return game – was the only member of the squad to force his opponent to three sets: 6-0, 5-7, 6-3.

"I would never say that the team was too much for us, but they're solid the whole way down," said Davis. "Though they came up with every match, we were right there with them."

In fact, the Minutemen do not look at the Dartmouth sweep as an entirely negative match. The majority of the team played a solid brand of tennis, but the chips just did not fall as planned.

Assistant coach Scott Wilkins and crew plan to take the positive aspects of the match and regroup in outdoor practices this week.

"I think it's still positive from a confidence standpoint," said Wilkins. "On paper it looks like they beat us pretty bad, but we still worked hard and played well. Each person can take something out of it and still remain upbeat. This week we're going to practice outdoors as much as we can and get ready for the Temple match this weekend."

Before they travel to West point, N.Y. Saturday to take on Atlantic 10 rival Temple University and non-conference opponent Army, they must first battle Fordham University in the Bronx today at 3:00 p.m.

"Fordham is definitely at the bottom of the pack in the Atlantic 10," said Champeau. "We need to wipe them out 7-0. We've got to really make a statement and take care of this one with at least a 6-1 or 5-2 win. If we lose, we won't help our seeding for the A-10 tournament."

The rest of the season for the UMass squad, however, rides on the match with the Temple Owls.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN
Freshman Brent Davis and the Massachusetts men's tennis team dropped a tough match, 7-0, to Dartmouth this weekend in Hanover, N.H.

Turn to TENNIS on page 11

Opening day at Lorden

Fairfield up first for the Minutemen

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

It's got talent, depth and experience where it counts. It has a rotation that matures with each start, and an offense that has just begun to shake off the preseason rust that has followed it through 12 games. Now, one of the remaining elements that the Massachusetts baseball team (3-9 overall, 2-1 Atlantic 10) needs to factor in remains the most obvious. They simply need to play.

Weather has wreaked havoc on the Minuteman's schedule in recent weeks, erasing five games from the slate that the team desperately needed to help make up ground. Although at 3-9 it's still far too early to throw up the warning signs and label the season a wash, UMass needs as many innings as possible to rediscover a rhythm and develop the individual successes that members of the squad have been enjoying.

"I think we can come back right where we left off," said sophomore first baseman Jeff Altieri. "We've been practicing and hitting the ball well, so it's not like we've been completely off. I think we'll be ready."

It's that elusive symmetry, however – a synthesis between offense and defense – that has managed to escape the Maroon and White's clutch so far, and remains the one thing holding back the team's potential.

This afternoon, UMass plays host to Fairfield University (5-15), taking to the confines of Earl Lorden Field for the first time in the 2001 season. The game, scheduled for 3 p.m., will be the Minutemen's first taste of action since dropping a 13-11 contest to the University of Connecticut on March 28.

The Minutemen put up one of their stronger offensive efforts of the season that day, collecting 13 hits while sending 11 more across the plate. Senior outfielder Nick Gorneault paced the team in the loss, going 3-for-5 with a home-run. As has been the case all year, individual efforts have done little in terms of bringing success to the whole; with the Stags struggling for an identity themselves, it's a problem they can remedy beginning this afternoon.

Despite being shut out on six occasions this season, Fairfield remains a very real threat to the Minutemen, anxious to stop the bleeding and jumpstart a turnaround of its own. Like UMass, the Stags last game resulted in a close loss, and they have also suffered through their own share of growing pains while trying to construct some sort of winning streak.

Fortunately for the Minutemen, a number of players – Altieri, Gavin Clark and Brian Hourigan among them – have chipped in with stellar performances. Clark is coming off a week in which he was named UMass Athlete of the Week, while Altieri and Hourigan have been two of the Minutemen's consistent performers on both sides of the ball.

Altieri's numbers and poise have been impressive. The sophomore first-baseman is at or near the top in every offensive category, and is currently batting .341, good for second on the team between Gorneault (.361) and catcher Tom Ellerbrook (.306). Assuming the weather-related delays haven't affected the streaks they were riding less than a week ago, head coach Mike Stone can count on these three once again to contribute inspired performances.

The Minutemen will look to try and finish the week on an upswing, hosting Central Connecticut State (8-9 overall) on Wednesday afternoon and traveling to Loudonville on Thursday to battle Siena College (6-17). Three teams in three days, with games both home and away, will quickly throw UMass back into the fire, leaving the team no option other than to forge ahead. Altieri, for one, sees this week's hectic schedule as a prime opportunity for the Minutemen to make a statement. "I think the team plans on taking all three games," Altieri said. "I don't think that's an assumption; we plan on winning."

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR FORTUNE 2000

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 1998

History has a way of repeating itself. Pretty cool, huh?

For three years in a row, we've been named one of the 100 Best Companies To Work For. With real opportunities for leadership and advancement, perhaps you'll want to join us as we go for four.

ERNST YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

©2001 Ernst & Young LLP

Mother Nature allows opener, finally

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

The momentum train that the Massachusetts softball team was riding this season came to a halting stop this weekend.

Unlike most momentum killers, this one did not have to do with the play of UMass' opponents. It is the force of Mother Nature that has slowed down the Minutewomen.

Thursday's doubleheader with the University of Vermont and last weekend's trio of matches against St. Joseph's were all cancelled due to field conditions after a rainstorm hit the Amherst area.

However, the sun has come out and the Minutewomen are ready to play their belated home opener today against the Blue Devils of Central Connecticut at 3 p.m.

"Everyone is pumped," junior pitcher Jen Hadley said.

The Maroon and White has not had a game since its 7-0 win over La Salle on March 25. Echoing her team's thoughts, Hadley said that everyone is very happy to play their first home game.

"We have not played on our home field since the fall and it is going to be exciting to play on our turf with our fans watching," Hadley said.

The condition of the field at the brand new softball and soccer complex is still uncertain for today's game. But with another day of sun the field should be ready for the doubleheader with the Blue Devils.

According to Hadley, the team is well prepared to play two against a struggling Central Connecticut squad.

The Blue Devils come into Amherst with an inauspicious 2-10 record. Some of their recent losses came to the hands of the University of Maryland Baltimore County and Fairfield University. In fact, CCSU has lost its last 10 of 11 games.

Missing all these games has left the Minutewomen feeling anxious. They are itching to play in a real match up.

"We have practiced a lot," said Hadley. "Everyday we get to work on our weaknesses in practice and we continue to get better, but we need to play some games."

The Minutewomen are riding a seven-game winning streak going into the doubleheader with CCSU and today's two games will be a great chance for them to improve on that winning streak.

Massachusetts hopes that it can get a crowd to check out for today's twin bill against Central Connecticut. It is the first chance for the UMass student body to view the amazing things that the team has been doing all season.

"So far it has just been parents and a few others at our games on the road," Hadley said last week. "It is easier to get pumped up to play and our games are much more exciting when there are a lot more people in attendance."

Spezza No.1 in every NHL war room

For a draft that is teeming with talent and lofty expectations, it is that much more remarkable that one name remains clearly ahead of the rest.

Jason Spezza is the one name that will be universally circled, underlined and highlighted come draft day, but after commissioner Gary Bettman announces the first pick in the 2001 National Hockey League Entry Draft, 29 other teams will be wondering what could have been.

Forget about Joe Thornton, Vincent Lecavalier and the Sedin Twins, because Spezza is the most highly touted draft pick since Quebec (Colorado) picked Eric Lindros and traded him for a Stanley Cup in 1991.

Spezza, a Mississauga, Ontario native, notched 35 goals and 84 points in 40 games for Windsor of the Ontario Hockey League. At the ripe old age of 18, Spezza has the vision of a detention moderator and the stickhandling to make a snake trip over his own feet.

The phenom has already gained some valuable experience in the 2000 World Junior Championships, a competition in which he competed at age 16. Oh, and the only two other 16 year olds to play for Canada's junior team happen to be named Gretzky and Lindros.

If anybody thinks that expectations are high for the talented teenager, they are nothing compared to the goals he sets for himself.

"My goal is to be number one," Spezza told NHL.com.

To Spezza anything less than the best has been and will always be unacceptable.

As hard as it may be to believe, there are 259 other picks to be made in Sunshine, Fla. and a good core of talent from all corners of the earth are primed and ready to make a run at the NHL.

Two more Canadiens, Stephen Weiss and Dan Hamhuiss, will likely round out the top three picks.

Weiss, at 5-foot-11 is a nifty forward who found the net 40 times for Plymouth of the OHL. Conversely, Hamhuiss is a medium sized offensive defenseman with good speed who averaged nearly a point a game for the Prince George Cougars of the WHL.

The top rated college hockey prospect in the draft is Ohio State's R.J. Umberger. The 6-foot-1 center notched 37 points in 32 games for the Buckeyes and will likely be the first of two first round picks to come out of Columbus.

Umberger's teammate, David Steckel, is a mountain of a player at 6-foot-5 and is known to dominate a game both physically and on the scoresheet.

The center gave the diminutive goalies of the Central Collegiate Hockey Association some major vision problems in 2000-01, as he collected 17 goals in 33 games.

Three more of college hockey's big boys round out the list of top prospects hailing from America's universities.

Michigan's Mike Komisarek is a 6-foot-4, 232-pound defenseman who introduced more than a few forwards to his best buddies – Mr. Ice and Mr. Boards.

Notre Dame's Rob Globke makes his living scoring instead of hitting. At an agile 6-foot-2, Globke provides match up problems for opposing defenses that struggle to match his size, speed and skill. The freshman had opponents of the Irish seeing red, as he lit the lamp 17 times in his first season of college hockey.

Last, but not least is UMass' own Scott Horvath. Horvath's 6-foot-3, 230-pound frame would wet the appetite of any NHL scout. That combined with an improving ability to handle the puck in traffic and toughness near the crease make Horvath a solid pick for any team. Horvath will look to flourish in UMass coach Don "Toot" Galvon's system that will allow him to take advantage of his size and speed and improve on his pro-potential.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian Columnist.

DAN SANTELLI/COLLEGIAN
UMass' Scott Horvath should be selected in this year's NHL Entry Draft.

■ coach

continued from page 9

Championship. But despite recent winning seasons by her teams, Dixon knows that she owes just as much to her earlier squads for her continued success at UMass.

"Most of all, this is about having the heart for each one of those players that came before us, the ones who brought that 100th win here," said Dixon.

"Liesl Sitton was the No. 1 player when I first came here to coach. I recently visited her in Spain, so I remember and respect those early players just as much as I do last year's team."

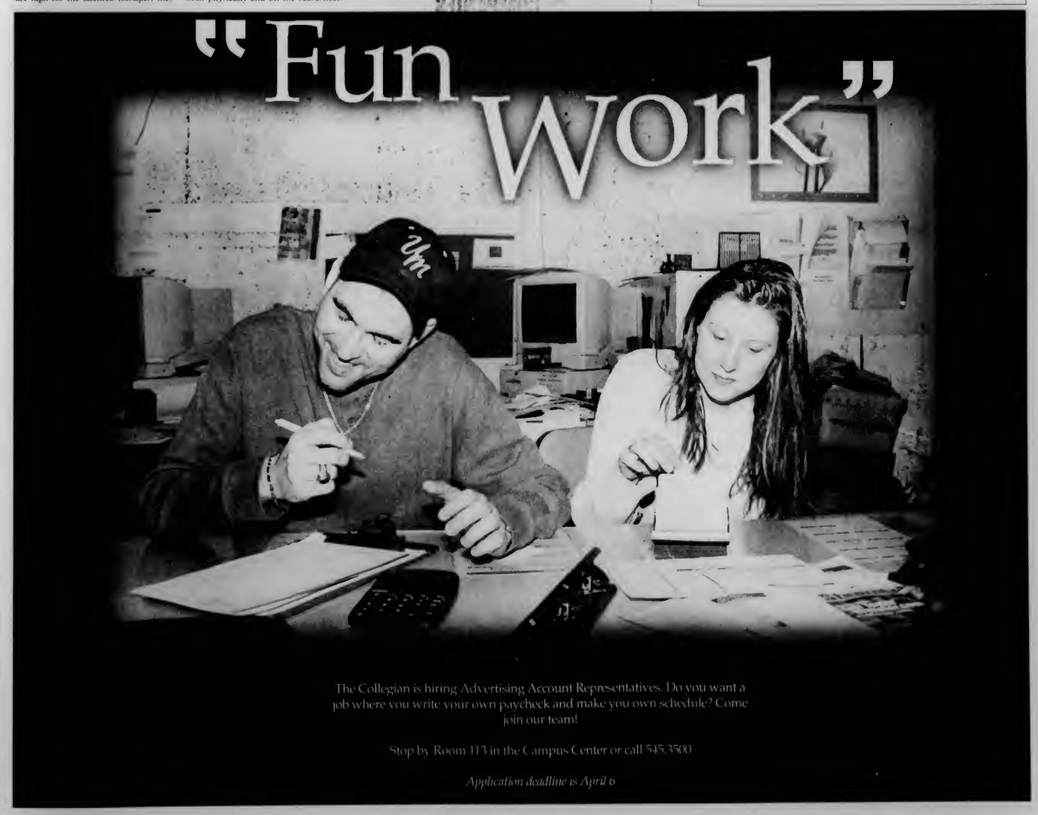
COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Massachusetts men's and women's tennis coach Judy Dixon holding her 1999 USTA New England Coach of the Year plaque.

■ tennis

continued from page 9

After its conference match with George Washington University, a highly ranked team in the conference, was cancelled, the Maroon and White knew it would be all or nothing against the Owls.

"The Temple match is, of course, huge," said Wilkins. "With Temple, we have everything to gain, and they have everything to lose based on the pre-season seeds. They actually finished second last year. We don't have much to fall back on right now because our match with George Washington was cancelled. If we do lose to Temple, we'll have to do a lot of fighting in the meeting because of that cancellation. But if we could beat Temple, we could get the No. 3 spot in the tournament."



The Collegian is hiring Advertising Account Representatives. Do you want a job where you write your own paycheck and make you own schedule? Come join our team!

Stop by Room 113 in the Campus Center or call 545-3500

Application deadline is April 6

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Moving Off Campus? Come to Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center's Apartment Complex Fair on Thursday, April 5 from 10am to 3pm on the Campus Center Concourse.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet with Fall Option Starting June 1st. 2 Bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-1988

Apartment Available to take over June 1st. 2 bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-9462

3 Bedroom Renovated Apartment in Puffton. Available June 1st. Call 549-7111

Summer Sublet with lease option. Puffton 3 bedroom, 2 bathroom. Renovated + furnished. Central locale. Call 548-3915

Summer Sublet June 1-Sept 1. Right in Town close to bus stops. 1 Bedroom $300 a month 253-0065

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

2 Bedroom Brandywine Apt. starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Call 549-0453 ASAP

Summer Sublet with option to lease start June first. 4 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, utilities included, sliding glass doors, two balconeys, on bus route. 243-5388

1 Bedroom Apt. Available June 1 3 miles from campus. Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. Call 397-9820

2 Bedroom in Boulders Take over lease from June-Sept. $825 a month. Call Victor 253-6917

Summer Sublet, Fall option. 3 bedroom Puffton available 6/1 Call 549-7812

EMPLOYMENT

TEENAGE BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Be at Teen Tour Leader this summer. Trips in USA, Canada, Europe. We need a 4-week time commitment - end of June through July, salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, CONWAY, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, bicycletrips.com

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

CAMP CANADENSIS, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours form New York and Philadelphia), Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, gymnastics, fishing, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salaryl 6/20-8/17. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

Access 2 A Computer? Put it to work! $25/hr - $75/hr, PT/FT (866) 639-RICH www.athome4ever.com

AMHERST LSSE SUMMER EMPLOYMENT Day Camp Counselors (must be 18 yrs of age) Pool - Lifeguards, W.S.I. (s), and cashiers. Part time Summer Musical Theather Institute Counselor(s). Part time Asst. for Hot Summer Nights Film & Music Series. Summer Registration Clerk Special Events Coordinator. Applications available at: Human Resources 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst, MA 01002 E.O.E

CAMPUS SUMMER JOB Full-time opportunity, Visitors Center, June-August. Competitive hourly rate. Call 5-3480 for information. See also display ad.

Wanted 24 UMass Underclassmen to take part in 45 minute survey. Also coordinator position. For details call 1-800-573-3309

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

FOR SALE

Kona Mt. Bike - Good for petite rider. Call for details. 413-397-8999

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

INSTRUCTION

Step Aerobics, Cardio Kickboxing, Circuit Training. Five week program only $20. Starts April 8. Sponsored by UMass Housing. Call 5-1962

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 3 bedroom apt. June, July + August. Call 549-9940

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st Call for info. 549-1988

Two Bedroom Apartment in the Boulders for information call 256-4782

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

Starting June 1st. 2 big Bdrms. Spacious living area. On bus route. Washer/dryer and dishwasher. 2 people only. Call 256-1809

Sunderland. 2bedroom apartment. Avail. June-August, with option for following year. $300+/month per person. Very spacious-great deal! Call Bryan 413-665-7922

TRAVEL

FLY 4STANDBY...FLY 4 CHEAP! Europe $169 o/w (+tx) Lon, Fra, Mad, Ams, Par, & more 4STANDBY.COM or 800-326-2009

Your Ad could be RIGHT here!!! The Collegian Classifieds 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 3 Hartford
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 37 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS 57 Hartford
13 - NBC 22 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMASS Classroom Channel
16 - WB 59 New Haven
17 - ESPN2
18 - UMASS TV (Purbrook Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Closed to Cable
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Turner
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 3, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Survivor MD" (N)		Frontline "Organ Farm" (N)		Sports News	Prostate Canc
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Copperfield! Tornado of Fire		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		48 Hours "Campus Insecurity"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Copperfield! Tornado of Fire		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		48 Hours "Campus Insecurity"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	About Joan	NYPD Blue "Flight of Fancy"		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Reunion" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fighting Fitz	DAG (N)	Fraser	Three Sisters	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date	Blind Date	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Reunion" (In Stereo)		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Fighting Fitz	DAG (N)	Fraser	Three Sisters	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus	Dark Angel (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fighting Fitz	DAG (N)	Fraser	Three Sisters	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Survivor MD" (N)		Frontline "Organ Farm" (N)		Charlie Rose	(In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Spin City	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	About Joan	NYPD Blue "Flight of Fancy"		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Frasier	Frasier	"Copycat" (1995, Suspense) Sigourney Weaver				Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at Utah Jazz (Live)					Inside NBA	Daily Show	"Boyz N the Hood" (1991)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Turnaround	Biography: Sal Mineo		City Confidential		Investigative Reports		Law & Order	"Paranoia"
CNN	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"The Witches of Eastwick" (1987, Comedy) Jack Nicholson				Bellebobs	Bellebobs	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52	Wild Discovery		Wild Discovery	Alaskan Wild	Prosecutors-Justice		New Detectives		FBI Files "Deadly Trek"		Justice Files
ESPN	53	Sportscenter		Sportscentury	Pete Rose	Wonderful World of Golf (N)				Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	29	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Sudden Terror: The Hijacking of School Bus No. 17" (1996)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Celebrity	Celebrity	Cribs	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Andy Dick (N)	Undressed	Fanatic Under
NICK	34	Oddparents	Chkdoy	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	35	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "The Gray"		Outer Limits	Essence of Life	"The Temp" (1993, Suspense)		Timothy Hutton. (In Stereo)		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	26	Greatest Martial Artist		Secrets of Forensic Science		Trauma: Life in the ER		Critical Incident: 48 Hours		Misdiagnosis of Death (N)		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	54	ER "Fire in the Belly" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Flesh & Blood"		"Color of Night" (1994, Suspense) Bruce Willis, Jane March						"Single White Female" (1992, Suspense)
USA	55	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Silent Service" (In Stereo)		Eco-Challenge Borneo (N)		"Urban Legend" (1998, Horror) Jared Leto. (In Stereo)				Martin	Martin
HBO	63	Real Sports				"Ghostbusters" (1984, Comedy) Bill Murray. "PG"				"Here on Earth" (2000, Romance) Chris Klein. "PG-13"		Sopranos "University"
MAX	65	(5:00) "Intern"		"All the Right Moves" (1983) Tom Cruise. "R"		"Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith. "PG-13"						"First Knight" (1995, Adventure) Sean Connery. "PG-13"
SHOW	69	(5:45) "Porn Cadillac" (1989, Comedy) Clint Eastwood. "PG-13"				"The Faculty" (1998, Horror) Jordana Brewster. "R"				Resurrection Blvd. "Hermanos"		Queer as Folk

Dilbert By Scott Adams

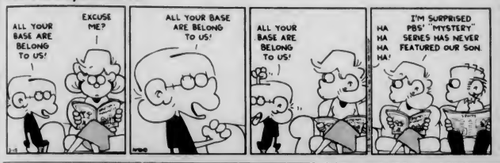
I'M PROMOTING YOU TO PRESIDENT OF OUR DOT-COM SUBSIDIARY.
YOUR JOB IS TO FIRE EVERYONE.
WOULD I GET A RAISE?
HOW DOES A BILLION SHARES OF STOCK SOUND?

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

MMM, SWEETIE, YOU SMELL WONDERFUL.
I DON'T KNOW WHAT THIS NEW SCENT IS THAT YOU'RE WEARING, BUT...
HUBBA, HUBBA, ROWRWR!
DID MOM TELL YOU SHE SPILLED YOUR BOTTLE OF "MANLY WOODSMAN" COLOGNE TODAY?
YES, AND LET'S NOT GO THERE, OK?

Dilbert By Scott Adams

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

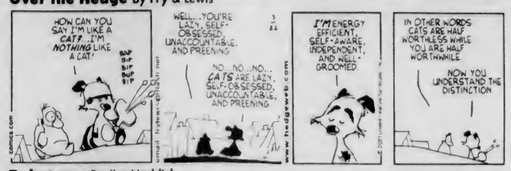


ALL YOUR BASE ARE BELONG TO US!
EXCUSE ME?
ALL YOUR BASE ARE BELONG TO US!
ALL YOUR BASE ARE BELONG TO US!
HA HA HA HA!
I'M SURPRISED PBS' "MYSTERY" SERIES HAS NEVER FEATURED OUR SON

The Masked Dropout By Bob Hewitt

Masked Dropout by Bob Hewitt
©2001
I'M REALLY EXCITED ABOUT US!
IT FEELS GREAT...
NOBODY REALIZES THAT EVERY RELATIONSHIP ENDS IN 1 OF 2 WAYS...
BREAK UP OR DEATH.
I HOPE OUR RELATIONSHIP ENDS IN DEATH!
ME TOO!
TO HAVE HIGH EXPECTATIONS IN THE BEGINNING OF A RELATIONSHIP!
I'M LEANING TOWARDS BREAK UP

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



HOW CAN YOU SAY I'M LIKE A CAT? I'M NOTHING LIKE A CAT!
BAP BAP BAP BAP BAP
WELL, YOU'RE LAZY, SELF-OBSESSED, UNACCOUNTABLE, AND PREENING
NO, NO, NO... CATS ARE LAZY, SELF-OBSESSED, UNACCOUNTABLE, AND PREENING
I'M ENERGY EFFICIENT, SELF-AWARE, INDEPENDENT, AND WELL-GROOMED
IN OTHER WORDS CATS ARE HALF WORTHLESS WHILE YOU ARE HALF WORTHWHILE
NOW YOU UNDERSTAND THE DISTINCTION

Robotman By Jim Meddick

YOU HAVE PREVAILED YOU AND THE FEMALE ANDROID ARE NOW FREE TO LEAVE TRISKELION ROBOTMAN!
ROBA!
ROBOTMAN! YOU DID IT! YOU WON OUR FREEDOM!
NOW YOU CAN COME WITH ME BACK TO EARTH AND I CAN INTRODUCE YOU TO ALL MY FRIENDS AND ROBA, WHY ARE YOU CRYING?

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

BANG BANG BANG BANG
NEXT TIME I'LL TRY TO KISS HER GOODNIGHT INSTEAD OF JUST STARING AT HER FOR HALF A MINUTE BEFORE BRUSHING MYSELF

Quote of the Day

"M&M's are the sweetest thing in the world."

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 44 LOW: 26	HIGH: 49 LOW: 28	HIGH: 53 LOW: 33

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 20-April 19) – You may be neglecting those closest to you in favor of certain aspirations. Could it be that your own desires are leading you astray?
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have trouble winding down after what is likely to prove a busy and exciting day. Numerous opportunities offer you novelty at this time.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may find yourself becoming involved in the affairs of others at this time – on a wider and wider scale.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) –You must be sure to take advantage of opportunities to mix with others today – both professionally and socially.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You'll find yourself front-and-center today, whether you like it or not. Now you'll learn if you have what it takes to be a true leader.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Tensions on the homefront are the result of financial complications you've not been addressing with maximum attention.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – This is a good day to indulge in those endeavors which ignite your passions. After dark, adventure may beckon. You must employ common sense.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may feel as though others are holding you back or restricting your personal growth, but in fact you're curbing your own progress.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) –You may find it difficult to restrict yourself to the usual endeavors today. You're in the mood for some adventure. Go out and find it!
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You may have to forego your usual Sunday entertainment today in order to tend to some last-minute business and put the workweek to bed.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You will very likely have an excellent reason to keep things sort and sweet today – in order to get on to bigger and better things.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You'll feel increased pressure today to give to others those things only you can provide. Be sure to pace yourself and guard against exhaustion.

MONKEY-BOX BY PBEJ

"SHE'S A LITTLE STRANGE," THE CHIPMUNK THOUGHT, "BUT WE ARE HAVING FUN PLAYING WITH HER TINY STRING TELEPHONE."

© 2001 www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Meatball (B)

Curried Vegetable Couscous (vegan)

Garden Burger (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Fried Chicken (F, H, W)

DINNER

Meatloaf with Mushroom Gravy (B, H, W)

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian) (B)

Mandarin Tofu (vegan)

Mandarin Chicken (F)

Potato Mushroom Delight (vegetarian) (H, W)

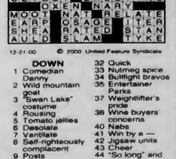
Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Mark Holloway, Loina Erde
Copy Editor	David Toupes
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	John Dicker, Riki Akcid

WE DELIVER DELI
Boar's Head Brand
SUGAR BONES
Claudia's Cafe
One East Pleasant St. (Amherst Carriage Shops)
549-5663
We accept OCMP

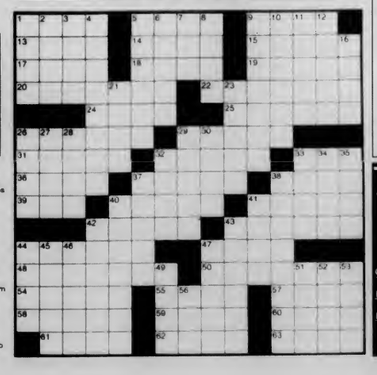
ACROSS
1 Young foxes
5 Sheik's attire
9 You could hear — drop
13 Border on
14 Willowy
15 — Jessica Parker
17 Himalayan emprise
18 South American country
19 Work very hard
20 Commuter's home
22 Sparkle
24 Actor Schroder
25 Exit
26 Looks at the books
29 Very small
31 Looks pleased
32 Dreads
34 Kind of scene
36 Quite excited
37 Delicious
38 Glen
39 Slimpy's toon pal
40 Prices
41 More agreeable
42 Harbors
43 Frank
44 Grills
47 Depose
49 Holiday item
50 Squeaked
54 Ms. Lucci
55 Nowhere near
57 Actor Cooper
58 Pack rat
59 Celebration
60 Fashion magazine
61 Minus
62 Corset stiffener
63 Fruit part

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



12-21-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Comedian Danny
2 Wild mountain goat
3 "Swan Lake" costume
4 Rousing
5 Tomato jellies
6 Dieselate
7 Ventilate
8 Self-righteously complacent
9 Poets
10 Mere
11 It's a snt
12 Cathedral parts
16 His and —
21 Scraps
23 Suspicious
26 Petri-dish medium
27 Be persuasive
28 Singer Celine
29 Quizzes
30 Has a snack
32 Quick
33 Nutmeg spice
34 Bullfight bravos
35 Entertainer Parks
37 Weightlifter's pride
38 Wine buyers' concerns
40 Nabs
41 Win by a —
42 Jigsaw units
43 Cheer
44 "So long" and "ciao"
45 Kind of route
46 Relish-tray item
47 Florida citrus center
49 Jokes
51 Cabbagelike plant
52 Gardner of mysteries
53 Did a salon job
56 Pudgy



A Year in Style!
Thank you.
From the warm welcome at our first opening in New York to your support at every new store all over the country, it's been a beautiful year.
What can we say? You've been great! And we promise to keep bringing you high fashion at great prices.
See you around!
Blouse $19
ANNIVERSARY OFFERS:
BUY ONE GET ONE FREE ON SELECTED ITEMS LISTED BELOW*
Ladies
Men
Teens
Underwear
Children
Baby
*Free item must be of equal or lesser value.
1 year
www.hm.com

Turn to Arts for the review of Ben Harper's live release

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

ARTS p. 6

Junior pitcher Jesse Santos and the Minutemen blanked MAAC foe Fairfiled in their home opener, 11-0 at Earl Lorden Field.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 108 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, April 4, 2001

Reparations come far 'too late'

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Right wing conservative and former Black Panther David Horowitz addressed a mixed crowd of approximately 400 students and faculty members at the University of Massachusetts about slavery reparations and his recent controversial newspaper advertisement.

The air of tension was thick yesterday at the Republican Club sponsored event, as students entered to a heavy police and security presence all entrants were forewarned that any protest would lead to immediate ejection.

Horowitz himself addressed the necessity for increased security apologizing to audience members who simply came to hear a different point of view, explaining that some rather not hear information that they deemed offensive.

"Anyone can come up and give their viewpoint and point out what they disagree with, but instead on campuses across the country we have name calling, we have protests, we have editors refusing to print an advertisement, that's a political ad, that's paid for," Horowitz explained. "How is this possible? What ideas are so dangerous that college students and faculty can't hear them?"

Increased access to knowledge and an alternative viewpoint on racial reparations is what Horowitz explained as his motivation for both introducing the advertisement to collegiate publications and speaking on liberal campuses across the country.

"The reality is much, much more complex than the rhetoric swirling around your heads that is being spoon-fed to you by your professors," Horowitz explained to the students in the audience. "I was talking bluntly [in the advertisement], because I wanted people to stop and think. Maybe I hit too hard, maybe I closed everyone's minds. I am out here to do two things, I am out here to get college students to think and I am out here to expose the reactionary left wing."

According to Horowitz, the elimination of specific ideas, and limiting the freedom to express them, was a form of discrimination that caused individuals to be treated unfairly. He explained that protestors, rather than addressing the need for an open dialogue about the issue of slavery reparations, simply sought to crush discussion.

"To protect people from ideas or even speech is to treat them like children. I wouldn't want to be treated like a child, this infantizes people," Horowitz said.

TA SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN
David Horowitz spoke in the Student Union Ballroom, along with heightened security, including his own personal guards.

1B SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN
Due to the intense controversy over David Horowitz, the republican club assisted in security by performing bag checks.

"This is what protests are, they are just tantrums. You say something that [protestors] disagree with and instead of arguing back they have a tantrum."

Overall, Horowitz explained that he was not against reparations for any group, citing Jewish people incarcerated in Germany during World War II as more than justified in receiving reparations – however, he commented that he simply felt that reparations for slavery came along too late.

"I certainly believe that reparations for slavery is entirely morally justified. I believe that reparations should have been paid to the freed slaves, 40 acres and a mule or something, but nothing could be made up for the crime of slavery," he said. "There is nothing that can be done for those people that suffered, it is too late, to the slaves and their children, the immediate victims of slavery, it is too late, they are not around to receive them."

The problem, Horowitz explained was that anyone who tried to address the issue of improving conditions and spoke negatively about reparations was immediately thought to be racist.

"And there is a silent generation on our campuses now as well, but the intimidating word is the "R" word," Horowitz said. "If you are accused of racism, and somebody says your ideas are racist, and somebody attacks a college newspaper for being a vehicle of bigotry because it prints an ad that they don't like, that is an idea – and it is a very powerful one."

"The world is full of assholes and you can't outlaw them it just isn't going to work. Believe me there are racists everywhere and there always will be."

- David Horowitz

He asked the audience to be open to different points of view, and rather than simply addressing the issue of slave reparations, to focus its energies on issues such as inner-city living conditions and how to supply all people with better education. He explained that there would always be racism, but that people should keep an open mind and not immediately condemn new ideas to racist lore.

"The world is full of assholes and you can't outlaw them, it just isn't going to work," he said. "Believe me there are racists everywhere and there always will be."

Horowitz's reasons against reparations

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

David Horowitz, who spoke at the University of Massachusetts yesterday, has recently become known for his advertisement "10 Reasons Why Reparations for Blacks are a Bad Idea, and Racist Too." Horowitz sent the ad to collegiate newspapers nationwide in hopes bypassing editorial controls and getting his views into the public light. The maneuver met with mixed results.

Papers like the Harvard Crimson and the Massachusetts Daily Collegian refused to run the ad. The Crimson did, however, run an article about the ad, summarizing its points. Other papers ran the ad with occasionally disastrous consequences. The Brown Daily Herald had most of its newspapers stolen the day that it ran the ad. Protests claiming racism ensued. The University of Wisconsin Badger Herald ran the ad and, after similar protests, its editor was asked to step down.

Below is a summary of Horowitz's ten points as to why slave reparations, in his own words, are "factually tendentious, morally incoherent and racially incendiary."

1. It is unclear who owes blacks a debt, if any is owed at all. Horowitz argues that there is no causal evidence that whites harmed blacks, especially before the United States was formed. Thereby, it is unfair for the United States to be expected to pay for this debt. He concludes by saying that Africans and dark-skinned Arabs were the first to enslave blacks, not whites.

2. Whites were not the only people to benefit from slavery and the implication that they were is "anti-white racism." Horowitz reasons that if slave labor created wealth for all Americans, then it did so for black Americans as well. This latter group, according to Horowitz, includes free blacks in the antebellum United States and even the descendants of slaves. He says the fact that the Afican-American community is the 10th most prosperous "nation" in the world proves the above.

3. Only a tiny majority of whites ever owned slaves, even in the South at the height of slavery (one in five whites).

4. Most of the United States' population are descendants of post-Civil War immigrants. That is, most people (whites and otherwise) have no direct connection to slavery.

5. The historical precedents used to justify reparations – namely the Jews and the Japanese-Americans – do not apply in the situation of blacks. Whereas the Jews and the Japaneses who received reparations were individuals who actually suffered hurt, the reparations for blacks would be for all blacks.

6. There is no way to prove, definitively, that all blacks in America suffer economically as the result of slavery and/or discrimination. Horowitz uses the examples of Oprah Winfrey and reparation defenders, Henry Louis Gates and Randall Robinson, to prove that not all blacks have been victims. In perhaps his most controversial statement, Horowitz claims that the existence of a black middle-class means that the black underclass exists because of "failures of individual character" not slavery or a system of discrimination.

7. The reparations will create a renewed sense of grievance among blacks and send a bad message to black communities. The reparations will burden the community with a crippling sense of victimhood.

8. Many blacks have already "been paid" in the form of welfare benefits and racial preference (ie. In contracts, job placements and education admissions).

9. Blacks owe white America a debt for freeing them from slavery. Slavery existed long before the United States and, without white Englishmen, the slave trade would have never ended.

10. Blacks have an enormous stake in America's history and the reparations would only serve to further isolate them from this history and the American community.

Protests from both inside and outside plague Horowitz lecture

By Mark Ramirez
Collegian Staff

While David Horowitz spoke to a packed Student Union Ballroom, about 80 students gathered on the Student Union steps at 12:40 p.m. and listened to several people who spoke out against his views.

Horowitz, invited to speak by the University of Massachusetts Republican Club, has stirred up controversy by attempting to place advertisements that outlined arguments against reparations for slavery in college newspapers.

Nicole Manganelli, one of the students who organized the rally and introduced the speakers, said that the rally was not protesting Horowitz speaking at UMass, but was concerned with presenting a different point of view. The objective was to talk about white people's role as agents of racism and taking responsibility for it.

The first speaker was Andrew Spagnoli from MassPIRG.

"We have to tell him he's wrong," he said. "Anyone who tells you slavery is over, that exploitation is over, is wrong." He cited what he called environmental racism, which manifests itself in how blacks are made to live in unhealthy places. He said that slavery and racism aren't old issues. "It's something we should do something about."

Peter Thomas, president of the Graduate Employee Organization, took the microphone next.

"We're gathered because we've got a racist inside," he said, gesturing towards the Student Union

See student response Page 3

Ballroom. He said that UMass has "homegrown problems. We have no need to import racists."

He explained that UMass programs like distance education and the valedictorian/salutatorian program benefit whites. The state legislature, President William Bulger and the UMass Board of Trustees, he said, are racist. Referring to the Collegian's April Fool's Day issue, he asked, "Did anyone laugh? It's sick."

Professor Ernest Allen of the University's Afro-American Studies Department issued rebuttals to several of Horowitz's arguments against reparations for slavery.

He said, "For half his life, Horowitz has been fighting himself, against ideas he promulgated in the '60s." Allen said people who do that "are usually sent to professional people."

Allen disputes Horowitz's assertion that there was no one group responsible for slavery. "Euro-Americans and Europeans were the primary benefactors," he said.

That African-Americans owe a debt to white Americans for freeing them is an interesting argument, Allen said. "A man comes into your house, cuts off your fingers, gives them back to you, and you're supposed to be happy?"

"Black people are already separate from America," said Allen, in terms of income and housing. To say that reparations for slavery would separate blacks from the rest of the country, he said, "blames the victim for the crime."

Christopher Rue and Sharon Grossman, two student activists, also spoke. Rue exhorted students to not allow racism to spread. Grossman, a Hillel student, said that Horowitz was expressing racist sentiments.

Professor Arlene Avakian of the Women's Studies Program said that

Turn to PROTEST, page 3

TL SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN
Vice Chancellor Javier Cevallos spoke with police officials outside the lecture, where protestors had gathered.

Cultural Events Calendar

SOCIAL

UMASS – The Puerto Rican Cultural Night will take place from 7 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Friday, April 6 in the Campus Center Auditorium. There will be traditional Puerto Rican food, a cash bar, and a special performance by salsa singer Luis Damon. Admission is $8 students, $10 general public. For more information, call Boricuas Unidos at (413) 572-0951.

UMASS – The Cambodian Students Association presents "Cambodian New Years," with the Golden Star Band, traditional dances and music, food and much more in the Campus Center Auditorium Saturday, April 7, from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., reception 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. party. Food will be served at 6 p.m. Semi-formal attire is required. Tickets are $7 general public, $5 students. For more information, call 545-9689.

FILM/VIDEO SCREENINGS

UMASS – A multicultural film festival, "Border Crossing: Cinema and Video at Century's Turn," will be held on dates from Feb. 16 to May 10. The series highlights the fluidity and permanence of artistic, technical, geographic, cultural, political and personal borders and includes film and side screenings and panel presentations. On April 5 at 7:30 p.m. in Herter 251 will be "Thumbsucker and Dolma: Cross Cultural Identities" presented by the director Caroline Babayan. Five Armenian women's stories are interwoven to shape a collective narrative about the intergenerational transmission of trauma, the complexity of silence and the abiding power of family and friendship. For more information call Film Studies at 545-3659.

RELIGIOUS

AMHERST – Shabbat services are held on Fridays at 6 p.m., followed by Shabbat dinner at 7:15 p.m. in Hillel House.

LECTURE/DISCUSSION

UMASS – David Valentine, a Visiting Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Barnard/CU, will present "The Transgender Imaginary: The Problem of 'Gender' and 'Sexuality' in Queer Theory," in the Campus Center room 904-08 at 12:30 p.m. Valentine will draw from ethnographic research with transidentified people in New York City while arguing for a more inward understanding gender and sexuality as separate elements of human experience.

AMHERST – Eugene Pogany, author of In My Brother's Image, a true story of experience in Budapest during the Holocaust, will speak at the Jewish Community of Amherst on Sunday, April 8 at 7 p.m. in commemoration of Holocaust Remembrance Day.

AMHERST – Bülent Heitler will speak on "One God, One Goal: Jewish and Islamic Approaches to the Divine," on Thursday, April 5 at 7 p.m. at the Alumni House, Amherst College. The event is open and presented by NOOR, an Amherst College student organization directed at raising positive awareness of Islam and Muslims in Western Massachusetts.

AMHERST – Imam and Mrs. Richard Miller will speak on "Plunging into the Heart of Islam: Sufism, The Path to Where Soul Meets Body" on Tuesday, April 10 at 5 p.m. at Chapin Chapel, Amherst College. The event is free and presented by NOOR, an Amherst College student organization directed at raising positive awareness of Islam and Muslims in Western Massachusetts.

SOUTH HADLEY – Hampshire College's Human Rights Group and Kitana present "Memory, Healing and Justice: Creating a New South Africa," a video and interactive lecture by Fr. Michael Lapsley, an Anglican Priest, African National Congress (ANC) member and letter bomb survivor. The event will take place at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, April 10 in the Main Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College. Lapsley will discuss South Africa's transformation process: from a society built on harsh racial oppression and segregation to one built on racial equality, in which those who were violently oppressed a few years ago are now in the political majority.

NORTHAMPTON – "Journeys of Discovery, Journeys of Rebirth,: Migration and Displacement in Africa and the Diaspora," a round-table discussion on migration and displacement focusing on identity, will take place at 5:30 p.m. in the Nelson Library Browsing Room at Smith College on Wednesday, April 11.

NORTHAMPTON – Layli Miller-Bashir, author of "Do They Hear You When You Cry?" will speak on female genital mutilation in Africa at 7:30 p.m. in Stoddard Auditorium of Smith College, on Wednesday, April 11.

UMASS – Regina Kunzel, Professor of History at Williams College, will present "Situating Sex: The Problem of Prison Culture in the Mid Century U.S." in the Campus Center room 904-08 at 12:30 p.m. on Thursday, April 12. Kunzel will discuss the notion of "situational homosexuality" and the relationship of prison sexual culture to the formation of a modern sexual regime.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Future of Feminist Scholarship? A Glimpse at the Third World. Work in Progress," by Chandra Mohanty will be given by Kum-kum Bhavnani, Senior Editor of Meridians and Visiting Professor of Women's Studies at Smith College, on Monday, April 16 at 4:15 p.m. in Seelye 207.

AMHERST – "Of Rumi & Related Matters: Love & Beautiful Manners in the Sufi Path to God," on Saturday, April 14 at 2 p.m. at Johnson Chapel, Amherst College. The event is free and presented by NOOR, an Amherst College student organization directed at raising positive awareness of Islam and Muslims in Western Massachusetts.

UMASS – James Allan, a graduate student in Communications at UMass Amherst will present a lecture entitled, "And Baby Makes Three…Gay Men, Straight Women and the Parental Imperative in Film and Television" on Thursday, April 26 at 12:30 p.m. in the Campus Center room 904-08.

PERFORMANCE

SOUTH HADLEY – "Tango Mujer," a professional women's dance group, will be performing traditional tango with a twist on Thursday, April 5 and Friday, April 6 at the Kendall Studio Theatre at Mount Holyoke College at 8 p.m. The event will be sponsored by Residential Arts, a program of the Fine Arts Center at UMass Amherst.

UMASS & SMITH COLLEGE – New WORLD Theater's Future Aesthetics Project presents the intersections between theater and spoken word, performance poetry, hip-hop and youth culture. The final performance, featuring Caridad de la Luz, will be held at 7 p.m. in the Augusta Savage Gallery at UMass on April 5.

UMASS – "Stop Kiss" traces the experiences of Callie and Sarah, two young women who are dealing with all the usual young adult issues as well as falling in love with each other. The show explores the theme of honesty and the hostility of a homophobic society to such honesty. The show will take place at 8 p.m. in the Curtain Theater on April 5 through 7, and April 10 through 13. For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.

UMASS – "Nuyorican Stories" will be performed with sidesplitting humor by the members of Culture Clash, who blend poetry, dance, music and visual arts. The show will be performed at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday, April 19. For tickets, which range from $5 to $10, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.

UMASS – "Bugaku: Japanese Court Dance" will be performed by Arawana Hyashi and the Jo Ha Kyu ensemble on Thursday, April 19, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. This program in the spring finale of the Asian Dance and Music Program Series.

UMASS – "I Remember Mapa," a comical one-man show starring Alec Mapa, will be performed one night only at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on May 10. Based on his true-life experiences, the piece chronicles Mapa's colorful adventures through rise, fall and rebirth as a gay Filipino American actor in the entertainment industry. For tickets, which range from $5 to $10, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The Yellowjackets, a jazz group blending the sounds of rock, soul, bluegrass and orchestral music, will perform at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall for one time only on Saturday, April 7 at 8 p.m. For information, call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-2511.

SOUTH HADLEY – The first annual W.A.M. (Women and Music) festival, featuring Catie Curtis, Melissa Ferrick, Erica Wheeler, and Alix Olson, among others, will take place on Saturday, April 28 at Mount Holyoke College, beginning at 11 a.m. The event will include vendors as well as arts and crafts. Tickets are available at B-Side Records in Northampton, For the Record in Amherst, and all Strawberries stores.

EXHIBITIONS

NORTHAMPTON – Ongoing exhibition "The Strongest of Bonds: William Allan Neilson, Internationalism and Exiles at Smith College" will run through June 30 in the third floor of Neilson Library at Smith College.

NORTHAMPTON – "The Refugees," two life-sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck, can be viewed through May 28 in the third floor of Neilson Library at Smith College.

This calendar, which previews local events of interest to under-represented groups on campus and in the community, runs on Wednesdays. Submit notices of events to Tanya Mannes, Diversity Editor, and Chanel Dubofsky, Assistant Diversity Editor. Standard entry forms are available in the Collegian office.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Sigma Tau. It became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Collegian in 1976. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a community publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joliuti Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

STUDENT TRAVEL
EUROPE ON SALE!!!
London.....$385
Rome.....$418
Paris.....$388
Frankfurt.....$313
Rio de Janeiro...$651
Prague.....$458
San Jose.....$509
All fares are round-trip. Restrictions may apply. Subject to availability. Tax not included.
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
A great place to get contact lenses
Convenient hours and location
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

University of Massachusetts Boston
Exploring the Coastal Environment
May 29–June 28, 2001
This inquiry-based, hands-on program provides an introduction to maritime history, nautical science, oceanography, and coastal zone management. Highlights include a three-day research trip to Nantucket Island and a week-long voyage up the New England coast aboard the schooner Ernestina. Six undergraduate credits.
To learn more, contact:
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Corporate,Continuing and Distance Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston MA 02125-3393
UMASS BOSTON
617.287.7913
www.conted.umb.edu

Soul 2000 UMass Amherst Students Only College
By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday-Friday
(413) 549-0145

Atlantis
Behind Antonio's Pizza In Amherst
NO COVER $2 COVER AFTER 11 PM
WED: Funk, Soul, & Reggae"
FREE Nachos 10-11 pm
THURS: Straight Hip-Hop, No Chaser
DJs Double OC & XsO
FRI: "House on the Rocks"
with DJs Bon Bons & Salty
SAT: Hip-Hop and Reggae with DJ Trendz
"Ladies Night" - Ladies get in FREE
SUN: Open Mic - Open Turntable

Lame duck soupon plate at Fac. Senate

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The faculty senate convened on March 29 to discuss the declining number of periodicals in the W.E.B. Dubois Library and also what some senators called a "crisis in administration."

Suggestions came from the senate body that there be a meeting set up to address the unsteady administrative situation that currently exists following Chancellor David K. Scott's address regarding former Vice Chancellor for University Advancement Royster Hedgepeth.

"All of you should know that there is a lot of transition going on in the administration," Scott said. "There is bound to be turbulence in any transition."

He explained that Hedgepeth would not be replaced and that the UMass foundation would instead work very closely with the campus in order to form partnerships that could potentially eliminate the position for the future.

Some of faculty concern was also based upon the fact that Scott himself was a "lame duck" Chancellor. The suggestion was made that it may be more beneficial for the campus to appoint a permanent full-time Chancellor now to prevent the confusion that goes along with having a Chancellor that does not have full power.

A presentation was given by Director of Libraries Margo Crist focusing on the force cut of periodicals from shelves or what the library calls "a periodical crisis."

"We have been living with this for a number of years but we still call it a crisis," Crist explained.

The "crisis" has been caused by the escalating cost of periodical material to the library in a way that library yearly budget cannot keep up with the skyrocketing prices which will cause the library a loss of 31 percent of their materials.

"In serials the cost has gone up over 200 percent. This is nationally, not just UMass," Crist said. "The impact on our budget so far has not been positive."

She explained that these costs can be attributed to distribution monopolies and gradual cost increases over the years citing science journals as an area of dramatically increasing expense.

"In just maintaining what we have now we are looking at a five-to-10 percent annual increase in budget," she said. "They (companies) have kept things pretty much covered, they kept pushing the prices up and we just kept on paying."

Some possible solutions for bringing the cost of periodicals done to a manageable amount for libraries across the country have included faculty members taking control of the copywrite on their contributions to periodicals and faculty members across the country serving on boards that address the issues of escalating periodical costs.

In the meantime, the library has been doing everything possible to make the loss of certain periodicals less dramatic for the campus as a whole. Some of these plans include obtaining copies of periodicals from other schools and also only cutting periodicals that remain for the most part unused or used less that other materials.

Alaska still oily topic

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Staff

At this very moment there is an unmolested paradise in Alaska being called a vast wasteland by rich oil companies that want to dig for oil there. Lenny Kohm asks, "How can these companies call calving ground for caribou wasteland?" He explained that it is possible because they have the money to do so.

Lenny Kohm got started with the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as a photographer fourteen years ago. He passionately stated, "You're not supposed to lose objectivity [in photo journalism], but I lost [it] up there."

Kohm lived in California at the time. Upon returning home, "I was a different person when I came back. I couldn't stand the thought of this place being destroyed." He joked, "The reason this place is so important is because I said so."

The audience in room 803 of the campus center last night at 7 p.m. was of about forty people. Its members included students from Hampshire College, the student coalition, and MassPirg.

The speaker asked the crowd how many of them have ever been to the Artic Wildlife Refuge. The amount of people that raised their hands was zero. Yet, when he asked how many people have worked really hard at preserving it, half the room raised their hands. He told those involved, "We are facing our biggest threat now."

The Alaskan refuge is the largest is in the United States consisting of an astounding nineteen and a half million acres. It is also the last complete ecosystem left in the U.S. The coastal plain, where companies like Exxon and Sherron would like to drill for oil, is the biological heart of the ecosystem.

Why should we care? According to Kohm, "Because you own it." He did the math and figures everyone owns about sixteen square feet. "I know I don't want anyone drilling on my 16 sq. ft."

The refuge is known as "The Last Great Wilderness." Companies like Exxon, who once made eighty billion dollars in nine months, claims that they can go in and drill oil there without affecting the environment. But, Kohm will argue that idea.

There is a group of people living off of the caribou that breed in the foothills and wilderness of the refuge known as the Gwich'in. They are like family to Lenny Kohm – he now has two godsons from these people. The Gwich'in have basically adopted him. They gave him a name meaning "the little white man that never sleeps."

He once went on a ten-day trip with the Gwich'in. They told him that all he needed to bring with him was a knife and saltshaker; they were being completely serious. This group, whose name means "caribou people", rely on the caribou for meat, medicine, clothing, and tools. They have learned to use every part of the animal after hunting. The caribou herd, which is so vital to these people, would be threatened if corporations come and drill.

Companies such as Exxon, who once made eight billion dollars in nine months, does not need to drill at the refuge. The U.S.Pirg insists, "The four oil companies planning to drill in the Arctic Refuge must be convinced that it does not make sense to ruin one of America's last wild places for less than six month of oil."

If you would like more information on saving America's arctic, you can find it at the U.S.Pirg web site. The address is www.pirg.org/envirn/arctic/alert.htm.

Horowitz not as controversial as was thought to be

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Conflicting ideologies brought much debate after David Horowitz addressed some of his views about reparations for slavery at yesterday's lecture sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Republican Club.

At the conclusion of the speech, students lingered around the Student Union ballroom entrance either sharing their opinions on the issues that arose during Horowitz's lecture or listening to their peers.

Those who attended the event with an open mind felt some of their preconceived notions about Horowitz were not entirely correct, Senior political science major, Rachel Slomoitz, noted. "I didn't think he was as controversial as I expected him to be."

She admitted she was somewhat surprised to find Horowitz shared some of her views on reparations, including people who actually live through horrific events should be financially compensated, such as victims of the Holocaust.

"But I still agree that there should be reparations for the descendents of former American slaves," Slomoitz added.

This sort of sentiment delighted junior mathematics and economics major Dan Yagudin, a resident advisor at the Jewish center, Hillel House.

"The most important thing is that they [the Republican Club] brought Horowitz here," he explained, "Look around. This is getting people to talk about issues. His opinions are secondary."

Yagudin added that watching people debate about important issues was to see democracy at work. "It's wonderful," he said. "If this is what happens, bring him every week."

Others believed Horowitz's opinions to be the central issue, regardless of what conversations ensued. "Horowitz made a lot of random points with no real fact and had no effect on the audience," noted journalism major Aja Whitaker, but even she found some of his views reasonable.

For example, Horowitz commented that democrats, who have been in control of inner city school boards for the past fifty years, should be pressured into fixing problems within their districts rather than seeking an outside form of help.

"That was the one thing he said that had any truth," Whitaker stated, "It is something that needs to be examined."

Freshman economics major David Peterson, a member of the Republican Club, agreed with the majority of Horowitz's points but said he understands the shock value of his words is something to be taken into account.

"Personally, [Republican Club] just wanted people with open minds to attend the lecture, people who were just interested in what he had to say," Peterson explained, adding he was satisfied with the turnout.

There were also those who found Horowitz's stance confusing due to his past, for he was a student radical in the 1960's who worked with the Black Panther party.

"I don't understand how you can go from one extreme to the other," senior biology major Erica Browne remarked.

During the brief question and answer period at end of the lecture, Professor Michael Thelwell attempted to discuss Horowitz's past activist career with him in detail but was cut short of time.

Junior theater and pre-communication major Rachel S. Deleveaux felt this was done deliberately.

"[Horowitz] danced around all his questions," Deleveaux said, "because he knew Professor Thelwell was going to get into some deep rooted issues that he didn't have the answers for."

However Peterson disagreed, commenting Horowitz was on a tight schedule and not trying to avoid any questions.

Protest continues over towed vehicle

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

It was business as usual for the second straight day yesterday for Frank Melberg, the sophomore Arts & Sciences major vying desperately to get his impounded car back. Melberg is the student whose car was towed last week for being illegally parked in the horseshoe near Baker residence hall. He needs to earn $500 to pay off towing and ticketing fees to get the car back.

"We've raised just under $200," the proud Melberg proclaimed. The money is entirely earned by he and his three friends singing songs, and insisting to passersby the he truly needs his car back. Melberg is a pizza deliveryman, and insists that he can't get to work without his car.

Melberg said that students passing by seem to take the protest lightly, but usually lend them support. "The majority of students seem to be very optimistic about what we're doing," he said. "We haven't had anyone who has openly disagreed with us yet."

After questions arose surrounding Melberg's that his parking sticker was allegedly fraudulent, he tried to clarify. "The exact situation that occurred was that there was a problem with the sticker, and we had to repput the numbers on it, and that's against the rules."

He said when Parking Services told him that it was against the rules to change the numbers on the sticker he understood, but didn't have time to file an appeal. Therefore, the fine was lingering over his car when it was found in an illegal space. He assumes that Parking Services towed the car because the sticker was in fact fraudulent. "Regardless of whether or not they understand the situation," Melberg said. "They're not going to do anything to help me. I told them that I couldn't pay the fine, and they said that it was just too bad, and that's how the system works."

In order for Melberg to get his car back immediately, he must pay the entire fine up front. He can appeal it without paying the fine, but he is not allowed to have his car. He is also being charged a holding fee of $30 per day.

After the second day of protesting, Melberg said he has not heard anything from parking services. "I think we're going to stick with what we're doing right now until we hear from parking services," he announced. "If I expected to hear from them, I figured it'd take a couple of days."

In an article in yesterday's Collegian Student Government Association (SGA) Senator Michael Whitehouse mentioned a possibility of setting up a system where, if Melberg earns the $500 and wins his appeal, he would be able to donate that cash to the SGA to start a fund for UMass students who encounter this exact problem. Melberg officially said yesterday that this would be the ideal situation for him. "In the long run, I'd like to get the car back and win the appeals process," he said. "But obviously that's not a guarantee. If it happens, we're probably going to do something with that SGA fund."

Melberg wanted to acknowledge the student response that his uproar has caused over the last few days. "To the students, I say thank you," he said. "I hope they're not too annoyed, and it's a good buzz going about the campus. It's a really positive thing for students to be coming together, especially about Parking Services."

■ protest

continued from page 3

there has been "a consistent denial of racism in this country." It has been denied, she said, because it does not coincide with the principles of democracy. "White denial of slavery is part and parcel of the country we live in and its ideology." When racial incidents take place, said Avakian, "the first thing people in authority say is that it had nothing to do with race."

To claim that blacks should be grateful to white Christians for freeing them, she said, "is the most crazy idea that anyone can imagine. But it finds fertile ground in this country made crazy by the denials it has had to make."

Manganelli had hoped for a larger turnout, but believes that some people were uncomfortable with attending the event. "Anytime there is someone openly racist," she said, "it creates an unsafe environment."

Two UMass police offices kept watch over the rally, which ended at 1:05 p.m. Organizers announced plans to start an anti-racism group and encouraged participants to sign up. "We want to harness the energy from this protest," Manganelli said. Those interested in joining can contact her at coli@student.umass.edu.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
U-SAVE
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates (On bus route)
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.

Henna Arts & Supplies
10% off with this coupon!
413-256-3756

The Black Sheep
THE BLACK SHEEP has been serving the UMass community for over 15 years.
We are a delicatessen, all butter scratch bakery, gourmet food purveyor and full service caterer.
THE BLACK SHEEP is renowned for providing the most memorable and best tasting GRADUATION PARTIES in the Valley.
Stop by for a cup of coffee, overstuffed sandwich, or homemade dessert and see what we have to offer.
THE BLACK SHEEP
79 MAIN ST. AMHERST
253-3442
OCMP, VISA/MASTERCARD ACCEPTED.

FUN WORK
The Collegian is Hiring..

Banned in Florida
Slim Shady sit down

In an article on MTV.com, it was reported that, according to mayor Bud Asher, immensely popular rapper Eminem is no longer welcome to perform in the city of Daytona Beach, Fla.

Apparently Eminem participated in a free benefit concert for cable network BET last week at the popular spring break destination. There, along with Snoop Dogg, Nelly Tudacris and Missy Elliot, Eminem agreed to refrain from using profanity and lewd conduct in his show, since it was a free event open to the public. Asher was apparently outraged when Eminem defied his wishes by flooding his performance with profanities and drug references. "Evidently this guy is a renegade and does whatever he wants," Asher said.

Putting all musical talents aside, Eminem is arguably one of the most despicable human beings in today's celebrity spotlight. He has no respect for authority or regard for common courtesy and practical law. He is a man who makes his living by offending people, getting arrested, and basking in the glorious press it bring him. Be it an act or not, Eminem's job is to be offensive. That's what puts food on his table.

You don't need to listen to him for more than ten seconds to realize that he's not the type of person you want representing your city. So why on earth did Asher invite him to make an appearance that would so blatantly tarnish whatever good name the city supposedly carries?

The whole incident borderlines on an issues of censorship that is just blatantly ridiculous. Inviting Eminem to an event like this, and asking him not to use profanity or lewd conduct is asking him to revamp the act that made him popular. The fans in attendance of the concert expect this behavior of him because that is what he is famous for. This may not be ethical, but it's certainly true.

It is fascinating to wonder what Asher assumed Eminem was going to do, if he was not going to be lewd. To presume that Eminem is going to change his entire lyrical content because the mayor of the city he is visiting is absurd. Asher has no right to dictate what Eminem sings about.

Asher writes off the entire situation it by placing the blame solely on Eminem. The mayor denies any prior knowledge of the rapper's history. He says, "Evidently this guy's a renegade." like Eminem is something we've all never heard of, and is being discovered for the first time, as if Eminem has not gone out and offended every single person four-million times before. Asher makes it seem like he has just done us all a favor by warning us of the unknown mystery evil that calls himself Slim Shady. Either Asher is lying, and knew fully that Eminem could not be trusted, even after making him agree not to be vulgar; or Asher is an idiot, living under the deepest planted rock in Florida completely null and void of any knowledge about a single element in popular culture. If Bud Asher has honestly never heard of Eminem before, should he really be the political leader of a town so dependent on the influx of income it receives by millions of college tourists each year?

Eminem may be one of the most appalling, loathsome and classless individuals society has to offer, but criticizing him for acting like it because you sincerely expected him not to, will obviously leave you in the limpeccable situation of looking like a fool. Asher should receive no sympathy from anyone about the awful tarnishing Eminem plagued on the virgin ears of the citizens of Daytona Beach. Inviting Eminem there was making his bed, now he has to lie in it. Sorry Bud, but if you're going to bring a dog into the house, don't get pissed off if it chews up the furniture.

"Darrrryyyyyllll! Darrrryyyyyllll!"

DANA OPPEDISANO

Oct. 25, 1986 was a memorable night in the life of the now infamous Darryl Strawberry. Sitting on the bench in the bottom of the 10th inning at Shea Stadium, his New York Mets trailing the greatest baseball franchise of all time – the Boston Red Sox – by a score of 5-3, it looked as though the first World Series of the promising young outfielder's career would end in defeat.

Hey, it wasn't that bad. After all, this was the young Darryl Strawberry, still years away from his numerous accusations of tax evasion ('1994), paternity suits ('89), domestic abuse ('93), failed child support payments ('95, '96), extended stays at alcohol rehab centers ('90, '94), testing positive for cocaine ('95), being caught with cocaine ('99, '00), and solicitation of a prostitute ('98). This is to say nothing of his grueling cheap with arthroscopic knee surgery, his several suspensions from Major League Baseball, his contemplating suicide, the removal of 16 inches of his large intestine due to a two and a half inch tumor, and his bouts with colon cancer and chemotherapy.

As I said, this was young Darryl, and as he sat in the back of the Mets dugout, his Mr. T. jewelry glinting in the reflection of the flash bulbs poised to capture the first Sox title since 1918, a small smile crept across his face. After all, he could leave Shea in his expensive luxury car, smoke a little of the crack he still hadn't been caught with, whack out a few lines of top-choice coke, drink a case of Old Milwaukee, go beat some women, and maybe even get laid. Not by a hooker, though (that wasn't until '99). Not by his wife Lisa, mind you, after all, in just two more months, she would accuse him of breaking her nose after a game he played in October '86. No, no, of course not. With the money he was making in a town like New York, and the type of drugs that he was into, he could get women much more wholesome – the good old-fashioned crack whore!

Of course, most people in this area know what happened next. Mookie Wilson hit a grounder that my 73-year-old grandmother could have fielded cleanly, the Mets won the game and eventually the Series, downing Sox fans' hopes for another year (or 15 and counting). The Mets won the game, which means that Straw would have celebrated that night – oh God, now that's scary!

So why the big to do about Strawberry? Well, on March 29, Strawberry disappeared from a drug treatment center in Tampa. Good old Darryl was wearing an electronic monitor (as penalty for his $50 offer to a sweet girl who was just trying to put herself through college) that indicated that he had disappeared, but no one seemed to know where. Early on Monday, police said that they were investigating an unconfirmed report that Strawberry was kidnapped and being held in Orlando, where his captors were demanding $50,000 for his safe return.

Which prompts the question – what kind of dumb-ass kidnapper is going to nab Darryl Strawberry, of all people? It's true, a citizen who is as highly respected and idolized for his display of morals and family values as Strawberry is, you could certainly ask for more than a lousy $50 grand for the guy's return. Secondly, does anybody else out there see this – Strawberry staking out the Orlando Police Department, disguising his voice over a cell phone from under a palm tree to ask, "Yeah, that's right, I want $50,000 now or Straw gets it! Just so you guys don't find out my true identity, why don't you just deposit the money directly into Strawberry's own personal account? Yeah, yeah, that's right... what? No! Do not tell his ex-wife or any of his five babies' mama's the account number!"

You want to know what the saddest thing about all of this really is? I mean, besides the drug abuse and assault and batteries and hookers and pimps and what ever else is in this guy's closet? He actually was a pretty decent ball player. He hit at least 25 home runs in his first nine seasons in the league, he's an eight-time All-Star, he's won titles with both the Mets and Yankees, and he once seemed to be a sure thing for the Hall of Fame. Now, it looks as though the only place this guy is a sure thing for is six by ten and has vertical bars coming down from the ceiling. Florida officials, by the way, most certainly do want to press charges.

In a day and age when any public figure is placed under intense scrutiny, and athletes perhaps worst of all, Strawberry may take the proverbial cake. It's true, nobody's perfect, but nobody may be as lucky as Strawberry has been, either. If this guy wasn't a professional baseball player, would he even be given the luxury of house arrest in sunny downtown Tampa? Jesus, this guy's living better than I do, and he's still popping out every now and then to live it up. Why can't baseball players just shut the hell up, play ball, and behave themselves? Hello, Carl Everett? The sad truth is that some people may even look up to Strawberry for his exploits than his statistics. I know that my boy Jay loves Straw even more now that he's gone mental. Although they are both crackheads, so I think it's more a common interest issue than anything else.

It really is too bad about Strawberry, because I honestly did like the guy back in the day. It's a shame too see, because I wish we could just go back to the days when we hated Darryl simply because he looked so vulnerable out there in right field. Now, is there anything you could possibly like him for? As they said back in Fenway – "Darrrrryyyyyllllll! Darrrrryyyyyllllll!"

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian Columnist.

LIFE IN HELL
©2001 BY MATT GROENING
WE NEED TO HAVE A LONG DEEP DISCUSSION ABOUT OUR RELATIONSHIP.
OR YOU COULD JUST TALK AT ME ABOUT ALL YOUR RESENTMENTS UNTIL MY EYES GLAZE OVER.
OR YOU COULD ENUMERATE MY MANY FAULTS WHILE I SIGH TO MYSELF.
OR YOU COULD WHINE PETULANTLY ABOUT ALL YOUR DISAPPOINTMENTS WITH ME WHILE I PRETEND TO LISTEN.
OR YOU COULD RANT ABOUT ALL YOUR HURT FEELINGS WHILE I SUFFER IN SILENCE.
OR YOU COULD NAG ME ABOUT EVERYTHING THAT BUGS YOU FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE, WHILE I SLOWLY GET MORE HOPELESSLY DEPRESSED.
OR YOU COULD HARANGUE ME WITH ENDLESS COMPLAINTS, RANGING IN INTENSITY FROM NASAL MUTTERING TO FULL-BLOWN SCREAMING.
OR WE COULD CHERISH EACH OTHER WITH THE MUTUAL LOVE, PASSION, DELIGHT, AND INTIMACY THAT WE FEEL DEEP DOWN INSIDE.
YOU DON'T HAVE TO GET SARCASTIC.

...doesn't mean you can't enjoy the collegian for years and years and years and years and years* to come

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
Your friend for life.

*This guarantee is not applicable if: You smoke like crazy, you bake in the sun, you run aimlessly into traffic for no reason, you play Russian roulette, or you intentionally put yourself in a 'tornado of fire'. Sorry David Copperfield. The Collegian is no friend of yours.

What's in a joke?

SAM WILKINSON

Quick story: sitting at the Hangar with friends discussing the possibilities of a woman as president, a friend wondered if, because president's always have a First Lady, would a female president have a First Lord? I quipped that in Wyoming or other conservative states, the female president would be introduced and then the real president would be introduced.

Sexist? Of course.

But what was I making fun of, the idea of a woman as president or the reaction of those who would see a woman as president? The latter. Or at least, that's what I was assuming, and the people I was with assumed the same thing. Without complimenting myself, they snickered at my tasteless joke.

It's April 4 here at the Collegian. That means it's three days after April Fool's day and, in this particular case of calendar irregularity, five days after we ran our annual phony issue, The Morning Wood.

The reaction has been... deafening. Almost.

I wasn't here when the issue was released, (as Will Hunting once said, 'I had to see about a girl') but I gather that there were no serious complaints Friday. Or Sunday, when I was driving back to the great frozen North. Monday at work, nothing. No Letters to the Editor, no calls to complain, no angry visitors. Almost.

A flyer was delivered to the office by a friend – it read "We don't need RACISTS to visit UMass, we already have them here!" in big bold letters. Below those, "Visit the Collegian... Meet @ WEB DuBois Library Tuesday 4/3 11:30 AM." It was a threat – there's no denying that – but as the Managing Editor, who wrote some of the stories that most probably found seriously offensive, how do I respond?

Being honest, I didn't know how I was going to deal with those protestors if they came down. Our office certainly didn't know how to deal with it. We couldn't agree on what was truly offensive and what wasn't, we couldn't agree if we had to give ground or stand firm, we couldn't agree on anything.

Awaiting their arrival, I still didn't have a plan.

I could bluster and scream what I truly believe in my heart – that it's possible to joke about everything – but that wouldn't be responsible, would it?

Apparently, there are people who are genuinely offended about what we wrote, enough to call us racists anyway. That's a tough criticism to listen to. After all, this semester, we've had more coverage of diversity than anybody on this campus is used to. We didn't run a blatantly offensive advertisement from David Horowitz because we reserved our Constitutional right to run our press freely, by which we mean not publishing someone's idiotic ramblings. We have embraced the recent movement by the ALANA community in its search for more minority enrollment at UMass.

Yet our staff consists of racists, or so the allegation goes anyway. My body wants to shake with anger at even the allegation, but I have to be above such a guttural response. I had to approach this flyer, which might have been nothing more than a simple idle threat, with some forebodding.

I'm still angry though.

We didn't get the ALANA community – we got Amherst College.

We didn't get the ALANA community – we got Tom Taaffe.

We didn't get the ALANA community – we got hockey.

We didn't get the ALANA community – we got the Republicans.

Humor depends on whom you ask. I learned this last year, the last April Fool's issue, and I'm learning it again now.

The way I'm guessing it now, the ALANA community, or those that claim to be representatives of that community, are going to explain to me just how racist our April Fool's issue was.

The jokes about Amherst College's whiteness, the jokes about Tom Taaffe's whiteness, the jokes about hockey's whiteness, the jokes about the Republicans' whiteness, those were jokes about the ALANA community. It's tough to listen to because the one group that we didn't intentionally try to skewer seems to have been skewered the most. That's tough on the brain, knowing that something done without malicious intent is perceived to be as such. Humor really is in the eye of the proverbial beholder. What we find funny in the Basement isn't found funny out in the "real world."

George Carlin says a lot of important things about humor, most notably that everything's funny. That means everything – even the things that we find the most painful, the hardest to deal with, the toughest to acknowledge.

Racism is a tough thing to acknowledge. It might be the deepest divide in American society. Does that make it off limits? Never. Satire is one of the most important forms of social critique in the world – bringing humor to pain opens up discourse.

I'd never argue that the goal of our April Fool's issue, immaturely titled The Morning Wood, was to promote discourse, but it was definitely satirical. The difference between that and racism is apparently awfully thin, but it's a very important distinction.

The protestors never showed up, by the way. Maybe they'll be down today or tomorrow or Friday and I still won't know what to say.

Quick story: I was sitting in the office talking with staff about what we'd say when the protestors got here. None of us had any idea. We just wanted the opportunity to talk.

There's no good punchline for humorous confusion with the exception of maybe more humor. But I'm not sure about that. It might not be that funny.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

A question for the UMass Republican Club

I would like to compose this column in the form of a very detailed question to the UMass Republican Club. Keep in mind that I myself was once staunchly Republican, voted for Bob Dole in 1996, and still have certain right-leaning tendencies. However, what baffles me is the current stite of GW Bush's foreign policy. I have a burning question to ask his supporters.

Let me explain the many facets of this question.

Since the years of the Reagan administration, it has been theoretically possible to protect the United States from missile attack by installing satellite-based rockets, which would, upon the launching of any threatening body, fire smaller missiles to disable or destroy what could easily be a ballistic missile armed with nuclear warheads. Reagan cunningly used this theory to trick the Soviet Union into dumping money into its research, and thus contributed to the eventual downfall of that authoritarian state.

Since that collapse, the United States has enjoyed comparatively friendly relations with the new Russian Republic and the other states made independent by the collapse such as Ukraine, Belarus, etc. The idea of what was called "Star Wars" was put on the back burner as both unnecessary and (according to many) unworkable.

In addition to its lack of usefulness, Star Wars' is actually illegal. Its implementation stands in direct violation of the SALT I treaty signed with the U.S.S.R. by President Richard Nixon. It also violates the NATO charter, which binds the United States mutually to the defense of its allies (i.e. what is now the European Union). Thus, Bush's decision to implement it is thoroughly damaging to a U.S. reputation even further destroyed by Bush's sudden refusal to abide by the legally binding Kyoto accord. Before I get to Kyoto, let us examine 'Star Wars' a bit further.

Bush's missile defense program admittedly will not protect the United States from a full missile attack. It is instead designed to protect it from small numbers of missiles launched by so-called 'rogue states.' By this name the Pentagon is referring to states like Iraq or North Korea. But are they a threat? Since Bush the Elder, what is it that Americans have learned about Saddam Hussein? Primarily we have learned that he is a ruthless megalomaniac bent on pan-Arab domination and control of all of the Middle East's oil, sort of an Arabic mini-Hitler. While it may certainly be true that he is ruthless and seeks Iraqi hegemony in that region, accepting this means that he loses his power. Of course he loves power, why else would he have attacked Kuwait?

At the moment, from where does Saddam Hussein and his Baath party have their power? From the Iraqi people. Imagine now what would happen to the Iraqi people if Hussein were to even attempt to launch a single nuclear warhead at the United States. Unless you are extremely daft, you have already realized that they would all be incinerated, along with Hussein himself, whether or not a missile defense shield shot down their paltry little missile.

The same goes for North Korea, whose leader Kim Jong Il approached detente with the West after almost fifty years of unremitting hostility. He did so because his own political position would become untenable without the much-needed trade with the far richer West. He wants to maintain political power, and said power derives from his people, thus he would never destroy them by attacking the United States. All this on top of the fact that he is now trying to make friends with the United States and South Korea. Yet again, however, Bush has stated that he doesn't trust them. He doesn't trust and feels threatened by a suffering, starving nation smaller than most American states.

Even if rogue terrorist groups attacked the United States with a missile, their position would become untenable, as every major government would instantly set out after them.

The simple fact of the matter is that missile defense is political. It may be intended to placate the middle class. The fact of the matter is that if someone is going to attack the United States with nuclear weapons, it is going to be in the form of a suitcase on a New York City subway, not a missile. And in this scenario, there is absolutely nothing Bush or missile defense can do to stop it. Perhaps Bush wants to feed the high-tech defense contractors he promised to help in his campaign. The public expulsion of those 50 Russian diplomats was calculated. Normal procedure in such a case is to secretly contact the government in question and expel them that way, not to call every major newspaper in the country. Bush wants to scare the hell out of everyone to rally them behind him in order to legitimize his presidency and push his own military-based agenda, of course helping big businesses like defense contractors in the process.

EVAN CAMPBELL

Since the immediate military value of missile defense is questionable, and the diplomatic value of such a move is no less than a disaster, what could it be but political in nature? Whatever the reasons, Bush has decided to go ahead with it. As a result, the United States is drawing the biting criticism of the European Union, China and Russia (i.e. the rising Superpowers of the 21st century). Russia has already withdrawn all discourse over the matter out of frustration and made moves toward the EU to build a similar device in conjunction. The EU declined, however, unwilling to get in the middle of what looks like a new brewing Cold War. With the insult of last week, the honeymoon of U.S.-Russian good relations is over.

Vladamir Putin, who had expressed frustration with even the conciliatory Clinton, even more recently replaced numerous ministers with those who have been 'loyal to him for years.' We can only guess what this means.

In addition to all of this, Bush has broken another treaty (that's three in two months, by my count). Even Hitler never did it this fast, namely the Kyoto environmental accords, which was designed to limit Carbon Dioxide emissions. This was something Bush promised to do during his campaign, yet now he is already balking. This is something else that has brought Bush flak from the rest of the world. His reasoning for it is simple. First of all, the United States cannot afford the emission reductions mandated by the treaty. We are the richest country in the world. Spain is abiding by the treaty, a nation of 39 million people with a gross domestic product roughly equivalent to the amount of money made by Disney last year. Yet the U.S. is far too poor to afford such measures. Also, Bush isn't really sure global warming exists. Let us apply Occam's Razor to this.

Occam's Razor states that the conclusion requiring the fewest assumptions is almost invariably true. So let us conclude that either a) almost every scientist in every country in the world and every politician and head of state and voter in every major country in the world with the exception of the U.S. is a complete idiot for being duped into the lie of Global Warming; or b) Bush is wrong. He is too concerned with the profit margins of large oil companies to care about a treaty or such a trifling matter as world opinion.

In addition to all of this, keep in mind one rule of history. This is that many of the great empires of the past did not so much decline as were surpassed by their rivals (e.g., the British Empire surpassed by the U.S. and Germany in the late 1800s). The United States is in a position right now wherein the rest of the world has spent the past century either engulfed in catastrophic war or recovering from war. Hence, we are strongest – for now, at least. The European Union is constantly integrating itself further and further, even moving towards developing its own military, to which the pariah Germany will contribute hugely. Their trade output and gross domestic product were both almost double those of the United States in 1999 and they currently have 100 million more people than we do. Also, they will soon absorb many East European nations, boosting their population by perhaps 100 million more. Under these circumstances, it is not wise to anger such an entity for the sake of short-term payoffs.

Now to the question, and I hope Bush's unilateral supporters in the Republican Club will rebut in the same detail in which I have asked. Also, if you think any of my data is wrong, let me know (I know you will, even though it is all in order, because Republicans are good at denying the facts). The question is: What the hell does that fool hope to accomplish by pissing off the rest of the world? Does he WANT to start another Cold War?

Evan Campbell is a UMass student.

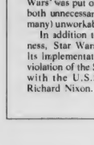
Reality bites!



EMILY VACANTI

Being a second semester senior I have been thinking on and off about post-college life. You seniors should know what I am talking about – going out into the work force, living completely on your own, taking care of things without any real help. I realized over Spring Break how real this is going to be, I got the shock of my life and it scared me to death.

I went to Phoenix, Ariz. over Spring Break. I went there to interview for different prospective jobs and to look around for an apartment, mainly to get an idea of where I might want to live when I do decide to move down there. The first couple of days were really good. I spent them walking miles around different parts of Phoenix and touring possible apartments. I got the chance to view parts of Phoenix life and to see how different it was down there from up here. Then my fourth day, Thursday, gave me the shock of my life.

Thursday was interview day. For any of you that have been to an interview for a real, full-time, year-round job, you probably know exactly how I felt. I was not terrified, but I was definitely very nervous. I did not have the fall back of being able to screw it up and have little or no worries like in the past. In the past, the jobs I had paid eight dollars an hour. They are jobs that pretty much anyone can do. You just have to be coherent during the interview and maintain good hygiene and speak clearly while working there, so my jobs in the past have been cake. That will no longer be the case starting in September. I will be starting a real job with real benefits if I do well and real consequences if I screw up. This will not be cake. And that does not even begin to describe the hard work that will come naturally with my field. I am going to be an advocate against violence against women. This job will be very hard, both work-wise and emotionally. I have prepared myself, and will become much more prepared over the summer, but this will still be a shock to my system. Dealing with domestic violence full-time without a real break will be the hardest thing that I have ever done.

My first interview was the one that made me the most nervous. This job is the one that I want the most. It is with a state agency, so it is the most secure in this line of work. The building is also in a good neighborhood and the job is very professional. In addition to all of this, there are good benefits. This job might be exactly what I am looking for. So what happens right away? The cab driver has trouble finding the building, and then I have trouble finding the right room. I practically broke a sweat from running around so much looking for the right office. I got lucky and made it right on time. I was taken into a conference room (much bigger than what I am used to being interviewed in) and was asked some questions that I consider difficult. Both interviewers were very nice and personable, yet the whole scene still seemed intimidating. I did the best I could, and the end result was almost as positive as I could have asked for. I just need to wait until August, when I will know exactly what I want to do, and then get back in touch with them.

The second interview was... different. I began to view the whole interview as a mistake. The reasoning is as follows – the building itself was in a part of town that is not considered safe, I do not speak fluent Spanish and that seemed to be the primary language spoken and the job paid very little. I got to the interview early, and so I was prepared to wait until my scheduled meeting time. Thirty minutes after my scheduled interview time I was taken in. Now the woman who interviewed me originally told me that it would be just a meeting where she would explain the organization. It would not be an interview because there were no open positions and would be none for a substantial amount of time. When the meeting began it was clear that something had recently changed, but I did not inquire. Instead I just let the interview flow along, asking questions when appropriate and answering any questions that she had for me. At the end she informed me that there were three recent job openings. One was kind of something that I wanted to do, but considering the reasons for the interview being a mistake, there is no chance that I would work there.

The third interview was wonderful. It is exactly what I want to do in a good area of town. The pay is decent, the staff is courteous and knowledgeable, and I would get all of the benefits (health, dental, eye and life insurance). The deal was almost perfect, except for two things – I did not get a job offer straight up, rather they have other prospective employees that they have to interview first, plus it is not a state agency, so the job would have a possibility of not being secure. As I sat there and interviewed I realized what a great opportunity it would be to work with them, but those two little details kept everything from going to my head.

After I was finished interviewing, I was relieved. Unfortunately something became very apparent through my trip and specifically through the interviews – reality bites. Going off on my own and having to do everything (paying all the bills, finding good car insurance, and finding a new home) on my own is going to really bite. I am definitely looking forward to proving that I can do it on my own. But until I have accomplished that, reality bites!

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian Columnist.

THE ADVERTISEMENT THAT COLLEGE NEWSPAPERS SHOULD HAVE RUN:
3 REASONS WHY DAVID HOROWITZ IS BAD FOR BLACKS—AND RACIST, TOO
ONE
He thinks slavery was good for Blacks.
TWO
He thinks because some Blacks receive welfare, no Blacks deserve reparations.
THREE
He thinks Blacks make good servants for his shameless self-promotion.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

OKAY, SO I WALKED AWAY WITH A FEW HUNDRED MILLION BEFORE MY COMPANY TANKED...
THE FACT IS I DESERVED THAT MONEY! I EARNED IT, JACK!
EARNED IT? HOW? BY ENDURING A FEW YEARS OF ALL-NIGHTERS, ROSEBALL, NO SHOWERS, AND A DIET OF TAB, COLA AND SKITTLES? HELL, EVEN I'VE DONE THAT!
GET OUT! YOU WERE DOT COMMER!
NO, A COLLEGE DROPOUT SO INFERIOR, MY 100 MILL?

Letters to the Editor
MassPIRG unfair to trees

To the Editor:

I would like to take a few moments to clarify some information that was falsely insinuated in an article written in the Collegian on March 28, 2001 on the Editorial/Opinion page entitled "Election up for debate, Met withl little reaction." Upon reading this article the members of UVC-TV 19 became very irate at some insinuations that were made towards the services of our station.

UVC-TV 19 is a learning facility for students who are interested in the televislon and film industry. Furthermore, as many people know, UVC-TV 19 provides our services of going all around, and even off, campus to videotape events that are being put on for the interests of the UMass community. These services are free of charge nor do the students who tape these events get paid to volunteer their time to help out fellow UMass community members. We have continued providing these services for at least ten years and most times with little or no recognition for our hard work.

We find it troubling that someone would write an article of this nature about our station and for those of you who have not read the article we suggest that you do. I can understand that members of this campus (or should I say members of the Collegian) have issues regarding the Student Government Association and how they have handled certain situations lately and that they need to express their dissatisfaction with the organization. However I feel that is no reason to use UVC as a pawn in this cat-and-mouse game. We are not in the practice of taking pot shots at others on this campus in order to express out opinions on certain events or organizations that occur nor do we expect it from others. We are proud of the work that we do here at UVC. We are proud that we have the capabilities to help our UMass community. As well we are proud of our 'cramped studio.'

So to the anonymous editorial writer, I say this: if you disagree with the place in which the Student Government Association chose to have their debates or with the manner in which they chose to advertise about the debates then your argument should solely be pointed at the SGA. I expect that if you are to blame any media outlet for the unjust advertising of the debates then you should lay blame among all the media outlets including your own. You obviously had some prior notice of the event seeing as one of your reporters was sitting in our studio. Also if you are to complain that our studio is to small to hold such an event then we welcome your suggestions as to how we can offer our live coverage of the debates in a bigger place. Who will pay to make that process just as easy as it is for us to perform live coverage in our 'cramped studio?'

Cecily C. Selden
Treasurer, UVC-TV 19

To the Editor:

I am disappointed that the Collegian chose not to print the ad submitted by David Horowitz regarding restitution for the descendants of African-American slaves. Surely the ad would have been met with disagreement and considered offensive by many of the Collegian's readers, but so would any ad addressing a controversial issue of current interest.

The Collegian seems to have deemed it necessary to protect us from what some may consider "hate speech." This is unfortunate because Mr. Horowitz's ad represents an actual political opinion that is probably shared by a number of students on campus. It is essential that such controversial opinions, particularly those, which are misinformed or hateful, not be censored from the public. Ultimately, the censorship of certain opinions from public debate only ensures that they will go unchallenged.

Our constitutional right to freedom of speech protects us from government censorship. But this legal principle is impotent if not accompanied by the spirit of free speech, which holds that truth and reason may prevail only under the free competition of ideas. Thus, the proper response to misinformed and hateful speech must be more speech, not less. This principle should prevail, above all, in universities, where students should be expected to expose themselves to new viewpoints and to defend their beliefs in the context of a dynamic intellectual environment.

After all, the "real world" that we face after graduation is filled with all sorts of differing ideas that students will have to sort out for themselves. College is a time for one to come to terms with his or her beliefs, a process which demands a free intellectual environment. Even if the student does not change his or her opinion, it is important not to isolate oneself from contrary opinions. Rather, confronting opposing viewpoints gives the student an opportunity to evaluate and reaffirm personal beliefs.

I think that the Collegian and the University would have benefited from the debate that would have resulted from Mr. Horowitz's ad. The Boston University Daily Free Press printed the ad and experienced a positive exchange. It is unfortunate that the Collegian avoided a potentially fruitful dialogue in favor of silence and censorship.

Benjamin Rivard-Rapoza
Orchard Hill

To the Editor:

I must air a concern I have here on our beloved campus. I know all of us walk around all day thinking, "Wow, there is a lot of posters and signs everywhere! You cannot escape their mighty wrath. Someone who is fueling this fire lately is, unfortunately, MassPIRG. My concern stems from the fact that in a 20-minute walk across campus, I counted more than 50 posters prompting environmental awareness or urging a vote on Question 2. I was further disturbed by the display promoting MassPIRG made of cardboard and paper outside the Hatch. On Thursday, I identified more than four signs made of wood and paper that were MassPIRG-oriented.

I stand here before you posing a huge question to MassPIRG, oh saviors of the world's trees: How do you justify the exorbitant amount of paper used in your own self-promotion? I mean really, people. Is this necessary? Even if it's recycled paper that is still good paper product that someone could have, maybe, used to save the world.

Well, MassPIRG, cut down another tree, produce some life-enriching poster, plaster them all over campus and then protest that you shouldn't cut down the rainforest. Next time you get this weird idea to put a billion posters up, think first about those owls in the forests, and then ask yourself this question: Is this necessary?

Chris Drews
Amherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor •
David Toupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals

Harper's live album brings new brillinace

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals
Live From Mars
Virgin Records

Measuring the life of a band through the albums it creates is like watching a small child grow – the maturation process, without fail, comes with its share of awkward moments and missteps, as well as shining instances that hint at a future brilliance. Live From Mars, the first live offering from Ben Harper and the Innocent Criminals, is much like the latter: an organic instant in the life of a young band that showcases the musical genius of Harper while aptly preserving the sanctity of his live show.

"I'm more afraid of living than I am scared to die/I'm more afraid of falling than I am of flying high," sings Harper on the lead track, "Glory and Consequence," his voice so tinged with a mixture of confidence and fear that it quickly becomes a matter of not how high he'll fly, but if, in fact, he'll ever come back down. By the time "Alone," the third track, rolls around, Harper is completely awash in his loneliness, his band marching hauntingly behind him, translating the emotional anguish of his message into a psychedelic blend of guitar, bass and percussion. Harper recovers with a medicinal take on Marvin Gaye's "Sexual Healing," though, reminding us all of the light waiting at the tunnel's end to smooth the suffering.

Harper hits a climax of sonic proportions on "Ground on Down," using his straight-out-of-Hell guitar tone and tortured vocals to achieve a heaviness far deeper than the faux-metal masquerading on your radio.

Intelligent and genuine in his cause, Harper takes these songs out to the edge and back, reigning in the loose ends with his sights locked intently forward. As far as writers and live performers go, there are few better than the Criminals at keeping the end in mind even as they continue to write the story.

Most impressive is Harper's ability to shift from scorchers like "Ground" and "Faded" (which includes a faithful segue into Led Zeppelin's "Whole Lotta Love") to crowd favorites like "Burn One Down" and "Steal My Kisses," without suffering the pains of an awkward transition. On tracks such as these, where Harper smoothes the distortion away in favor of the simple finger-pickings of his acoustic, bassist Juan Nelson, percussionist David Leach and drummer Dean Butterworth step to the forefront and shine, never overplaying but rather displaying powerful restraint and taste that allow the pieces to breathe.

That process, of taking the songs down to their base, culminates on disc two, as Harper sheds the Criminals and goes it alone. Left to his own devices, Harper again forges inspiring ground, allowing the lyrics and quiet dynamics of his playing to reach out a symbolic hand for the fans. Unlike most musicians, Harper never forgets why he is there.

Kicked off by "Waiting on an Angel," a heart-wrenching song in which Harper begs out of his loneliness, disc two moves onto strike a number of emotional chords, much as the first disc soared both high and low musically. "Roses" follows as a natural progression, as both Harper and his instrument speak back to the love spent looking for in "Angel." The simple structures of songs like "In the Lord's Arms" and "Another Lonely Day" succeed without the excess and image that so many artists rely on, and represent the pinnacle of the show: Harper can go no further, left fully exposed and, as far as we can tell, entirely whole.

When Harper sings "I believe in a few things/God, the devil and love," it sounds as if he's being simultaneously chased to the death by each, and that makes this album not only a passionate crying out, but one that, on some level, we can all relate to. Live From Mars draws on two-plus years of touring, and to describe it as anything but near-perfect would be a crime: every one of its 137-plus minutes is spent sweating, clawing and reaching out to the ears and minds of an audience in desperate need of an artist, a band, so willing to bare their everything for us. Music for the soul has never felt so damn good.

From the zoo to the tub

Top ten ways to relax and de-stress

THIS WEEK'S HELP WANTED: Stress Less

All I can say about these last few days is – holy ulcer. The stress bug is fighting me hard, and I bet he thinks he is going to win. This may not be your hell week – but since they pop up (out of nowhere) at least once a month, I thought dedicating this week's column to stress reducers would be helpful to almost every student here at UMass. Not to mention – I don't think I can handle anything else with all the work I have to do! I have compiled a list of the top ten ways for college kids to bust Universities' Most Wanted – those hoodlums we call stress bugs.

10. Take a Time Out: Don't worry, you're not in trouble. Put down your books, turn off your computer, and go sit in the corner. Sit in your favorite place, you're "Happy Place", if you will, and just cool your nerves. Think about something that makes you relax – whether its fishing in the middle of a glass lake, sipping kava kava in a funky coffee house or becoming immersed in a soothing Mozart symphony. After you feel that you have gotten a grip, you may now return to your task with a renewed sense of calmness.

9. Game On!: An exercise used to bring together, motivate and calm down our top business executives of this world, is...a good game of Monopoly (capitalist? what?). However, if you loath a never-ending Monopoly, but love Scrabble, Taboo, Sorry, or even my personal fav Candy Land – take a break and play a round. Taking your mind off of things for a few minutes is a lifesaver, and a psychologically proven stress reducer. There's nothing like losing yourself in a world of gumdrops, huh?

8. Walk This Way: Put on your sneakers and hit the streets. Take a five or 10-minute walk outside, or play a short game of basketball or wiffle-ball (Ode to the boys of 235 Fufton). Taking a brisk walk or releasing energy through moderate exercise will help rejuvenate you and give you a good healthy break from stressful activities.

7. Peppermint Paradise: Having a bad day? Surprise! Peppermint is a natural anxiety reliever. (!!) An aromatherapistic friend, peppermints are a fast and tasty way to calm your senses and lift your mood. As well as being curiously strong.

6. Rubber Duckie, You're the One: Taking a bath or a hot shower is an essential way to just release. There's something about hot water, bubbles and a little yellow plastic duck that just takes you back to when your life was all about having fun.

5. Shake a Tailfeather: Try pumping your favorite tune – something that isn't angry, doesn't make you feel like crying, and doesn't involve anyone under 18 (who doesn't even know what stress is – excuse me, Dream? Yeah, try again when you're old enough to drive). Try our favorite feel good guys – Jurassic 5, The Pointer Sisters or George Clinton. Pump up the volume and bounce around the room for a little while. Don't go Footloose on us (although Kevin Bacon sure relieved a lot of stress in his warehouse). A little carefree dancin' is always good for the soul.

4. Goof Troop: On your way out of the bathroom – stop at the mirror and make the goofiest faces you know how. You may feel silly – but that's the point. It's even better when someone catches you and you can laugh about it (blame it on me if you want). Also, this is a good way of exercising the muscles in your face – so strained from that frown you've been sporting for the last hour.

3. Take a Breather: Literally. Drop your pencil and take a couple deep breaths. The best part about this one is that you can do it sitting in class right after your professor reminded you that your 10-pager is due this Friday – not the next. Breathing is not something you do – it's something you allow. Fill those lungs with something clean (not applicable to Bartlett – dustiest lecture hall on campus).

2. Animal's Planet: Take a field trip to the zoo – or to the couch to watch Animal Planet. Animals make sense out of our crazy world – and sometimes by watching them, so can we. The ways in which they go about their daily lives, and the funny things they do can bring a great sense of perspective to human's lives. Take, for example, ants – probably the most stressed out being on this earth – and how they scramble around all day to get things done – without ever taking a break. On the other end, take the lives of koala bears, who sit around all day in trees, eating Eucalyptus leaves, and end up spending more hours of the day sleeping than anything else. Then think about your own life – and try to find a happy medium, like dogs'. They're never stressed, and always up for a game of catch... or a good nap. A dog's only worry is whether or not you will let him out to pee – thankfully, we can do that ourselves.

1. Lighten Up: Life isn't as hard as it seems. There are rivers we have to cross, some with stronger currents than others, some infested by snakes – but in the end, we always make it across. Take into consideration, when you are feeling like life is throwing you fastballs, of how fortunate you are to be here at school. Take into perspective what you have that others do not, be thankful for that, and allow it to be your saving grace during hard times. We are a fortunate few – always remember that.

P.S. – If it's any consolation, I feel less stressed after having written this column. Never underestimate the soothing power of writing.

Maggie Lyons is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY DON HUNSTEIN

The internationally renowned Juilliard String Quartet will perform Mendelssohn, Bartok, and Beethoven in Bowker Auditorium on April 10 at 7:30 p.m.

Latest Rockapella secures a capella superiority

COURTESY I-BIRD RECORDS

Where in the world is Rockapella? Right here!

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

Rockapella
Rockapella In Concert
I-Bird Records

Bob Dylan, The Rolling Stones, Aerosmith, and I'd even go as far to say Metallica. These are bands worthy of releasing a CD from live performances. But Rockapella? The band that gained a small fan following from penning "Where In The World Is Carmen Sandiego?" Believe it or not, they have recently released Rockapella: In Concert, which is supposedly recorded before a live audience, as incredible as that may sound.

Rockapella certainly is a talented bunch; through ways unknown to most, they have taken a capella music and made it cool and somewhat trendy. (Look at all the college campuses with a capella groups now.) Kudos to them for renewing a dormant genre of music. And it could be argued that their Carmen Sandiego theme is among the best TV tunes. (I'll even give them credit for their Folgers Coffee ads.)

However, they've only made three studio albums in their time (Don't Tell Me You Do't, Rockapella 2 and the obligatory A Rockapella Christmas), which are all soulful examples of their immense talent at tackling this type of musical styling. And while plenty of groups hit the road after one album (let alone three) I would be highly surprised to find that Rockapella is so popular a group that a live album is needed in one's CD collection. I also find it unlikely that this album would sell very well in stores just because Rockapella does not have very large fan base.

But moving on. Many of the songs found on the disc are standards that many listeners will be familiar with immediately, including the aforementioned Carmen Sandiego hummer.

The song starts off with the catchphrase that every kid my age once had ingrained in their memory, "There's only one more thing to do! You know what it is! DO IT, ROCKAPELLA!" From there they do their a capella thing – grunting and moaning, clicking and clapping, so on and so forth.

After a brief "instrumental break" (for there are no instruments in a capella music) the song ends, and so does the concert. The awkward placement of what must have been a closing song during one of their shows is here only the midpoint of the disc.

After six songs, you ask yourself, "That's it?" and upon looking at the liner, you'll find it isn't. Nonetheless, the poorly engineered placement of a great closing song is a flaw that overshadows the CD.

After their thoroughly enjoyable album Don't Tell Me You Do't, where most of the songs were original, here we find more than half the disc littered with covers of songs made popular by other bands. Sure, it's a treat to hear an a capella version of "The Lion Sleeps Tonight" and "Stand by Me" but is it necessary to have the Squeeze song "Tempted" done this way, or Lionel Ritchie's "Dancing In the Streets?" Of course not.

Rockapella should have left well enough alone, and gone back to some of the songs that they wrote solely. (Ha-ma's personal favorites: "Moments of You" and "Capital." Oh yeah, I've been a fan since the beginning.)

The inclusion of the bluesy Bill Withers's classic, "Use Me" comes a little too late, though. What could have been a highlight of the collection is made pale by other artists' recent renditions of the same song. (Hootie & the Blowfish and Rick Braun, just to name a few.) While Rockapella does a fine job with it, its timing couldn't be worse.

A treat, though, is "Zanzibar jamboree," which was another song that Rockapella often times performed on the Carmen Sandiego show. Here it is virtually recaptured and is an enjoyable little ditty that breaks away from the trite and bluesy tunes that are common on the disc until this point.

While I have criticized the cover songs, the final number on the CD is perhaps the best example of just how artistically gifted Rockapella is. The song is called "A Change In Me" (ahem) and it is a powerfully passionate, soulful slice of modern music. It is perhaps the most redeemable moment of the album, which is unfortunate to see such a fine recording had a great amount of potential. The songs are too brief and misplaced, though, for the album to be a successful addition to the Rockapella resume. Instead of relying on other performers' talents to fill the CD, Rockapella should have relied on their own.

COURTESY KAL GOTTLIEB

Shiraz Strings will perform at Barnes & Noble in Holyoke on April 12 at 7 p.m.

Sci-fi movies and Japanese Anime all weekend. We'll have gaming, a dealer's room an art show and more!

Our guests include: Steve Bissette (artist for Swamp Thing), Brenda Clough, Joan Sloczewski, Carla Speed McNeil (from Finder), Jean Marie Stine and more.

8th Floor Campus Center
Weekend Rate: $25 – day rates available
($5 off weekend with student I.D.)
-- http://www.umass.edu/rso/scum --

Costume party - Saturday night

Campus center room 1009
Music and Fun • Prizes for Best Costumes
(no full facemasks allowed)
Only $5 (Free with 5-Con 2001 Membership)

FUN WORK

Come Join Our Team...

COURTESY FINE ARTS CENTER

UMass jazz students prepare for a big band concert on April 10 at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall.

Edward James Olmos is Hollywood rarity

By Marc Cuenco
The Daily Aztec (San Diego State U.)

(U-WIRE) SAN DIEGO – Hollywood is an industry chock-full of individuals concerned with power and financial gain. There are a notable few, however, who venture beyond the conventions of stardom, and use their celebrity status to support worthwhile causes.

One such voice of reason is Edward James Olmos.

Born and raised in East Los Angeles, Olmos is one of the most celebrated and honored actors of stage, film and television. He is best known for his Academy Award-nominated role as the inspirational science and math teacher Jaime Escalante in the 1987 film "Stand and Deliver."

However, industry recognition does not compare to the film's far-reaching social impact for Olmos.

"The most gratifying thing that happened to me as a result of Stand and Deliver," Olmos said in an interview with Dave Geisler of hispowerportal.com, "was I had people come up and tell me they want to become a teacher."

"We made the film as a labor of love for $1.3 million, even though the Hollywood machine told us that films like it do not make any money. The prevailing philosophy is studio executives would rather make a blockbuster movie that returns two or more times its investment."

Although the star-making role as Escalante elevated Olmos to the film industry's A-list of actors, his background and dedication to represent the Latino community inspired him to pursue other groundbreaking roles. He took on diverse roles in the '80s - from an American Indian in "Wolfen" to a multi-ethnic detective in Ridley Scott's futuristic film noir "Blade Runner" to a laconic police lieutenant in the series "Miami Vice," for which he won him an Emmy and a Golden Globe. (Past awards for Olmos include a Los Angeles Drama Critics Award and a Tony nomination for his 1978 theater debut as El Pachuco in the musical drama "Zoot Suit.")

"I love to see more positive stories and films about Latin culture and about its strong family values," he said. "I want to make those kinds of films even though there is no desire in the entertainment industry to accurately and positively portray the cultural fabric of America."

In 1992, Olmos worked on both sides of the camera – as producer, director and acting lead – in the powerful "American Me." The violent saga exposed the reality of drug crime, inner city gangs and the ruthless prison lifestyle. Snubbed by the Motion Picture Academy for picture and director considerations, the film showcased Olmos' talent beyond the acting form. It also magnified his efforts to make a positive impact on media representations of Latinos.

Olmos makes about 150 personal appearances per year to high schools and universities, stressing the importance of diversity and culture in education, and using his own disadvantaged background to illustrate the power of beating the odds.

"One of the most hurtful experiences as a child in school was a sign in my classroom that said, 'If something is worth saying at all, it is worth saying in English,'" he said.

"The only way that racial hostility will be overcome is to teach and realize there is only one race – the human race – and different ethnic groups are all part of it."

Olmos launched "Americanos: Latino Life in the United States" in April 1999 to bring to light the vibrant and inspirational culture that nurtured him and brought him from the streets of Los Angeles to the national spotlight. The project is a multi-media effort – including an HBO documentary, a music CD of Latino artists and a book of essays and photos– celebrating Latino pride.

Although acting consumes a major part of his schedule – he continued to impress film and television audiences in the '90s as Abraham Quintanilla in "Selena," Wilson Pinheiro in HBO's "Selena," Wilson Pinheiro in HBO's "The Burning Season" and Juror 11 in the Showtime remake of "Twelve Angry Men" – Lobos dedicates much time and effort to humanitarian causes. Last year he received the Hubert H. Humphrey Award for contributions to the advancement of civil and human rights. He is the U.S.

Goodwill Ambassador for UNICEF, a national spokesperson for the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation and the executive director of a national gang prevention program called Lives In Hazard Educational Project.

"Images are so impactive on the subconscious mind," Olmos told University of Michigan students and faculty during a Martin Luther King Jr. Day keynote address in January.

"Self-esteem, self-respect, self-worth is the name of the game. When you have these, you do not want to hurt anyone, you do not want to hurt yourself."

travel free with other 18 to 35 year olds

>free of hassles
>free of rip offs
>free for you with 10 friends!
...Get 10 friends to go and you'll go free!

>European Discovery from $975
14 days including Amsterdam, Paris, and Rome
>Beaches and Reefs from $905
14 day tour of Australia's East coast from Sydney to the Barrier Reef
>Greek Island Hopping from $899
14 days featuring Santorini, Paros and Mykonos

44 Main Street
413-256-1261

Contiki worldwide vacations for 18 to 35 year olds
Council Travel councitravel.com
Experience Contiki with a group of friends booked on the same trip at the same time and the 11th person travels free or everyone in your group gets 10% off. Prices are land only and do not include airfare.

Masters Programs in Internet Strategy Management
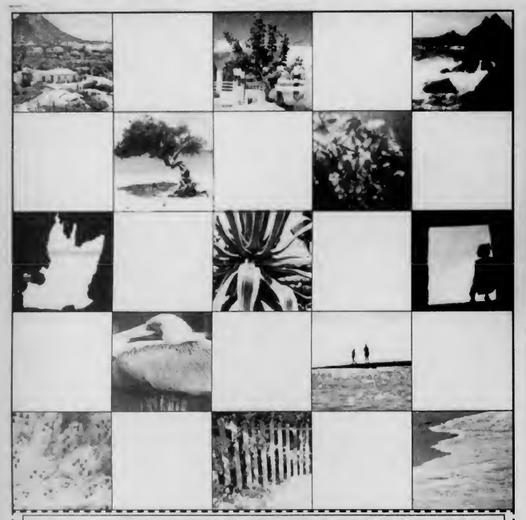
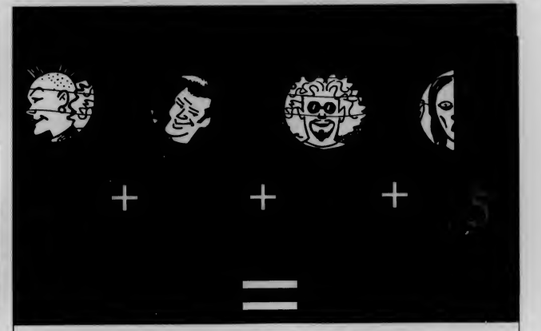
Internet Engineering
Teaching with Internet Technologies
•designed for working professionals
•meet alternate weekends and online
•one-year, first of their kind programs
•state-of-the-art facilities
"some of the most qualified industry talent available"—INTERFACE MONTHLY
"the best professional decision I've ever made in my life"—ISM GRADUATE
For RSVP and info, contact 888 258-5665 or gradcenter@marboro.edu
Brattleboro, Vermont • www.gradcenter.marboro.edu
Brattleboro, Vermont • www.gradcenter.marlboro.edu
The Graduate Center
MARLBORO COLLEGE
creating leaders for a world online™
INFORMATION SESSION
April 4, 5:30 - 7pm
The Hotel Northampton
Northampton, MA
320 Congress Street



COLLEGIAN SPRING BREAK PHOTO CONTEST
Attention UMass Students!!The Collegian is holding a photo contest!!
Capture your Spring Break and WIN!!
Submission Form:
name: _____
phone #: _____
e-mail: _____
type of photo (circle one): black & whitecolor
major & year: _____
description of photo (1-2 sentences): _____
_____
Requirements:
-Submissions due by APRIL 9th
-Drop off at the Collegian Photo Dept (The Collegian offices are located in the Campus Center Basement, opposite the ATMs and directly across from WMUA. Ask for the newsroom.)
-Photos must be 8x10" or smaller, unframed and unmatted
-Photos must be in an evelope with this submission form
Any questions?? Email us at collegianpics@yahoo.com



Ever tried to fit 3.5 students into one bed? It's not comfortable.

UMass has 22,000 students trying to sleep in 6,300 beds, leaving 15,700 students looking for an apartment.

1?

Advertise yours in the Annual Collegian Apartment Guide.

Deadline to place a classifieds ad is April 6. Issue to be published on April 11.

Stop by our office in the Campus Center basement or call 545-3500 for more

Players paid against baseball's first official rule

This is part two of a five-parts series entitled "Magnates of the Game."

After Alexander Joy Cartwright had solidified baseball as the nation's most popular game, his followers on the New York Knickerbockers set up one more rule for the national pastime: it was to remain forever an amateur's game – no man was to ever be paid for playing.

But soon after the Civil War, many people began to see the profits that could be made from the game. Crowds would turn out by the hundreds to see a game played. About that time, just outside New York, admission was charged to a game for the grand sum of fifty cents, with the money going to the owner of the field.

One player on the Knickerbockers, center fielder Harry Wright, saw the profits that could possibly be made from baseball. Wright wanted in on the action.

In a time when baseball teams were made up strictly of members of their respective cities, Wright shocked the baseball world by starting the Cincinnati Red Stockings – the first professional baseball team made up of some of the best players in the country, only one of which was from Cincinnati.

MATT BRADY

And for the first time, players were getting paid to play the game of baseball.

Despite the outrage that many people felt toward Wright, people turned out in droves to see his baseball club. In their first season in 1869, the Red Stockings went 65-0, and more importantly, they turned a profit for their investors. Cincinnati was baseball mad, and it had suddenly become the center of the baseball world.

But professional teams began to pop up across the country, and for a country that needed an economic push, professional baseball was just what it needed. Harry Wright became a hero for all the jobs he had created.

The following season, the Red Stockings won their first 27 games, extending their winning streak to a remarkable 92 contests. The Red Stockings traveled East to face the New York Atlantics, the best team on the East Coast.

On the Elysian Fields of Hoboken, N.J. the two teams battled in what was the most exciting baseball game anyone could remember. After nine innings, the two teams were tied at five.

Wright could have walked away with a tie, keeping his team's undefeated streak in tact. But instead, he opted for a new option – extra innings.

The Red Stockings scored twice in the top of the 11th inning, and it appeared as though Wright had made the correct decision. But in the bottom of the 11th, the Atlantics responded with three runs of their own to win the game and end Cincinnati's win streak.

With the team's run over, fans quickly dissipated from the ballpark, and when the team began losing money, Wright was forced to disband his squad.

But ever the businessman and baseball enthusiast, Harry Wright took his best players to Boston, where they became the Beaneaters. Soon, they too were one of the most successful teams in the game.

In 1876, just seven years after Wright had made baseball a professional sport, there was talk of forming a new league. On Feb. 2 of that year, owners from several cities, in an attempt to increase their profits and to purify the game, formed what they called "The National League."

Baseball was already one of the most popular pastimes in the nation at that point. But with the formation of the new league, the sport rose to new levels, and soon heroes of the game such as Adrian "Cap" Anson and Mike "King" Kelly would earn a place in the hearts of millions of Americans.

But these were just a few of the accomplishments of Harry Wright. His innovations have lasted throughout the ages.

Wright was the first owner to implement batting practice for his teams before a game. He was the first manager to use hand signals and to reposition his defense depending on the hitter's tendencies. He also managed the first catcher to wear a glove and was instrumental in the creation of the catcher's mask.

After his death in 1895, baseball promoter Henry Chadwick, a converted cricket fan, said, "There is no doubt that Harry Wright was the father of professional base ball playing."

Father or not, it is doubtless that without his innovation, baseball would not be the game it is today.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY BASEBALL HALL OF FAME

Harry Wright saw that profits could be made in baseball... if he could only see the revenue and teh salaries that are being paid today.

expansion

continued from page 12

that it is expansion that has killed baseball. Players would not be so pompous if they felt it were an honor to have the talent to play a game for the enormous salaries that they receive. A-Rod would not be making anywhere near $252 million if players like Wiki Gonzalez (San Diego Padres) were still playing tee-ball rather than playing in the big show. Ted Williams and Lou Gehrig would have played for the revenue generated from peanut sales at Fenway Park and Yankee Stadium because it was an honor for them.

How honored is a guy like Todd Hundley?

Did I mention that expansion has killed baseball? I digress.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Experience Community Health in Honduras May 23-June 19, 2001

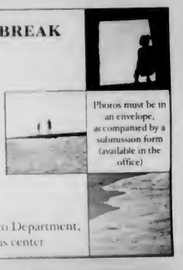
Integrating clinical experience with an enhanced sense of cultural awareness, UConn's Community Health in Honduras Program is open to nursing students, public health students, practicing nurses, health care professionals and other students, seeking to expand their knowledge of health care practices in an international setting. This 4-week program will be under the guidance of UConn faculty. Students earn 4 academic credits; RNs can earn 6 CEUs.

Information:
860-486-5985, Pat Harkins
Online:
continuingstudies.uconn.edu
Brochure:
800-622-9908
University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies

THE COLLEGIAN SPRING BREAK PHOTO CONTEST

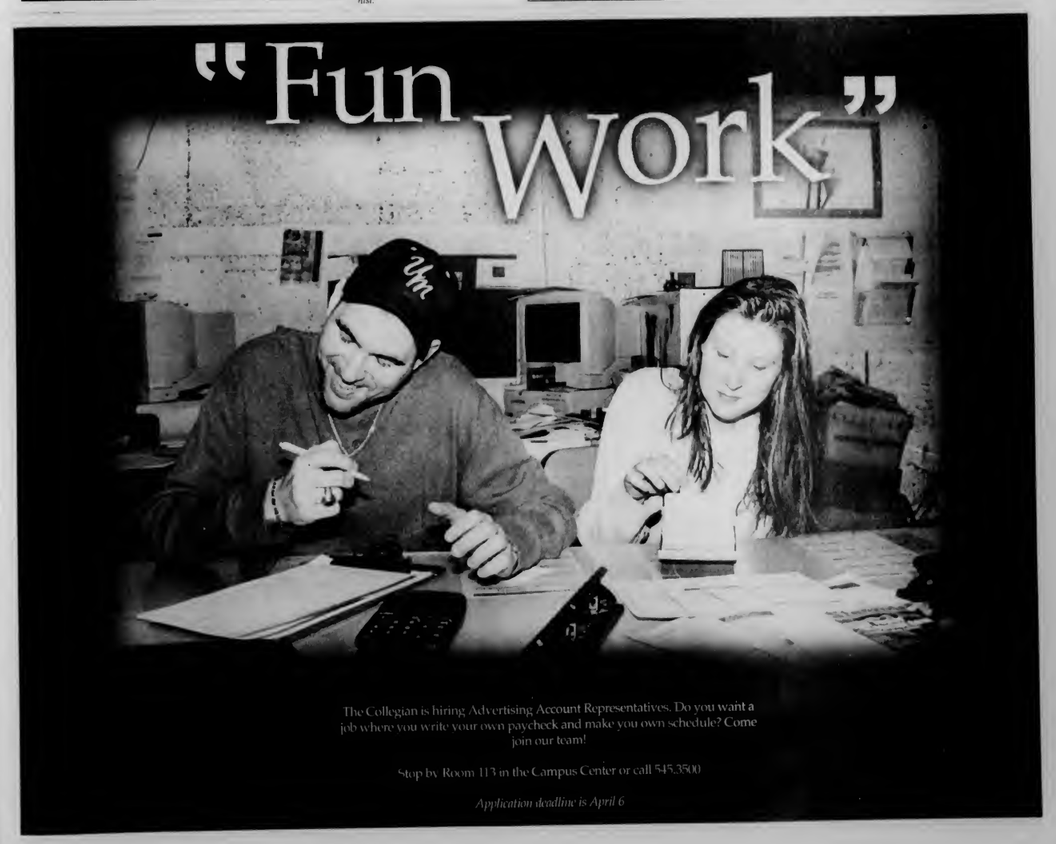
Photos must be 8x10 or smaller, unmatted and unframed

DEADLINE has been extended to MONDAY April 9th



Photos must be in an envelope, accompanied by a submission form (available in the office)

drop your submissions to the Collegian photo Department, located in the basement of the campus center



The Collegian is hiring Advertising Account Representatives. Do you want a job where you write your own paycheck and make you own schedule? Come join our team!

Stop by Room 113 in the Campus Center or call 545.3500

Application deadline is April 6

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Moving Off Campus? Come to Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center's Apartment Complex Fair on Thursday, April 5 from 10am to 3pm on the Campus Center Concourse.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet with Fall Option Starting June 1st. 2 Bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-1988

Apartment Available to take over June 1st. 2 bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-9462

3 Bedroom Renovated Apartment in Puffton. Available June 1st. Call 549-7111

Summer Sublet with lease option. Puffton 3 bedroom, 2 bathroom. Renovated + furnished. Central locale. Call 548-3915

Summer Sublet June 1-Sept 1. Right in Town close to bus stops. 1 Bedroom $300 a month 253-0065

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

Summer Sublet with option to lease start June first. 4 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, utilities included, sliding glass doors, two balconeys, on bus route. 253-5388

1 Bedroom Apt. Available June 1. 3 miles from campus. Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. Call 397-9822

Summer Sublet or lease take over! Puffton - 3 bedrm., 2 bath, part. furn, bus, heat+hot water. Cheap! Starts 6/1. Call 549-4918!

2 Bedroom Brandywine Apt. starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Call 549-0453 ASAP

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom in Boulders Take over lease from June-Sept. $825 a month. Call Victor 253-6917

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

2 Bedroom in Puffton Rennovated. Great location. June 1 - Sept 1. Call 549-7791

1 Bedroom Available June-August 15 Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. $600 a month 665-8480

Summer Sublet, Fall option. 3 bedroom Puffton available 6/1 Call 549-7812

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Mitsubishi Eclipse GS $1500 549-4436(H) 545-0479(W) Denis

EMPLOYMENT

$10/hr GUARANTEED Work on campus F/T or P/T for as little as 5-10 hrs/wk or as many as 40 hrs/ wk. Be your own boss. Create your own schedule. Limited positions. Call 1-800-808-7442 x 80

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

EMPLOYMENT

Live in Babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet on Cape Cod. Salary, room, and board. Please call 508-349-6392 (no calls 3/25-4/1)

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Part Time Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridership Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conduction a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Northampton on April 25 and April 28, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until April 9, 2001. For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield MA 01089. PVPC is and EOE/AA employer.

EMPLOYMENT

HAVE AN AMAZING SUMMER ADVENTURE! Prestigious coed camp in beautiful Massachusetts seeks caring, motivated college students & grads who love kids! GENERAL & SPECIALTY COUNSELORS needed. Join a dedicated, fun team. Competitive salaries+travel+room+board. (800) 762-2820

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Access 2 A Computer? Put it to work! $25/hr - $75/hr, PT/FT (866) 639-RICH www.athome4ever com

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

EMPLOYMENT

CAMPUS SUMMER JOB Full-time opportunity, Visitors Center, June-August. Competitive hourly rate. Call 5-3480 for information. See also display ad.

AMHERST LSSE SUMMER EMPLOYMENT Day Camp Counselors (must be 18 yrs of age) Pool - Lifeguards, W.S.I. (s), and cashiers. Part time Summer Musical Theather Institute Counselor(s). Part time Asst. for Hot Summer Nights Film & Music Series. Summer Registration Clerk Special Events Coordinator. Applications available at: Human Resources 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst, MA 01002 E.O.E

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Kona Mt. Bike - Good for petite rider. Call for details. 413-397-8999

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

INSTRUCTION

Step Aerobics, Cardio Kickboxing, Circuit Training. Five week program only $20. Starts April 8. Sponsored by UMass Housing. Call 5-1962

MISCELLANEOUS

Publish Your Work For $1,295 Textbooks, Novels, and More Call FirstPublish, Inc. at 888-707-7634 Or visit www.firstpublish.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 3 bedroom apt. June, July + August. Call 549-9940

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

2 Females looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st Call for info. 549-1988

Two Bedroom Apartment in the Boulders for information call 256-4782

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

Starting June 1! 3 Bedroom Apt., Puffton Village $1010 a month Call 549-9959

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

Starting June 1st. 2 big Bdrms. Spacious living area. On bus route. Washer/dryer and dishwasher. 2 people only, Call 256-1809

TRAVEL

FLY 4STANDBY...FLY 4 CHEAP! Europe $169 o/w (+tx) Lon, Fra, Mad, Ams, Par, & more 4STANDBY.COM or 800-326-2009

Need to sell something?

Look no further...

Place an Ad in The Collegian Classifieds and sell it EASY!!

Call 545-3500 TODAY!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

9 - HSCN Bulletin Board
0 - CBS 3 Boston
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - PBS 57 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
12 - Fox 61 Hartford
18 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - NBC 22 Springfield
15 - International Channel
19 - UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 - WB 59 New Haven
17 - PBSN
18 - CSPAN
20 - ETC TV (Student Channel)
21 - Weather Channel
22 - Classic Gold
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - FX
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nesn
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nickelodeon
35 - TV Land
36 - Courtroom Central
37 - BET
38 - Fox News
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 4, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Great Performances		World of National Geographic		American High (In Stereo)		Independent Lens (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Best Friends	"And Never Let Her Go" (2001, Drama) Mark Harmon.		News		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Best Friends	"And Never Let Her Go" (2001, Drama) Mark Harmon.		News		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife-Kids	Whose Line?	Drew Carey	The Job (N)	Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends		Hollywood	Nanny	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)	Jack & Jill (N) (In Stereo)			Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed "The Test" (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "17 People" (N)		Law & Order "White Lie" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "Nobody Knows..."		Blind Date	Blind Date	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Jack & Jill (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "White Lie" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)		Hollywood		Ed "The Test" (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "17 People" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	'70s Show	Grounded-Life	Boot Camp (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed "The Test" (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "17 People" (N)		Law & Order "White Lie" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Great Performances		World of National Geographic		American High (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Spin City	Frasier	My Wife-Kids	Whose Line?	Drew Carey	The Job (N)	Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Frasier	NHL Hockey: Boston Bruins at Buffalo Sabres. (Live)						[Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)	Ent. Tonight
WTBS	22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!			"Almost Heroes" (1998, Comedy) Chris Farley, Matthew Perry.		Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	42		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Showtime		Biography: George Reeves		American Justice		Investigative Reports (N)	Law & Order "Blue Bamboo"
CNN	43	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live			CNN Tonight: Spm Room	Sports Moneyline
COM	53	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Hal Baked" (1998, Comedy) Dave Chappelle.					South Park	That's My Daily Show
DISC	52	11	Wild Discovery: Wol		Wild Discovery: Lions		Titanic					Deadline Discovery (N)	Stein's Money Justice Files
ESPN	51		Sportscenter		Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live)							Baseball Tonight (N)	Sportscenter
LIFE	62		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait:		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)			"Murder in My Mind" (1997, Drama) Nicolette Sheridan.		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	63		Direct Effect	Diary	"Love Song" (2000, Romance) Monica Arnold, (In Stereo)			Cribs	Cribs	Contests Uncensored		Johnny Depp	Fanatic Under
NICK	64		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Dirt Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family All in Family
SCIFI	65		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Eyes" (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales	"Jennifer Eight" (1992, Suspense) Uma Thurman.		Robotica (Series Premiere)		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	66	26	Greatest Bodies		Secrets of Forensic Science		Armageddon on Wheels (N)			Robotica (N)		Armageddon on Wheels
TNT	67		ER "Fevers of Unknown Origin"		Pretender "Murder 101"		NBA Basketball: Portland Trail Blazers at Minnesota Timberwolves. (In Stereo Live)			NBA		"Silent Hunter" (1994)
USA	68		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Nobody's Child"		Eco-Challenge: Borneo (N)		Eco-Challenge: Borneo (N)			"Desert Heat" (1999, Action) Jean-Claude Van Damme.
HBO	69		(5:30) "PP" (2001)		"The Muse" (1999, Comedy) Albert Brooks. PG-13		Sex-and-City	Arties		Sopranos "University"		On the Record (N)
MAX	70		"Big Trouble in Little China" (1986) Kurt Russell. PG-13				"The Last of the Mohicans" (1992) Daniel Day-Lewis. R			"Hanging Up" (2000) Meg Ryan. PG-13		Passion Cove
SHOW	55		"Cheech & Chong's The Corsican Brothers" (1984) PG				"Slow Burn" (2000, Drama) Minnie Driver. (In Stereo) R			Soul Food "Truth Be Told"		Resurrection	"Mod Squad"

Quote of the Day

"One can kill time, without killing eternity..."

–Henry Thoreau

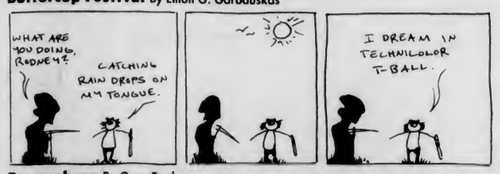
Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 24	HIGH: 52 LOW: 30	HIGH: 52 LOW: 31

Arbitary Instincts By Kevin Lane

I'VE NEVER SEEN YOU AROUND HERE BEFORE. WHAT'S YOUR NAME, ANYWAY?
I'M DAN! PACK TO MEET YA!
BY THE WAY, WHAT EXACTLY IS THAT YOU'RE WEARING?
THIS? UH... IT'S A TRADITIONAL JAPANESE SCHOOL UNIFORM.
WOW, YOU'RE FROM JAPAN?!
NOPE. NEVER EVEN BEEN THERE...
SO THEN HOW COME...?
IT'S A LONG STORY. I DON'T WANT TO GET INTO IT...

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas



Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

SCOTMERE! EVERYONE READY FOR THE BLOSSOM EVENT ON YOUR END?
AUTO'S GOOD TO GO, REV!
GREAT! AND ARE THE ANT-NERDS?
MY CRUSH-TER ALEX AND MY MOM.
YOUR MOTHER? JOANIE'S THERE?
YUP! THAT OKAY?
UM... I DUNNO. WE USED TO DATE.
OH, PLEASE.
RIGHT. LIKE GRANNIES DATE.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

COULD YOU TURN THE TV DOWN SOME? IT'S A SCHOOL NIGHT AND I NEED MY SLEEP.
THANKS.
THIS IS THE "TODAY" SHOW, PAIGE!
HER ALARM DOESN'T GO OFF FOR 18 MORE SECONDS.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

I HATE CATS.
WHAT DID A CAT EVER DO TO YOU?
WELL... THEY JUST SIT AROUND AS THOUGH THE WORLD ONES THEM SOME GREAT DEBT OF GRATITUDE FOR JUST BEING CATS...
...I MEAN, WHO DO THEY THINK THEY ARE?...
YOU?
YEAH...I MEAN...NO...I MEAN...WAIT A SECOND...
TENDER VITTLES?
www.hedgeweb.com

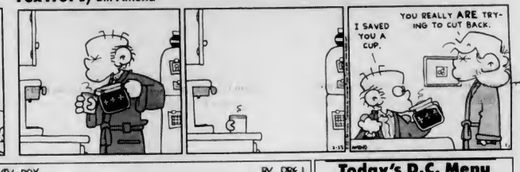
Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

TO INFINITY AND BEYOND!
NOW I KNOW BUZZ LIGHT-YEAR'S REAL.
NOPE. COMPUTER GENERATED.
THIS IS SAM DONALDSON FOR ABC NEWS...
OKAY...THE HAIR IS DIGITAL BUT THE REST OF HIM...?
WELLLL... REAL.
LADIES AND GENTLEMAN, THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, JED BARTLET!...
NOW, HE'S GOT TO BE REAL.
IF ONLY.
www.hedgeweb.com

The Masked Dropout By Bob Hewitt

THIS JUST IN... THE MASKED DROPOUT IS DRIPPING LIKE A ROCK!!
QUICK DOUG, CALL MY BROKER!!
SELL! SELL! SELL!
MASKED DROPOUT.COM
YOU SOLD YOUR STOCK LAST MINUTE FOR BEANS?
REPUBLICANS??
OH YEAH.
I TOLD YOU THAT WAS A SMART MOVE!
MASKED DROPOUT" by Bob Hewitt
2000

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Horoscopes

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): You need to find time to do some reading. The knowledge you pick up will be important in the future. Look into new philosophies that appear to be more suited to your needs.

Aries (March 21-April 19): You may feel limited due to your responsibilities. Don't spend more than you can afford on entertainment or luxury items. You must stick to your budget.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): You need to spend time with your partner. Trips, social events, or just an evening alone would be appropriate. Look into joining organizations that will bring you in contact with prestigious people.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): You can accomplish a lot if you present your ideas to superiors. You need to feel confident about yourself and your work. Don't let anyone criticize you unwarranted. Stick up for your beliefs and your ideals.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): You will finally be able to get your hobbies off the ground. Get children involved if they show an interest. You need to do more together as a family. You can make favorable changes to your residence. Consider a games room.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): You will have problems with the women in your household. Try to be patient and don't be insensitive to their moods. Avoid creating melodramas.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Relatives will give you some sound advice if you are willing to share your troubles with them. Things will not be so bad as you first thought.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You will be taken advantage of if you don't pay close attention to your investments. Don't let anyone talk you into lending money or your belongings.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will be emotional, which could lead to problems in dealing with your mate. Don't reveal your secrets, and you won't have any reason to worry. You will have problems with authority figures if you bend the rules.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You need to get out and mingle. You must look to those you trust for sound advice about your personal situation. You will have trouble justifying spending money.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't let someone lead you down the garden path. You must dig deep if you want to find out the whole truth. You can accomplish the most if you concentrate on your career.

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted beers and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thurs. Karoke w/ Closed Nine Prod. $3 cover
Sat. Aloha Steamtrain Groovy Rock $3 cover
Sun. Ron Freshly Quartet Jam on Cover
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst 413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

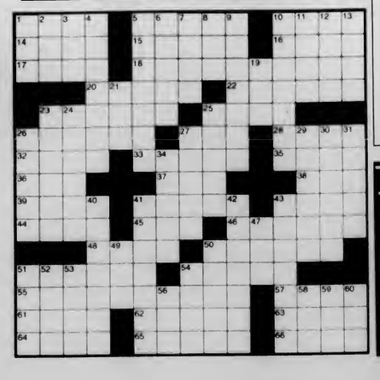
ACROSS
1 Germany's Helmut
5 Philanthropist Brooke
10 Movie's hood
14 Brainstorm
15 Type of wine
16 Sounds of laughter
17 Places to hibernate
18 Table item
20 Prevent
22 Puckered
23 Singer Dion
25 Pierre part
26 Cores
27 Cushion
28 Tied
32 Creator of Perry
33 Wading bird
35 Wander around
36 Spud's!
37 E-ville
38 Like valleys
39 Smooth-spoken
41 Catty
43 Jazzy Ellington
44 Frau's fellow
45 Pumpkin treat
46 First coast
48 Name in elevators
50 Platforms
51 Atmosphere component
54 Extols
55 Kind of hit
57 Holland export
61 Trout habitat
62 River embankment
63 Verne's captain
64 Potato buds
65 Beer ingredient
66 Nuggets or Expos

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

N	O	T	E	P	O	S	S	E	P	A	R	E
O	D	E	N	A	N	I	T	A	A	V	E	R
P	I	N	S	C	O	L	O	R	N	O	D	S
A	N	T	I	C	R	O	W	D	T	O	M	S
G	L	A	D	H	A	N	D	L	I	A	R
G	O	N	I	N	V	E	D	G	R	A	B	S
O	F	A	P	I	L	A	F	O	M	A	H	A
A	T	O	M	E	S	U	R	P	A	N	O	N
L	E	M	O	N	S	N	E	E	R	I	N	G
N	I	C	E	T	E	A	H	O	U	S	E
C	O	I	F	D	R	E	S	S
M	E	A	N	D	E	R		P	L	A	M	O
P	I	T	S	B	U	R	G	H		I	L	A
O	M	N	I		S	A	T	E	N		T	E	E	S
B	E	A	N		S	L	A	N	G		S	E	N	T

1-10-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Young goat
2 Praiseful poem
3 Rooster's mate
4 French explorer of N.A.
5 "— and Old Lace"
6 Divvy up
7 Starry
8 Neighbor of Oue
9 Lull
10 Fast horse
11 Handwoods
12 Shout of glee
13 Pie-crust ingredient
19 Barbarian
21 Competes
23 Become sour, as milk
24 Bakery goody
25 Ebbed
26 Whinny
27 Radium discoverer Curie
29 Kind of discount
30 Summons up
31 More modern
34 Indian royals
40 Accents
41 Tall and thin
42 Shoulder trim
43 Contrary person
47 Qatar (of)
49 Perfect score
50 Hills and —
51 Gawk
52 Medical shots
53 Rouse part
54 Fluid rock
56 Flower visitor
58 Poor mark
59 Doctors' org
60 Dad's partner



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Pot Roast with Gravy

Onion Quiche (B)

Breaded Vegan Cutlets (vegan)

Cheese Spinach Squares (vegetarian) (H, W)

DINNER

Baked Chicken (B, H, W)

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

Greek Pita with Tahini (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Italian Meatloaf (F)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Alan Bosque
Production Staff	Kara Stokes, Augusto Landauro

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Expansion has turned baseball into a national 'waste of time'

BRYAN SMITH

It is supposed to be an unofficial national holiday – "Opening Day." It needs no introduction as the term has been coined only Major League Baseball.

Can someone tell me when baseball turned into cricket? I always saw baseball as a three-hour, single-day affair, not a three-day marathon. This is what is has become of teams not seeing their first official action until over two days have passed since the first pitch was thrown.

Ridiculous? I think so. The answer is simple – expansion.

It has been said time and time again that expansion has drained the talent pool completely, but now it is draining the average fan – the average fan in the expansion city of Phoenix, Ariz. that had to wait 51 hours after the Texas Rangers and Toronto Blue Jays first took the field.

The average fan has dealt remarkably well with the increase in ticket prices as a direct result of players' soaring salaries, but when a fan has to wait, it might not wait that long. Two days later, the unofficial national holiday's novelty has worn off. People have returned to their jobs after taking Monday off to frantically change between ESPN and ESPN2 to catch as much of their six televised games as possible. And to think that the average American had burned their channel change button out with the NCAA basketball tournament – wrong. There was still plenty of power left in the index finger to tune into as many games as possible.

Expansion is killing baseball.

Fans are tuning into games more on television because the amount of money that it costs to go to see game. For example, take the Boston Red Sox-Baltimore Orioles game on Monday afternoon. The crowd was not a sellout – at Camden Yards – to see Pedro Martinez pitch against the supposedly beloved O's – a team with baseball's third-largest payroll over the last three seasons, but one that could not finish any better than fourth in the American League East in those years. This is a sad state of affairs for the national pastime.

Expansion is killing the game – there are too many teams with inferior players. Baseball has tried its newest marketing ploy – new fields – but really, how many times will the Milwaukee Brewers have a capacity crowd? Why would anyone pay $100 to watch the trio of Geoff Jenkins, Jeromy Burnitz and Richie Sexson strike out 694 times? The park is named after beer. That might draw a few random drunks to a game with their sons – quality bonding time.

I know, let everyone get fat by staying home and watching baseball, drinking beer and yelling at why Jimy Williams pulled the infield in with one out in the sixth inning and up a run. Granted, the powerful Brady Anderson was at the plate – a guy who has had 50 hits since he hit 50 home runs in 1996. Who was on the mound again, Pedro right? Why give Jason Priestly a chance to tie the game with a bloop hit. Tell me again – Pedro was still pitching at this point?

Of course Mr. 90210 himself got the hit, tied the game and the O's eventually went on to win the game with Ryan Kohlmeier's blazing 87 mile per hour fastball. Expansion has allowed a 23-year old with a fresh arm to make it to the big leagues. Closers are supposed to throw heat, not a Randy Johnson changeup.

Oh yeah, that Johnson guy. When does his team get to play? As of last night at 10:05 p.m. Alex Rodriguez had already played in a United States territory, played his first home game at the Ballpark at Arlington, signed five sneaker deals, called out friend Derek Jeter and made more than the gross national product of most third world nations.

And all Johnson and his Diamond Backs could do was wait for their chance to play. But when does the chance come for the average fan to see quality baseball? The answer is simple – it goes back to television and ESPN. The geniuses of the slave-labor Disney organization found a way to attract its newest crop of fans, those starving for players that deserve to have the honor to grace the field in a major league ballpark – ESPN Classic – where games that happened decades ago are aired to bring back the glory days of the national pastime.

So every time that you see a player deny a child an autograph remember

Turn to EXPANSION page 9

Home field boosts offense

Santos dominates on hill in win over Fairfield

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Jesse Santos allowed only one hit in five innings of work as UMass downed the Stags 11-0 yeaterday at Earl Lorden Field.

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

Coming home is what baseball is all about.

The Massachusetts baseball team [4-9 overall, 2-1 Atlantic 10] took full advantage of playing the host yesterday afternoon, downing Fairfield University [5-16, 3-6 Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference] 11-0 to open its home season.

Sophomore Jeff Altieri once again paced UMass offensively, going 3-5 with six RBI, while junior Jesse Santos excelled on the mound, allowing only one hit and striking out six in five innings of work to pick up his first win of the season.

The Minutemen came out firing early, hammering Fairfield starting pitcher Paul Gorra for six hits and six runs in the bottom of the first to grab a comfortable lead early.

With one out, Altieri lined a single to left center, scoring Connell Clark and Nick Gorneault to put UMass on the board. Senior right-fielder Gavin Clark followed with a double off the mound (bizarre hop). Junior shortstop Aaron Senez sent Clark and Altieri home in the next at bat, doubling to right center. After back-to-back singles by Adam Stojanowski and Scott Anderson, catcher Tom Ellerbrook capped the scoring by launching a sacrifice fly to right to score Stojanowski.

The early offensive burst was more than enough for the Minuteman hurlers to work with, who toyed with the Stag batters all afternoon en route to the two-hit shutout. For head coach Mike Stone, the combination of strong pitching and solid batting was a welcome sight.

"We made things happen offensively early," Stone said. "That really set the tone. We got good pitching from Jesse [Santos] and [Eric] Chown. If we had fielded the ball well it would have been a perfect game."

After the first, however, the pace slowed down considerably, with both teams settling in and taking few chances at the plate. It wasn't until the bottom of the fourth that UMass was able to tack on another run, as Gorneault scored from first on a hit and run single that Altieri ripped to right center. The Minutemen posted their eighth run in the seventh, as Gorneault again crossed home on an error by the catcher after stealing third base. That UMass had all cylinders firing – pitching, hitting, control of the basepaths – had to be chalked up, in part, at least, to the home-field advantage.

"Since LaSalle we've been swinging the bat well," Stone said. "I'm a little disappointed we didn't hit the ball more toward the end of the game, up until Altieri hit that double. It's always nice to play at home. Everyone enjoys playing here."

The comfort level continued to be apparent as the game drew into the later innings, when the Minutemen notched three more runs in the bottom of the eighth to complete the onslaught of the Stag pitchers.

Sophomore Tim Klett hit a pinch-hit single to lead off the inning, and was followed onto the bases by Cullan Maumus after a Paul Tupa strikeout. Following a Connell Clark flyout to left, Altieri fouled off two pitches with two strikes on him before ripping a three-run double off the base of the wall in left to clear the paths and give UMass the 11-0 lead.

Freshman lefty Kevin Inglis came in to seal the shutout by pitching a perfect ninth. Righty Eric Chown excelled in middle relief, entering in the sixth and allowing one hit and striking out three in three innings of work.

"It was nice to be home," Santos said. "We were on the road for 12 straight games, and everyone is more comfortable here – both pitchers and hitters."

The Minutemen return to Earl Lorden Field this afternoon, as they host Central Connecticut University. The game is scheduled to begin at 3 p.m.

Matt Brady contributed to this article.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Shortstop Aaron Senez chipped in two hits to the barrage that the Minuteman offense dropped on Fairfield.

Women's lax looking to turn season around

Nardi back in goal; Robinson out

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Denise Brey and the Minutewoman defense will ahve to control the dynmaic duo of Amy Zimmer and Susan Gibbons if it is to beat Dartmouth this afternoon in Hanover, N.H.

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Last season the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team struggled during the early part of their campaign as it sputtered to a dismal 2-5 record. Eventually however, the Minutewomen began to put it all together and finished the season as the Atlantic 10 champions.

As the great Irish author Jonathan Swift once said, "The more things change, the more they stay the same."

UMass currently sits in a similarly precarious position to the one they were in last year as they enter today's game with a dismal 1-5 record. In order to pick up their all-important second win, the Minutewomen will need to knock off the Dartmouth Big Green in Hanover, N.H.

This will be no easy test for the Maroon and White as it has dropped their last two encounters with Dartmouth (4-1), a 10-6 defeat in Amherst last season and a 13-6 loss back in April of 1999, the last time they traveled up to Hanover.

"They're always a good team," said sophomore defender Bridget Byrne. "They're a young team just like us and it would be a great win for us. I think it would start the rest of the season off on another foot."

Making the trip all that much harder will be the loss of sophomore midfielder Lydia Robinson. Robinson, who notched her second hat trick of the season in Saturday's match with Hofstra, will sit out today's game with an injury to her lower leg. With eight points this season, Robinson is tied for second on the team in scoring. Both her and freshman Angela McMahon have seven goals and one assist through the first six contests.

"She's definitely a key player for us but I think that we have a good enough offense to win without her," Byrne said.

With Robinson's absence an even heavier will fall on team-leading scorer Rachel Ingraffea. The senior midfielder is averaging two goals a game so far this season for the Minutewomen and she will need to continue her impressive form for UMass to pick up a much needed win.

While injuries are hurting the Minutewomen on the offensive end of the field, it is a return form injury that is the main story on defense.

Senior goalie Jen Nardi played her first complete game on Saturday in the 10-6 loss to Hofstra. Nardi sat out the first three games of the year while recovering form off-season shoulder surgery and then split duty in the next two matches with sophomore Cyndi Doyle. Finally, on Saturday UMass coach Phil Barnes felt confident enough in his senior co-captain to give her the start and let her go the distance in between the pipes for the Maroon and White. Despite the loss Nardi made seven saves for the Minutewomen, pushing her season save total to 15.

If the Minutewomen are to pick up their second win of the season they will need to shut down Dartmouth's senior attacker Amy Zimmer. Zimmer has tallied a hat trick in each of the Big Green's four victories this season. Her 12 goals place her second on the team in scoring behind only fellow senior Suzy Gibbons and her 16 tallies. Byrne will probably be handed the responsibility of trying to shut down either Zimmer or Gibbons. The sophomore has been playing great defense as of late for the Maroon and White and will once again be called on to shut down the opposition's top offensive threat.

"Bridget always comes to play," Barnes said. "She's been doing really well throughout the year."

While today's match is just another step along the road for this young Minutewoman squad. A win would to wonders for their confidence as the head into the second half of their season. Despite their dismal record so far all hope is not lost. Twelve players are back from last season's dramatic turnaround and they hope that lightning can indeed strike twice, starting with a win over Dartmouth this afternoon.

"We have to play as a whole team," Byrne said. "Both offense and defense have to be on and we need to get good shots and most importantly play smart."

"We've come together so much since the beginning of the season," added the injured Robinson. "We're a young team and we are growing each day. We just have to keep taking small steps."

A win over a good Dartmouth team would be a giant step for the Minutewomen.

Look what's coming for you this semester...

The Student Alumni Relations Society (STARS) has been really busy planning a lot of great events for their fellow UMass students!!!

STARS is a student group who works very closely with the UMass Alumni Association at the Alumni Relations office. STARS was formed to be the bridge between the students and the alumni. Many of the events bring both groups together for networking and social activities. The STARS members attend national and regional conferences, and are asked to assist with many events such as Commencement and the New Students Open Houses.

STARS is open to any UMass student who is interested in making a difference at the University. General meetings are held every other Tuesday in Memorial Hall at 5:15 p.m. The next meeting will be on Tuesday, April 17th . Not only do STARS members do things for the UMass community but also they are eligible for scholarships, have the chance to meet many outstanding alumni and represent you, the students, on the Alumni Association Board of Directors.

Here's what STARS is planning for you this semester...

April

11 Commencement Ball invitations sent to all Seniors

May

1-16 Commencement Ball tickets on sale at the STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse

1–16 Kiss a Senior Goodbye Sales begin
STARS welcomed the new students in with our Welcome Bundle program and now we say goodbye...these are commemorative glasses filled with kisses that anyone can buy to wish that special senior goodbye.

7-15 Kiss a Senior Goodbye Pick up

7-25 Commencement Ball Tickets available at Cap & Gown Pick up

17 & 18 Free Water and Candy Study Break
STARS members in conjunction with Alumni Association Board Members will be in the W.E.B Dubois library lobby giving away free water and candy as students study for finals.

25 Commencement Ball
All graduating seniors are welcome to come and celebrate their successes in style one last time before the big day!

May 27 Commencement

Congratulations!!!!

Remember to send off your favorite seniors in style...
Kiss them Goodbye!

Send a senior a commemorative glass filled with Hershey Hugs and Kisses for just $6.50.

You can order them any time there is a STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse. They can be picked up by the Senior in May!

Calling All Seniors...

As you prepare to graduate and start the next phase of your life this spring, remember that you are never far from UMass.

The UMass Alumni Association is the best way to stay connected to your alma matter no matter where you go. As an Association member, you receive great benefits including:
- The Alumni Connection, the official newsletter of the Association
- The online directory
- The worldwide travel/study program

In addition to these benefits, and more, you will help us build a network of alumni who want the best for their alma mater.

With increased membership participation, the Association has become a valuable resource to the University. For example, the Association supported the UMass Minuteman Marching Band and their appearance at the 54th Presidential Inauguration. The Association also assists with the annual Commencement Ball and provides various scholarships to exceptional students throughout the University. With your support, the Association can continue giving back to the University and the students.

Be sure to stop by the Alumni Association table at the Cap and Gown pick up in the textbook annex from May 7-25, 2001. While you are there, be sure to fill out the address up date card so that we can keep in touch with you no matter where life may take you.

As a special gift, the Alumni Association will present all graduating seniors who show an interest in becoming members – the first year absolutely free. Remember, your membership not only gives you benefits but also brings benefits back to the University. Membership matters.

UMASS
Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

In keeping with the Senior Campaign tradition that dates back to 1917, the Class of 2001 will be raising money to make a gift to the University in honor of their graduation.

This year's Senior Gift will build on the momentum set by the class of 2000 by continuing the renovation of the Reserve Reading Room in the W.E.B. DuBois Library. The Senior Class gift is a way for the class of 2001 to leave its mark on the campus and begin a tradition of support for the University.

The Senior Campaign will begin in April, and it is expected that $25,000 will be pledged by Commencement.

Be on the lookout next semester for a new STARS event coming next fall to a mud pit near you...

Oozfest 2001

Oozefest 2001 is a fun mud volleyball tournament open to everyone so start thinking about getting a team together for the first annual Oozefest tournament. Young Alumni teams are also welcome (for those of you Seniors!). Look for more information early next semester.

Homecoming 2001...Saturday, October 13

Earn Extra Cash...

and have a great time meeting Alumni.

Work Alumni Weekend June 4th-10th

Mark Your Calendars

for Alumni Weekend! Watch the Daily Collegian for more information as to how to become a part of this year's Alumni Weekend. Housing assistance is available.

Congratulations 2001 Senior Leadership Award Recipients...

This award was created in 1989 to recognize graduating seniors who demonstrated outstanding leadership and service to the University community during their undergraduate careers. Nominated by faculty and/or staff members from across campus, 54 seniors were selected to receive this year's award.

Lunden Abelson	Women's Studies
Felicia Lundquist	Sociology
Nicole Manganelli	Women's Studies
Juan Mas	Electrical Engineering
Keith Medeiros	Biology
Farhad Meskoob	Chinese
Karen Miranda	Communications
Kathleen Nell	Psychology
Sarah Newell	Legal Studies
Jennifer Plumb	Psychology
Nashira Baril	Legal Studies
Patrick Beattie	Sport Management
Melissa Cohen	Management Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Monique De La Oz	Legal Studies
Alison Duffy	Nursing
Sarah Dunton	Women's Studies
Christopher Finan	History
Joshua Funk	Computer Science
Michael Garelick	Psychology
Maria Georges	History
William Greener	Finance and Operations Management
Melanie Haslam	Legal Studies
Scott Hathaway	Turfgrass Management
Emily Hudson	Psychology
Jamie Jee	History
Mathil Kalaora	Psychology
Liza Katz	Anthropology
John Kazlauskas	English
Andrew Kepple	Political Science
Seana Lamothe	English
Dylan Larke	STPEC
Andrew Leis	Sport Management
Courtney Loper	Nursing
Joanna Lovely	Marketing
Kim Lu	Biology
Felicia Lundquist	Sociology
Nicole Manganelli	Women's Studies
Juan Mas	Electrical Engineering
Keith Medeiros	Biology
Farhad Meskooh	Chinese
Karen Miranda	Communications
Kathleen Nell	Psychology
Sarah Newell	Legal Studies
Jennifer Plumb	Psychology
Sara Pragluski	Exercise Science
Elana Premack	Journalism
Sarah Proescher	STPEC
Ann Marie Russell	Psychology
Carolyn Ruszala	Women's Studies
Lynn Schmeichel	Political Science
Joni Skinner	Communication Disorders
Matthew Sievens	Psychology
Juan Suarez	Communication Disorders
Seren Thompson	Computer Science
Thao Tran	Classics
Annie Tummino	Women's Studies
Hydn Vales	Accounting
Nicole Veilleux	Mechanical Engineering
Amanda Wallace	HRTA
Jana Wu	STPEC
Osnat Yagudin	Finance & Operations Management
Jamie Youngman	Sociology

Congratulations 2001 Leaders in the Making Scholarship Recipients...

Leaders in the Making Scholarship was established by the UMass Alumni Association to support the academic and career pursuits of current UMass juniors whose careers to date suggest that they will soon be alumni of distinction. These students have impressive records of purpose and achievement in academic pursuits and philanthropy and stand as role models to their peers.

Enilton Lisboa, Sarah Fitzgerald, Benjamin Joseph, & Brandy Curtis

Ever wonder about the historical accuracy of all these new WWII flicks coming out? Turn to Arts for the facts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Hideo Nomo tossed a no-no. Clever, no?

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 109 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, April 5, 2001

Town seats determined

By Mark Ramirez
Collegian Staff

Dolly Jolly and Eddy Goldberg won last Tuesday's annual elections for Amherst Select Board.

Jolly received 1,387 votes and was elected to her second consecutive term. Goldberg, a member of the town's planning board, received 1,320 votes, narrowly beating Jacqueline Brown-Hazard, who got 1,309.

Paul Bobrowski was fourth with 829 votes, followed by Marjorie Crossman who received 751 votes. Aaron Wilson garnered 411 votes, while Pruddy Gomez rounded out the field with 244.

Amherst voters approved all three questions on the ballot.

Voters said yes, 1,980-1,185, to the establishment of a commission that would examine the town's current form of government and make recommendations. By a vote of 2,260-977, voters approved a 1 percent surcharge on annual property tax that would go to creating open space, developing affordable housing, and the preservation of historic places. The majority of voters, 1,832-1,307, also decided that the Charter Commission should pursue alternatives to the current form of government, which involves Town Meeting, a Select Board, and a Town Manager.

The town clerk's office reported no problems with the new voting system. That this year's counting of votes was slower than last year was attributed to a large number of write-in votes.

Senate motions, ratifies and confronts

By Kristen Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Some members of the Student Government Association said their good-byes at last night's meeting, followed by a heated confrontation, a ratified election, and a slew of passed motions.

Senate members addressed concerns revolving around student rights, specifically on that of Resident Advisors on campus as well as continuing support to Registered Student Organizations.

"Were looking to start an Undergraduate Student Union," Senate Member David Synnott said. "It's about getting workers' powers enforced so that we can be treated fairly and have equal footing with administration."

Synnott continued to explain that their reasons for wanting to have a Union would also be a way to ensure equal pay for equal work.

"Right now RA's are making fifty dollars a week for twenty hours of work," Synnott said. "We have curfews as to what time we have to be home, we could be told to do our Resident Directors laundry and we would have to do it."

Synnott also explained that this effort would also have to go through legal procedures in order for an undergraduate union to be formed at the University of Massachusetts.

Other announcements made included an extended invitation to attend Puerto Rican Night, which takes place this Friday in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Last night's meeting was also put to a brief stop due to a miscommunication over the constitutionality of rules being followed within the Senate. Senator Steven Clunis made a point of order during roll-call over the issue that the Presidential position had been vacant since former President Jeff Howe's term ended on March 31.

"We've been trying to say that were going to follow the rules," Clunis said. "It's ridiculous, we've looked bad before lets not look bad tonight."

Clunis continued to explain that in the by-laws it states that the Speaker of the Senate is supposed to fill that position. A motion was then called, but dismissed after a brief recess. Eltringham expressed his opinions about the motion explaining it as confusion on both parts.

"Everyone was confused and things were a little weird, I could have been more organized on how I handled things," Eltringham said. "No one has really thought about it [motion] in that way."

Following the event, elected President John Sheehan was sworn in as new SGA President, clearing up the issue of a vacancy in the presidential position.

"It feels good to be sworn in and I'm really looking forward to this year," Sheehan said. "I feel very privileged."

Motions were also on the agenda for the evening as a motion was passed to develop a central repository of campus rules and policies that will be under the direction of SCERA.

"Having SCERA do this is big. It's something that they can work on with us [SGA] again and especially with the Senate," Eltringham said.

Another motion that drew much conversation was that involving parking services and the issues of towing at UMass. The motion, which was inspired by UMass student Frank Melberg, called for

Turn to SGA, page 3

New SGA president John Sheehan (left) and trustee Jon Laubinger were sworn in at last night's SGA meeting.

Building within nature's envelope

Landscape artist transforms Mullins Center into ecosystem

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

In the past, it took a showcase performance from the Massachusetts hockey or basketball teams to bring a little life to the William D. Mullins Center.

Not anymore.

During the past two days, the southern end of the Mullins' floor has become a canvas for one of the most ambitious and creative projects imaginable. The medium is like none other; the brushstrokes are living plants and shrubs, moss and grasses, dirt and stone. The central image is water, literally thousands of gallons of it, cascading down off what used to be the bleachers into a broad, gurgling pool. At the edge of the water begins a patio of flat blue stone, leading up to the back door of a picturesque little cabin built of rustic, hand-hewn beams.

All situated smack-dab in the middle of what used to be the student seating section.

The artist at work is Buzz Gray, landscape designer and part owner of the Environmental Design Group (EDG). Gray's Mullins Center project is actually a display for this weekend's Three County Home and Garden Show, a two-day event boasting western Massachusetts' premiere products and services for building, remodeling and landscaping.

But it is hard to imagine any of the show's other participants even coming close, in terms of sheer transformational magic, to what Gray is doing with his section of the Mullins' floor.

"Our approach really is special," said Gray, who has been designing aquascapes for two years. "We figure that if we make this kind of an effort, people will respond to it."

It's hard not to respond to a process that turns bleachers into waterfalls and a concrete floor into a living ecosystem. Aquascape construction is a relatively new facet of an already booming garden industry, one that Gray says began in the western part of the country and has since spread like wildfire. He feels that a major reason for the popularity of aquascapes is the phenomenon of "cocooning" – people buying homes and subsequently spending a lot of time and money improving their yards.

"Gardening was already the most popular hobby in America," Gray said. "Now the fastest growing segment of that hobby is aquascaping."

Technology has also played a key role in the sweeping popularity of the systems. Problems of traditional man-made ponds, such as cloudy "green water," have been solved by advancements in filtration. The system itself has been simplified into kit-form by Chicago-based company Aquascape, leaving Gray more time to spend on perfecting the designs of his landscapes.

Gray seems born to work with this medium, an artist who wields the powers of manipulating nature like a paintbrush. His background is a mix of theatre and landscaping, two practices that center on melding creativity with the aesthetic.

"I've been doing landscaping and designing swimming pools for years," said Gray, who resides in Lenox. "And I've done set design for theatre for 20 years, cinescape design for 10. I really enjoy mixing the theatrical with the realistic."

The Environmental Design Group has begun construction of an aquascape, complete with waterfall, patio and cabin, in the southern end of the Mullins Center.

That love for set design and construction is apparent in Gray's Mullins project, where a quick glance convinces your mind that you've just stepped into the back yard of a mountain hideaway somewhere. The 'cabin' is actually nothing more than one corner of a structure, purposely left ragged at its edges to simultaneously give both a 'ruined' and 'under construction' feel.

Its window and door overlook the serene aquascape behind it, but it provides more than just a frame for the scene's natural beauty. The cabin is significant in that it represents home improvement hand-in-hand with yard improvement, a key concept within Gray's company.

"Environmental Design Group is an integration of designers, landscapers, architects and builders," Gray said. "We try to take a holistic, comprehensive approach to our sites with all the different areas getting consideration in the design."

Others within the company, who haven't had Gray's theatrical background, have a little tougher time with projects like this. Mike White, another part owner whose forte is building, found an interesting irony while working on the Tudor-style cabin in Mullins.

"Usually, I try to build things that last," White said. "But with something like this, the less sturdy you build it the better; it's easier to take down."

Even years of theatre don't help to soften that process, however: Gray contends that breaking down or 'striking' a set results in feelings that can only be described as painful.

"Striking a project is always very sad," Gray said. "If you've done it right, you've put your time, love and heart into it."

But for now, thoughts of striking the Mullins aquascape are far away. Construction is in full swing, and a transformation of this magnitude, of steel and concrete to life, takes concentration.

It all starts with a plan, a design. Gray's approach is culled from years of experience in the landscape business, but could just as easily have been conceived in a classroom or an art studio. The components of his plan are so basic, so simple, yet when brought together they result in the kind of complete beauty and balance that could not be achieved by chance.

The black "Biofall," atop staging at right, will pump thousands of gallons of water down a man-made waterfall built on the Mullins' bleachers.

"The very first thing that must be explored is the relationship between mass and void," Gray said. "In this case, the patio area behind the cabin is the void, and the hillside on the bleachers, where the waterfall is, becomes the mass."

This basic concept is integral to all of Gray's work, and has spawned an interesting ritual that he often uses with new customers. When he first walks a piece of property with its owner, Gray will ask him or her to stand wherever they feel comfortable, and it is from there that the land-

Turn to ECOLOGY page 2

■ ecology

continued from page 1

Illustration courtesy Aquascape

scape" artist will begin drawing his imaginary lines of mass and void.

"People will ask me how big they should make their yards," Gray said. "I'll walk out the door with them and tell them to just keep backing up, until they feel comfortable. It's a matter of space and feel, a comfort level, that I have to establish with them."

The second aspect of Gray's approach is comprised of three elements: line, structure and composition. Line is fundamental to any landscape, whether natural or integrated into a man-made design. The problem with the latter is that the line can become too calculated or symmetrical, making it less pleasing in a scape where a natural aesthetic is the goal.

"Look at this line," said Gray, motioning along the back of his pool, at the base where the waterfall's central cascade will land. He traces in the air with his finger to the edges of the pool, where it widens into circular gathering areas. "Once the plants and stone are in, the lines will be less formal, and will become more naturalistic."

Structure is a facet that depends largely on the site itself; E D G' design philosophies center as much on the integration of existing elements as they do on the introduction of new ones. Some of Gray's more memorable projects have been built around objects that were already present, from the shape of the land itself to boulders and trees.

COURTESY AQUASCAPE

Rocks and infrastructure provide the hardscape for Gray's project.

"The goal is to tie the imposed man-made scape into the natural scape," Gray said. "You try to find a way to tie the existing macroscape into the microscape you're constructing."

Composition is like the artist's palette, a world of choices that each open new doors of possibility within the scape. The Mullins aquascape is obviously dominated by its waterfall and cabin, but the space in between will boast enough different types of plants to keep a botanist busy for hours.

"The mountain in the back will be covered with hemlock, and natural plants like mountain laurel, juniper, blueberry and various natural grasses," Gray said. "As you move closer to the house, they'll give way to more exotic plants like seasonal azaleas, pansies, herbs and various ground covers."

Another compositional choice came when Gray designed the cabin's patio; he chose an irregular blue flagstone that he had to order specially from Virginia.

The last element in Gray's design plan is, quite possibly, the most important. It is an aspect that can only be considered at the right time in the project, one that can influence practically every other decision within the plan: color.

"Color is such a huge part because people react to color with emotion," Gray said. "Color brings so much feeling to the scape. If you start working with color too soon, while you're still working on the other elements, it can begin to change the whole feeling of the project."

Once the color has been fully developed, the only step left in the magical process is to bring the aquascape to life. That will happen tomorrow, when Gray and his crew will add the roughly 10,000 gallons of water necessary to fuel the waterfall and pool. Fish are also a possibility, though Gray is worried about the level of chlorine in Amherst's water.

That concern brings to light another issue within this process, perhaps the biggest issue, definitely one that influences Gray's work more than any other. Beyond the concrete and steel of the hardscape, beyond the branches and leaves of the softscape lies a delicate relationship that makes the whole process possible.

Standing back and looking at his work in progress, Gray points out that the nature of his business is primarily just that, nature. The process of aquascape design and construction is as much an environmental science as it is an art; Gray and his partners in EDG have worked hard to emphasize natural integration as perhaps the most significant part of their operation.

"Areas are cordoned off, plants are transplanted and the native scapes are saved and reintroduced," Gray said. "An environmentally-conscious scape is also better because native plants are easier to grow and require no maintenance."

Gray not only builds around existing plants, but he chooses new plants based on what the existing soil structure will best support. In that respect, Gray doesn't just work with the environment; he also works for it, protecting the natural integrity of his sites even as he builds and beautifies them. His company's motto is "Caring for the Environment," and discussing the issue with Gray reveals that this artist doesn't just use natural awareness as window dressing.

"Our goal is to build within nature's envelope," Gray said. "By using things like nitrogen-fixing plants, we can construct a system where everything works together and the site maintains itself naturally. That's the beauty of these scapes, and why we think we have something really special here."

©COURTESY AQUASCAPE

Dozens of different types of plant life provide the softscape.

To see images of the completed aquascape, check out part two of this feature in Monday's Collegian.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. Became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Muske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Dantig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majcewski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
liquor • beer • wine • lottery • phonecards • cigarettes

Heineken, 12 pack	$10.99 + dep.
Amstel, 12 pack	$10.99 + dep.
Dinkel Acker, 12 pack	$9.99 + dep.
Honey Brown, 12 pack	$7.99 + dep.
M.G. Vallejo, all kinds	$4.99
Sutter Home Chardonnay 750	$4.99
Luna Di Luna, all kinds 750	$7.99
Sutter Home White Zinfandel	$11.00
Rubinoff Vodka 1.5	$9.99
Smirnoff Raspberry 1.5	$19.99
Jim Beam 1.5	$19.99
Stohli Strawberry	$16.99

visit our new Beer Of The World section!
Register for Weekly Drawing!

The Ultimate Graduation Gift
Say goodbye to student loan debt.
Sign up today! It's FREE! Win $500!
GradFree.com
A student loan "gift registry"
Let the people who care about you lighten the load

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS — See You There — DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

COMPLETE AUTO BODY REPAIRS
ALL MAKES AND MODELS
DANA AUTOMOTIVE Chevrolet Volkswagen
COLLISION REPAIR • GLASS INSTALLATION
Authorized GM/VW Body Shop
Frame & Unibody Straightening
24 HR HOTLINE 586-7250 | FREE LOANERS! | 968 Bridge Road NORTHAMPTON RS# 2427

YOU WANT BARGAINS? YOU WANT WARM WEATHER? HEY, 1 OUTTA 2 AIN'T BAD!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS COORS LIGHT, MICHELOB LIGHT $44.99 plus tax
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB $45.99 plus tax
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99 plus tax
1/2 KEGS BERKSHIRE BREWING CO. ALL FLAVORS $88.99 plus tax
BUD & BUD LIGHT 30 PACK $17.99 plus dep.
MILWAUKEE'S BEST 30 PACK $9.99 plus dep.
BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT CASE $9.49 plus dep.
SAMUEL ADAMS LAGER 12 PACK $9.99 plus dep.
Corona EXTRA CASE $18.99 plus dep.
MIKE'S HARD LEMONADE 12 PACK $9.99 plus dep.
WINES OF THE MONTH
BEAULIEU VINEYARDS COASTAL WINES $8.99
LIVINGSTON CELLARS $6.49
CORBETT CANYON $6.49
RIUNITE $5.99
MANISCHEWITZ $2.99
LUNA DI LUNA CHARDONNAY/PINOT GRIGIO $7.49
EMERALD SPRINGS VODKA $8.99
JACK DANIELS $15.99
BOOTH'S GIN $15.99
RON ROBERTO RUM $11.99
BLACK VELVET CANADIAN WHISKEY $12.99
J. G. L. FRIDAY'S $11.99
MADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
The Holyoke store WILL REMAIN OPEN during renovation of the Stop & Shop Plaza
SALE PRICES THURS. 4.05.01 THRU WEDS. 4.11.01

Police issue a door lock warning

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police department released a public safety announcement warning students to lock their doors after an incident last week.

In the early morning hours of March 28, an unidentified male was found asleep in a female student's dormitory room. No assault took place, although the woman was forced to ask the individual several times to leave the room. The intruder claimed that he was simply looking for someone to, "hang out with" Jim Lyons the spokesman for the UMPD explained. However the department does caution students to lock their doors when they leave or they are asleep.

Officers patrolling lot 32 early on Saturday spotted a 21-year-old Joseph Cannon of Auburn striking a parked vehicle with his hand and then kicking another vehicle and denting it. He was arrested for disorderly conduct and for destruction of property valued at under $250.

"It appeared as though alcohol was involved," Lyons explained.

On the same day while officers where patrolling a parking lot they observed a woman carrying a clear plastic bag with cans of beer inside. It appeared to officers that she was 21, and when she was asked she admitted that she was indeed underage. Police arrested 19-year-old Hannah Ohlin and 19-year-old Kathleen Lucas, both of East Longmeadow for possession of alcohol by a person under the age of 21.

Michael Drake, 17 of Shutesbury was arrested on Sunday when police pulled him over for a traffic violation. He was found to be carrying alcohol and was found to be in possession of a class D substance. He was issued a field sobriety test, which he passed and then he was arrested on the additional charge of driving unlicensed.

Police arrived to Moore Dormitory on Friday night to find a group of upset individuals in the lobby of the building. Upon further investigation they discovered 19-year-old intoxicated Daniel Borowiecki with a large gash on his face. He explained that he had gotten into a fight with a friend of his and that he planned to fight again. He then began running down the hall and out of the building and led the officers in a foot pursuit.

He was apprehended and sent to Cooley Dickinson Hospital for his injuries and then he was brought back to the police station and booked on the charges of disorderly conduct and the use of a false identification.

A half-dressed male student was found unconscious on the lawn between the Morill Greenhouses. Police determined him to be incapacitated and incapable of taking care of himself. Due to the cold weather, he was taken into protective custody until he regained consciousness and was able to care for himself.

A student from Brooks Dormitory called the police and asked that his intoxicated ex-girlfriend be removed from his dormitory room. The woman had disappeared when police arrived on the scene but they did conduct interviews with some of her friends and acquaintances in order to check on her well-being.

Police Log

Annoying Behavior

March 28
An individual in Coolidge Tower reported getting a threatening e-mail.

March 29
There was a report of fireworks outside of Butterfield Dormitory.
There was a poster taped to a sidewalk with racial content on it.
There was a 911 hang up call from Brett Dormitory.
Staff from Cance Dormitory requested help in breaking up a large party involving alcohol.

March 30
There was a report of students throwing bottles off of Brett Dormitory.
There was a domestic incident in Patterson Dormitory.
There was a report of fireworks outside of John Adams Dormitory.
There was a report of fireworks outside of Dickinson Dormitory.

March 31
There was a report of fireworks in the Orchard Hill Bowl.
There was an intoxicated individual kicking doors in Melville Dormitory.
There was a report of fireworks outside of Butterfield Dormitory.

April 2
There was a report of fireworks outside of Van Meter Dormitory.

Breaking and Entering

March 30
A vehicle was broken into in lot 33 a cd player and cd's were stolen that were valued at over $250.

March 31
A room was broken into in John Quincy Adams Dormitory and cash was stolen.

April 1
A vehicle was broken into in lot 23 and a cd player and cd's were stolen that were valued at over $250.
A wallet was stolen from a room in McNamara Dormitory.

April 2
A door to a dormitory room in Coolidge Dormitory was pried open and cash and a large amount of cd's were stolen.

Disturbance

April 1
There was a fight reported in progress outside of the Malcom X Center.
There was a report of an individual pounding on doors outside of the Malcom X Center.

Vandalism

March 29
Offensive graffiti was found on a wall in Dwight Dormitory.
Racial graffiti was found on a picnic table and a sidewalk outside of W.E.B Dubois Library.

March 31
There was threatening graffiti written outside of a men's room in Baker Dormitory directed at an individual.

■ SGA

continued from page 1

Parking Services to end illegal practice of not honoring appeals until one's fines have been paid. The motion, which was presented by Senate member Michael Whitehouse, passed unanimously.

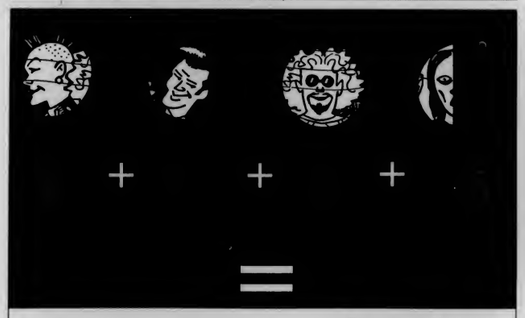
A motion concerning the 500 vacant faculty slots at UMass was also addressed and passed at last night's Senate meeting. The motion explained that the lack of faculty has contributed to the over-enrollment and excessive contingent work at UMass, and called for measures to be taken to fill the vacant slots.

"I really liked all the motions presented tonight; the motion involving faculty slots is a really good statement to make," Eltringham said. "Parking is always an issue on this campus as well. Overall, minus what happened earlier, which does happen and he [Clunis] had every right to call a point of order, it was a really good positive meeting."

SHALINI MARTYC COLLEGIAN

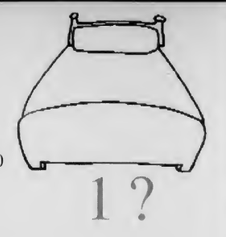
Jobs, justice, and picket signs.
Students rally in front of the Student Union yesterday.

www.dailycollegian.com



Ever tried to fit 3.5 students into one bed? It's not comfortable.

UMass has 22,000 students trying to sleep in 6,300 beds, leaving 15,700 students looking for an apartment.



1?

Advertise yours in the Annual Collegian Apartment Guide.

Deadline to place a classifieds ad is April 6.
Issue to be published on April 11.

Stop by our office in the Campus Center basement or call 545-3500 for more information

The Best Spring Campus Event is Tipping Off
new balance
Haigis Hoopla
April 28th & 29th
2001
Stop by Curry Hicks, Room #5 to pick up a registration brochure.
Call 545-5689 for more information. Visit us on the web at http://haigishoopla.zminutemen.com
Presented by UMASS Sport Management Program
ACDelco PURE ROCK LAZER 99.3 Coca-Cola CAPE COD POTATO CHIPS yoohoo PLAY THE BEST. PLAY SPALDING Inside N'OUT YOUR MEAL PLAN
KAPLAN 1 800 KAP TEST kaptest.com zMinutemen.com Brought to You by UMass and its Alumni Association Boys & Girls Clubs

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Thursday, April 5, 2001

Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze

collegianedtorial@yahoo.com

4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Rather mistake

Questions credibility

The lines have long since blurred, but now they begin to fade away.

It was reported yesterday in the Washington Post that CBS News anchor Dan Rather appeared at a Democratic Party fundraising event in Austin, Texas, which netted upwards of $20,000 for the party bank account.

What has happened to journalistic standards?

It has always been felt that, yes, journalists are independent human beings who will have their own views and beliefs. It has, however, been the standard for years that journalists must preserve objectivity in their reporting and in writing and that they will, at the very least, maintain an appearance of objectivity as a part of their profession.

When television entered the arena of news, the lines of objectivity began to fade. As the anchors gained greater fame they did less and less real reporting. The 'talking head' was born – the 'reporter' was replaced with the 'anchor.' A reporter goes and gets news. An anchor reads news, just like every average guy, but he has the privilege of having nice hair and staring into a camera while doing so.

The reporter has been held to a higher standard than the anchor for quite a while now, with the anchor enjoying more leeway from the morality of the industry. Still, however, they were involved, and it was at least fell desirable to profess the integrity of journalism.

Evidently, however, that is no longer the case.

There is absolutely no legitimate way that Rather can justify his involvement in this fundraiser. His claims that he wasn't aware when he booked it are hollow, since he does admit that he had his eyes open when he went. He could have refused to enter and been made a hero. He entered, and now has to feel the brute force of this editorial and the like ones being written nationwide.

How can Rather ever read news with any semblance of neutrality? How can he report on politics (the bread and butter of his career) and not be seen as slanted? If he reports harshly on Republicans, is it because of his affiliation? If he turns the tables on the Democrats, is he overcompensating for his embarrassment? We can never know the answers to this question, and his career is forever tainted.

In the Post article, a CBS spokeswoman is quoted as saying "Obviously our standards don't allow correspondents to participate in political party fund-raisers. No one believes in this and upholds it more fervently than Dan Rather. This was an honest oversight on his part."

So there will be no punishment. A 'mistake' that could have been avoided up until the last single moment before he entered and spoke will be forgiven and Rather will march on, reading his news and making his bazillions.

The credibility of that news, however, is now hopelessly lost. Dan Rather hurt himself and his profession that night. Let's hope the Democrats appreciate it.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

And another thing...

ROB SCHULZE

I was briefly interested in the SGA when Tony Witman ran for President. Tony's a good guy; we used to work together in the DC. It was fun to watch him make fools of people who were trying to be all serious and stuff. Then he lost, though, and now I couldn't care less yet again.

I remain passionately anti-Cannabis Reform Coalition. This probably has to do mostly with the fact that I don't want cannabis to be reformed. They also have a tendency to call me and demand things of me, too, as well as knocking on my door to try and get me to sign stuff. There is nothing that annoys me more then people calling me or disturbing me at home to further their cause.

MassPIRG does this too. I am very moderately in favor of the environment. By this I mean that I recycle. I support environmentally sound candidates and I agree and support most measures designed to protect the environment. By this logic, MassPIRG and I should be bosom buddies – we support the same general goals. The problem, however, is that I'm very, very moderate, and there are other things that are much more important to me; recycling is all I do in my day-to-day life for the planet, and I'm satisfied with it. I'm never going to be a crusader; my lot is to do my little bit and offer my support for those who want to do more.

This doesn't hold water with MassPIRG, though. They want your mind, body and soul. You have to be with them in the ponds. You have to sign all their petitions. You have to go to their meetings. You have to do what they want you to do – and they are not shy about telling you what they want.

The strongarm tactics – the ambushes in the Campus Center, the knocks on the door – really turn me off to the whole organization. Not everyone is going to agree with them, for one thing, and for another not everyone who is mildly in favor wants to become a sudden activist. It's a shame, really. I hear that they do really good things, but I still find myself wishing that they'd just go away.

I disagree with almost – well, actually, now that I think about it, to this point I disagree with every stance the Republican Club has ever taken. What can I say? I paint my fingernails.

I'm not religious, but I'm in favor of many of the (as our Fearless Leader would dub them) 'faith-based' organizations on campus. Hillel in particular has always seemed to be a great organization. They just do so much; there's always something going on and I usually hear good things from participants. The best part is that they advertise through signings and whatnot, so people are aware but not pressured, which is key.

Newman Center doesn't even really advertise – it's just there, and, judging by all the ashes a couple of Wednesdays ago, lots of people know it. I've never been in the Newman Center (I haven't gotten the ashes in years – it's all part of my master plan of eventually, after I die, burning in hell), but, once again, it's unobtrusive and a real resource for those who need it. Plus the Snack Bar is legendary.

The Skybox does good things, and I'm not just saying that because I get in free to the shows sometimes. You have to respect Tom's mission of providing good music to the UMass community, and I can say from firsthand experience that there have been some damned good shows up in the Campus Center. I just wish that more people would go – you really are missing some good stuff.

> "Not every club or organization deserves your time of day. Some of them, though, are worth having around."

WMUA – I was on a show once, when I was a freshman, and all I remember is that me and my old roommate got the DJ to play 'Seventh Son of a Seventh Son" by Iron Maiden on the air. It was sweet. (Actual lyrical quote: "Seventh son of a seventh son, seventh son of a seventh so-ooo-oo-on, seventh son of a seventh son, ooo-ooo-ooo") Knowing that no radio station could ever top that, I haven't listened since. The guys who run it are friendly, though; I can vouch for that.

I love that club that sells coffee in the morning in Bartlett. Those people are god damned lifesavers. Not every club or organization deserves your time of day. Some of them, though, are worth having around. Never hurts to get involved.

P.S.: Just by reading this you've supported another campus organization... and I thank you.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Paying the cost to be the boss

BRIAN LOHNES

I have this insane idea that people have to "pay their dues" early in life to get what they really want later on. I honestly believe that if you work your ass off at this age, then later on life will be easier. I think I may know where this stems from.

Both of my parents are blue-collar working people. My mom is a board-certified aesthetician and my dad and grandfather have the family business building pallets. They both work very hard for their money and they always have. I remember being a young pup and being slightly confused as to why Dad headed back to the shop after we finished eating dinner some nights. My mom would explain to me that he was really busy and the work wasn't going to do itself.

When I was about 12 or 13, (maybe a bit older. I can't remember) I would wake up at 5:30 a.m. on Saturday mornings and go to work with my father. I would spend my time separating boards, or scraping the ice off of them during the winter after they were brought in from the outside. I will never forget how cold that building was on those mornings. It chilled me right down to the bones. It was after a bunch of those Saturdays with my dad and grandfather that I decided I didn't want to make the pallet industry my career. I smile when I think of those mornings, fighting to stay awake in my dad's truck on the way to the shop, listening to WBZ news radio all day, and feeling the greatest relief when the 9 a.m. coffee break rolled around. (As a side note, I never drank coffee – just cold O.J.)

It was those experiences, as well as many others with my dad like fixing things around the house that cemented my mindset into blue-collar mode. It creates an interesting set of problems when considering what you are going to do with the rest of your life.

Don't get me wrong here, I am by no means swiping at people who have not shared these type of experiences as I have; in fact, I consider myself lucky to have had them. They have built my character and taught me more than UMass ever could.

> " I am not rejecting the knowledge and culture that I am being exposed to here at school; sometimes I may find it difficult to see the purpose in some of the things I have studied...but I gladly accept those things anyway, even though I may never use them."

I think a lot about my mindset here at school. I am kind of being torn between two worlds. I am not rejecting the knowledge and culture that I am being exposed to here at school; sometimes I may find it difficult to see the purpose in some of the things I have studied here, but I gladly accept those things anyway, even though I may never use them. I also think there is a stigma about blue-collar people's intelligence. I think this is where I have a hard time here at school.

I will readily admit that my mom and dad couldn't quote Shakespeare, or have long in-depth conversations about philosophy or that they'd even want to. This kind of knowledge has always struck me as being nice, but pretty much useless, unless you are a Shakespearian actor, or your name is Socrates. Practical knowledge outweighs book knowledge on any plane I can imagine. My mom studied for almost a year for her job and she is now a veritable skin expert and she has the clients to back her up. My dad as has shown the ability to fix, and build almost anything, mainly because of my ability to break pretty much everything.

I don't want school and knowledge to change who I am. I do not want to become an intellectual, but at the same time I don't want reject the vast amount of knowledge that I have acquired here at school. I am a well- traveled person; I have seen a lot of this country and I have been to that golden land of culture known as Europe.

Hanging above my desk is the piece of literature I read whenever I have thoughts like those above. The poem is "Digging" by Seamus Heaney. Essentially, the poem is about a boy who is talking about his father and grandfather who share the same occupation. They cut sod in the bogs of Ireland. It is hard work in the bogs and the boy sees his father and grandfather handling their spades, and he is in awe. Much like me, the boy realizes that he will not be headed in their path. The poem ends with the words that give me solace whenever I have these thoughts.

"But I've not spade to follow men like them. Between my finger and my thumb. The squat pen rests. I'll dig with it.

Indeed I will.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

CANADA '01
DIE DAVE DIE
SEND
GO HOME RACIST
BURN IN HELL HOROWITZ
DAVID HOROWITZ IS GREETED WARMLY BY THE UMASS COMMUNITY ON TUESDAY...
ARTIST'S NOTE: THIS IS THE 2nd ANGRY MOB I HAVE DRAWN IN 2 WEEKS... I LOVE UMASS!

Letter to the Editor

Horowitz delivering a mixed message

To The Editor,

I attended the talk by David Horowitz yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom and from my perspective, it's very sad that he uses the First Amendment to hide his racist ideas. Reparations for slavery, to me, is a non-issue. In my view, the sole purpose for his visit here, as well as his sponsors, was to widen the chasm between students trying to struggle against racism and inequality.

By wrapping his talk in the cloth of the First Amendment, we are all side-tracked into a discussion about free speech, rather than a discussion about racist ideas searching for fertile ground on our campus, or why many school newspapers, including the Collegian, decided that his ad (if it was really his) was inappropriate, or who is the conservative foundation funding his visits around the country and what is its agenda.

He spoke about "political correctness" as being too confining. I don't think that political correctness is such a terrible thing if it means treating people with some measure of sensitivity. He talked about how stifling the educational atmosphere is on our campus, and how the radicals of the 60s are the professors of today, keeping education away from students as if they were children. In my view, the educational atmosphere at UMass is only stifling to racist, red-baiting tactics masquerading as intellectual discourse, and it may be true that many of the radicals from the 60s are now involved in education, but it is also true that many of the conservatives of the 60s are still polluting the air with toxic poison, involving the United States in war for corporate gain, and sowing the seeds of greed, selfishness and hate around the world.

As an African-American, born and raised in this country, I love the promise of America. The reality, however, is quite another story. Everywhere I go, I am always conscious that the color of my skin is hated in some people's minds, but, in spite of all this, I know that everything I have and everything that I have accomplished is through persistence and hard work. Coupled with this, however, is the hard work of previous generations of people of many colors, working side-by-side during the Civil Rights movement, the anti-war movement, the gay movement, the women's movement and the movement for peace and justice around the world.

The purpose of the speaker's comments was not to educate us about reparations for slavery. His comments were an effort to side-track our attention and further divide us from seeing our common goals. His talk was not about the First Amendment, it was about racism.

Jose Tolson
Pelham, MA/New World Theater

ANY REGRETS, DUTCH?
JUST ONE...
I REGRET I DIDN'T BAIL ON MY COMPANY MONTHS EARLIER! IF I'D SOLD THEN, I'D BE ON THE "FORTUNE" BILLIONAIRE LIST RIGHT NOW!!
BUT NO REGRETS ABOUT THE SMALL INVESTOR JUMP-SCARED MAKING YOU RICH?
UH, WHO?
YOU BET THE FARM ON AMAT?
PURE INTERNET PLAYS. I WAS TRYING TO DIET IT!

The Collegian is always welcoming student columns. Please bring your submissions to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Arts & Living

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Thursday, April 5, 2001 Design by Ken Campbell and Mike Kulak

Once more into the breach: WWII in Film

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

We go to the movies to be entertained, because we want the director and the stars to envelop us in the story. We want to emerge 90-135 minutes later glad we plunked down hard earned money to see Hollywood's latest offerings of comedy, drama, horror and science fiction. Lately, Hollywood has been delving into the past to entertain the present. With the use of computer generated effects, a moving score and some gritty camera angles, the Second World War has come to life again.

History books have told these tales for decades, but it is the celluloid of the Panaflex that presents these stories to the general public. But what story are they telling? How much can the average person learn from these films? Does seeing U-571 give an insight into the Battle of the Atlantic? Does the Thin Red Line accurately depict combat on Guadalcanal?

Do any of these films accurately portray the events of World War Two?

All of the films reviewed are from 1990 and after.

Enemy at the Gates

While most of the recent films have dealt with the European Theatre of the War, this film is the only one to deal with the eastern front, and the only one that doesn't give the message that the United States was the only hero. The battle of Stalingrad, the setting for Enemy at the Gates, was one of the most hard fought and important battles of the Second World War.

The debate over whether or not the sniper duel between Vasili Zaitsev and an expert German sniper, the central aspect of the film, continues on.

There was a Sergeant Vasili Zaitsev, a young man from the Ural Mountains of the Soviet Union. He was a sniper with over two hudred confirmed kills assigned to the 284th Division of the Stalingrad front. There was also a Tania Chernova, a former partisan or guerilla, who joined the Red Army. Commissar Danilov also existed.

The expert German sniper who Zaitsev hunts and is hunted by may not have existed. In fact, aside from Zaitsev's own account, there are no records of any German sniper being sent to kill Zaitsev. There is no record of any Major Konigs, or Colonel Heinz Thorwald as he is sometimes called.

"For a long time I examined the enemy positions, but could not detect his hiding-place. From the speed with which he had fired I came to the conclusion that the sniper was some where directly ahead of us," Zaitsev wrote.

"Yes, he was certainly there, under the sheet of metal in no-mans land. I thought I would make sure. I put a mitten on the end of a small plank and raised it. The Nazi fell for it. I carefully let the plank down in the same position as I had raised it and examined the bullet-hole. It had gone straight through from the front; that meant that the Nazi was under the sheet of metal."

"We worked by night and were in position by dawn. The sun rose, Kulikov (Zaitsev's friend and spotter) took a blind shot; we had to rouse the sniper's curiosity. After lunch our rifles were in the shade and the sun was shining directly on to the German's position. At the edge of the sheet of metal something was glittering: an odd bit of glass or telescopic sights?" Zaitsev continued.

"Kulikov carefully began to raise his helmet. The German fired. For a fraction of a second Kulikov rose and screamed. The German believed that he had finally got the Soviet sniper he had been hunting for four days, and half raised his head from beneath the sheet of metal. That was what I had been banking on. I took careful aim. The German's head fell back, and the telescopic sights of his rifle lay motionless, glistening in the sun."

Given the lack of corroborating accounts or records by either German archives or former Soviet records, the story is considered Soviet propaganda by some historians.

However, assuming Zaitsev's story is true, the movie is still inaccurate. The filmmakers kill off Kulikov, who is essential to Zaitsev's victory. Tania in real life was a blonde sniper who was a hardened soldier. And this is just a guess, but Russians don't have English accents, do they?

The film does have some redeeming qualities. The tanks and armored vehicles are dead on, as are most of the visible weapons. The use of armored trains, with the anti aircraft and artillery cars is a very nice touch. The strafing of Soviet transports, along with the NKVD guards and the "fight or die" policy are all fairly historically accurate.

Professor Ronald Story, who teaches several classes about the Second World War, commented on the film's redeeming qualities.

"I thought there were some terrific depictions of the effects of the bombing. What really worked for me was how terrified everybody was of those bombers," Story said. "They were more terrified of the bombers in many cases than they were of people with rifles and machine guns. You don't get that sense very often."

Unfortunately, the over use of poetic license on Zaitsev's story cannot be overlooked. Enemy at the Gates is more Hollywood than history.

"I'm only disappointed in the movie because it's not a very good movie," Story said.

Memphis Belle

This film tells the tale of the 25th and final bomb run of the B-17 bomber named 'Memphis Belle'. The commanding generals would let any crew that completed 25 missions to go back to the States, and the Memphis Belle is at 24. According to the movie, the plane, a four engine Boeing Flying Fortress of the Eighth Air Force, must bomb a factory in Bremen, Germany, in a daring daylight raid in May of 1943.

"This is a silly movie," Professor Story said. "There is an original movie called The Memphis Belle, an army documentary, which is funny. It celebrates the "flying fortress" concept."

The B-17, Story explained, with its multiple guns and tight flying formations, was thought to be nearly invincible early in the war.

By 1944 everybody knew that these bombers would never make it unless they had fighter escorts."

There are many problems with Hollywood's take on the most famous bomber of WWII. Primarily, the raid on Bremen was not the Belle's 25th and final mission. The actual mission was an attack on the submarine bases at Lorient, France, a considerably less dangerous (although still deadly) raid than the ones over the Third Reich.

Secondly, the radioman, played by Eric Stoltz, is severely wounded by flak in the movie. Nobody was ever seriously injured on the real Belle. The ball turret, which in the film is shot away completely, leaving Sean Astin dangling in mid air, was never hit and can still be seen in its customary position under the fuselage of the Belle, which is on display in Memphis, Tennessee.

However, these mistakes aside, the film offers an opportunity to witness what a typical mission in a B-17 was like. Ball turret gunners were a notoriously short-lived position, and fighters did harass the bombers. The Norton bombsight did place control of the airplane in the bombardier's hands, and most times the bombs missed. The film Memphis Belle is not historically the story of the B-17 Number 41-24485, and the story is formulaic and superficial.

"It's the least interesting movie about World War Two that I have seen," Story said.

U-571

This film has quite the interesting premise: an old US Navy sub is modified to look like a German "milch" or supply submarine. It then intercepts a crippled German U-boat and captures its Enigma encoding machine. However, when the real milch arrives, it blows the US sub up and forces the small boarding party to pilot the damaged U- 571 into friendly waters. Along the way, they encounter a Kreigsmarine destroyer with a bad attitude and a lot of depth charges.

There is no doubt that the Navy could modify a sub to look like a German boat. In fact, the Navy modified two freighters, called Q- boats, into heavily armed submarine traps. The Q- boat program was a dismal failure, claiming the life of only one German sailor and losing one of the two ships, the USS Atik, and its entire crew of 141.

The interior of the movie version of U-571 is very good. The sound and feel of a German U-boat comes across very well. In fact, the only real problems that beat U-571 in the "Hollywood, not history" category are errors in the script that completely ignore historical facts. Words of warning: what follows are critiques of small details. They would not be known to the general public, and do not detract in anyway from the average viewer's enjoyment of the film. This is merely history.

The very first problem with U-571 is that the British Royal Navy, not Harvey Keitel, recovered most of the Enigma intelligence. The common tactic for this was chasing down a sub, depth charging until it surfaced, and then boarding it quickly before the sub succumbed to its scuttling charges. The HMS Bulldog captured U-110 and its Enigma machine, codebooks, and other intelligence. HMS Petard captured U-559's code keys, but lost two sailors in trying to retrieve the quickly sinking boat's Enigma. The Americans recovered one Enigma and codebooks late in the war, off the coast of Africa.

The boat that is modified and later torpedoed is credited as the S-33.

The S-33, in reality, was stationed in the Pacific and remained there for the duration of the war. The S-33 was decommissioned on October 23, 1945.

It was never destroyed in the Atlantic.

The emblem emblazoned on the front of the modified S-33 is not an official U-boat insignia. In reality the swastika and eagle was the sign of U-132.

Another error is the choice of U- 571 as the target sub. The real U-571 was a Type VIIC boat, one of the most common in the Battle of the Atlantic. There is one scene where Matthew McConaughey orders a dive of 200 meters, to the utter terror of the crew. In reality, U-571 was rated to 250 meters before the pressure of the water would crush the hull like an egg.

However, the actual sub in the movie is gorgeous, with so many details right that it is painful for a historian to watch the actors muddle it up. U-571 met its end in the North Atlantic on January 28, 1944, when a British based Australian patrol plane depth charged it.

Suspension of disbelief allows us to enjoy films like U-571. It is only upon further review that U-571 vanishes like so much light and shadow.

However, the cast looks sufficiently scared, and as stated before, the sound and feel of an Unterseeboot comes across wonderfully. The average viewer is not expected to know the particular details of the Battle of the Atlantic, but many will walk away with the wrong attitude that, yet again, America saves the day.

Saving Private Ryan

This film is amazing. It tells the story of a small squad of men searching for a private in the 101st Airborne in the chaotic aftermath of D-Day, the Allied invasion of Normandy, France. The young man, Private James Ryan, has had his brothers killed in combat, and Army high command has decided that he should go home.

This actually happened. There was a private in the 506th Parachute Infantry Regiment, who had three other brothers in combat. One was killed at Omaha beach, and one was killed at Utah beach, both beaches assaulted in the D-Day invasion. His fourth brother was reported missing in the Pacific, but was later found alive and well. Although this particular private survived 18 days hiding from Germans and made his own way back to the lines- no squad was sent out to find him.

"The US did have this policy. The reason they had that policy is because it would upset people. They worried about upsetting people because this is a democracy," Story explained. "You have to be careful about people's feelings because they vote. Roosevelt was up for reelection in '44 and was reelected with the smallest margin he had ever gotten."

The Invasion of Normandy is considered a turning point in the European theatre. British, American, Australian, and other Allied armies landed on five beaches, each heavily defended by German bunkers, machine guns, mines, and artillery.

"I think its one of the better war movies that I've seen. It did convey the destructiveness of war in a way few others have," Story said. Saving Private Ryan was "more than just an Alamo type movie. It raised the factual point that Americans did kill Germans who were trying to surrender, and it raised to what extent do you try and retrieve or rescue individuals? Is it an appropriate use of units and firepower for whatever purpose?"

The choice of Omaha for the setting of the first part of the film is interesting. Troops at Omaha had the roughest time of it, the naval gunnery having missed the German bunkers and emplacements.

"There were some things that it could have done a little different," Story said. "This movie too conveys that the Americans were the chief military force. By focusing on Omaha beach on the morning of the invasion, that was the most difficult beach at the most difficult hours. I think the movie conveyed that probably the Americans were the major force, and that the whole landing was that way."

The film has multiple facets of accuracy- the weapons, equipment, uniforms, and most importantly the attitudes of the characters were right. But can people learn from this?

"They can learn something," Story answers. "They can learn something about the tremendous cost of taking a beach. I thought some of the combat scenes in the town were good. It was a nice depiction of how terrifying tanks were. Most people don't understand how terrified infantrymen were of tanks. The appearance of a tank would send infantrymen into just spasms of fear. I think that they got the planes wrong, but that doesn't matter."

Thin Red Line

This movie is so horribly bad it is difficult to include it. While the combat scenes give an accurate depiction of what combat was like in the Pacific, the fact is the movie, and the book it is based on, is fictional. The twenty minutes of quality footage dealing with the war is lost amid two hours of 'artistry'.

Schindler's List

Schindler's List is the story of Oskar Schindler and his factory of Jewish workers from the ghetto of Krakow. Schindler risked all in order to save as many Jewish people from the Nazi's efforts to eradicate them as he could. Schindler bribed officials, officers and anyone he could to keep his workers and their families out of the camps. The film depicts the Holocaust in all its terrifying and sickening reality. It is an utterly emotional film that does a wonderful job of depicting a hard and difficult subject: Hitler's Shultz-staffel and the Final Solution.

Schindler's List is an excellent example of how Hollywood can teach.

"We're talking about one of the greatest directors of all time," Story said about Steven Spielberg. "And he knows how to make a movie about important stuff. I have no criticism of Schindler's List, it's an outstanding film."

If Saving Private Ryan is a great depiction of how destructive World War Two was, Schindler's List is the answer to the great question: why waste that much life to take a beach, to win that war? The answer is because the alternative, Schindler's List all over the world, is just too terrible to think about.

"If you see Saving Private Ryan, Enemy at the Gates and Schindler's List in the same week, you'd start to get a sense of what the war was all about," Story said. "I'd add the first hour or so of Enemy at the Gates just because it gives the other side; the Nazi's weren't just anti-Semitic and hostile to the United States, but aggressors to the Soviet Union as well."

Photos courtesy Ken Campbell

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian - Every Thursday!

COURTESY MICHAEL PLEBAN

The Yellowjackets, a Grammy-winning jazz group incorporating R&B, rock, soul, bluegrass and orchestral sounds into their music will perform April 7 at 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall.

FILM

UMASS – "Global Village or Global Pillage," a new documentary exploring what the global economy means for ordinary people, will screen Tuesday, April 10 at 7 p.m. in 227 Herter Hall, and Wednesday, April 11 at 7 p.m. in room 803 of the Campus Center. An informal discussion will follow each screening. Presented by the UMASS Radical Student Union.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – "Reflections/ Deceptions" is a collection of self-portraits by Raymond Maierski. Student Union Visual and Performing Arts Space, on display now through April 6.

UMASS – "Christopher Wilmarth: Living Inside" presents a selection of sculptures, drawings, and prints by an artist best known for a sparely sensuous style that marries formal elements with mysterious reverie. On view from April 1 through May 18.

UMASS – "Patterns of Pleasure and Models of the Mind." Kate Teal uses paint, plastics and works on paper to focus on pleasure, sensuality of thought, memory, and communication. Hampden Gallery. April 2- April 26, with a gallery talk and closing reception on April 26, from 4 to 6 p.m.

UMASS – "Other: Breaking Out of the Box." This exhibit combines texts with advertisements from the 1950s and 60s, to reveal a society in which difference is feared. It is an investigation of cultural identity, conformity, and the challenge of celebration diversity. On display through April 24, with an opening reception on March 27, 5-7 p.m., and a gallery talk on April 24 at 7 p.m. In the Augusta Savage Gallery.

UMASS – "Natalie Alper: Recent Paintings." Alper is an abstract painter who uses thick loops and folds of paint, crisscrossed by lines made by removal rather than accretion, and uses both earthy and metallic pigments. University Gallery, April 1 through May 18.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Refugees." Two life sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck depicting refugees carrying a child and all their worldly possessions. Part of the Khan Institute's "Anatomy of Exile" project. Through May 28. For more information, call (413) 585-4292. Third floor, Neilson Library.

WILLIAMSTOWN – "Photography EXPOSED." includes 45 examples of portraiture as part of the Williams College Museum of Art's 75th anniversary celebration. The exhibit will continue until September 3, 2001. The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

NORTHAMPTON – Deborah Casdin's watercolor works will be displayed in the Hart Gallery, located at 102 Main St. She explores a harmonious symphony of color in both abstract painting and in studied landscapes. The display will be ongoing until April 15.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – "HAIR," the tribal love rock musical of the 1960s, will be presented by the UMass Theatre Guild from April 11 through 14 at 8 p.m., with a 2 p.m. matinee on the 14 in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are available by calling Tix Unlimited at 545-0412.

UMASS – "Stop Kiss," a play by Diana Son, focuses on two women who become friends, and then realize that they are in love, a realization that inspires an act of violence. April 5 through 7, and April 10 through 13, at 8 p.m., with a matinee on April 7 at 2 p.m. in the Curtain Theater.

UMASS – Bani Ray, an international performer, will present a demonstration of Odissi temple dancing from India. The dance form has developed from a form of worship. April 18, 7 p.m., Augusta Savage Gallery, admission is free.

UMASS – "It Ain't Nothin' But the Blues" is a Broadway production that covers the musical history of the blues from its inception in the form of plantation chants to today's clubs. April 8, Concert Hall, 7:30 p.m.

UMASS – "Culture Clash" is a satirical cultural comedy, and an anthology of Latino culture presented by a trio of performers. April 19, Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLEGE – "Tango Mujer" is a group made up of five women, and performs traditional tango in a wild way. Kendall Studio Theatre, April 5 and 6, at 8 p.m.

AMHERST COLLEGE – "Desdemona" by Paula Vogel is a look at the lives of Shakespeare's female characters in Othello, and their struggle in a patriarchal society. With elements of shock and humor, Vogel examines issues of status, social class, and sexuality among women. April 12 through 14, 8 p.m., at the Experimental Theater. Admission is free, but reservations are recommended, call 542-2277.

AMHERST COLLEGE – "Blood Knot" is a play written by Athol Fugard about two brothers living together in South Africa whose personal relationship reflects the fears of larger racial issues. April 5 through 7, at 8 p.m. Performance is free, reservations recommended, call 542-2277.

NORTHAMPTON – "The Vagina Monologues" will play at the Calvin Theatre, April 3, 4, 7 and 8. This production will feature, among others, singer/songwriter Dar Williams. For tickets and showtimes, call the Northampton Box Office at 1-800-THE-TICK.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The UMass Jazz Lab, a seventeen-piece big band will perform in Bezanson Recital Hall, directed by grad student Chris Kozak, including numbers from Charles Mingus, Jeff Jarvik and others. Performance will take place on April 10, at 8 p.m.

UMASS – The Yellowjackets, a jazz group that has incorporated R&B, rock, soul, bluegrass, and orchestral sounds into their music and has won two Grammy awards will perform April 7 at 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall.

UMASS – The UM Orchestra will perform a Rossini overture, Beethoven's Symphony #6 and Stravinsky's Pulcinella Suite. Concert Hall, April 5, at 8 p.m.

UMASS – Piano Recital by Vijay Iyer, who is a forceful, rhythmic pianist in the jazz tradition, and draws from South Asian, African American, and European musical streams to create original music. April 10, at 7 p.m., at the Augusta Savage Gallery, admission is free.

UMASS – The UM Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band will perform under guest conductor Fran L. Battisti at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall April 22, at 3 p.m.

UMASS – "Juilliard String Quartet" is an internationally renowned group, and a quartet-in-residence at New York City's Juilliard School. They will perform Mendelssohn, Bartok, and Beethoven. Bowker Auditorium on April 10 at 7:30 p.m. For tickets call the Fine Rats Center Box office at 545-2511.

UMASS – The UM Trombone Choir will perform pieces dating from the Renaissance to the contemporary period in the Bezanson Recital Hall April 11, at 8:15 p.m.

UMASS – UM professor Salvatore Macchia, viola da gamba, and guest Mark Kroll, harpsichord, will perform both Baroque and modern works in the Bezanson Recital Hall, April 8 at 8 p.m.

HOLYOKE – The Barnes & Noble bookstore in Holyoke will host a book fair with a music performance by the Shiraz Strings, students studying at UA, and will play a range of music from Mozart to Gershwin tunes. Partial proceeds will benefit the Fine Arts Center April 12, from 5- 9 p.m., with the special music performance at 7 p.m.

AMHERST – The Black Sheep Café will host their Song & Story Swap with guest performer Tim Juravich, a professor at the UMass labor center and a folksinger whose songs are about the struggles of working people. 7:30 p.m., April 13.

NORTHAMPTON – "Messiah" Handel's Messiah will be performed in its entirety by the Arcadia Players Baroque Orchestra and a chorus of soloists. At St. Mary's, 3 Elm St., on April 15 at 4 p.m. Call 584-8882 for tickets.

UMASS – Genevieve Rose and her group, the Genevieve Rose Quartet, will perform a free concert at the Bezanson Recital Hall on April 13 at 7:30 p.m. Rose is a Northampton-based acoustic and electric bassist who performs with a variety of jazz, big band, Dixieland, vocal, and Latin ensembles.

READINGS/LECTURES/ ACADEMIC EVENTS

SMITH COLLEGE – Poet Galway Kinnell, who has been a major figure for over three decades, and has won the Pulitzer Prize for poetry and the National Book Award will read from his work, presented by the Smith College Poetry Center. April 17, in Wright Hall Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

South Indian flautist coming

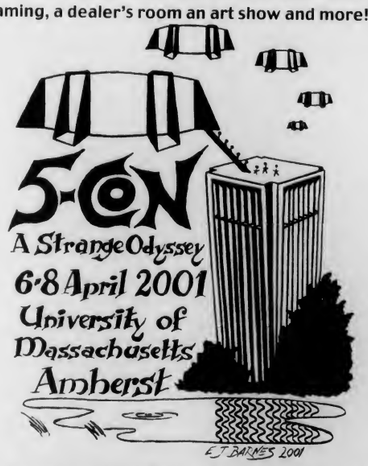
Dr. Nrateesan Ramani, one of the highest-regarded Carnatic (South Indian Classical) flautists, will be performing at Bowker Auditorium this Saturday at 6 p.m. Dr. Ramani has been performing for over 50 years, both interpretations of Carnatic classics and excellent original compositions. He will be performing with M. G. Chandramouli on violin and B. H. S. Sudhindra on mridangam.

The event is being organized by the Srutilaya, a Graduate Student Organization created to help promote India's artistic heritage by bringing professional classical and dance performances to the UMass campus. Last November the organization brought Prasanna Ramaswamy and Trichy Samkaramm, on guitar and mridangam, respectively.

Groove rock at Haldey Pub

UMass band Flying Lessons will perform at the Hadley Pub this Friday from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m., playing all original tunes in their distinctive groove-rock style. Joining them will be fellow UMass band Satellite Oven, self-described as "stellar pop."

Sci-fi movies and Japanese Anime all weekend. We'll have gaming, a dealer's room an art show and more!



Our guests include: Steve Bissette (artist for Swamp Thing), Brenda Clough, Joan Sloczewski, Carla Speed McNeil (from Finder), Jean Marie Stine and more.

8th Floor Campus Center
Weekend Rate: $25 – day rates available
($5 off weekend with student I.D.)
-- http://www.umass.edu/rso/scum --

Costume party - saturday night
Campus center room 1009
music and fun • prizes for best costumes
(no full facemasks allowed)
Only $5 (free with 5-Con 2001 membership)

Experience Boston University's excellence this summer with our more than 550 classes ranging from the traditional to the innovative. Join us to explore a new interest, earn course credit, or accelerate your studies.

SESSION 1: May 22 – June 30
SESSION 2: July 3 – August 11
12-WEEK SESSION: May 22 – August 11

Summer at Boston University

617/353-6000
summer@bu.edu
www.bu.edu/summer

BOSTON UNIVERSITY SUMMER TERM

BOSTON UNIVERSITY is BOSTON'S UNIVERSITY

A chat with the Prophet Size

TOM FRAZER AND BARRY BOYLE

"We went from having nothing to having something – and once you have something, you've got to learn how to fucking use it." – Roni Size

By Tom Frazer
Collegian Staff

Getting stopped doing 89 mph on the Mass Pike probably isn't the best preparation for an interview. It is, however, due testament to the American automotive industry (it only felt like 65) and the bewitching musical skills of the man it was looking increasingly unlikely we would get to talk to. Dazed and confused, and attempting to regain a little composure, the industry standard wait of an hour seemed to settle the nerves a little.

"My bass sounds just aren't gelling, they're fine on the floor, but the headphone sound just isn't right." Roni Size, the seminal Drum and Bass artist has his mind elsewhere. The veteran of hundreds of gigs all over the world is all shook up.

Back in 1997, Roni Size and Reprazent released New Forms. The album was perhaps the most credible, influential and shocking dance release of the nineties - far beyond anything ever put out by Oakenfold or the like. It kicked aside the tired sound of Brit Pop, banishing the guitar to the pawnshop and introducing the original sounds of Drum and Bass to the ill-prepared public.

Disseminated by Tulkin' Loud Records, run by the infamously prophetic Gilles Peterson, New Forms won the 1997 Mercury Music Prize, beating such prestigious competition as Radiohead, The Chemical Brothers and The Prodigy. The impact of the victory on the unsuspecting mass audience was only slightly greater than the shock felt by the musical collective.

Originating in Bristol, a city about 100 miles west of London, Reprazent come from the same cultural hot bed that produced Massive Attack, Tricky and Portishead. The various members of Reprazent had been making music together for many years prior to their 1997 ascendancy. Indeed, Size went to high school with a few of them. The others, such as MC Dynamite, he met through the club scene that is symbiotic with British youth culture.

In the Mode, the much-anticipated second album released at the tail end of last year, has also been universally well received; the record features collaborations with Rahzel, Method Man and Zack de la Rocha (of Rage Against The Machine fame).

"Creativity doesn't come from being intentional. Great things don't happen intentionally." Size takes serious umbrage with those dissenting voices that argue that this album is a deliberate attempt to move toward the mainstream, and that the famous American affiliates are nothing more than good publicity tools. Indeed, the enigmatic yet diminutive man was keen to point out the improvisational and coincidental aspects of his music: "Zack and I met at the Reading Festival. He was mc-ing over some tracks, and we though it would be cool to try out 'Center of the Storm.' He didn't miss a drop. He got it first time. One moment of greatness."

For a genre that is signified by its high reliance on technological wizardry and digital processing, the sound and ethos of Reprazent is surprisingly organic. They use computers as their instruments. "I love a real drummer, but I love my computers. It's the same for bass player. All very natural.

"In New Forms it was more about 'here's a sound, here's the effect,' and that was it. Now it's like a movie, you can't tell where the reality stops and the effects begin." In comparison, In The Mode is harder, faster and dirtier. "We had one sampler; we couldn't even add extra sounds if we wanted. It was a skeleton of an idea," adding with honesty, "We went from having nothing to having something – and once you have something, you've got to learn how to fucking use it."

Somewhat perversely then, Size asserts with pride that it only took two shows to translate In The Mode to the stage, compared to the 150 that New Forms needed. As a group, Reprazent claim that they perform all their tunes 100 percent live. "In The Mode was made for the stage; we wanted to bring it back home, to the clubs." Some have argued that Reprazent are abandoning the original Jungle or Drum and Bass sound for a less pure composite of hip-hop, dance, soul or any other genre that you can think of. Size maintains, "We're not out to do any one thing, apart from to fulfill our ambition. We don't care what we're labeled. As long as it isn't jazz." Nevertheless he seems to revel in the dialectic between critic and artist: "I rely on people like you labeling me. It makes me evolve. I say to myself 'now what are we, motherfucker?' If you can label us, label us."

Roni Size is an enigma: a producer of acclaim, who has produced very little; a musician of influence who releases at a rate of an album every three years and a celebrity with a invigorating take on self-promotion. "Too much of one thing is good for nothing. People get sick of you; I want to be special." MC Dynamite perhaps puts it best on 'Railings 2,' the opening track: "We've been ready for years, but it's all about timing. You can't expect to reach the top without a little climbing.

"Suddenly we had the keys to the door, furthermore we didn't need the keys, the doors were being opened for us, furthermore forget about the doors we started to own the buildings – we made things happen." Size is not only seen as an ambassador for D'n'B, but also for British music in general. This owes largely to the refreshing humility with which he carried himself after winning the Mercury Music Prize. Instead of taking the prize as a pat on the back, Reprazent took it as a push forward.

Living up to the hype. Evolving from Jungle in the early eighties, the incredible speed and tenacity of the music put it at the forefront of progressive dance. The first wave of artists like Goldie, Bukem and Size swept across the musical landscape, but fulfilling this post tsunami vacuum has been challenging. Reprazent have been consolidating: focusing on setting up their own label, fulfilling Breakbeat Era responsibilities, and as Size himself puts it "Literally getting our houses in order."

As perhaps the only truly original contribution that Britain has given to world music since punk, the D'n'B community had a huge weight on its collective shoulders. Many were quick to assert that it was little more than a 'next big thing!' phenomenon with no new recruits ready to support the flag-waving leaders. Size on the other hand states concretely that "this music is still alive man, every show I go to I get handed fifty CD's, don't tell me there isn't a D'n'B community. I am in the middle of it."

The impact of D'n'B on the world music scene has been minimal. Size maintains that he isn't interested in number one single "I don't make singles man, what are they? I make real music." Nevertheless, the universal goal, conscious or subconscious, of any artist must be to smash the American market. While Size might insist otherwise, this album, with its elemental hip-hop and its radio-friendly lyrics, should be the perfect vehicle with which to crash the American party. It shouldn't be surprising therefore that Reprazent has an extensive coast-to-coast tour planned. Promotion the traditional way: "I look forward to every gig. I love connecting."

Watching Size from the audience, you really believe he means it. His face has a genuine look of excitement and content when he looks up from behind his monitor to catch a glimpse at the exploding dance floor. Raising their hands to the ceiling, the foot soldiers and the governor of D'n'B salute each other with respect.

Live, Reprazent are a completely different proposition to the comparatively refined and clean energy of the album. Evocative, intriguing and raw, they blurt out tracks with devastating panache, reminiscent of traditional 'old school' stage bravado. The four 'half-man, half-machine' DJ's punctuated the ferocious live drums and bass. Using a mouse has never been so sexy.

Size recognizes this synthesis of technology and musician as being central to his attraction. He reads the audiences' minds. More than this though, he understands his own appeal – a truly rare talent in an artist. "What are they doing up there? What's on that screen? What are they looking at? What program is that? Who is controlling what?' – that's the best part, man. The best part."

TOM FRAZER AND BARRY BOYLE

MC Dynamite gets the crowd at The Roxy in Boston dancing.

At Zanna...

MERRELL
Performance Footwear

ZANNA

Women's Clothing, Shoes & Accessories
Amherst • Northampton • Williamstown
www.zanna.com

STUDENT TRAVEL

EUROPE ON SALE!!!

London.....$385
Rome.....$418
Paris.....$388
Frankfurt.....$313
Rio de Janeiro...$651
Prague.....$458
San Jose.....$509

STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration – 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room
(43 Amity St – downtown Amherst)
MERCYhouse It's a church!
www.knowmercy.org

No more shower sandals
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
253-7879
Come check us out at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Thai Corner ไทยคอนเนอร์
"Home Style Thai Food"
Serving Lunch From 11:30-3:00
Monday- Saturday
Take-Out Available
• Curry Dishes
• Stir Fried
• Soups
• Salads
• Noodles
11 Boltwood Walk, Amherst MA 253-1639
Hours: Sun 5-9 Mon-Wed 11:30-9, Thurs-Sat 11:30-10

"Martial art and dramatic art are perfectly meshed" WAMC Radio

World Renowned SHAKESPEARE & COMPANY

Presents
Romeo & Juliet
at CITY STAGE
One Columbus Center, Springfield
sponsored by Grinspoon & Trooerman

MARCH 30 THRU APRIL 14 2001
FREE PARKING at the Columbus Center Garage
Tickets available at the Box Office 413.788.7033 Ticketmaster 413.733.2500
VISIT OUR WEBSITE AT WWW.CITYSTAGE.SYMPHONYHALL.COM

YOUR GATEWAY TO THE WORLD

- University credit
- Scholarships available
- Intensive language classes at all levels: Spanish, French, Italian, German, Basque, Thai, Chinese, Danish, Hebrew
- Semester, yearlong and summer programs
- Wide range of academic courses including art, business engineering, history, political science...
- Small classes
- Outstanding faculty
- Field trips and tours

email: usac@unr.edu • http://usac.unr.edu
University Studies Abroad Consortium
University of Nevada
USAC/323
Reno, NV 89557-0093
775-784-6569

• Australia • Chile • China • Costa Rica • Czech Republic
• Denmark • England • France • Germany • Ireland • Israel • Italy
• Malta • New Zealand • Scotland • Spain • Thailand

NCAA tourney last for men's gym

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's gymnastics team started their last road trip of the season yesterday, heading to Ohio State for the NCAA National Tournament.

The 2000-2001 campaign has brought success after success. Starting the season with the UMass Open, the Minutemen dominated their schedule throughout most of the year. UMass faced some of the toughest teams in the country, including Penn State, the University of Michigan and rival Temple. They fought the good fight. UMass is coming off its third straight Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference win, where it defeated Temple and William and Mary.

Temple, the rival of the Minutemen, has qualified for the NCAA Tournament with their National Qualification Average of 205.483. The Owls placed second to the Minutemen at the ECAC tournament. Sophomore Richie Maguire led the team with a first-place finish in the all-around and is expected to lead the Owls this weekend. Temple finished 12-7 on the season.

This weekend's tourney will bring back some familiar faces. The Minutemen will arrive in Ohio ranked 10th in the country, followed by rival Temple at 11th and Stanford in 12th. Penn State, now ranked 8th, will be up against the Maroon and White again, along with California-Berkley seated in fifth, Illinois at fourth and Oklahoma – the number one team in the country.

With a two-week break, the Minutemen haven't had much time for rest. The men have been in the gym working on routines. The Minutemen have been trying to keep their focus as a team and as individuals, with the opportunity to advance to the individual tournament on Sunday.

The first thing on the minds of the squad is the team competition. In order to qualify for the individual competition, the Minutemen must earn top scores as a team.

"It's a real team effort," said head coach Roy Johnson. "We need everyone at this meet. We have to hit it perfect."

The Minutemen will be looking to fix the little things over the weekend. Dismounts and moving the team score up to 210 are on the top of the list. UMass will be waiting to see how Penn State does.

"We want to be ready if Penn State or California falter," Johnson said.

Senior captain Andy Leis has had an outstanding season and should be a strong competitor for the Minutemen.

"I'm really counting on Andy Leis to be a great leader," Johnson said.

Senior Brian McNulty captured the title for the floor exercise at the ECAC's and has great potential to move on this weekend. Freshman star Pat McFarlin took the pommel horse title and is expected to be competing in the individual competition as well. Ben Jacobs might be a pleasant surprise for the team in this weekend's meet. Coach Johnson has also been working with Eric Bacon on his tumbling routine and is looked to for a great performance on the second day of competition.

However, regardless of how the Minutemen finish this weekend the season has been one of the best in recent years. The team has stayed focused, walking away with many individual medals, and the Minutemen have been very satisfied with their success.

"This has been a dream come true," Johnson said.

The NCAA tournament will begin today in Columbus, Ohio.

Nomo's no-no provides relief to Sox fans

JIM PIGNATIELLO

For at least one night, it didn't matter.

All the personality conflicts, missed buses, split tendons, pulled hamstrings and high ticket prices were forgotten for nine innings last night as Hideo Nomo accomplished something that Luis Tiant, Bill Lee, Jim Lonborg, Roger Clemens, Bruce Hurst and even Pedro Martinez have never accomplished.

After the unimaginable occurred on Tuesday – a Pedro Martinez loss on Opening Day – the Japanese fireballer no-hit the Baltimore Orioles at Camden Yards and showed the league that the Red Sox have at least one solid pitcher behind Martinez.

Nomo struck out 11 en route to his second career no-no, the first for the Red Sox since Dave Morehead no-hit Cleveland in September 1965 and the first ever in Camden Yards.

Boston has a plethora of question marks hanging over its head early in the 2001 season, turning a once ultra-optimistic fan base into the downtrodden group we have become accustomed to.

When Dan Duquette outspent everyone else in December to sign the best right-handed power hitter in baseball, Manny Ramirez, Red Sox Nation rejoiced. A line-up consisting of batting champ Nomar Garciaparra, Ramirez, Carl Everett, and Dante Bichette seemed too good to be true. And it was.

Early in spring training, Garciaparra woke up with a split tendon in his throwing wrist, an injury he played through all last season, but could no longer stand the pain of. After putting surgery off for weeks, Nomar finally went under the knife on Opening Day. The Red Sox everyday-MVP will be missing for 8-12 weeks.

Ramirez was hampered by a hamstring injury last season while with the Cleveland Indians, causing him to miss forty games. When he returned, Ramirez hit like a lunatic and seemed to have recovered fully, but the right fielder re-injured the same hamstring fielding in Fort Myers during the spring and has been hobbling since. Manny should be back to 100 percent with some rest and a few games staying off the field as the designated hitter.

"Psycho Man," a.k.a. Carl Everett, has had his share of problems as well. He missed the bus twice during Spring Training and was fined nearly $100,000 by the team. It seems that Everett has become a pawn in the constant power struggle between manager Jimy Williams and general manager Dan Duquette. Everett must keep his temper under control and hit like the MVP candidate he was during the first half of last season in order for the Sox to remain in contention while Nomar heals.

Bichette was everyone's pre-season DH, but was dropped down to platoon status less than a week ago. Williams wants Bichette to play only when a southpaw is on the mound, which happens less than 35 percent of the time. For a veteran that has averaged over 110 RBI the last three seasons, this situation is unacceptable. Bichette has stated that he would prefer to stay (and play) in Boston, but has requested a trade if his role remains this minuscule.

Combine all these issues with question marks that follow Martinez in the starting rotation, and riots may break out in Kenmore Square any day now. But Nomo soothed fans last night.

Suddenly, talk radio callers will deem him prince to Pedro's king. The Nation's fears over the pitching rotation will be extinguished. The line-up isn't as questionable as it was on Tuesday.

With the most dominating pitching performance from a hurler not named Martinez in years, Hideo Nomo has given Red Sox fans a glimmer of hope, something to hold on to.

Jim Pignatiello is a Collegian columnist.

Hideo Nomo pitched the first Red Sox no-hitter since 1965 last night.

Jarrett tames Texas to stay atop points race

In the pits with Matt Brady

Next stop: Martinsville.

Last week brought Texas to the NASCAR forefront and the main players did not disappoint. At the beginning, Dale Earnhardt, Jr. was quick out of the gate and looked like he might dominate the same way he did last year to corral his first Winston Cup win.

But then, Dale Jarrett, by far the best performer on the track this year, came on strong to take the lead from Little E. Jarrett led a slew of middle laps before Earnhardt reclaimed the lead. The young star appeared to have the best car on the track for the majority of the day, and was pulling away when the yellow flag started waving after Elliott Sadler got into the wall with 23 laps to go.

With the caution out, almost all the leaders came in to the pits. Johnny Benson was the only racer on the lead lap to stay out on the track. Jeff Gordon took only two tires and rolled out behind Benson in second. Jarrett came out of the pits in sixth after taking on four tires, with Steve Park and Earnhardt, Jr. behind him. The young star was victimized by a long pit stop on the caution and found himself stuck deep in the pack with just a few laps left.

After the restart, it looked like Benson's gamble would lead to his first career win as he ran up a four car-length lead over Gordon. But soon it was apparent that the cars with fresh tires would dominate in the race's final laps.

Jarrett quickly zoomed toward the front of the pack, knifing through cars one by one. Right behind him, though, was Park, who brought his winning car from Rockingham to Texas.

However, as soon as Jarrett took the lead it was obvious that there would be no looking back. Park too passed Benson, but it was too little, too late for the surging youngster to overtake the cagey veteran. The win was Jarrett's second of the season, and he increased his lead in the points standings to 75 over Gordon, who rolled in fifth.

Benson's gamble brought him a third-place finish, his best of the year so far. Right behind him was rookie Kurt Busch, who had a fairly impressive run on the afternoon. Another strong outing under the Texas sun came from Dave Blaney, who took a provisional start at 43rd in the pack all the way to sixth place.

Little E came in eighth for the race, with the car being tighter than it had been all race in the closing laps. Right in front of him was rookie points' leader Kevin Harvick, who took over Dale Sr.'s car after his tragic death at Daytona. Despite not even starting in the first race of the season, Harvick stands an impressive 10th in the overall points' race.

Park's second place finish was enough to move him up to fourth in the points race just behind Benson. Park also finished in second place for Jarrett's first win of the season at Darlington.

"I'm getting to know what the back of his car looks like real good, and I don't like that," he said after the race. "But we'll take second."

For Benson, it was his fifth top-ten finish of the season and second in the top five to go along with a fourth-place finish at Las Vegas.

The biggest disappointment from Texas was certainly hometown hero Bobby Labonte. Last year's Winston Cup champion finished a dismal 42nd after an engine failure. That dropped him even lower in the points race. After seven races, he stands 25th with no wins and only one top five on his resumé.

Sterling Marlin too had a disappointing afternoon, finishing 34th in the race. The finish dropped him to fifth in the overall points standings.

Coming into the short track at Martinsville (it has been said that if you don't know what Martinsville looks like, just look at a paper clip) there are many different racers to watch.

First on everyone's list is Rusty Wallace. He stands sixth in the overall points and has a lot to gain on the short tracks, where he is always among the front-runners.

Also, look for Jeff Gordon near the top of the results. He has nine top-fives in his last ten attempts to conquer Martinsville and would love to chip away at DJ's points lead.

Another guy who all eyes will be on is John Andretti. Andretti posted a strong win at Martinsville in 1999 and has been one of the bright spots for the Dodge cars this season.

Brady's pick: Wallace. He's simply one of the best on the short tracks and is yearning for a shot at the points' championship. Plus, he's due for a win.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

Travel europe for as little as $219

- Europe's Best Travel Network
- Exclusively For Independent Travelers
- 14 Countries & 70 Cities, Towns & Villages
- Door to Door Hostel Booking and Drop Off Service
- Flexible Travel Pass
- Safe, Comfortable, Air-Conditioned & Smoke Free Coaches
- Fun, Informative On Board Reps

For a FREE brochure and booking information visit your local Student Travel office

BUSABOUT Europe

Take control of your own adventure

www.busabout.com

The Pub

Thursday

$4.50 Icehouse Pitchers!!!
$2.00 Rum & Cokes!!!

Get Your Freak on!

DJ DK 21+

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD

starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs

GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY

One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'till 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

STUDENTS FROM CONNECTICUT

SUMMERTERM 2001

At the University of Hartford this summer, learning takes no vacation.

But we won't stop yours.

800-234-4412
www.hartford.edu/summer
Sessions begin May 21 and July 9

EARN THREE CREDITS IN THREE WEEKS

Atlantis

Behind Antonio's Pizza In Amherst

A COVER $2 COVER AFTER 11 PM

WED: Funk, Soul, & Reggae"

FREE Nachos 10-11 pm

THURS: Straight Hip-Hop, No Chaser
DJs Double OC & XsO

FRI: "House on the Rocks"
with DJs Bon Bons & Salty

SAT: Hip-Hop and Reggae with DJ Trendz

"Ladies Night" - Ladies get in FREE

SUN: Open Mic - Open Turntable

By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Plan Ahead for Next Year

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday-Friday
(413) 549-0145

Minutewomen feeling Green

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It was not how the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team imagined it would be.

The Minutewomen were hoping they could head into Hanover, NH for yesterday's 4 p.m. showdown with Dartmouth and destroy the opposition in preparation for the upcoming Atlantic 10 schedule.

However, it didn't happen.

Suzy Gibbons led the Big Green with four goals, outscoring the entire UMass team by herself, and Ivy League squad crushed its A-10 counterpart, 13-3. The loss dropped the young and inexperienced Maroon and White to 1-6 on the year.

Things did not go well from the start for UMass, as Dartmouth totaled 10 of the game's first 11 goals.

Gibbons put her squad on the scoreboard first, driving a shot by Maroon and White goaltender Jen Nardi, who was only starting her second game of the year after coming back from an injury.

Soon after, Amy Frazier put home another goal for the Big Green, and then was one-upped by her teammate Lana Smith, who lined one of her three tallies on the day into the back of the Massachusetts net to make the score 3-0.

Minutewoman sophomore midfielder Kelli Kurtz put her second goal of the season into the opposing cage a few minutes later, to close the gap to two, but it would not be enough.

Dartmouth posted the game's next seven scores to increase its lead to 10-1, and dash any hopes of a UMass comeback.

Molly Jenkins, Jen Newitt, and Liz Merrit scored a goal apiece for the Big Green before the intermission, to take their team into the break with a 6-1 lead. After halftime, things did not get any better for the Maroon and White, as two Smith tallies and an Alison Moulin score put the lead at nine part way through the second frame.

"We need to step up our intensity in practice and push each other, so in game situations, we can bring it together," McMahon said.

Later on in the second half, freshman Miriam Godfrey provided a bright spot on the day for the Minutewomen, by netting the first of her two scores, but it ended up doing nothing but making the final score slightly more respectable.

Dartmouth answered Godfrey's first goal by quickly picking up three more of its own, with Gibbons responsible for two of those tallies, and with Katie Cole responsible for the other. With just under a minute remaining, Godfrey ended the scoring for both squads with her second goal.

In net, Nardi made 10 saves for the Minutewomen before being replaced by Cyndi Doyle, who stopped four Big Green shots of her own. For Dartmouth, Sarah Hughes made six saves in goal on the evening.

Despite the fact that it is now 1-6, the difficult portion of the schedule is finally over for the Maroon and White. From now on, the majority of its games are in conference, where UMass should be able to more easily compete against a lower level of competition.

"[Playing a hard schedule] makes us want to win so much more," McMahon said. "We have a lot of inexperienced players, and playing such huge games made us get better."

The Minutewomen return to action this upcoming weekend when they travel down to Philadelphia for a pair of contests with A-10 rivals St. Joseph's, on Friday, and Temple on Sunday.

On Friday, the game will begin at 4 p.m., while Sunday's contest against the Owls will start at noon.

"Everyone on the team is sick of losing," McMahon said. "We are going in with a positive attitude now that we are starting our league games, and we think that we can beat every team in the league if we just step it up."

Cyndi Doyle made four saves in her time in net during yesterday's 13-3 loss to Dartmouth yesterday. The Minutewomen dropped to 1-6 on the year.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

■ softball

continued from page 12

The shortstop ended the day just a double shy of hitting for the cycle while knocking in four runs and scoring two more herself.

Junior outfielder Teri Rooney complimented the effort with a 2-for-3 performance and a run scored.

*****

The Maroon and White will host the Boston College Eagles at the UMass Softball Complex at 4 p.m. on Thursday. The Minutewomen have had a tremendous amount of success against the Eagles in recent years, defeating them in all six games by a total of 20-5.

UMass' first victory last year came against Boston College when Jeffries blanked the Eagles with a four-hitter. The Maroon and White's ace would combine with Hadley for a doubleheader sweep in May to notch two more wins over the Chestnut Hill gang. The duo gave up just two runs in 14 innings in last May's matchup.

BC comes to Western Massachusetts looking to rebound after a disappointing April Fool's Day. The Eagles lost a pair of one-run games to a very tough Villanova squad. Their overall record now stands at 16-14.

UMass has addressed its early season concerns of consistency on the mound and clutch hitting. It looks to continue the momentum against a cross-state rival this afternoon in what should amount to a very competitive contest, though who, of the Minutewomen's pitching trioka will take the mound is still up in the air.

"Any one of the three [pitchers] might go and it will be okay," Sortino said.

Brandi Cross went two-for-three in the first game of the Minutewomen's doubleheader sweep of Central Connecticut.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

COLLEGIAN SPRING BREAK PHOTO CONTEST

Attention UMass Students!!The Collegian is holding a photo contest!!
Capture your Spring Break and WIN!!
Submission Form:

name: _____
phone #: _____
e-mail: _____
type of photo (circle one): black & white color
major & year: _____
description of photo (1-2 sentences): _____

Requirements:
-Submissions due by APRIL 9th
-Drop off at the Collegian Photo Dept (The Collegian offices are located in the Campus Center Basement, opposite the ATMs and directly across from WMUA. Ask for the newsroom.)
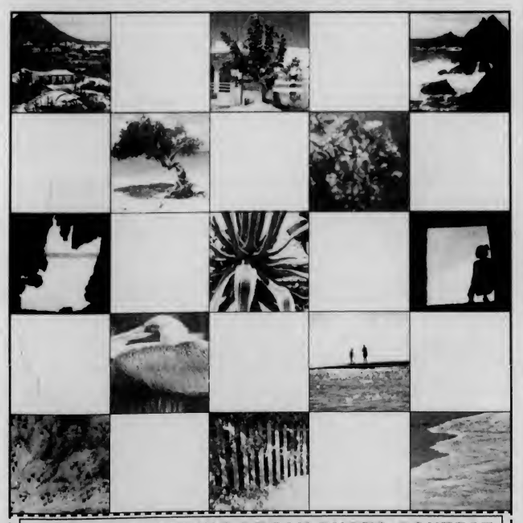
-Photos must be 8x10" or smaller, unframed and unmatted
-Photos must be in an evelope with this submission form
Any questions?? Email us at collegianpics@yahoo.com



Moving off campus?

Come to the Commuter Services and Housing resource Center's 9th annual Apartment Complex Fair! Why waste time on the phone or looking through the newspaper when you can find your new apartment at the fair?

Thursday APRIL 5, 2001
10am - 3pm
Campus Center Concourse

Sponsored by Umass Commuter Services (Off Campus Housing) 428 Student Union 545.0865 http://home.oit.umass.edu/~cshrc

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apartment Available to take over June 1st. 2 bedroom in Brandywine Apts. Call 549-9462

2 Bedroom in Colonial Village available June 1. $600/month. Call 253-5351

Large 4 Bedroom on Main St. Washer/dryer. Available June 1st. Call 253-5151

Large Private Bedroom in 8 bedroom house on Main St. All utilities included. Available June 1st. Call 256-4627

3 Bedroom renovated apartment in Puffton Village. Available June 1st. Call 549-3557

Summer Sublet with lease option. Puffton 3 bedroom, 2 bathroom. Renovated + furnished. Central locale. Call 548-3915

Summer Sublet June 1-Sept 1. Right in Town close to bus stops. 1 Bedroom $300 a month 253-0065

1 Bedroom Apt. Available June 1. 3 miles from campus. Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. Call 397-9822

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Summer Sublet/Fall Option 1 Bedroom on bus route. Call 665-6799

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

Summer Sublet with option to lease start June first. 4 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, utilities included, sliding glass doors, two balconeys, on bus route. 253-5388

Summer Sublet, Fall option. 3 bedroom Puffton available 6/1 Call 549-7812

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet or lease take over! Puffton - 3 bedrm., 2 bath, part. furn, bus, heat+hot water. Cheap! Starts 6/1. Call 549-4918!

2 Bedroom Brandywine Apt. starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Call 549-0453 ASAP

2 Bedroom in Boulders Take over lease from June-Sept. $825 a month. Call Victor 253-6917

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

2 Bedroom in Puffton Rennovated. Great location. June 1 - Sept 1. Call 549-7791

1 Bedroom Available June-August 15 Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. $600 a month 665-8480

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Mitsubishi Eclipse GS $1500 549-4436(H) 545-0479(W) Denis

EMPLOYMENT

Join Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life 5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

TEENAGE BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Be at Teen Tour Leader this summer. Trips in USA, Canada, Europe. We need a 4-week time commitment - end of June through July, salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, CONWAY, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, bicycletrips.com

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP CANADENSIS, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours form New York and Philadelphia), Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, gymnastics, fishing, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20-8/17. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

AMHERST LSSE SUMMER EMPLOYMENT Day Camp Counselors (must be 18 yrs of age) Pool - Lifeguards, W.S.I. (s), and cashiers. Part time Summer Musical Theather Institute Counselor(s). Part time Asst. for Hot Summer Nights Film & Music Series. Summer Registration Clerk Special Events Coordinator. Applications available at: Human Resources 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst, MA 01002 E.O.E

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 3 bedroom apt. June, July + August. Call 549-9940

1 Bedroom in Large 4 bedroom house. Female preferred 549-5975

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 2br Colonial Village Apt. $300/month starting June 1. 253-5350

2 Females looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

SERVICES

Experienced College Student looking for residents in need of fast, cheap yard cleanups. Call Mark 256-3133

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

Two Bedroom Apartment in the Boulders for information call 256-4782

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

Starting June 1! 3 Bedroom Apt., Puffton Village $1010 a month Call 549-9959

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

Need to Advertise?

You Found the Place!

It's Easy!

Just Call 545-3500

The Collegian Classifieds

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

8 • HSCN Bulletin Board
9 • CBS/3 Hartford
10 • CBS/4 Boston
11 • ABC/40 Springfield
12 • PBS/57 Springfield
13 • HSCN Movie Channel
14 • UPN/20 Hartford
15 • HSCN New Music Channel
16 • NBC/30 New Britain
18 • Fox/61 Hartford
19 • PBS/24 Hartford
20 • NBC/22 Springfield
21 • International Channel
22 • UMASS Classroom Channels
23 • WB/30 New Haven
24 • ESPN
25 • ESPN2
26 • UVC TV (Student Channel)
27 • Weather Cable
28 • Direct to Dish
29 • C-Span
30 • CNN
31 • CNN Headline News
32 • Lifetime
33 • USA
34 • TBS
35 • TNT
36 • A&E
37 • Nuggets
38 • Cartoon Network
39 • Nick at Nite
40 • TV Land
41 • Comedy Central
42 • BET
43 • Univision
44 • Bloomberg Financial Network
45 • College TV Network
46 • MTV
47 • MTV2
48 • VH1
49 • The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 5, 2001

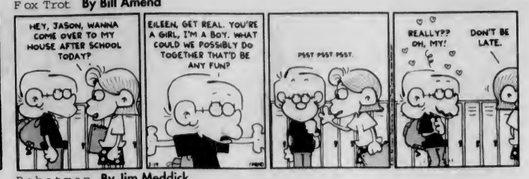
		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Alaska's Gold Rush Trein		Mystery! "Second Sight" (N)		Pope and the Nezis: Silence		This Old Hse.	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		Big Apple "Follow the Blender"		News	Masters
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investign.		Big Apple "Follow the Blender"		News	Masters
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wanta to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Gilmore Girls "Rory's Dance"		Charmed (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Weber (N)	Will & Grace (In Stereo)		ER "Hell & High Water"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven "All That Jazz"		Blind Date	Blind Date	Gilmore Girls	Rory's Dance"	Charmed (In Stereo)		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Friends	Weber (N)	Will & Grace (In Stereo)		ER "Hell & High Water"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	3	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	★★½ "Beethoven's 2nd" (1993, Comedy) Charles Grodin				News		Friends	Frasier
WVIL	3	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Weber (N)	Will & Grace (In Stereo)		ER "Hell & High Water"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	13	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Drs. on Call	Mystery! "Second Sight" (N)		Grafters (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	57	20	News	ABC News	Spin City	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wanta to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	61		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Frasier		Whose Line?	(In Stereo)			Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	72		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball New York Mets at Atlanta Braves (Live)						★★ "3 Seconds" (1994, Drama)		Luke Perry,
A&E	15		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Severance"		Biography: Anthony Perkins		★★★ "No Way Out" (1987, Drama) Kevin Costner, Gene Hackman,					Newsradio
CNN	20	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline	Newshour (N)	Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	53	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★½ "Body Call" (1997, Comedy) Jamie Foxx, Tommy Davidson,				Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show	Turn Ben
DISC	52		Wild Discovery: Supernatural		Wild Discovery: Supernatural		Bermuda Triangle		X-Creatures		Atlantis Found?		Justice Files	"Double Lives"
ESPN	13		Sportscenter		Big League	Big League	NFL's Greatest Moments		Bikes, Blades and Boards		Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	47		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Ricki Lake"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Dangerous Intentions" (1995, Drama) Donna Mills,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	63		Direct Effect	Celebrity Brush With the Law	Criba		Ultra Sound "Two Hit Wonders"		Criba	TBA	Criba (N)	Diary (N)	Undressed	Bare: Nirvana
NICK	55		Invader Zim	Caldog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Drft. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	59		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Legacies"		Outer Limits "The Inheritors"		★½ "Fortress 2: Re-Entry" (1999) Christopher Lambert, Pam Grier,				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	62	24	Arnold Schwarzenegger		Ancient Prophecies		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	UFOs and Alien Encounters		Secret World of Close		Medical Detect	Medical Detect
TNT	54		ER "Take These Broken Wings		Pretender "The Assassin"		NBA Basketball Sacramento Kings at Utah Jazz (In Stereo Live)					NBA	"American Ninja 3: Blood Hunt"
USA	17		14:00 Golf		Martin		JAG Shakedown" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Overdrive"		Golf The Masters -- First Round (In Stereo)			Martin
HBO	91		(5:00)		★★★ "The Princess Bride" (1987, Fantasy) Cary Elwes, Pic				★★★ "Analyze This" (1999) Robert De Niro,				"Slow Burn" (2000, Drama) Minnie Driver,
MAX	92		(5:45) ★½ "Simply Irresistible" (1999, Pic		★½ "Anna and the King" (1999, Drama) Jodie Foster, (In Stereo) Pic								Making of $1 (N)	Shock Video 200: A Sex
SHOW	93		"Dream" (1996, Drama) Tony Todd, Whip Hubley (In Stereo) NR						★★★ "Election" (1999, Satire) Matthew Broderick, (In Stereo) R				★★★ "The Thomas Crown Affair" (1999) Pierce Brosnan, R

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



HEY, JASON, WANNA COME OVER TO MY HOUSE AFTER SCHOOL TODAY?
EILEEN, GET REAL. YOU'RE A GIRL, I'M A BOY. WHAT COULD WE POSSIBLY DO TOGETHER THAT'D BE ANY FUN?
PSST PSST PSST
REALLY?? OH, MY!
DON'T BE LATE.

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

DO YOU, ZEKE, TAKE JOAN TO BE YOUR WIFE? IF SO, HIT CONTROL-ALT-RETURN!
DONE!
AND DO YOU, J.J., TAKE ZEKE TO BE YOUR HUSBAND? IF SO, HIT CON-TROL-ALT-RETURN!
UH-OH.
WHAT?
THE SCREEN JUST FROZE.
WELL, GREAT! SO NOW, I'M MARRIED AND YOU'RE NOT?
WHAT A SHAME, TARA DEAR.
PLEASE-CALL HIM ME STUPID-HEAD!
THAT'S IT! OUT! BOTH OF YOU!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

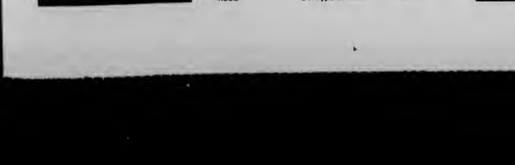
I CAN'T RETURN WITH YOU TO EARTH!
OF COURSE YOU CAN! IT'LL BE GREAT! WE'LL...
YOU DON'T UNDERSTAND! I COME FROM TRISKELION'S SISTER PLANET, DISKELION. I'M POWERED BY RADIATION UNIQUE TO THIS SOLAR SYSTEM! I CAN'T LEAVE!
MY BEST FRIEND ON EARTH. HE'S SORT OF AN INVENTOR. I'M SURE HE CAN THINK UP SOME-
NO, IT'S NO USE! YOU GO ON WITHOUT ME.
SURELY HE'S NOT REFERRING TO YOU!
HEY, DON'T LAUGH! I HOLD A PATENT ON A SOLAR-POWERED BAGEL TOASTER

Dilbert By Scott Adams

DON'T BE AFRAID OF CHANGE.
YOU'RE RIGHT! I'M GOING TO GET A GENDER CHANGE OPERATION AND MOVE TO CHINA!
I'VE ALWAYS WONDERED WHAT WOULD HAPPEN IF SOMEONE LISTENED TO YOU.

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau



THANKS FOR THE CHAM-PAGNE, ZEKE!
NO PROB-LEM, MAN. YOU CAN PAY ME LATER.
PAY YOU? SERIOUS-LY?
WHOA--LOOK AT THE TIME! I'D BETTER GO CHANGE.
IS MY GRAND-DAUGHTER HERE?
YEAH, SHE'S IN HELPING J.J. DO GIRL STUFF, HONEY.
NICE SCARF, DEAR MOM.
THE WEB'S A VERY COMPET-ITIVE PLACE, HONEY.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

SO THAT WAS MY FIRST COLLEGE DATE! GOSH, ERNIE, SO NICE...
HEY GUY... WHAT ON EARTH IS GOING ON HERE?!
OH, HEY, GOD'S GIFT TO WOMEN! WE'RE HAVING A "GUYS' NIGHT"
YOU'RE IN YOUR UNDER-WEAR!
HEY, HEY! IT'S A "GUYS' NIGHT"! WE'RE CHILLIN' IN OUR BOXERS, WATCHIN' WWF, DRINKIN' MOUNTAIN DEW... GUY STUFF.
GUY, MINUTE... WHY IS THE ROBOT IN MY UNDERWEAR?

Quote of the Day

"He's taking all the fun out of drinking beer and that's simply inexcusable."

–Overheard

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 52 LOW: 28	HIGH: 54 LOW: 36	HIGH: 61 LOW: 41

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Anxiety over your workload either at home or on the job will keep you from enjoying a hidden opportunity today – unless you lighten up!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't get carried away with yourself today. A little subtlety, style and grace go a long way toward impressing others.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Physical and mental activities have much to offer you today, and you will want to combine the two for the best results.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone close to you is likely to be quite edgy and irritable today – and it will be up to you to see that he or she stays in control.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You must be willing to take a personal interest in someone else's affairs today if you are going to help at all. You mustn't remain impartial!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You must remain on top of things as they develop today. If it's more authority you're after, you must be willing ot prove that you can handle it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Don't misuse your own popularity today. Give others the time of day – and the benefit of the doubt. A friend comes to you with advice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – It may be up to you today to do those things that you thought were someone else's responsibility. You can do it all much better!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – This is a good day for solving financial problems as best you can. Remember, you can bend the rules – but you mustn't break them.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – What is asked of you today may not be fair, but if you can rise to the occasion and so what is required, then you'll be ahead of the game.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – What seems a mistake at first may prove to be highly beneficial to you in the long run. It may take time, but you'll eventually be rewarded.

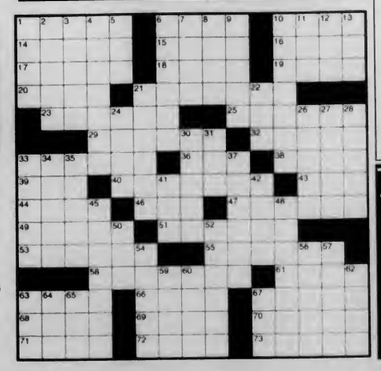
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – An old-fashioned approach to a new and unexpected dilemma is likely to pay off with surprising speed. This may, indeed, be the way to go!

ACROSS
1 — a penny to his name
6 Mock fanfare
10 Watch chains
14 Bandleader Shaw
15 Bad
16 Polynesian spookout
17 Rule the roost
18 Walk unsteadily
19 Sains tripularly
20 Green green
22 Zones
23 Purse handles
25 Fracas
29 Jordan's neighby
32 Cantaloupe
33 Tzvotka Newton-John film
36 Legume
38 Fall mo.
39 "Eureka!"
40 O'Hare event
43 "Ballad" finish
44 Hummus holder
46 "Gidget" actress
47 Informal
49 Foe
51 On terra firma
53 Unconscious defense mechanism
55 Decree
58 Gave out prizes
60 Cash handle
63 Undefined person
66 Sundial numeral
67 Fishing boot
68 Communism's Marx
69 Like — of bricks
70 Spaghetty
71 Team of oxen
72 Warbled
73 Breadmaker's need

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Listen
2 Districts
3 Clown's prop
4 African nation
5 First-down yardage
6 Mother —
7 Wish, to Henri
8 Restrict calories
9 Fatalities
10 Fears the dentist a orders
11 "Yes," to Yvette
12 — -relief
13 Take to court
21 Jam, e g.
29 Sugar-cane product
24 Exec. aide
26 Glossy
27 Bounds
28 Doorway
30 Fencers needs
31 Name for a lion
33 Stared
34 Type of wine
35 Gobbled up
37 Be able to pay for
41 Green parrot
42 Auto magnate
45 Congenial
48 Loss through wasting
50 Swing around, as a jimp
52 Weeding tool
54 Volcanic emissions
56 Delhi's place
57 Seasonal songs
59 Actress Moreno
60 Singer Celine —
62 Writer Harte
63 Upper atmosphere
64 — -tzu, "Tao" author
65 Mork's home planet
67 Route

MONKEY-BOX
BY PREJ
LAST NIGHT I GAVE THE PERSON BENEATH THE CITY PARK TREE SOME CHANGE AND THE REST OF MY SANDWICH. I KEPT MY COFFEE THOUGH.
© 2001
www.monkey-box.net



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2426 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Quesadilla

Thai Seitan (vegan) (B, H, W)

Vegetarian Black Bean Quesadilla (vegetarian)

Vegan Black Bean Quesadilla (vegan) (F)

DINNER

Cajun Cod (B, H, W)

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan) (B, H, W)

Baked Teriyaki Tofu (vegan) (B)

BBQ Fish (F)

Quinoa Stuffed Tomato (vegetarian) (F, H, W)

ISLAND FEVER SPECIAL

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician — Shalini Marti
Copy Editor — Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor — Mike Kulak
Production Staff — John Zawislak, Michele Meder

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Comeback kids

Ellerbrook hit caps nine-run comeback

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

In the world of sports, there's nothing better or more widely applauded than the hometown hero.

Northampton native Toni Ellerbrook did his best to fill that role yesterday afternoon, hitting a clutch two-run single in the eighth inning to give the Massachusetts baseball team [5-9 overall, 2-1 Atlantic 10] the only lead it would need, as they held on to down Central Connecticut University [10-11 overall, 3-3 Northeast Athletic Conference] 16-11.

The late game heroics were made possible by a stunning UMass comeback. Down 10-1 after three innings of play, the Minutemen began the push that culminated in Ellerbrook's game-winning hit six frames later. For head coach Mike Stone, the victory was a strong testament to the depth and character of his team.

"Offensively, we did a great job of coming back," said Stone. "We hung in there, and it showed a lot of character for us to come back like that. I don't think we've been down by that much this year."

The Blue Devils scored all of their runs early, sending 14 batters to the plate and bringing nine home in the third, including a three-run homerun by outfielder Ned Coffee that tagged the net in left field. Pitcher Brian Hourigan, who was able to battle his way out of situations early in the first, was hit hard by the Central Connecticut offense and later was pulled by Stone in favor of Brandon White.

White's insertion did little to stop the bleeding, however, a fact that Stone chalked up to the team not taking the appropriate steps to disrupt the Blue Devils' rhythm.

"We've got to do a better job of establishing the proper tempo on the mound," said Stone. "They were taking too many good swings against us, and were too comfortable in the box. When that happens, they're going to get the barrel to the ball."

UMass soon fell into a comfort zone of its own, however, notching five runs in the fourth to set the stage for the comeback. Gavin Clark and Aaron Senez led the inning off by ripping back-to-back singles to right, and Clark was driven home moments later as Scott Anderson continued the assault on right with a single of his own. After Cullan Maumus dropped a sacrifice bunt to advance the runners and Ellerbrook was hit by a pitch to load the bases, Sean Sarno and Connell Clark both roped singles to left-center that sent the runners home and narrowed the lead to 10-6.

As the offense picked up, Stone did his part to stabilize the game by inserting freshman pitcher Anthony Gallo, who quietly took over and provided his team ample opportunity to make it a game.

"[Gallo] got in there and gave us a chance to win the ballgame," Stone said. "We were trying to find somebody that was going to get people out at that point. He gave us some good innings and a chance to win; prior to that it wasn't looking good."

The Minutemen continued their rally in the sixth, putting up another four runs to cut the Blue Devil lead to 11-10. This barrage included a two-run double by Mike Kulak, who performed admirably in relief of an injured Nick Gorneault. Gorneault made an early exit after taking an awkward fall diving for a ball in shallow centerfield.

The fruits of the Minutemen's labor were finally rewarded in the eighth, as the game-long comeback finally became a UMass lead. Kulak led off the decisive frame with a strong double to the warning track in right, and was driven home in the next at bat by Jeff Altieri, who weaved an RBI double down the left field line to knot the game at 11.

Ellerbrook stepped up with Altieri and Clark on base and delivered the single to centerfield that drove the pair home, putting UMass up 13-11. Second baseman Sean Sarno and Connell Clark each produced RBI singles to cap the inning off, tacking on the final three runs of the day to put the Maroon and White up 16-11.

Sarno was the most productive Minuteman of the afternoon, going 5-6 with three runs batted in.

After the game, a humble Ellerbrook applauded the efforts of his teammates, adding that having the home field advantage for the past two days has gone a long way in turning around the team's fortunes.

"It just feels good to get the win, especially in a game like that," said Ellerbrook. "Just to come back like we did, it helps the whole team out.

"Anytime you're here at home it helps to have that advantage. It's nice not to have to get on the bus and go somewhere; you just want to take care of your business at home."

Senior Nick Skirkanich picked up the win for UMass, yielding only one hit and striking out two in 1 1/3 innings of work. Chad Holderman took the loss for Central Connecticut.

***

The Minutemen return to the field this afternoon, when they travel to Loudonville, N.Y. to take on Siena. Game time is scheduled for 3 p.m.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Kevin Leveille and the men's lacrosse team head to Baltimore to face off with ECAC power Maryland-Baltimore County on Saturday. The Minutemen stand at 7-0 on the season.

Hadley leads softball in its sweep of Devils

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

After weeks of long plane rides and sleeping in hotel rooms, the members of the Massachusetts softball team were finally able to sleep in their own beds before a game. After waiting through five rainouts over the weekend, UMass was finally able to play host, albeit ingraciously, on Tuesday when it took on Central Connecticut.

The Maroon and White has enjoyed recent success against the Lady Blue Devils, beating them six times in the last three years. UMass continued its overwhelming dominance Tuesday outscoring the adversary 14-0 over the two-game sweep while improving its record to 16-9. Central Connecticut dropped below .500 to 10-11 on the season.

The Minutewomen combined two dominant pitching performances by junior Jen Hadley and senior Carrie Jeffries with solid team hitting led by sophomores Emily Robustelli and Brandi Cross.

"The field conditions were very poor [Tuesday] and I thought Jen and Carrie could handle the conditions well," coach Elaine Sortino said.

Sometimes foresight is 20/20, too.

****

Massachusetts 5, Central Connecticut 0

Hadley followed up last week's one-hit shutout against La Salle with another one against the Lady Blue Devils Tuesday. The hurler went the distance and struck out 12 while improving her record to 4-5.

"Jen's a very good pitcher," Sortino said. "As she goes on, her confidence builds."

Sortino is quick to point out that the defense behind the pitcher must contribute to the cause as well.

"Ashley Bakken [helped out by] saying what could have been a big hit in the third [inning], Sortino said. Hadley had success against Central Connecticut last year as well.

Right-hander tossed the only no-hitter of her career against the Lady Blue Devils last April.

First baseman Cross, last year's Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year, paced the offense by going 2-for-3 while knocking in two runs. Junior second baseman Bakken contributed a triple while fellow junior Cherra "Scooter" Wheeler went 2-for-3 with an RBI while holding down the hot corner. Robustelli put together a 2-for-4 performance and scored a pair of runs.

****

Massachusetts 9, Central Connecticut 0

Jeffries continued UMass' brilliance on the mound, holding Central Connecticut to just two hits while

Turn to SOFTBALL on page 9

Athletic Council Honor Roll

Team	Athlete	Major
Baseball	Anthony Gallo-Fr	School of Management
Basketball (M)	Dwayne Killings-Soph	Arts & Sciences
Basketball (W)	Caroline Nehls-Jr	Exercise Science
Crew (W)	Sarah Bramley*-Soph Kary Bredenberg*-Jr Megan Mastropolo*-Soph	Comparative Literature Psychology HRTA
Field Hockey	Patty Robinson*-Sr	Sociology
Football	Jeremy Racine*-Sr	Computer Science
Gymnastics (M)	J.J. Hershey*-Sr Matt Plumser*-Jr	Financial Management Financial Management
Gymnastics (W)	Jobi D'Ansy*-Sr Mellory Giberson*-Fr	French Studies Arts & Sciences
Ice Hockey	Adam Pobiak-Fr	Psychology
Lacrosse (M)	Juan Pablo Mas- Sr	Electrical Engineering
Lacrosse (W)	Fay Naber-Sr	Sport Management
Skiing (M)	Nathan Barr-Fr	Engineering
Skiing (W)	Ericka Olson*-Jr	Financial Management
Soccer (M)	Bryan O'Quinn-Jr	Sport Management
Soccer (W)	Kristin Mena*-Soph	Environmental Science
Softball	Brandi Cross*-Soph Kerri Landers*-Soph	Pre-Psychology Arts & Sciences
Swimming (M)	Eric Forni-Fr	School of Management
Swimming (W)	Rebecca Bell*-Jr Carly McMahon*-Soph Sarah Newell*-Sr	Exercise Science Arts & Sciences Legal Studies
Tennis (M)	William Greener*-Sr	Financial Management
Tennis (W)	Helena Horak*-Jr	Biochemistry
Track (M)	John Fialkovich-Jr	Biology
Track (W)	Natalya Weinstein-Roberts*-Fr	Arts & Sciences
Volleyball	Lauren Vander Veen-Jr	Exercise Science
Water Polo (M)	Jon Vanderwall-Sr	Sport Management
Water Polo (W)	Erin Hillier-Sr	Communications * indicates student with perfect 4.0 GPA for semester

Student-athletes honored

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Sports Luncheon Committee does an excellent job week in and week out of combining interesting and informative presentations on athletics with a great meal. This week, the committee turned its spotlight to academics as well.

Yesterday's luncheon in the Campus Center Auditorium honored the University's Athletic Council Honor Roll – the 32 student-athletes with the highest grade point averages on their respective teams.

The event was emceed by Vincent Grandonico, a member of the 12-person committee, and featured a greeting by Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin. The Dean first related an anecdote about an accident-prone child receiving an award for neatness, then gave an interesting perspective on the duality of the student-athlete through a series of contradictions.

"It is easy to go along; it is not easy to go it alone," Vanin said.

As those in attendance enjoyed a spread that included Seafood Newberg and roast beef, Professor Rodney Warnick of the Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration department stepped to the podium for the event's featured comments. Warnick centered his portion of the luncheon on inspiration, reading from a pregame-speech prepared by legendary coach John Wooden.

"Winning is not what counts," Warnick said. "Trying is what counts."

The student-athletes were then lined up and honored individually, through the presentation of certificates by Associate Athletic Director of Academic Student Services Mike Jenkins. Jenkins premised his presentation with a number of comments, most of which were comical in nature and drew broad laughter from the audience.

"In my days, we never saw four-point-ohs," said Jenkins, referring to the 19 students on the Honor Roll with perfect GPAs. "Unless you're talking about blood alcohol levels."

Five of the 25 teams represented placed multiple athletes on the roll with 4.0 GPAs. Women's crew and women's swimming placed three athletes each on the roll, while men's and women's gymnastics and softball boasted a pair of perfect averages each. Field Hockey, football, women's skiing, women's soccer, women's track and men's and women's tennis were all paced by one 4.0 GPA.

One of those perfect student-athletes, swimmer Sarah Newell, credited her coaches with helping her stay focused on both halves of her UMass duties.

"The coaches always make it clear that academics are important," said the senior from Pennsylvania. "They want to win as much as we do, but there's a balance that you have to find."

Another Honor Roll member, men's water polo goalie J.R. Vanderwall, suggested that finding that balance isn't so easy, especially during off-season training.

"It's harder than most people think," said the senior Sport Management major. "I find that during the season it gets easier – you can schedule your studying around your 20 hours a week of practice."

CAROLINE NEHLS

Another hurdle that student-athletes must overcome is the inevitable road trip. The temptation to do anything but study becomes far greater when the bright lights of a new city are calling.

"It's a lot tougher when you're on the road," said women's basketball player Caroline Nehls, who paced her team GPA-wise as an Exercise Science major. "You want to experience everything a new city has to offer, but you have to force yourself to bring your books and buckle down."

None of the 32 student-athletes on the Honor Roll seem to have too much trouble buckling down and finding the kind of success in the classroom that they do on the playing field. Maybe that's because both disciplines require the same thing – commitment.

"You've just got to be prepared to tell yourself that you're not going out tonight, or even turning on the TV," Nehls said. "You've got to be committed to academics."

Check out Arts for an article on metal bands with an extra singer. .. like her!

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

UMass baseball suffered a setback loss against Siena College yesterday... see how it went down in Collegian Sports!

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVII Issue 110 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, April 6, 2001

Student the winner of web contest

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

Debangsu Sengupta, a second year Computer Science major, won high praise and a financial award this past Spring Break for his work in coaching high school students in a web design competition.

The competition was created by non-profit organization, Advanced Network & Services Inc.

"It put together a competition called Thinkquest Internet Challenge," Sengupta said. "It challenges a high school team of up to three members to corroborate across the Internet to create educational web resources." The webpage can be found at www.thinkquest.org.

"The team I coached had three high schools students from Nigeria, Singapore, and the Netherlands, and 2 other coaches." Sengupta exlained, "As a coach I guided the team though every aspect of site development, ranging from tech support, programming, HTML design layout, guidance, and motivation."

The web site, created by Sengupta's team, is called Van Gough at Etten. (library.thinkquest.org/C001734) "It's possibly the most comprehensive resource on the web about the time Van Gough spent at Etten," said Sengupta. "In addition to providing information about the time Van Gough spent at Etten, it includes a gallery of his sketches and paintings, puzzles, quizzes, letters, a time line of his art and work, and a multimedia presentation of a Van Gough project done by a Dutch School. It also includes lesson plans for teachers, and an online art course, a feature where students can submit art work and have it graded by an art teacher in Holland."

Sengupta proudly boasted that the site has received wide amounts of coverage both in web and traditional media, especially in Nigeria, Holland, and Singapore.

"It won the Platinum Award (1st), in the Arts and Literature category, which placed it in an elite top 6 web sites globally in the international competitions."

"Teams are formed and worked over approximately 9 months. They work over the Internet with their team members, never physically meeting. Our site went though 2 rounds of judging to enter the final competition, placing it in the top 24 of over 700 entries globally."

Sengupta sacrificed some of his Spring Break to attend the finals ceremony. "I went to Geneva, Switzerland, over Spring Break on an all expense paid trip," he said. "It was the first time the team members met each other face to face. I ended up training the team members for their one hour interviews, which ultimately determined our final place in the competition."

The team also found time to explore Geneva during their stay. "Apart from the business of the competition, we were thoroughly spoiled," said Sengupta, "with a trip to the Geneva Chocolate factory, and an award ceremony held at the famous particle physics laboratory CERN, where among attendees was one of the co-creators of the web, Robert , and a couple of Nobel Prize Winners. CERN is also the birthplace of the web; it is the world's largest linear accelerator."

The team won more than an award for their website. "Each of the high school students won 15,000$ (US) in scholarships, and their schools each won 1,000$ each," said Sengupta. "The coaches each won $3000." Sengupta's success in the competition may be due in part to his experience. "This was the fifth year of the competition," he said. "This is my 4th time competing."

As a high school student, Debangsu won best of competition in '97 and second place in '98. As a coach he won the Silver Award in 99, untill winning the Platinum Award this year.

UMass' graduate programs rank among the US News elite

Erika Haan
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts ranks within the top 50 graduate programs in the country, according to a report published in US News and World Report that hit newsstands last week.

The rankings, which are for students applying to go to graduate school in 2002, listed the University's programs in engineering, education, psychology and clinical psychology as among the best in the country. It is simply another shining example of the intelligence and work ethic of UMass students, according to Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Cora Marrett.

"The University's strength is not just in the quality and intellect of its people, but also in the diversity of their research interests," she said in a news release last Friday.

The findings on the quality of the graduate programs of UMass and other schools around the United States, which are also available on the U.S. News & World Report website, (www.usnews.com), are based on a couple types of information.

Under a heading on the site entitled "How we rank grad schools: Our method explained," the basic formula for the rankings was laid out. "Our rankings are based on two broad types of data—expert opinion about program quality and statistical indicators that describe the strength of a school's faculty, its research, and the performance of students as they enter and leave."

According to U.S. News, the expert opinions were gathered by interviewing approximately 12,000 academics and the statistical data was accumulated after studying more than 1,000 programs.

The academics that were interviewed, which included deans, program directors, and senior faculty, were asked to rate on a scale of 1 to 5, with 1 being "marginal" and 5 meaning "distinguished."

The statistical data was prepared on the basis of "the mean undergraduate grade point average and admissions test scores of the entering class," as well as data "gathered following norms established by standards-setting bodies in the discipline," said U.S. News. According to the magazine, an example of such norms would be the bar exam, and the data gathered would be the rates at which law students passed that exam.

Joseph I. Goldstein, dean of the UMass College of Engineering, which ranked number 45, recognized the success of his department as a result of the work of outstanding teachers.

"I attribute our success to our first class faculty who perform their research and teaching at the highest levels," he said.

Goldstein also added that a concentration on creating a more diverse group of teachers has added a substantial amount of expertise to the College and aided it in leaping 4 points from last year's ranking.

"I think our continuing success at developing a diverse faculty, including women and minorities, has also led to our getting better," he said.

Bailey Jackson, Dean of the School of Education, which achieved a ranking of 39 by U.S. News, also sung the praises of his faculty but expressed a sense of achievement in his purpose of raising awareness about the excellence of UMass.

"[The ranking] validates our efforts to get out the word that we have quality academic programs, faculty, and student body," he said.

Bailey went on to add that while the ranking is very special and of great importance to the School of Education, it is only one step towards reaching The School's ultimate pinnacle of achievement.

"We also see this as moving in the right direction toward our goal of being in the top 25 schools of education in the country," he said.

The two other UMass programs that made the list in U.S. News were Psychology, which reached number 45, and Clinical psychology, which ranked in the top 30, at 28.

This was not to say that these were the only other programs praised by U.S. News. The rankings for this year were compiled only for graduate programs in business, law, medicine, education, engineering, and allied health. A list of UMass programs that were previously ranked was also included by the magazine, and among these were The School of Nursing, at number 59, and the communication disorders department, which was ranked number 30 in speech-language pathology.

In recent years, UMass has also received recognition by U.S. News for linguistics, which came in at number 1, polymer science, also number 1, and the Master of Fine Arts program in creative writing, which made number 10. Rankings for these and other programs in the humanities and sciences are only available in three-year intervals, which is why they did not make this year's issue.

The rankings are made available by U.S. News as a service to students looking for the best education for their academic endeavors.

"Experts in higher education have long considered reputation a valid measure of quality, and a diploma from an institution known for excellence offers graduates a powerful edge in the competition for good jobs," said U.S. News.

This service has also provided a great deal of pride for UMass faculty and school officials.

"We are delighted and gratified to be recognized as one of the nation's premier universities for graduate studies," said Cora Marrett. "It is particularly pleasing that these excellent rankings come in disciplines as wide-ranging as engineering, psychology, and education."

US pilots' fate still undecided

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

It has been nearly one week since a United States Navy EP-3E reconnaissance plane made an emergency landing at Lingshui Military Airbase on the Chinese coastal island of Hainan, and the fate of the 24 crewmembers is still up in the air.

The plane, a four engine propeller aircraft, was flying what the Pentagon describes as a "routine operation" 70 nautical miles off Hainan's coast, 58 nautical miles outside the delineation of territorial waters.

"The air and water space outside is international air and water space open for everybody to use," Admiral Dennis Blair, Commander in Chief of the United States Pacific Fleet said.

The plane apparently collided with a Chinese F-8 fighter that was intercepting it.

"The routine operations that the United States conducts with military aircraft off the China coast are routinely intercepted by Chinese aircraft. They come up, take a look, report what they see and fly back," Blair said. "This is pretty routine activity. I must tell you though that the intercepts by Chinese fighters over the past couple months have become more aggressive to the point we felt they were endangering the safety of Chinese and American aircraft."

The Chinese claim that the plane veered to the left sharply. The pilot of the F-8, identified by the People's Republic of China as Wang Wei, has not been found.

"The US plane suddenly veered at a wide angle towards the Chinese planes, which were closer to baseline of the Chinese side," Foreign Ministry spokesman Zhu Bangzao said. "The US plane's nose and left wing rammed the tail of one of the Chinese planes, causing it to lose control and plunge into the sea."

Photos released by the People's Republic of China show damage to the underside of the aircraft's left wing, its outermost left engine and damage to the propeller of inner left engine.

The photo also shows a large hole in the fuselage directly below the cockpit. It is unclear whether the hole is a result of the impact, or the result of removal by Chinese authorities. That part of the fuselage houses the forward radar of the craft. The Pentagon has neither confirmed nor denied reports that the Chinese military has begun boarding and removing equipment from the plane.

The EP-3E Aries II is a signal intelligence/reconnaissance plane, and is packed with various communications monitoring equipment and other intelligence technology. It is manned by 24 crewmembers.

"It was illegal for the US military surveillance plane to enter China's territorial space and to land at a Chinese airport without China's approval," Zhu said. "The US plane's action has constituted an infringement upon China's sovereignty and territorial space. According to international law and relevant Chinese laws, China enjoys sovereignty over its territorial space."

"The US side should face up to the facts, bear full responsibility, apologize to China, and not seek any excuse to shirk its responsibility," Zhu said.

The United States maintains that under the extreme circumstances of mayday" it is not illegal to land on Hainan.

"If a Chinese aircraft had been 70 miles off of Kaneohe here in Hawaii, had had some sort of collision or damage, and declared an in-flight emergency and said that it was coming into Kaneohe, we would have assisted," Blair said. "We would have talked it in, had a crash crew out on the ramp in case it had trouble, and then would have provided assistance to the crew of that aircraft to get in touch with their home base or their government."

Further, Admiral Blair cautioned China's government to respect the integrity of the plane and the

Turn to CHINA page 2

TERESA CHRISTY/COLLEGIAN

Awww! Who brought the puppies?

On a nice day, someone let the dogs out.

Start Huntin'

Many students began the search for off campus housing yesterday by attending the 9th Annual Apartment Complex Fair.

NPR reporter speaks out on Israeli situation

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Staff

When Linda Gradstein graduated with a B.A. in Foreign Service from Georgetown University, her mission was clear. "I was going to make peace in the Middle East," said Gradstein.

Gradstein, National Public Radio's Israel correspondent, brought her expertise and eloquence to the Campus Center last night in a speech entitled "Current Israel." UMass Hillel, UMass for Israel, Hamagshimim, UMass Jewish Women's Collective, and Forum sponsored the event.

Gradstein, who has been NPR's Israel correspondent since 1990, attempted to de-mystify the complicated situation in the Middle East, in addition to sharing her own perspectives on the possibility of peace in the region. She began by illustrating the various points of view of Israelis and Palestinians.

"Sarah," a 36-year-old Israeli woman with two children, says that she voted for former Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak because she thought he would make a successful peace deal with the Palestinians. However, he "flip-flopped" on every issue from the role of the ultra-orthodox to command of the West Bank. Continuing violence from the Palestinians forced her to reconsider in the next election.

"I don't think the Palestinians want peace, they just want to kill us," said Sarah, who still couldn't believe her decision to vote for now Prime Minister Ariel Sharon. "We can't just sit here and let ourselves be killed."

"Inbal," a 23-year-old Palestinian woman with a degree in engineering, cannot find a job in her community because of the floundering economy.

"We've already compromised," she said. "The Israelis don't want peace." She is disrupstful of Prime Minister Sharon, whom she refers to as the "Butcher of Beirut," referring to the 1982 massacre of 2,000 Palestinians in Lebanon when Sharon was Defense Minister.

In addition to presenting two different perspectives on the conflict from the point of view of Israelis and Palestinians, Gradstein also discussed the role of the United States in promoting peace. She highlighted the "time and energy" invested by Bill Clinton to bring about a peace deal. George Bush, on the other hand, "seems much more focused on Iraq. But [the Middle East] has a way of sucking you in."

Overall, Gradstein is not optimistic about peace in the near future. Although she thinks that both sides want peace, and that a compromise will be achieved in the future, neither party is ready to make the necessary negotiations at this time. Israel is currently divided between those who want to make significant concessions, and those who want peace but are not willing to yield.

Palestinians, according to Gradstein, have "kept alive the dream of the right of return," that is, the promise that one day they will be able to return to their homes inside Israel. She referred to her experience with a two-year-old girl whose family still keeps the key to its old home on the wall of its current one. Yasser Arafat, the "symbol for the Palestinian cause," is not willing to abandon the possibility of return.

Gradstein believes that the Camp David accords of the 1970's, which proposed compromises that both sides could have worked with, were perhaps the most promising in terms of a peace deal. Now, however, it is more like trying to negotiate a "divorce where you're doomed to share a bedroom with your ex-spouse for eternity," said Gradstein, quoting a colleague. Although Gradstein feels confident that both sides will come back to the negotiating table "eventually," the question remaining is "how to rebuild trust...and how many people have to die before it happens?"

Gradstein also shed some light on her experiences as a reporter during events such as the Gulf War. "You get a front seat to history," said Gradstein, whose first live broadcast for NPR was made while wearing a gas mask during an Iraqi raid on Israel during the War.

In spite of the often risky nature of her work, which has taken her on such adventures as a 15-hour drive from Aman to Baghdad, Gradstein has made a promise to herself never to lie about who she is, an Orthodox Jew. Gradstein finds that she has an advantage in being a religious journalist in Israel because she is able to speak with a more diverse community. "People let you into their lives," she said.

"News, by nature, distorts reality," Gradstein replied in response to a question from an audience member as to the safety of traveling to and within Israel. She addressed the way that the American press handles the Middle East situation, reminding the audience that the media can only handle "one foreign story at a time," and that often events that are consistently in the news become "numbingly familiar," and therefore are covered in less depth. She recommended consulting Israeli newspapers, such as Ha-Aretz ("The Land") to find the most accurate account of what is going on in the country on a daily basis.

Gradstein considers Israel to be her home (she has lived in the country since 1985), saying that she feels "out-of-sync with mainstream culture" in the United States. In Israel, "even for people who aren't religious, the weekend is Shabbat." She told of her conversation with a mother who refused to let her 16-year-old daughter go on a trip to Israel. "She kept saying, 'I can't, I just can't'... I told her that if you don't go, you let the terrorists win."

Campus Perspectives

By Katy LoConte
Photos by Tibora Girczyc-Blum

What student business would you miss the most if the campus were privatized?

Laurel Benedetti
English major
Junior
"The People's Market"

Fabien Rahanal
Sport Management major
Senior
"Sweets N' More"

Mike Cutting
Sports Management major
Senior
-"Green-o Sub Shop"

Nana Okrah
Accounting and Economics major
Senior
"I wouldn't miss anything"

Madeline Baker
Anthropology major
Sophomore
"Earthfoods"

Danny Tehranian
Computer Systems Engineering major
Sophomore
"Bring on McDonlads!"

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Index Ads, became the Collegian Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fr. Bowl. Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Cangania Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

China

(continued from page 1)

crewmembers.

"The airplane itself, military aircraft of all countries in situations like this, have sovereign immunity. That is no other country can go aboard them or keep them. They are in sovereign-immune territory. So, we would have assisted any members of the crew who were hurt. We would have respected the immunity of the aircraft," Blair said. "We would have gotten the crew in touch with its home base, and we would have made arrangements with that country to come in, fix the aircraft and get it back on its way. That's what the international obligations of all of us are in situations like this."

The Pentagon specifically emphasizes the fact the plane's primary mission is not "spying."

"Spying to me implies espionage. Spies take part in espionage. And that's not at all what we're talking about here. This was overt, routine surveillance and reconnaissance, which is carried out around the world on a pretty regular basis by a variety of nations, the United States among them," Department of Defense spokesman Rear Admiral Craig R. Quigley said. "But it is carried out in international air space under international rules. And the term 'spy' and 'spy plane' and '24 spies on board' and stuff like that just don't reflect the actuality of that. It just doesn't reflect the actuality of that."

The crew of the EP-3E so far appears not to have been mistreated.

"I join President Bush in being heartened by the good spirits and health of the 24 men and women in the crew of the EP-3," Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld said. "I hope and expect that their good treatment will continue. Admiral Blair has made the needed preparations to ensure their speedy return when that is made possible. That is and remains our number one priority: the speedy and safe return of our people."

The United States Navy has a carrier battle group in the area, somewhere out to sea in the Gulf of Thailand. The USS Kitty Hawk, along with several destroyers, guided missile cruisers, and possibly submarines, has been in the area for some time.

Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 2

We all know our little friend, andy the monkey
Who uses the heat wave boxes to warm his tummy.
Order a pizza, and save the box.
You may find yourself in warm sands without any socks!

Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "Taste of Umass". If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.

•••• From your Friends at•••• The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Who wants a cruise for two?
(who doesn't?!?)

In one of the issues of the Collegian each week there will be a clue: Uncover the item at which the clue is hinting, collect it, and hold on to it!

When the taste of UMass rolls around, bring all the items you have collected and you will receive the FINAL CLUE...

The first person to bring the last item back to the TASTE OF UMASS will win an AMAZING seven day cruise for two!

Coca-Cola •••• brought to you by •••• The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Mill Valley ESTATES

Now...The lifestyle you've been waiting for... Luxury two and three bedroom apartment in Amherst

420 Riverglade Drive, Amherst
Just off Rt. 9, Take West St. (Rt. 116S) to East Hadley Rd. Take First Left onto Riverglade Drive.

Equal Housing Opportunity

At Zanna...

MERRELL
Performance Footwear

ZANNA

Women's Clothing, Shoes & Accessories
Amherst • Northampton • Williamstown
www.zanna.com

Fast! 2000 UMass Move-Into Pete Collegian
By The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

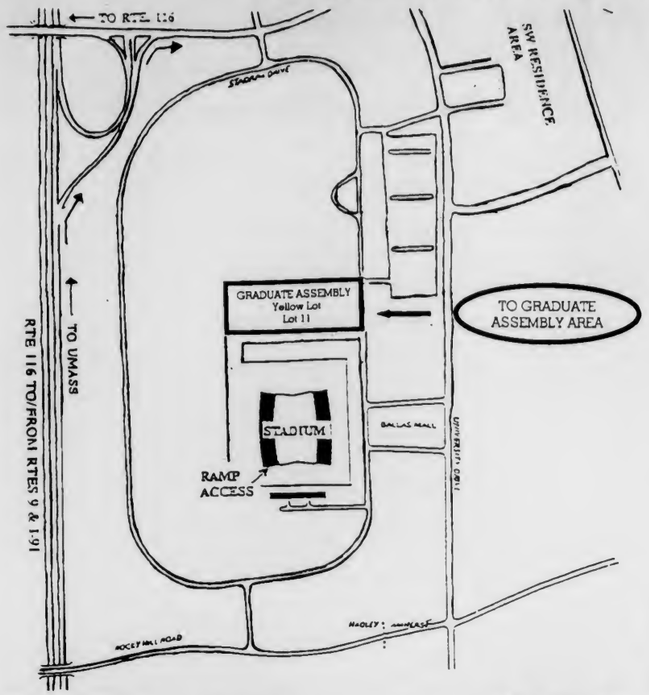
Plan Ahead for Next Year

Excellent Location...1/2 Mile From Umass
Spacious Apartments - 1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouse
All Rents Include Heat, Hot Water and Cooking Gas

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday-Friday
(413) 549-0145

Undergraduate Commencement 2001



The 131st Undergraduate Commencement will be held rain or shine on Sunday, May 27, from 10:00 a.m. until noon at the McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Graduates will assemble in the Yellow Lot just north of stadium. They should arrive at the Yellow Lot between 9:00 a.m. – 9:30 a.m., on Sunday, May 27.

George Parks, Director of the Minuteman Marching Band, will gather graduates by school. Volunteers will guide them as they march together by school into the stadium. The faculty will form a reception line on the field at each of the four gates to greet and congratulate the graduates as they enter the field.

Guests should enter the stadium through the main gates on Dallas Mall.

On commencement day, allow sufficient travel time to get through traffic, which may be heavy as early as 8:30 a.m. Graduates and family members are urged to park in the campus lots and use the shuttle buses to and from the stadium. Beginning at 8:15 a.m., the buses will circle the campus every 5-10 minutes, bringing riders to the stadium's main gate. After the ceremony, buses will provide service back to the parking lots.

Graduates and their families should have received a brochure providing detailed information pertaining to commencement. If anyone has any additional questions, please contact the Commencement Coordinator 577-1101, or www.umass.edu/commencement.

Other commencement-related events are as follows:

Friday, May 25
7:00 p.m. Commencement Ball (5-2317), Student Union Ballroom

Saturday, May 26
10:30 a.m. Graduate School Commencement (5-0025), Mullins Center
2:00 p.m. Stockbridge School Commencement (5-2221), Stockbridge Hall
2:30 p.m. Phi Beta Kappa Installation (5-2329), Campus Center Auditorium
3:00 p.m. School of Nursing Pining and Hooding Celebration (5-1329), Fine Arts Center
5:00 p.m. Joint Commissioning Ceremony for Army and Air Force ROTC (5-2321), Stockbridge Hall
7:00 p.m. College of Engineering Commencement Celebrations (5-6390), Campus Center Auditorium
7:00 p.m. School of Management Commencement Celebration (7-2212), Fine Arts Center

Sunday, May 27
10:00 a.m. Undergraduate Commencement (7-1101), McGuirk Alumni Stadium
1:00 p.m. School of Education Commencement Celebration (5-0234), Student Union Ballroom

www.dailycollegian.com

Write for Collegian News

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

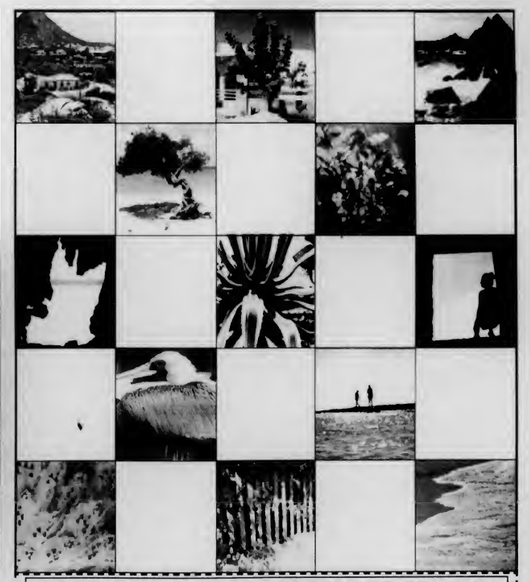
McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
The Mighty Ross Tones
Every Sunday Night
No Cover
Positive ID Required
37 North Pleasant St.

DO YOU WANT A GREAT SUMMER JOB?

◆ BECOME A PEER ADVISOR FOR PRE-MAJOR ADVISING SERVICES DURING SUMMER ORIENTATION ◆

- Enrich your academic experience - Use your leadership skills to help new students get off to a good start.
- Share your knowledge and academic expertise.
- Assist new students in their academic transition to UMass.
- Work closely with Faculty and Staff Advisors who are responsible for schedules and academic advising for new students entering UMass for Fall Semester 2001.
- Qualified applicants will be trained.
- Applicants are not required to have declared a major, but must be in good academic standing.

Pick up an application at 615 Goodell – Pre-Major Advising Services.
Application Deadline: April 17, 2001



COLLEGIAN SPRING BREAK PHOTO CONTEST

Attention UMass Students!!The Collegian is holding a photo contest!!
Capture your Spring Break and WIN!!
Submission Form:

name: _____
phone #: _____
e-mail: _____
type of photo (circle one): black & white color
major & year: _____
description of photo (1-2 sentences): _____

Requirements:
-Submissions due by APRIL 9th
-Drop off at the Collegian Photo Dept (The Collegian offices are located in the Campus Center Basement, opposite the ATMs and directly across from WMUA. Ask for the newsroom.)
-Photos must be 8x10" or smaller, unframed and unmatted
-Photos must be in an evelope with this submission form

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Super Mario

Does not make you kill

United States Attorney General Richard Ashcroft wants to take away your video games.

Ashcroft addressed the American Society of Newspaper Editors yesterday, making widespread remarks about the American culture and how video games are contributing to the rising number of violent acts among children.

"What does it do to children, who see thousands of acts of violence on television, who are conditioned in video games to do things that are abhorrent to the human spirit?" Ashcroft said.

Ashcroft went on to say that those teenagers that fired gunshots on other students in Kentucky and Colorado had watched violent video games, and that the young man from Kentucky, Michael Carneal, actually learned how to aim and had a more precise shot than that of a policeman.

In response to these shootings and other, similar violent acts, Ashcroft insists that laws and government programs cannot put an end to the epidemic.

And eliminating video games will?

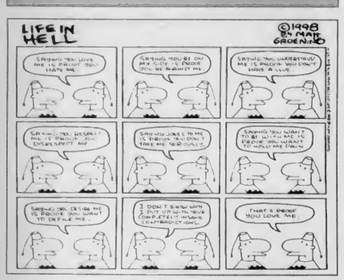
It is true that some video games contain images that would be better suited for a mature audience. So do movies. And music. And television (particularly the news). And yes, even books. Nearly every facet of our culture contains something that can be taken by someone, somewhere, in a negative light. Simply removing the easiest and most obvious targets is no answer to the problems that plague our nation. The problems that concern us begin long before our children our exposed to potentially violent media and have been with us long before the majority of that media even existed.

Although the idea has been drilled into our conscious so many times, in so many ways, it never hurts to be reminded: these problems largely begin at home.

It's easy for parents and people like John Ashcroft to direct the blame elsewhere, exposing favorite pastimes as evil so that no one person has to be the bad guy. It's a convenient out that places the children, perhaps the true victims here, in the cross-hairs; It's their fault for playing, for learning, and for acting out. Oh no, they say, it can't be us.

But it is. The home environment has more to do with this than any video game ever will, and to ignore that central fact is a crime and an insult to the kids. The education process begins at home and not after the tragedies occur; if the adolescent mind is so infected with images from these games, how does simply taking them away solve the problems? It doesn't.

Teach them young, teach them early and teach them often. We realize it's not that simple; In a perfect world, perhaps, but even now, with the cultural climate as it is, standing alongside our children from an earlier age will go far in solving problems down the road. Spend time with your kids rather than letting them sit in front of a television. Engage them in conversation. Make them feel like an equal human being, rather than speaking down and dismissing what they have to say. By doing that, we'll be hitting a nerve that matters, rather than pointing fingers at some arbitrary form of media.



Unsung heroes of UMass

KATIE LANDERS

Think of an Unsung Hero here at UMass. Think hard. Keep thinking. I can think of one. In fact, I can think of a whole lot. I'm thinking of a whole section of campus. It's not the faculty or any staff. It isn't the ladies in the dining hall preparing dinner and it isn't Sam Wilkinson.

The Unsung Heroes of the UMass campus are the Housing Services staff.

Every single morning a staff of (I imagine) several hundred get up at around 6 in the morning to come and clean up the slop that is the UMass dormitories. If you live on campus, you know how disgusting this place can get overnight. If you were somewhat coherent and not in a drunken stupor during the huge snow storm last month, than you know how gross this place can get when the campus shuts down for two days. Not to mention those two snow days were coming off a Sunday when Housing Services has their down time. This place was a complete pigsty and people actually came here and cleaned it up.

The disappointing part is that Housing Services is very unappreciated.

I think I'm going to have to be graphic to get my point across, so that some of you might take the extra minute to think about what you do and the repercussions.

We'll start with last year, my freshman year. I remember on a Saturday morning my family, along with many others, on a fine day in October, came up for Family Day. Of course this parking lot looked like an absolute dump because people felt the need to use the lot as their place to put empty cans, boxes, bodily fluid (i.e. throwup), and whatever other remnants they could of the night they had out before. Students don't think to throw stuff out. Housing can't run around cleaning up after us on a Saturday morning. You were still in bed I'm sure.

And then there was the last day of spring semester last year. I was waiting for an elevator to clear my stuff from my room, and finally up to the 17th floor comes one. The doors open, and there, alone, is a disgusting old couch. Someone decided to use the elevator as a dumping ground for the couch they didn't want anymore - which left me waiting again for an elevator and someone having to take it out and dispose of it.

Then there is a month back, when I went to get in the shower one day and I look at the elevator on the floor below me and the doors are propped open, and it isn't closing. I look in and there is a lounge table neatly standing on the inside of the 'Supervator', the only elevator on that floor. Now this poses two problems. One being that somehow someone or many someone's disassembled the table, put it in the elevator and reassembled it, because there is no way it fit through the door. So someone had to get it out. The second problem is that it is the Supervator. It's used as the means for Housing Services to get to each floor to clean, and it's also used for handicapped people to get throughout the building. So on that day, Housing Services had to walk to each floor to get where they need to clean. I don't see other people enjoying the flight up 22 sets of stairs. So, good job by you whoever felt it necessary to make someone else's day that much crappier.

Now is for the gross stuff. I have taste, but sometimes there needs to be less tact in order to get a point across. A couple weeks after I saw the table incident, I was getting in the shower and someone decided to leave their 'feminine product' on the floor of the shower stall. Not only did I want to throw up, but I couldn't take a shower because I was too disturbed. That was the worst thing I've ever seen and I can't believe a girl would be that crude. Someone had to clean that up after her.

Then of course there is the weekend, and the occasional weekday night.

People on this campus feel the need to use the hall carpet as their porcelain god or just like to get into the bathroom and throwup all over the floor. Over the two day snow storm in March, several boys on my floor commened to me how the whole bathroom reeked because someone felt the need to throw up in there everywhere but the toilet, and then not clean it up. I've also noticed a tendency of boys using the trash room as a urinal because they don't want to walk up the flight of stairs to the bathroom. If you're going to pee anywhere, you might as well go in the girls bathroom. And another thing, if you do break the rules and use the girls bathroom, at least flush and put the toilet seat down.

You can't forget the elevator if you live in a high rise. This is another famous dumping ground. On any given night you can find a beer can or two on the floor from someone who power-chugged on their way down 11 or so flights. Last week I actually got in an elevator, and someone had peed on the floor. This was a Sunday night. I had to ride up 13 floors with the smell of urine because I didn't realize it until the doors had closed. There is no need for that, you throughout the building. So on that day, Housing Services had to walk to each floor to get where they need to clean. I don't see other people enjoying the flight up 22 sets of stairs. So, good job by you whoever felt it necessary to make someone else's day that much crappier.

Now is for the gross stuff. I have taste, but sometimes there needs to be less tact in order to get a point across. A couple weeks after I saw the table incident, I was getting in the shower and someone decided to leave their 'feminine product' on the floor of the shower stall. Not only did I want to throw up, but I couldn't take a shower because I was too disturbed. That was the worst thing I've ever seen and I can't believe a girl would be that crude. Someone had to clean that up after her.

Then of course there is the weekend, and the occasional weekday night.

Thanks Dot, who cleans the 13th, 14th and 15th floor of IA everyday.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

Submissions for the Collegian's Spring Break Photo Contest are due this coming Monday! Don't be left out – see our ad on page 3 and get involved! Questions can be sent to collegianpics@yahoo.com

MOM, I DON'T BELIEVE THIS! YOU INVESTED EVERYTHING IN THE NASDAQ!
AGAIN, IT'S ALL IN DOT-COMS...
OH, MOM, YOU DON'T THAT'S CRAZY!
WELL, IT WAS WHAT EVERYONE IS IN MY IN-VESTMENT CLUB WAS DOING...
BESIDES, YOU HAD JUST STARTED A DOT-COM YOURSELF! WHEN TIME WE TALKED, IT WAS NEW PARADIGM THIS, NEW PARADIGM THAT!
MOM, MOM - YOU KNOW I'M A SCREW-UP!
YOU'RE MY SON. I SHOULDN'T BELIEVE IN MY SON?

Pre-registration rage

JAMIE LOO

It's that wonderful time of year again. Pre-Registration. Pre-Registration guides are now available online and will soon be ready for that April 10th first day, where everything you register for will be overenrolled. To maintain full-time student status you register for two dead languages and a few physical education classes. As UMass students we know the drill all too well. Pre-Registration, like death, is inevitable. Before I talk about my adventures in registration, I have to give mad props to Frank Melburg and company for their car recovery efforts. I think it's incredibly sad that Frank is being deprived of work because Parking Services has his car. How do they expect him to pay if he doesn't have a job to receive a paycheck at? I interviewed him earlier this week and he said that on Monday he raised $125. Way to go! Wake up Parking Services, Frank wants his car back! And I believe most people would agree.

It's bad enough most of us can't register for the classes we need, let alone having the codes to do it. At the beginning of this semester I didn't get my registration guide over winter break like I was supposed to. Sometime in mid-January I began to think there was something wrong so I asked my hometown friends about it and none of them had received it either. I figured UMass was just late in sending them until I found out my boyfriend had already received it, two weeks before. He lives in Rhode Island. Rhode Island isn't even a real state. Most icebergs are bigger than Rhode Island and it takes about 5 minutes to drive through the state on Interstate 95 going to New York. I needed to get into my classes so I called the Registrar's office to see what happened. Here's how my conversation went with the Registrar's Office:

J: Hi, I'm an undergrad and I didn't receive the registration guide. Could you mail me a copy?

R: What did you do with the first one? Each student only gets one copy.

J: No, that's the problem. I didn't receive the first one. I would like a copy of it.

R: Maybe you should give it another week.

J: I was under the impression it was mailed out 2 weeks ago.

R: Are you out of state? It might take longer.

J: I'm an in-state student! One of my friends is from Rhode Island and he received it two weeks ago.

R: Ok, well since each student only gets one copy of the registration guide and there's no proof you didn't receive the first one you'll have to send a self-addressed stamped envelope to us along with a letter requesting the guide. It will take about a week to process.

J: What?!?!?! I have to pay for postage for something you were supposed to send to me for free 2 weeks ago and it will take another week to process?

R: Yes.

The rest of the conversation was rather heated and nasty. I complained about how taxes pay for things like the registration guides and how it was incredible that my out-of-state boyfriend whose parents don't pay for taxes in this state received the book. I was even more concerned that none of my friends from Randolph received the registration guide, and in my anger developed this conspiracy theory the Registrar's office must have against students from Randolph. I'd rather not get into that odd theory at this time, but the woman continued to answer me as if I had thrown away my first copy and kept on repeating the second copy policy to me. If you don't receive the guide your best bet is to just go online. Trust me, it's not worth the frustration to call the Registrar's office to hear the "second copy policy" and to decide they've declared war on all students from your town.

I think one of the reasons UMass changed it's phone policy is because of pre-registration. I bet students all over campus were breaking their phones and that it was costing the school too much to keep replacing them every semester so instead they tricked us into the Idea that we'd be more happy with buying our own phones. I still remember the brochure stating that we could add "style" to our dorms by buying a "cool football shaped phone" or a "phone shaped like a race car." Thinking about that brochure still makes me nauseous. I think they ran into the same issue with the Terminal Adaptor Units (TAU) for computers, but that's another story.

Ever wonder about that recorded voice that tells you your class is overenrolled? I'm pretty sure it's the same voice for 411. I took a linguistics class last year and we watched a video that had a clip of the woman who does those recordings. Apparently finding people like her involves a huge search process because her voice is completely accent-less and can be understood by everyone no matter what part of the U.S. you're from. I thought it was pretty cool. I could ramble on about all the problems I've had with registering for classes but everyone out there has similar stories. We've all had pre-reg rage. Pre-reg, rage is similar to road rage except the innocent bystanders are not other drivers but telephones, call boxes, roommates, other students trying to get into the class and professors. It's a temporary condition that arises twice a year however can intensify over the years turning into a serious stress problem. Freshman year it starts out as beating the phone against your desk and escalates into Spring semester junior year where you're strangling the person above you on the waiting list.

This isn't only a UMass phenomenon since tons of schools use phone registration systems; this is a national psychiatric problem for college students. The UMass Psychology department could study this and issue advisories. There could be brochures in Health Services, next to brochures of "So You've Got Mono..." there can be "Early Detection of Pre-Reg Rage," and "How to Get Help if You or Someone you Know has Pre-Registration Rage."

Beware of pre-reg rage. Awful things could happen if you fall victim to it. The one thing that stinks about my major is that we don't have a lot of classes that are only for majors (but Barbara does a great job putting us before other students outside the major. Barbara is awesome). I can't take the majority of the classes offered in the English department but English majors can take almost all the classes in my department. Look out non majors. I will fight you for the last seat in that class I need! I will not hesitate to beat you with my heavy backpack. Happy Pre-Registering!

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

SGA irrelevant

The problem with the SGA is that we all keep thinking that it is a democratic governing body where decisions are made by majority rule, and thus that we need to get "our" people in to replace the folks supporting "their" causes lest we wind up with "our" budgets cut and "our" causes ignored. I presume on this campus (unlike the SGA (and to a lesser extent the GSS) little more than a Jacksonian "Spoils System" where the victorious coalition gets to install its own slate of corrupt leaders who will then lavish its multi-million dollar slush fund on it's own supporters to the exclusion of everyone else.

All the student groups have this belief, which is why campus politics has become such a vicious high-stakes game amongst increasingly partisan combatants. The UMass Administration also shares this view, which is why employees of the Campus Activities Office have dissolved "unfriendly" SGA administrations three times in the past decade so as to ensure the survival of CAO's own political agenda.

And we are all looking at this the wrong way. It really doesn't matter who won the elections... it simply doesn't matter...

The SGA is an administrative body and not a "government" in the strictest sense of the word. It has no army, no police force and no legitimate right to the use of coercive force. The SGA is nothing more than an administrative agency using administrative powers delegated to it by the university, which itself exists under the auspices of administrative powers granted to it by the Commonwealth – which is a legitimate government with the legitimate authority to put people in jail.

The SGA can only have that administrative authority which the Commonwealth grants to the university to then grant to it, it can only serve as an agent for the Commonwealth itself. Its agency status precludes the current "Spoil System" practices.

This principle was best summarized by noted Boston Attorney Harvey Silverglate, who summarized the situation by stating that "...an organ of student government at a public university is bound by constitutional restrictions, just as the school administration or any public official is."

This is what the various Southworth decisions are all about. Last March, the United States Supreme Court ruled (529 US 217) that while student government associations could allocate funds to groups which other students find objectionable, they had to do it in a "content neutral" manner. In this case, a conservative Christian student didn't want to pay for student groups engaging in "speech" about abortion and gay rights. Five years earlier (Rosenberger v. University of Virginia, 515 US 819 [1995]), the same court had told another university that it had to fund a newspaper published by a group of conservative Christians.

The principle remains the same; a public university may collect mandatory fees to create a "public forum" for students, but it must then allocate these fees in a "content neutral" manner. The nature of the allocation process must be free from any discretion, those dispersing the funds are prohibited from making any decisions based on the nature of the group making the request. Anyone (and everyone) must be given equal access to funding.

Access to a public forum is not subject to a majority vote. Any student at a public university has the right to express any desired view (no matter how unpopular) at any "public forum" and if the university uses a mandatory fee to support this, the student has an equal right to receive funding. It really doesn't matter.

ED CUTTING

Content neutrality means that it doesn't matter what the content of the message is.

Wisconsin just lost the second Southworth decision on the district level and this is working its way back up to a second Supreme Court decision. Judge John Shabaz found that "[d]ifferentials in funding amounts have no objective root, but reflect only the discretionary judgement of the student government" and thus are not "content neutral." This will work its way up rather quickly, as all the major points were already decided the first time, and if the Supreme Court agrees with the decision it made a year ago, this Southworth decision will be upheld.

The United State Supreme Court is going to hold that student governments that allocate mandatory fee monies have to prove that they allocate it without any regard to the groups which receive it.

That is why it really doesn't matter who won last week's SGA election. That is why it really doesn't matter if anyone, including Dean Seymour, even knows when (or where) the Grad Circus will be holding its elections. Other than their power to make discretionary allocations of a few million dollars, the SGA and GSS are simply irrelevant to almost everyone on this campus. And that power they soon will loose.

So next time, don't even vote. Eventually, they might get the message and maybe go away.

Ed Cutting is a UMass graduate student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

Metal weighs need for two singers

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

LACUNA COIL
Unleashed Memories
Century Media

HASTE
When Reason Sleeps
Century Media

Two singers. A set-up rarely attempted in rock and even more rarely done successfully. Offhand it is easy to think of a handful of bands that have two singers and certainly don't need more than one: DDT, Linkin Park, Crazy Town. The latter has two guys rapping in nearly the same tone about exactly the same thing. The two formers could easily consolidate into one all-purpose singer. Sure, bands stretching as far back as The Beatles and X have had two (or more) singers, but one (or more) always had other duties, like an instrument. New bands like the ones previously mentioned mostly have one guy singing and the other guy hopping his head. When your only purpose in the band is to rock the mic, please be good enough so you don't need a partner. Rap acts are certainly excluded from this tirade, as rap duos nearly always bring different styles and flows to the mic, warranting their position: OutKast, Public Enemy, the list can (and will) go on forever.

COURTESY OF MANDY MUGLACH

Entering the world of extreme metal, however, the purpose of two vocalists starts to become a little clearer. A genre known just as much for its atmospherics as for its brutally fast riffs, there's no doubt many bands would be taken in by the proposition of the contrasting dynamics of two voices.

Italy's Lacuna Coil is among them, and while they have two members listed as strictly 'vocals,' this is definitely a one-woman show. Cristina Scabbia's haunting, sometimes droning, but always enchanting voice doesn't share the front seat with anyone; her fellow male vocalist and bandmates will simply have to accustom themselves to the area outside the spotlight.

Not to say that Scabbia's attention is undeserved, or that the band's sounds are superfluous. On Unleashed Memories, her relaxed, commanding style is served well by the normally five minute songs, giving her room to establish a mood while maintaining a certain directness of the individual tracks. The music, on the other hand, besides firmly in the background, never gets a chance to shine or experiment; it simply alternates from soft to heavy as the chorus dictates. Unleashed Memories is too mixed a bag to be fully successful (especially with some of the later tracks), but is an exciting work in progress from a unique and vital band in today's metal community.

Haste from Alabama are an entirely different room than Lacuna Coil's dark and dusty cathedral lobby with stained glass windows and drooping blood red drapes. This sextet is more like a rubber room, or maybe a slaughterhouse. Their aggressive metal/hardcore hybrid is reminiscent of New York legends Vision of Disorder, since both bands feature a scream/sing alternation that, while hardly 50/50, is a welcome variety. One would think that two singers would allow Haste to have one singer exclusively screaming and the other singing, but instead both Kelly Reaves and Chris Mosely insist on screaming, while both of them sing occasionally. Interestingly, the most interesting conflict in the band isn't between the two singers but rather the two different bands competing inside of one.

Haste has two identities. Their Clark Kent, a boring suit, is their business-as-usual hardcore that is above average when it comes to musical experimentation, but dragged down by two sets of the same ol' hardcore screaming. Their Superman, soaring above the ordinary, is the affecting Deftones-esque sound, full of melody, clean vocals, maximum harmony, and lasting, emotional music that pokes its head out occasionally through the sheath of mediocrity. The beautiful chorus of "Off Parting Sound" is one hint. "Engine" is another. The aggressive but not tough guy headbutt (as suggested by the vocals) music of "Meridian Summer" is done a disservice by Reaves and Mosely, and could be so much more with the clean vocals on display elsewhere. Maybe Haste is too in love with its hardcore vocals to ever make the radical change to solely clean vocals, but I see a band with amazing potential inside a shell that it can't, or won't, crack and leave behind.

COURTESY OF VOLKER BEUSHAUSEN

Lacuna Coil and Haste (pictured left) have new albums that feature two primary vocalists.

More Sox on Tube

Too much Yankees, Mets

Before I begin ranting about the last week of television, I would like to state that the lack of Red Sox coverage that we get is ridiculous. I understand that we have representatives from all fifty states here at the University and that many of those students are from the greater New York/New Jersey area, but there is no reason why we should be subjected to Yankee and Mets coverage. Perhaps it's because I'm a Red Sox fan (hell, that is the reason), but when we go to a school in Massachusetts we should be able to watch the home team play. However, because Western Mass is just considered an extension of the Constitution State, we instead get the Connecticut Fox station, which in turn gives us Yankee games. Why? Because Connecticut has no sports teams and they want to be affiliated with a winning organization. I guarantee you that if the Red Sox had won the last three World Series' we would be listening to Jerry Remy instead of Tim McCarver. But it doesn't stop at baseball; just ask any one of the hundreds of Patriots fans on campus who suffer the same fate as the Red Sox fans. I call for a call to arms to get rid of the demonic vision of pinstripes and bring back the "B" to Western Mass sports.

"My Wife and Kids"

Damon Wayans is back in primetime television in his new show that he writes and produces. Wayans stars as Michael Kyle who runs a successful trucking business and is living the average suburban life. The American dream includes his wife Janet Kyle (Tisha Campbell-Martin, of Martin fame) and his three kids. He tries to give them the life he never had, being a loving, supporting, and likeable father and husband. The show is funny, but only because Wayans is one of the most underrated comics within the last fifteen years. Caught in a storm that has launched Jim Carrey, Jerry Seinfeld, D.L. Hughley, David Alan Grier, Steve Harvey, Cedric the Entertainer, and Marlon and Shawn Wayans, Damon has become just a face in the crowd. This show, for the first time since "In Living Color" allows him to showcase his comedic talent, but his performance is the high point of the show. Already, after four episodes of the sitcom, it has dealt with drugs, showboating, and being nice to siblings, classic signs of the family sitcom that became famous with the infamously sappy "Full House." The funny stuff only occurs when he speaks. He showcases his comedic talent because he writes the show, and a majority of the show's funniest lines come from Wayans. The show itself resembles a previous ABC sitcom "The Hughley's" (created by D.L. Hughley) that was cancelled and now occupies two time slots on UPN. Should you watch, yes, because it's worth it to see Damon Wayans doing impressions and comparing his son's generation to his own ("Your going to have to face it, junior, you are from the mean streets of Greenwich, Connecticut"), he still is funny even after Blank Man.

"Bootcamp"

Fox's newest foray into reality television, "Bootcamp," places 18 people in a squad that is run by actual drill sergeants and they perform physical challenges and at the end of three days one of them is voted off (sounds familiar) but that person who got voted off can come back and take one person out of the game with them. The last two people compete for half a million dollars. Basically if you like "Survivor," "The Mole," and other reality shows you will like "Bootcamp;" the tasks and the dynamics of the group make it fun to watch with a group of people, because it is so over the top.

"The Job"

Dennis Leary's new show "The Job" is about Mike McNeil, a cigarette smoking, pill popping, cynical cop who thinks that he is the last balanced person in Manhattan. Leary, who has been in comedy since founding the Emerson Comedy Workshop at Emerson College created this show with Emmy Award winning producer Peter Tolan ("The Larry Sanders Show") about a dysfunctional group of police officers in the homicide division. I cannot write enough good things about this show. Shot like a thirty-minute episode of "NYPD Blue," it is sharp, funny, and excellent. Watch this show.

Nicholas Pizzolato is a Collegian columnist.

Net Sounds: NPR's Sounds Eclectic radio program unites talent for strong compilation

COURTESY OF KATE GARNER

Supreme Being of Leisure, with the majestic vocals of Geri Soriano-Lightwood (left), highlight the Sounds Eclectic compilation.

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

SOUNDS ECLECTIC Various Palm Pictures

National Public Radio's never really been that neat. There's more staunchly conservative classical music on most stations than, oh, let's say ground breaking performances. In New England especially, the music is flavored for the supposedly fine musical taste. Bach balances Beethoven; Chopin counters Tchaikovsky.

Enter KCRW. The K is the dead giveaway that a groundbreaking NPR station isn't going to be on the East Coast. Instead, Santa Monica's own NPR affiliate KCRW has abandoned some of the more traditional facets of a national public radio station, instead embracing today and the possibility of today's music. While they still offer the traditional news and informational programming (and some of the soft jazz), KCRW also has Morning Becomes Eclectic, a brilliant morning show hosted by one Nic Harcourt, and its nationally syndicated spin-off, Sounds Eclectic. Only broadcast on fourteen other stations (unfortunately), Sounds Eclectic is what producer Ariana Morgenstern called a 'best of' show.

And any 'best of' show needs an album. Culling from the show's hundreds of performances (artists come on the show and play four or five song sets, usually interrupted by a few Harcourt questions), Harcourt was able to put together Sounds Eclectic, a brilliant compilation of live studio performances. Stripped to the barest minimum, a diversity of artists from Yo-Yo Ma to The Dandy Warhols never sounded better.

David Gray performs an awfully raw "Babylon" and maybe that's what the song's sugary sweetness really needed; Travis' "Driftwood" starts off much bigger than it ends up being, while Patti Smith's "Wing" is delivered perfectly, with just enough edge to make it an excellent live performance.

However, while the expected artists put forward expected performances (Beck never sounded so soulful as when he croons "Original Whistle") it is the unknown or, at the very least, up-and-coming artists that really shine. Shivaree's childlike innocence in "Goodnight Moon" a 70's crooner-country sound behind her, like a better sounding Nick Cave perhaps, is haunting. Her affecting voice sounds magnificent. Stars' "Going, Going, Gone" is similarly not to be missed – the pseudo-heartbeat behind the performance is especially intriguing – for the powerful softness of the performance. If a listener didn't know better, Sarah McLachlan would be assumed, but the voice has more gravel to it and the second singer that joins her is pavement, making the first sound like the Velvet Underground's Nico. Together, with the synthesized heart and the subtle piano, their performance is unmistakable.

It is Supreme Beings of Leisure who end up stealing the album. Combining the cellos of any traditional NPR performance with the organ at any good seedy lounge, the song has the strange ability to evoke images of a glitzy Depeche Mode or an obscure Austin Powers.

Some of the album's music, notably Bebel Gilberto's "August Day Song", is fairly out there, while some just don't fit, like Willie Nelson's "Healing Hands of Time", but the album, taken at a whole, is like jazz, a collection of different elements that come together to create something great.

Whetting appetites for further albums, Morgenstern spoke of great performances by Suzanne Vega and the Doves (both of which didn't make the album) and Harcourt said that depending on the sales of this album, he was already planning material for the next one. Want a listen? KCRW (in this .com age) has a web page with three different channels available for with long distance interest. For those who haven't the inclination, Sounds Eclectic is definitely worth having, a station show sampler that delivers in both its individuality and its totality, a rare feat for any compilation.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom in Colonial Village available June 1. $600/month. Call 253-5351

Large 4 Bedroom on Main St. Washer/dryer. Available June 1st. Call 253-5151

Large Private Bedroom in 8 bedroom house on Main St. All utilities included. Available June 1st. Call 256-4627

3 Bedroom renovated apartment in Puffton Village. Available June 1st. Call 549-3557

Summer Sublet/Fall Option 1 Bedroom on bus route. Call 665-6799

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

Summer Sublet, Fall option. 3 bedroom Puffton available 6/1 Call 549-7812

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet with option to lease start June first. 4 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, utilities included, sliding glass doors, two balconeys, on bus route. 253-5388

1 Bedroom Apt. Available June 1. 3 miles from campus. Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. Call 397-9822

Summer Sublet or lease take over! Puffton - 3 bedrm., 2 bath, part. furn, bus, heat+hot water. Cheap! Starts 6/1. Call 549-4918!

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

2 Bedroom in Puffton Rennovated. Great location. June 1 - Sept 1. Call 549-7791

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available June-August 15 Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. $600 a month 665-8480

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Mitsubishi Eclipse GS $1500 549-4436(H) 545-0479(W) Denis

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS Cool jobs, free housing in Boston. Join our international team at 1-888-COUNCIL or nhelander@councilexchanges.org

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

A Part Time Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridership Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conduction a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Northampton on April 25 and April 28, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until April 9, 2001. For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield MA 01089. PVPC is and EOE/AA employer.

SUMMER HELP Cape Cod, Boston or Providence. Choose your location! Driver/Delivery. Top Pay/Flexible Hours. Cape Cod Ice Company 800-660-9112

ttention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

EMPLOYMENT

Lifeguards Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

EMPLOYMENT

AMHERST LSSE SUMMER EMPLOYMENT Day Camp Counselors (must be 18 yrs of age) Pool - Lifeguards, W.S.I. (s), and cashiers. Part time Summer Musical Theather Institute Counselor(s). Part time Asst. for Hot Summer Nights Film & Music Series. Summer Registration Clerk Special Events Coordinator. Applications available at: Human Resources 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst, MA 01002 E.O.E

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, 8 minutes from UMass. Available June 1. Call RJ 253-6469

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

MISCELLANEOUS

Are you in a long-distance relationship? Feel better at www.sblake.com

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 3 bedroom apt. June, July + August. Call 549-9940

ROOMMATE WANTED

Two People To Share Lrg room. Nutting Ave attic apartment. $260/month. 1st, last & security. Start June 1st. Josh 549-5154

2 Females looking for 1 or 2 roommates to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting Sept. 1. Call Laura 546-5525

1 Bedroom Available in 2br Colonial Village Apt. $300/month starting June 1. 253-5350

2 Females looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

SERVICES

Experienced College Student looking for residents in need of fast, cheap yard cleanups. Call Mark 256-3133

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

Two Bedroom Apartment in the Boulders for information call 256-4782

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

Starting June 1! 3 Bedroom Apt., Puffton Village $1010 a month Call 549-9959

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

Your Ad Could Be Right Here!! The Collegian Classifieds

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 6, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℞	Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Tsk for All: Survival		Nova : Survivor MD ℞
WFSB	3	3	News ℞	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)			Fugitive "Tucker's Gift" (N) ℞		News ℞	Masters
WBZ	4	4	News ℞	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)			Fugitive "Tucker's Gift" (N) ℞		News ℞	Masters
WGVB	5	5	News ℞	ABC News	Inside Edition	Centennial Celebration: Salute to Symphony				Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	20/20 (N) ℞	News ℞	Nightline ℞
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends ℞	Nanny ℞	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars ℞		Popular "Ulcina Trouble" ℞		News ℞	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℞	Providence (In Stereo) ℞			Dateline (In Stereo) ℞		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heavan (In Stereo) ℞		Blind Date	Blind Date	Sabrina-Witch	Popstars ℞		Popular "Ulcina Trouble" ℞		News	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra ℞	Hollywood	Providence (In Stereo) ℞			Dateline (In Stereo) ℞		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	9	11	Simpsons ℞	Frasier ℞	Seinfeld ℞	Friends ℞	Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)			Lone Gunmen (N) (In Stereo) ℞		News	Friends ℞	Frasier ℞
WWLP	9	22	News ℞	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℞	Providence (In Stereo) ℞			Dateline (In Stereo) ℞		Law & Order: Special Victims	News ℞	Tonight Show
WGBY	61	8	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℞	Wash. Week	Wall St. Week			State We're In	Tms Goes By	Vice of Dalsey	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ℞
WGGB	62	20	News ℞	ABC News	Spin City ℞	Frasier ℞	Two Guys-Girl	Norm (N) ℞		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	20/20 (N) ℞		News ℞	Nightline ℞
WSBK	63		Judge Judy ℞	Judge Judy ℞	Frasier ℞	Frasier ℞	Parkers ℞	Hughleys ℞		Gary & Mike ℞	Gary & Mike ℞	Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	72		Roseanne ℞	Roseanne ℞	Major League Baseball: Atlanta Braves at Florida Marlins (Live)							★★ "Dumb & Dumber" (1994, Comedy) Jim Carrey, Jeff Daniels.
A&E	51		Night Court	Newsradio ℞	Law & Order: Family Values" ℞		Biography: Lena Turner			Behind Closed Doors (N) ℞		Polrot ℞		Law & Order ℞
CNN	20	23	Inside Politics	Monsyline Newshour (N) ℞		Crossfire ℞	Wolf Blitzer	The Point ℞		Larry King Live ℞		CNN Tonight	Spin Room ℞	Sports	Monsyline
COM	53	30	Saturday Night Live ℞			Daily Show ℞	Stein's Money	★★ "8 Heads in a Duffel Bag" (1997, Comedy) Joe Pesci,				Reel Comedy	Saturday Night Live	Live	Sat. Night Live
DISC	52		America's Great Parks: Grand Canyon, Yellowstone					Martial Arts: China (N)		U.S. Navy SEALs		U.S. Army Ranger (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	21		Sportscenter ℞			Baseball Tonight (N) ℞		NHL Hockey: Washington Capitals at Buffalo Sabres (Live) ℞						Sportscenter ℞
LIFE	56		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Figure Skating: World Junior Championships					★★½ "The Cutting Edge" (1992, Comedy) D.B. Sweeney, ℞				Division "Faces in the Crowd"
MTV	43		Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞	Real World ℞
NICK	55		Pinky & Brain	Caldog	Hey Arnold! ℞	Rugrats ℞	Rugrats ℞	Oddparents	Invader Zim	Rocket Power	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	45		Hercules: Legendary Jmys.		Babylon 5 ℞		Invisible Man (N) (In Stereo) ℞				Farscape (N) ℞		Outer Limits "The Surrogate"		Invisible Man (In Stereo) ℞
TLC	69	28	Science of Special Effects		Ancient Prophecies		Caught in the Act				Detectives of the Deep		Ghosts of the Deep (N)		Caught in the Act
TNT	54		ER "John Carter, M.D." ℞		Prelender "Mr. Lee" (In Stereo)		★★★ "Wag the Dog" (1997, Comedy) Dustin Hoffman,						★★★ "Wag the Dog" (1997, Comedy) Dustin Hoffman,
USA	29		4:00: Golf	Martin ℞		JAG "The Adversaries" ℞		Nash Bridges (In Stereo) ℞			Golf: The Masters -- Second Round (In Stereo)				Farmclub.com
HBO	31		★★½ "Lean on Me" (1989, Drama) Morgan Freeman. PG-13 ℞				★½ "Big Daddy" (1999) Adam Sandler. PG-13			★★ "The Principal" (1987, Drama) James Belushi. (In Stereo) ℞					Dennis Miller
MAX	46		(5:00)	★★½ "Forces of Nature" (1999, Romance) Sandra Bullock. PG-13			★½ "Lake Placid" (1999) Bill Pullman. ℞					★★★ "Strange Days" (1995, Science Fiction) Ralph Fiennes. ℞
SHOW	65		★ "The Godson" (1998, Comedy) Rodney Dangerfield. PG-13 ℞				★½ "The Next Best Thing" (2000) Rupert Everett. "PG-13 ℞					Stargate SG-1	Stargate SG-1 "Upgrades" ℞		Red Shoe

Quote of the Day

"At night I wake up with the sheets soaking wet and a freight train running through the middle of my head and you...you cool my desire."

–Bruce Springsteen, "I'm on Fire"

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 50 LOW: 36	HIGH: 53 LOW: 37	HIGH: 57 LOW: 38

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

WHY DO YOU DIP YOUR TEA BAG UP AND DOWN LIKE THAT?
TO GET THE WATER TO FLOW THROUGH IT FASTER.
WHY DON'T YOU JUST HOOK UP A PUMP? IT'D BE A LOT EASIER ON YOUR ARM.
I'LL GO GET THE ONE OUT OF PAIGE'S AQUARIUM.
SINCE WHEN DID YOU SWITCH TO AFTERNOON COFFEE?
I'VE DISCOVERED IT'S MORE RELAXING.

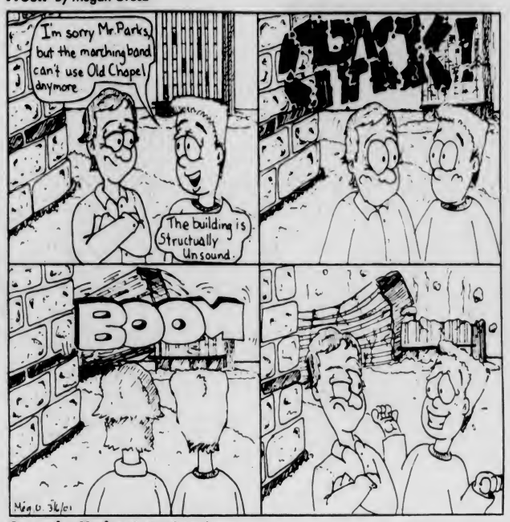
Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

I'M QUITTING PRO WRESTLING...DID YOU KNOW THEY USE REAL 500 LB. MUSCLE BOUND WRESTLERS?
WELL, THEY'RE SURE NOT COMPUTER GENERATED.
I KNOW! IT'S GETTING SO YOU CAN'T TELL WHO'S REAL AND WHO'S DIGITIZED...THE NEXT THING Y'KNOW, THEY'LL BE TELLING US REGIS IS REAL.
RIGHT...
THAT IS SO SCARY...IN SO MANY WAYS.
RIGHT...
www.hedgeweb.com

Robotman By Jim Meddick

OH, SHOOT. I FORGOT TO LABEL THESE PRESENTS AFTER I WRAPPED THEM.
NOW I CAN'T REMEMBER WHICH ONE IS FOR QUINCY, AND WHICH IS FOR PAIGE.
THIS ONE SMELLS FOR FUNNY, SO IT MUST BE THE ONE FILLED WITH DEAD INSECTS.
YOUR IGUANA?
NO NO, QUINCY'S GETTING A SWEATER.
THIS ISN'T GOING TO BE ANOTHER YEAR WHERE THE TREE GETS KNOCKED OVER, IS IT?

Frosh By Megan Orosz



Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

RJ, BEING A PROFESSIONAL WRESTLER MIGHT REQUIRE GETTING YOUR HEART RATE UP IN THE DOUBLE DIGITS.
CHECK IT OUT...IT'S UP TO THREE REPS A DAY.
THREE REPS OF...?
AUTO-GRAPHS CHECK OUT THAT INDEX FINGER.
BUFF.
YOU THINK THAT'S SOMETHING? ...WAIT 'TIL THE HEMORRHOIDS KICK IN STEROIDS
WHATEVER
www.hedgeweb.com

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Avoid extravagance today. Concentrate on achieving a healthy balance in all things – particularly on the home front.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You must be willing to swing into action today at a moment's notice. Be prepared to include long-distance travel in your list of possibilities.

GEMINI (May 20-June 20) – You'll learn something about love and trust today – thanks to a close friend who isn't about to give you the easy way out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You're going to want to be available to those who are trying to contact you throughout the day. Don't tie up those telephone lines!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You're more in the mood to do than to talk, but you'll want to make sure that your plans are intact and present very real possibilities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – A decision made early in the day may have to change later on, as you realize you may have been premature in your assessment of the given situation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Focus on practical skills and plans that show the most potential for success. Now is not the time for building castles in the air.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Just when you thought you had a little more time for yourself, someone is likely to come to you with an emergency of sorts. Don't ignore it!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Now is no time to brag – particularly when it comes to past adventures. The fact is, you may have met your match in someone you've just met!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You can profit today from a past mistake, but you mustn't flaunt your success in front of those whom you've overtaken. Be a good winner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may be expecting your involvement in the affairs of another to make all the difference, but you'll find him or her to be stubborn subject.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You must keep your bad feelings to yourself today. Don't let your dark mood keep things from progressing according to schedule.

MONKEY-BOX BY PREJ

"HONEY, WHAT ARE YOU TALKING ABOUT? THIS IS PRIME REAL ESTATE! LOOK, THE SUSPENSION BRIDGE CAN GO RIGHT HERE!"

© 2001 www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Shepherd's Pie with Gravy (B, F, W)

Falafel Burger with Falafel Sauce (vegan)

Tofu Pot Pie (vegan) (B, H, W)

Duchess Meat Pie (H)

DINNER

Steak/Au Jus

Chicken Mignon

Red Thai Tofu Steak (vegan)

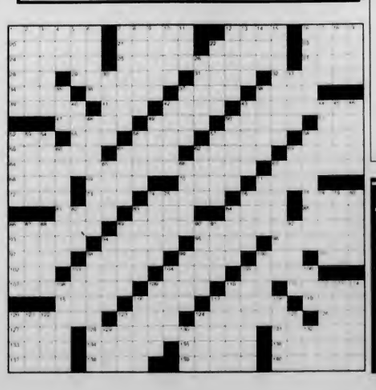
Vegetable Harvest Stuffed Acorn Squash (vegetarian)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Rob Schulze
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Matt Despres
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack Adi Huseinovic

ACROSS
1 Legal
7 "Get lost!"
12 Type of market
16 Days gone by
20 Stir up
21 "Butterfield 8" novelist
22 Signified
23 Tex. neighbor
24 Rains frozen pellets
25 Carnival treat
27 "Anna and the King of —"
28 Transgress
29 Occasionally
31 Land unit
32 House coatings
34 City in 23 Across
36 Trades
37 Cow sounds
38 Long-haired animals
39 "Unheeded" dirk
41 Chicago Loop features
42 Strong, as meat
43 Took a break
47 Dull people
49 Skirt length
50 Potato or egg
51 "Ben —"
52 "Mayday!"
55 Like some wine
56 Underground chamber
57 Jumble
58 Melville's "— Dick"
59 Native Alaskan
61 A few
62 It age's next
63 "The Man Who Fell to Earth" star
64 Comes down in torrents
67 Thicket
68 Bard's cousins
69 Coagulate
70 — Karina
"Nutmeg-as-x"
71 Catherine — Jones
72 Artist Chagall
73 Pet's kin
74 Shakes
76 — of the blue
77 Paper buy
81 Uncommon: to Claudius
83 Unable to hear
84 Michigan's — Royale
85 Ad award
86 Dadaism
89 WWII British leader
93 Arms and legs
94 Helen of radio soaps
95 Original thought
96 Corroded
97 Reed instrument
98 Like Lake Erie
99 Last week
100 "Dumbo" lyric
101 Mag. VIPs
102 The heads
103 Certain
104 Smell terrible
105 With regret
107 First performance
109 Shakespeare e.g.
110 Economic ind.
111 Makes airtight
115 Timetable abbrs
116 Actor Ray
117 Statement of belief
119 What Hamlet smelled
120 Put money in stocks
123 Tuft on the ridge
124 More advanced
126 Actor's prompt
127 Make reservations
128 Playground game
131 African desert
133 Unemployed
134 Construct
135 Reunion attendee
136 Slipped away
137 Forest animal
138 Back talk
139 Bequeathed
140 Wisely

DOWN
1 Smooched
2 Connected to the Internet
3 Picturesque
4 Hasten
5 Ms. Kett of the comics
6 Takes a break
7 Group gatherings
8 Bites
9 Pisces
10 Sculpture and Painting
11 Famous Chairman
12 Is scared of
13 Bowling alley
14 Complete
15 Unusual
16 Bouquets
17 Comparable
18 Airlock unit
19 Jaunty hats
22 The real
26 Singer Judd
30 Word tabinc
33 Served perfectly
35 Pal
37 Creeled
38 Skirmish
40 Shapes
42 Granted
43 Skin wearers
44 Exhibits
45 Rinks of jazz
46 Laundry need
48 Keeps happening
49 Pepe's partner
50 Address for Bilko
52 Andalusian
53 Japanese city
54 Slalom competitor
56 Expense
57 Laborers
58 Rulers
60 Write a message on a gift book
61 Hall
62 Mine entrance
63 Gamble
65 — mater
66 Blue pottery of Holland
67 Discouraged
71 Natal native
74 Fuzzy donkey
75 Not for kept
76 Safety eggs
78 Cream of the crop
79 Was sick
80 Works with clay
82 Response: abbr
83 Eating regiments
84 Frosts
86 Type of sailing vessel
87 Rome's river
88 Romance, in Florence
89 Emulsed Edna O'Brien
90 Greased
91 Bismarck's st
92 Picks over carefully
94 They're often guided
98 Puts away a sword
99 Frying pans
100 Attired like Batman
103 Takes a chair
104 Hazardous gas
105 Moved stealthily
106 Affirmative vote
108 Medal
109 Sheep sound
110 Parliamentary site
112 Gallery
113 Victor's wreath
114 Levelheaded
116 Dummies and Baldwin
117 Part of the face
118 Gives medicine
120 Scholarly notation
121 Protuberance
122 Small rodent
123 Lyric poems
125 Safe-tag warning
126 Kind of bean
129 "Silver" author Lewis
130 Den units
132 Broom Hilda, e.g.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen missed the bat of captain Nick Gorneault, as he missed UMass' 12-6 loss due to injury.

Holier than thou; Saints upend UMass

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Some days, it just isn't in the cards.

One day after staging a mammoth 10 run comeback against Central Connecticut, the Massachusetts baseball team [5-10, 2-1 Atlantic 10] fell back to earth, dropping a tough 12-6 decision to Siena College [9-20 overall].

Jim Buckley's double with the bases juiced kicked off a seven run rally for the Saints in the fifth inning, putting the game out of reach for the Minutemen.

For UMass, sophomore first baseman Jeff Altieri continued his strong play at the plate, going three-for-four while hitting his third home run of the season and collecting four RBIs on the day. In three games this week, the Whitinsville, Mass. native went 7-for-14 with 12 RBIs, including a career high six against Fairfield.

Other standouts for the Maroon and White included junior Mike Kulak, who went two-for-five with a run scored and an outfield assist in relief of injured starter Nick Gorneault.

Freshman Eric Chown had another strong outing in relief as he came on late in the game to pitch two and two-thirds of an inning while allowing only one hit, striking out four and walking none. Chown pitched three scoreless innings against Fairfield on Tuesday.

Siena got off to a quick start in the game, posting two runs in the first inning against UMass starter David Loonie. Catcher Bill Cilento ripped a 3-2 Loonie offering into left-center to drive in shortstop Blake Hanan. Tony Cipolla followed with a sacrifice fly to right to score Ryan Finn and give the Saints the 2-0 lead.

In the top of the fifth, the Maroon and White knotted the game at three on Altieri's two-run dinger following a Kulak double.

But that was as close as UMass would get to victory. Siena's first five hitters reached base to end Loonie's afternoon in favor of freshman lefty Kevin Inglis. Inglis fared no better than Loonie, as he failed to retire a batter in his brief stint. Paul Washenko came in and finally stopped the bleeding, but when the dust settled, the Saints were sitting pretty with a 10-3 lead.

The Maroon and White staged a late comeback in the top of the ninth. Freshman catcher Anthony Gorneault pinch-hit for shortstop Matt Boulanger and drew a walk. Freshman Colin Barden pinch-ran for his classmate and advanced to second following a single through the left side by sophomore Tim Klett.

After a Kulak strikeout, Altieri unleashed a first-pitch double to right field scoring both freshmen. Senior Gavin Clark knocked Altieri home with a single to left field, and junior Aaron Senez kept the rally going with a single of his own. But that was all the Minutemen could muster against Siena, as junior Scott Anderson struck out to end the game.

The Minutemen are in action again this weekend as they host Duquesne for a critical three-game A-10 conference matchup. Saturday will feature a doubleheader with the Dukes, with the first game starting at noon at Earl Lorden Field. On Sunday, the two rivals will play the final game of the series, also at noon.

Big weekend in A-10 tennis land

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

With the sun shining and flowers in bloom, the Massachusetts men's tennis team enjoyed its outdoor practice Wednesday afternoon – even after the completion of its suicide sprints.

The Minutemen have a lot to smile about, of course, coming off a 6-1 win against conference foe Fordham University Tuesday in the Bronx, N.Y. Although Fordham sits at the bottom of the pack in the Atlantic 10, the Maroon and White knew it had to win by a large margin in order to state its superiority and improve its chances at getting a top seed in the upcoming conference tournament.

"We came out with a lot of energy which is hard to do with a weak opponent," said senior captain Bill Greener. "We set the tone in doubles giving up only four games. When you start off 24-4 you send a message right away that it's going to be a long day for them. It was a 6-1 win and it looks impressive for the A-10 seeding."

UMass knocked off its opponents with skill and confidence as five of the six doubles matches ended in just two sets. Junior Steve Prisco continued to impress with his brilliant serve and volley game as he pulled off a solid 6-1, 6-2 victory against the Rams. Andrew Salak despite being hindered by a cold.

In doubles action, all three tandems picked up the points for the Maroon and White with the dynamite duo of Brent Davis/Prisco leading the pack with a slamming win of 8-0 against the No. 1 doubles team of Kelly/Salak.

Ultimately, the Minutemen are performing at the top of their game and rightly so – as the upcoming weekend will prove to be the biggest test of the spring season with two matches in New York on Saturday against Temple and Army and a home match Sunday against Big East standout Villanova.

"We're looking for Temple to be a hard match. If we win we'll probably get the one seed in the tournament," said freshman Rory Theis. "If we lose, we'll probably get the three or four (seed). We know that if we put in 100 percent like we did against Duquesne, we can win. It'll definitely be a big step for our program."

The Minutemen currently stand at 9-6 overall with a 2-0 record in the A-10. Unfortunately, UMass has not had the opportunity to play many of its conference opponents. With a cancelled conference match against George Washington due to snow back in March, the Maroon and White feel even more pressure to send the Owls home boating.

"We know the importance of this match and that fate is in our hands," said Coach Judy Dixon. "No matter what the best team is going to win the Atlantic 10 conference but seeding definitely plays a factor. The conference has never been so wide open with Virginia Tech gone to the Big East – there is no favorite. We are the only team who hasn't lost to an A-10 team but we haven't played a lot of them. With the George Washington match cancelled, we feel even more pressure to beat Temple."

Fortunately the squad plays the all important conference match first on Saturday and then follow up with its non-league match against Army. If Massachusetts beats Army, a strong opponent in the East, it may come closer to clinching an east regional ranking for next year. Sunday the Minutemen hope to come home to the Upper Boyden Courts with smiles and confidence as they host the Wildcats of Villanova.

"If we lose to Temple we'll just have to go home and work harder," said Dixon. "But with a wide open field, we have a good shot at getting an NCAA berth."

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Freshman Rory Theis and the Massachusetts men's tennis team are staring down an NCAA berth.

A lacrosse family's redemption

No. 5 Minutemen look to add UMBC to the list

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Jeremy Guski is one of eight Minutemen that has tallied a hat trick this season for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

You might as well call Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella the godfather, because for the length of the 2001 campaign the UMass lacrosse family has been breaking kneecaps and bustin' heads en route to some sweet redemption.

Implementing the "don't take nothing from nobody" attitude has worked well for the Minutemen, as the Maroon and White has already bumped off seven dead beats without so much as a flesh wound.

On its way to a No. 5 national ranking UMass (7-0, 3-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) had the pleasure of dispatching three of its rivals faster than a south side drive by. Hofstra, Navy and Penn State defeated the Minutemen last year and all felt the back of their hand in 2001; next up on the hit list: Maryland at Baltimore County.

The Retrievers stabbed the Maroon and White in the back in last year's overtime contest at Garber Field and, unfortunately for this season's hosts, that wound still stings.

"We hate everyone," senior Rich Kunkel said of his teammates' passion for revenge.

It is clear that UMass will not pull any punches against its divisional opponent come Saturday, but the Minutemen aren't the only vastly improved squad in the ECAC.

After finishing 7-7 with no postseason in 2000, the No. 15 Retrievers have jumped out to a 4-2 start with a 2-2 conference record.

The key factor in the turnaround for coach Don Zimmerman's squad has been the added year of experience for a roster that lacked in that department a year ago.

Despite the limited senior leadership, UMBC plays like a team laden with battle-hardened veterans. Expect that hunger and experience to be present on the field, especially following a loss to division rival Rutgers.

"I expect them to be all fired up," Canella said. "I am sure they'll play with a sense of urgency."

Senior attackman Josh Hahn and senior midfielder Bryan Lawton lead the Retrievers up front. Hahn is the team's leading scorer and go-to guy while Lawton is the set up man and usually plays the point on extra man opportunities.

UMBC is also blessed with solid goaltending, a facet that was considered more of a weakness in last year's squad.

Senior Steve Cusa has done a magnificent job in the net so far this season and will look to continue that success against a high powered Minuteman attack.

Cusa, who is in the top 20 in the country with a .619 save percentage, represents somewhat of an antithesis to last week's opposing keeper, Penn State's Matt Vallone.

Vallone took up a lot of space, but Cusa at 5-foot-9 provides a different problem.

"He is a smaller guy [than Vallone] but he has a lot of ability," Canella said.

After an emotionally draining victory over the Nittany Lions and with the Retrievers coming off a loss, this weekend's battle could be the biggest test thus far for the undefeated Minutemen.

UMass needs no more motivation than a memory of last year's heartbreaker, as zero smiles will be cracked and no satisfaction will be present until UMBC is lying facedown in the muck and the Maroon and White can return to Amherst – redemption in hand – and still undefeated.

UMass ace works both sides in win

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

There is a weary cliche in softball directed toward pitchers that says "you can help your own cause if you get a hit."

Starting pitcher Kaila Holtz of the Massachusetts softball team listened to that cliche and helped her Minutewomen to a 5-4 victory over intra-state rival Boston College by driving home the game-winning RBI yesterday at the UMass Softball Complex.

With Chera "Scooter" Wheeler on second base and one out in the bottom of the sixth inning, Holtz ripped a line-drive single past the Eagles' second baseman into right field. The speedy "Scooter" – who hit her third home run of the year in the second inning to get UMass on the scoreboard – made her way around the bases before the throw home could be made.

While Holtz's game winning hit marked Massachusetts' second come from behind victory of the year, it also marked a complete turnaround in the day for the sophomore from Canada.

Early on she had been having a tough game. In the top of the third inning, BC racked up four runs off of Holtz.

"The thing about it was the ball wasn't spinning," said coach Elaine Sortino. "The pitches were flat and that's why they were getting a good piece of them."

With two errors committed by the Maroon and White in the top of the inning, disaster could have struck but UMass responded in the bottom of the inning with two runs of its own – making the score 4-3 after three innings.

"She was getting a little rattled," Sortino said of Holtz. "I was really glad to see that she regained her composure."

Sophomore Anna Perey hit an infield single to start the sixth inning rally. Last year's Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year, first baseman Brandi Cross, hit a double to drive home Perey – knotting the score up at 4-4.

Two batters later, Holtz got up and knocked in the winning run. She then came out to pitch the top of the seventh inning and threw a 1-2-3 inning en route to Massachusetts' tenth victory in a row.

When asked about her team's success, coach Sortino said, "I think it's our ability not to panic and stay focused."

The squad gets a chance to test those abilities this weekend when it takes its 17-9 record (3-0 A-10) to New York face off against in-conference opponent St. Bonaventure for a trio of games.

The Bonnies come into the match-up with UMass with a 2-16 (1-5 A-10) record. They are coming off a weekend where they lost two out of three games to A-10 opponent Rhode Island.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Anna Perey's infield single in the sixth inning sparked a key UMass rally.

You're an established metal band struggling to remain relevant. What do you do? Turn to Arts to find out.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The women's softball team improved its record by sweeping the Bonnies over the weekend. See page 7

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 112 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, April 9, 2001

Lil' Kim, Kracker to headline Concert

COURTESY BAD BOY

It's now official: Lil' Kim will headline the annual Spring Concert in May.

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

The artists appearing at this year's Spring Concert were formally announced last Friday at a press conference held by University Productions and Concerts (UPC). The concert will take place at 5 p.m. on Saturday, May 12 at the Mullins Center. It will be free, as always, to UMass students and $20 for the public.

The concert will be headlined by Lil' Kim and feature Uncle Kracker, Dropkick Murphys, and the winner of the annual Southwest Battle of the Bands. MTV personality Teck $ ("Teck money") will host the event, and local DJs Hush and Bon Bons will spin records following the acts to close the night.

The most significant difference this year from past Spring Concerts is the restriction of floor access to 2000 attendees that must have special floor tickets. The tickets will be given away on the day of the show at the venue, as well as at a table in the Campus Center, and through promotions with the Collegian and WMUA throughout April and early May.

UPC will also be promoting the concert in local bars, and more information on this promotion is available on the Internet at http://upcpromos.cjb.net.

In the past, admission to the show gave anyone access to both the floor and raised seating areas. The need for stricter floor control stems from an incident at last year's Spring Concert, according to UPC Productions Manager Amanda Paolella, when the stage was rushed during a set by the band Antigone Rising.

Discrepancies with the Student Government Organization (SGA) concerning funding for the concert this year forced UPC to dip into its own budget when it received less money than was previously expected. The final cost for the Spring Concert was $175,000.

"At first I was upset," Paolella said, referring to the funding controversy. "Why is money going to SGA payroll and not Spring Concert?" But now she is feeling positive about the show.

"I'm happy, it's really diverse. We have a really controversial rap artist, and people are going to want to see her. Dropkick Murphys are a happy, springy band. Uncle Kracker is an artist that is breaking through," she added, referring to the current popularity of his single "Follow Me."

"It will be cool to say, when he really breaks through, that he was at Spring Concert."

Criticism was directed toward the Spring Concert last year by students and in the pages of the Collegian that the show had too many hip-hop artists and didn't accurately represent the diverse musical tastes of the University.

"There's not just hip-hop this year," said UPC Event Staff Director Mike Rosenblatt, who went on to praise Paolella's work in organizing this year's event.

Hospitality Director Eric Steiman made no apologies for last year's show, however.

"I feel that last year was a success, and hopefully it will be topped this year with [Lil' Kim's] provocative style," Steiman said.

Lil' Kim is a raunchy female rapper and a member of the Junior M.A.F.I.A. rap group and has found success through two solo albums. Her overt sexuality and revealing outfits have done as much to keep her in the public

Turn to CONCERT, page 3

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

Uncle Kracker brings the power of two radio hit singles to the Mullins Center in May.

RAs motion for first undergrad labor union

By Katy LaConte
Collegian Staff

The Resident Assistants of the University of Massachusetts made motions on Wednesday, April 4 to become the first undergraduate labor union in any college or university to date.

According to Tim Scott, the organizer for the United Auto Workers, the RAs have organized themselves into the local union #2322 of United Auto Workers, because of a variety of complaints that they feel need to be formally addressed.

"After talking to them, their complaints are consistent," Scott said when asked about what the RAs were further looking for from this union. "They want dignity and respect on the job."

"We aren't appreciated at all," said Ann-Marie Watt, an RA in Southwest. "Pretty much the reason we are forming is to protect our rights."

Scott explained that RAs were making $50 for being on call for the entire day and night and that they felt that it was an unfair practice.

"What they want and should get are better wages and compensation for being on call 24 hours a day," Scott said. "It's like sweat shop labor, but not as harsh."

Watt, who feels that the union would be beneficial, claimed that the RAs get paid for only twenty hours a week of work, despite the fact that many are there for their residents at all times and are therefore working more than those hours.

Watt argued that amount of money taken out for room and board was not an adequate benefit and that RAs needed to see more money allotted in their paychecks.

"We are paid minimum wage but money is taken out for our room," Watt explained. "And what's more, we have no housing security."

Among the list of across the board complaints by RAs was the lack of a fair system for regulating employee behavior. Watt explained that by unionizing RAs hoped to implement a fairer discipline system.

"RAs want a discipline system that is just and fair. The way in which we are reprimanded is very unclear. There is no set process," Watt said. "We don't have the judicial processes that the residents have, if an RA breaks a rule, they are automatically fired."

There is an RA Grievance Committee that currently exists at the University, however many feel that group is not set up fairly.

"The RA grievance committee is a group set up by the management and the University. The RA's don't really have a voice," Scott explained. "If they have a problem, they can go to the committee but management runs it."

He went on to say that if these workers were unionized that these problems may be avoidable.

"In a Union the RA's or workers legally, according to the law, have a voice, and equal role in the disciplinary process," Scott said. "In the committee, they're relying on the benevolence if management."

Watt also felt that the committee did not represent the rights of the RAs at the University in an ethical and fair manner.

"It's not really functional, because the RA council doesn't have as much voice and power as they should," Watt said. "I know RA's that have been fired for the stupidest reasons, and they were some of the best, but the board won't get you back your job."

Another key point is that RAs have a big responsibility to their job and to being good role models. Scott explained that this caused their jobs to be more in-depth and complicated.

"They're the authority figures in the dorms and they're the ones who enforce the rules," he said.

Furthermore, he pointed out that the RAs have to handle school full time, in addition to the 24-hour a day on-call responsibility that they have, causing many RAs to struggle to balance both school work and sometimes multiple jobs.

"There's certainly a significant amount who have second and third jobs," Scott said

Scott explained that the reception to the union has been positive and that many of the RAs on campus have decided to sign on and try to become part of the organization.

"Right now the majority has signed. Now it just has to go through the process of whether or not the University and State can recognize them," he said. "We ask that once we notify the state, which will be soon, that (the University) bargain with us on the conditions of employment."

Home Show displays finished goods

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The seven-year-old boy is mesmerized.

He has discovered something almost magical at the far end of the show. Having been dragged by his parents (or was it the other way around?) through the hot tubs and floor tiles of the Three County Home Show, he has reached the southern end of the William D. Mullins Center floor and found the source of all that wonderful noise.

A waterfall – over 10 feet of cascading water landing in a tree-rimmed pond, complete with a cabin and stone patio. The boy steps cautiously through the back door of the cabin, his eyes wide at the sight, and bends down to pick up a few loose rocks. Never taking his eyes off the water, he begins pitching the stones in one after another.

Standing just beyond the edge of the pond is Buzz Gray, the landscape artist who designed the exhibit to promote his Environmental Design Group at this weekend's show. The child is giving life to Gray's very philosophy behind the project: one of giving back to nature by building into it, not over it.

"We as a society are taking away so much natural land," said the resident of Lenox, which is west of the Pioneer Valley in Berkshire County. "By filling in swamps and clearing land on a daily basis, we are using up the natural landscape. I thought that if I could get a taste of nature into a gym, complete with rock and rushing water, people could start to relate to it."

Gray's theory is that people are surrounded by similar examples of natural beauty but sometimes fail to notice them. He gives the example of ledge sheered off into steep walls along highways, and how these man-made scapes often become host to creeping plant life and breathtaking frozen waterfalls.

"People speed right by, barely noticing," Gray said. "But by bringing beauty like that inside, I am giving people a chance to not only notice it but really experience it."

Another child has discovered Gray's creation, darting through a cave beneath the falls and emerging from the other side of the rushing water. Scurrying over a stone bridge to rejoin his parents, the child is oblivious to the fact that he has simply passed under the Mullins' bleachers.

Gray says that in nature, a scene like this would have been born 16,000 years ago. Glacial ice sheets that had covered New England for over 2,000 years melted and withdrew north, shaping the land.

"New England is one of the most interesting places in the world to live," said Gray. "Western Massachusetts is a unique area in that at one time, some of the mountains here were higher than the Himalayas."

The retreating glaciers also redeposited all the ice-borne material they had picked up as they originally crept south, dropping everything from boulders and earth to seeds and organic life. The larger and more solid objects, like boulders, ended up strewn about the more sparsely wooded higher regions. The finer materials like seeds and clay ended up in the lower regions.

"When you get that kind of diversity

Turn to MULLINS, page 3

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Two children play just beyond the man-made waterfall during yesterday's Home Show in the Mullin's Center. The waterfall was just a small part of the ecosystem put together by landscape designer Buzz Gray and his crew.

NATIONAL BRIEFS

Compiled by Catherine Turner and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

National Briefs

Oregon- The government has made the decision to cut off irrigation for farmers on the Oregon-California border in order to try and save endangered species of fish from the recent drought.

The watershed from which local farmers draw their water for irrigation purposes is the Klamath Project in Klamath Falls, OR. An estimated 1,400 farms within 200,000 acres of the falls use the water and according to a spokesman from the Klamath Water Users Association said that the lack of irrigation will be devastating for the farms.

Meanwhile the United States Fish and Wildlife Service in conjunction with the National Marine Fisheries Service has determined that the Shortnosed Suckers, Lost River Suckers and the Coho Salmon have reached record low numbers and fall under the Endangered Species Act and should be protected.

Environmentalists, commercial fishermen and Klamath Native American tribes are glad that the needs of the fish and their livelihoods are being addressed. The government has in essence shut off access to the Upper Klamath Lake, the project's largest reservoir and will be devoted to the endangered fish.

Representatives of the local farmers will be discussing their options and concerns with Oregon Republican Senator Gordon Smith during a meeting next week.

Pennsylvania- Mitchell Allen Guilliat was arrested after attacking the Liberty Bell with a hammer. Guilliat, a homeless man, was reportedly dressed in military fatigues and ranting about God when he attacked the 249-year-old national icon. He had been following a regular tour of the historical pavilion, carrying a bamboo pole and guitar, when he pulled the hammer out of his jacket around 9:45a.m.

Guilliat was quickly wrestled and arrested in the Liberty Bell Pavilion by National Park Rangers, near where the Declaration of Independence and Constitution were adopted in the 18th century.

"He mentioned something about God and then struck the bell four or five times," said Frank Eidmann, director of special projects for the Independence National Historic Park, according to CNN.com. "Anyone who attacks a national symbol is disturbed. What he was disturbed about, we don't know."

Guilliat now faces charges of damaging an archeological resource and attempting to destroy federal property, which carry maximum prison terms of five years and two years. A competency hearing has been ordered for Guilliat before his arraignment on Wednesday.

The Liberty Bell is Philadelphia's largest tourist attraction. The last time the Bell was attacked was in the 1970s, when National Park Rangers arrested a man after beating on the Bell with a car tailpipe.

Georgia- The Center for Disease Control has reported that at least 100 college students contracted a respiratory disease while vacationing on spring break in Acapulco, Mexico.

Students reportedly got sick ten days after staying in the Calinda Beach Hotel. The CDC reported that the disease was identified as histoplasmosis, an easily treated fungal infection. The bacteria generally come from germs in bat and bird droppings and are found in soil.

The symptoms include fever, body aches, cough and respiratory distress. The outbreak was first reported at Pennsylvania College. Several other colleges have also reported cases. All students have been treated after the CDC worked out a network of treatment with college clinics.

State Briefs

Swift to become governor Tuesday

The governor's office announced Saturday that Lt. Governor Jane Swift would take power as acting Governor of the state of Massachusetts at a transfer of power ceremony held in the Statehouse on Tuesday while current Governor A. Paul Cellucci will fly to Washington later in the day to be sworn in as Ambassador to Canada.

Due to the way that the state constitution is written, she will not take oath of office because the constitution calls for the "power to devolve downward to the lieutenant governor when the governor resigns," said Secretary of State William Galvin.

Perpetrator caught Taunton shooting death

Twenty-eight year old Taunton resident Randall K. Silva was captured and arrested after an all night man hunt, for critically wounding one man and killing another.

Police authorities say that Silva shot and killed 24-year-old James Schiano following an argument and then shot 25-year-old David DeAndrade also of Taunton when he attempted to assist Schiano.

Silva will be arraigned on Monday at Taunton District Court for a count of murder, armed assault with an attempt to murder, and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Alleged Lawrence rapist claims charge was a revenge ploy

The attorney for accused rapist and high school security guard Edwin Colon claims that the alleged victim threatened the guard after he subsequently got her suspended from school.

Colon was let out on $1,000 bail after being charged with two counts of rape of a child, indecent assault and battery on a child under the age of 14, indecent assault and battery, open and gross lewdness and indecent acts.

District Court judge Stephen Ostrach ordered the alleged rapist to stay away from the victim and her family and to have no contact with minors outside of work. He has been placed on unpaid administrative leave until the outcome of the case is decided. He has worked as a security guard at Robert L. Frost Middle School for four years.

Uxbridge lets breast-feeding moms into town meeting

Five breast-feeding mothers were allowed into an Uxbridge town meeting despite town rules banning children from attendance to the meetings.

The decision came after hundreds of angry moms threatened to protest at Uxbridge high school. The mothers were allowed to sit in the Superintendent's office but were not allowed into the main meeting room. They were also not allowed to bring the children into the cafeteria or the library. The five mothers took turns holding each other's babies so that they could walk into the main room to cast their vote. The town was voting on plans to build a $31 million dollar new high school.

Political Briefs

Cheney defends environmental policies

Vice President Dick Cheney defended the government's recent policies regarding global warming, oil and gas drilling in the artic and the recent trend toward nuclear energy against both the Democratic Party and predominant environmental groups around the country.

One of the main complaints by groups was the recent overthrow of a campaign pledge in which the two promised to limit carbon dioxide emissions by electrical power plants and therefore effectively destroying a 1997 Kyoto Treaty that was designed to prevent global warming.

Vice President Cheney explained to the press that Senate would never ratify the Koyto treaty and that the presidential administration had every intention of trying a series of possible solutions.

"Kyoto was a dead proposition before we ever arrived in Washington, all we did was to make it clear that the U.S. would not be bound by it," Cheney said on ABC's This Week. "We're reviewing all the evidence and all the science on it and we're going to have a good, solid aggressive program to deal with the questions surrounding greenhouse emissions."

President reveals 2 trillion dollar budget today

President Bush will reveal his plans for a 2 trillion dollar budget request today.

The request will include cuts in spending in areas such as police hiring while emphasizing the President's nearly 1.6 trillion dollar ten year long tax cut project. The 1.6 trillion dollar cut was already rejected in the Senate in favor of a 1.2 trillion dollar proposal that was set forth as a compromise. This proposal will allow for $85 billion dollars as a cut for this year.

The cut on police hiring is taking an major hit to former President Clinton's pet project to hire an additional 100,000 police officers and for changes in health care to the poor and uninsured.

Instead the poor and uninsured will receive health care help through Bush's plan for tax credits.

Bush administrators explained that he intended to cut the hiring of police officers from Clinton's original proposal of hiring from 50,000 to 15,000 citing that the program had no results that proved that the hiring of new police officers reduced crime.

"This is a prime example of ... 'mission accomplished,'" White House budget office spokesman Chris Ullman said of Clinton's program. The budget proposed however, will be increasing the number of officers in schools.

There will also be a cut in health programs within a large increase overall in health spending. Rather than spending additional money training health care professionals, he will spend money towards training both minority physicians and minority nurses.

There is also a potential cut in early education spending however

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Dantzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargantia Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

No more shower sandals
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
253-7879
Come check us out at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

VISIT CHINA
*Free Airfare
*Free Room and Board
*Fee starting at $400
*Around July 5th - Aug24th
www.uschinaedu.org
E-mail: Andrea Buccino or Ryan Vicino at gatewaytochina@hotmail.com

OPTIC NERVE U.S.A.
CAMPUS TOUR 2001
scanner
• Stop by and try on some mind altering styles by our mad genius Beaufore T Fox.
• Register to win on-the-spot shades, T's and other cool stuff or a chance to win in our monthly drawings
• Be sure to check out our throb-a-lating web site to view all that's fresh and even more chances to get warped!
www.nervousa.com
April 12th
CAMPUS CENTER
UMASS

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Travel to Learn this Summer!
These programs provide a dynamic learning experience—a lively blend of classroom and field activities resulting in a true appreciation of the host country.
Field School in Prehistoric Archaeology in Belize
Haiti Today: Culture and Politics
Ireland Today: Politics and Society
Spanish Language and Culture in Mexico
Vietnam Today: Culture, History and Politics
For more information, contact
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Corporate, Continuing, and Distance Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston, MA 02125-3393
call us 617.287.7913
visit us www.conted.umb.edu
UMASS BOSTON

China's military threatens over plane crisis; U.S. refuses to back-down

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

As the standoff over the detained American crew of a downed American spy plane entered its second week, China's military officials warned that the resistance of the Bush administration to offer a full apology could lead to an increase in China's military defense against the U.S.

Vice President Dick Cheney assured reporters today that Washington had no intention of apologizing for the mid-air collision between a Chinese fighter jet and U.S. plane, which was forced to make an emergency landing on Hainan Island in Southern China.

The search for the missing Chinese pilot is on going, but many Chinese officials fear that the pilot may already be dead. Washington officials denied having any responsibility in the collision, claiming that the U.S. spy plane had every right to be conducting research in Chinese airspace.

Secretary of State Colin Powell expressed United State's sorrow about the pilot's fate but emphasized the U.S. will not apologize for the collision of the planes.

"The President has made it clear we regret the loss of the Chinese pilot as a result of this accident," he said in an interview to be broadcast with NBC's "Meet the Press" program. "The notion that we would apologize for being in international airspace, for example, is not something we can accept."

Earlier last week, the administration voiced concern over whether sensitive U.S. data aboard the plane was destroyed before being recovered by China officials, but all post-Cold War fears turned towards diplomatic strategies of "cat and mouse," as both sides are attempting to humiliate the other side and save face.

While attempting to avoid a meltdown in ties, the Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) is taking a headstrong stand against the United States, in fear of the prospect of sales of high technology weapons to Taiwan, and the Bush administration's focus on a missile defense shield.

Taiwan is seeking an arms package deal that includes four destroyers equipped with the most advanced anti-missile radar system. Powell, in an interview on CBS, said the arms sale with Taiwan would most likely go through, if the perception that China is not acting in a responsible and reasonable manner continues.

Yet, some lawmakers expressed disfavor against using trade relations as a weapon on Capitol Hill, saying the impasse could lead to a bitter fight this year, if Congress is asked to extend trade benefits to Beijing and the U.S. rejects China's bid to stage the Olympics in 2008.

Defense Minister Chi Haotian said the U.S. treatment of the situation has caused China to increase military defense against U.S. world supremacy. "We must turn our anger at hegemonism into tremendous motive force," Haotian said in an interview with a military newspaper.

Such an uncompromising position by the PLA could render a delayed release of the 21 American men and three women detained in Chinese territory, a fear the Bush administration is attempting to avoid.

Political analysts say the PLA is keen on using the detained Americans to humiliate the U.S. as payback for the U.S. bombing of the Chinese embassy in Belgrade in 1999, which Washington perceived as an accident during air strikes against Yugoslavia.

U.S. Senator Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., said the detained crew is getting precariously close to being "hostages" of diplomatic negotiations. Vice President Cheney rejected the description stating that the U.S. has had full access to the crew and "are being treated well."

U.S. officials were allowed to meet with eight of the 24 members Saturday, but are attempting to gain free access that would ease tensions of a possible trade retaliation and other sanctions against the two countries.

Labor negotiations fall through; Faculty strike looms in Hawaii

By Mary Vorsino
Ka Leo O Hawaii

(U-WIRE) - Unless a deal can be hammered out between the state and the University of Hawaii Professional Assembly by midnight Wednesday night, a faculty strike will begin Thursday.

With negotiations between the state and the University of Hawaii Professional Assembly at a stalemate, a strike seems inevitable to many students and faculty members, but Alexander Malahoff, president of UHPA, remains optimistic.

"We'll proceed (with negotiations) right down to the last minute," Malahoff said.

The union will meet with a federal mediator and the state for their third consecutive meeting Wednesday at 8:30 a.m.

Malahoff said that the proceedings on Monday and Tuesday were "cordial," but resolved nothing.

"We've examined what the situations are on both sides," he said, "(and) the sides are listening to each other."

The strike has no definite end date and could go on as long as needed, Musto said.

Malahoff said that "nobody wants a strike," but that students and administration understand the need for one.

Musto said that he hopes a settlement with the state can be reached but doubts a deal will be made before April 5.

Malahoff said the state and the UHPA are still trying to find a solution.

UH Administration has said that students are to report to classes tomorrow and wait at least 10 minutes, even in the event of a strike, unless otherwise instructed by professors. After that, said Dean Smith, senior vice president and executive vice chancellor, students may leave and assume that their professor is on strike.

Picket lines are expected to be positioned at the main entry point to campus and union members will staff the lines in three-hour shifts, starting at 6 a.m. and lasting for 12 hours.

University relations spokesperson Jim Manke said in an advisory to UH students and staff that if a strike does occur, students and staff can expect mass picketing. The number will dwindle, he said, as the strike progresses.

In the event of a strike, non-striking employees are expected at work, said Smith, but are not required to perform any of the normal duties of striking faculty members. Smith also said that the university would remain open during the strike, to the best of its ability.

Jean Ehrhorn, interim university librarian, said that the library will attempt to remain open during its regular hours. Fifty-two UH librarians may honor the strike, and if they do, said Ehrhorn, the reference section and other areas of the library may not remain open.

Ehrhorn said the library may close earlier because of lack of employees but, she said, the library would take the strike "day-by-day."

UHPA has announced that it may picket some campuses until 8 p.m., where night classes are held. Weekend picketing can also be expected. Picket lines may be present, said UHPA officials, at campus entrances for athletic events in the lower campus.

If the strike lasts more than the holidays left in the semester, the administration is not certain how students could complete the semester within the allotted period, despite the union's intentions of saving the semester.

The Associated Students of the University of Hawaii may file a class-action lawsuit against the state if the semester is canceled because of the strike.

■ concert

continued from page 1

eye as her feud with female rapper Foxy Brown and her collaborations with Sisqo and the former Puff Daddy.

Uncle Kracker is the DJ in Kid Rock's Twisted Brown Trucker Band and has recently released a solo album titled Double Wide. Kracker's solo work is a laid-back pop/blues/country hybrid and the two singles "Yeah, Yeah, Yeah" and "Follow Me" have both achieved moderate success.

"The problem we have with Uncle Kracker is that no one knows who he is, but everyone knows who he is," Paolella said.

Dropkick Murphys are a Boston punk band that incorporates elements of Irish and folk music into their energetic sound that includes bagpipes and accordion. The band has released three full-length albums, toured the world, and have been featured on the Warped and Punk-O-Rama tours.

"I hope this year's concert is an eye opener to the SGA," Paolella said. "Students want to get wasted and they want to hear good music. It's the only thing the entire campus cares about."

■ Mullins

continued from page 1

DANA SANTELLA COLLEGIAN

This little girl didn't visit the Tropical Rain Forests yesterday, but she did stop by the Mullin's Center Home Show, complete with its man-made ecosystem.

in a region, it results in a wonderful diversity in the plants and animals too," Gray said. "The ecosystem only gets richer through that diversity."

That, according to Gray, is how scenarios like his Mullins scene were created naturally in New England. To bring such a complex ecosystem into an indoor facility took over four days for Gray and his crew, from importing and dumping tons of earth to hauling in trees, cabin materials and massive stones. Though he has built water gardens of every size and scale imaginable, the Mullins scape is a truly ambitious project.

"We probably have six to seven thousand dollars worth of plants in here," Gray said. He indicates that the plants have been "stressed" by being inside for a few days and will need special care before being transplanted into a natural environment.

That is precisely what makes systems like this one special, according to its creator. Building something beautiful with consideration of the existing natural environment is what Gray's company is all about.

"Leaning more toward the resources and surroundings that are already there saves time, money and energy," Gray said. "And most of all, it creates a more healthy living environment for plants, animals and humans."

NEWS MEETING TODAY AT 6.

All the ingredients for a
Happy Passover
SUPER STOP & SHOP

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)
U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL

Unplanned Pregnancy?
CALL ALTERNATIVES
586-3000 Northampton
774-6010 Greenfield
• Information
• Options Counseling
• Support
All services free & confidential
28 Federal St., Greenfield
1 Round House Plaza, Northampton
Free Pregnancy tests

The Best Spring Campus Event is Tipping Off
new balance
Haigis Hoopla
April 28th & 29th 2001
Stop by Curry Hicks, Room #5 to pick up a registration brochure.
Call 545-5689 for more information. Visit us on the web at http://haigishoopla.zminutemen.com
Presented by UMASS Sport Management Program
ACDelco PURE ROCK LAZER 99.3 Coca-Cola YOUR PLAN PLAY THE BEST. PLAY SPALDING
KAPLAN 1 800 KAP TEST kaptest.com zMinutemen.com Brought to You by UMass and its Alumni Associations
Bruins Y Sans

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

A Swift-ly Tilting Persona:
Stereotypes pigeonhole new Governor

Quick, name how many kids Governor Cellucci has.

It seems like a silly question, intrusive and irrelevant to the day-to-day business of governing Massachusetts. We don't know – or care – about the role of fatherhood in the lives of our elected officials. We expect our male leaders to fulfill their duties and burn the midnight oil, on occasion, to do so. It never occurs to us to ask whether Cellucci has been a good father, or to speculate that matters of government too often make him late for dinner.

On the other hand, many of us shake our heads at the thought of his lieutenant governor, Jane Swift, assuming the top position in the capital while pregnant with twins. It's no surprise that Swift, who is slated to become the acting governor of Massachusetts tomorrow, has been criticized for not postponing her pregnancy until she knew if she would take on that role. It raises important questions about the perceived ability of a woman to balance home and work successfully.

Some may say that by misusing state resources in the name of motherhood, Swift has brought this criticism upon herself. She used a state-owned helicopter to visit her family, across the state, during a weekend that clogged the Massachusetts Turnpike. She admitted to using aides for babysitting. These violations of political punctilio brought infamy to Swift, in a series of scandals that forced her to publicly apologize. Pundits, the day after she expressed her regrets, criticized her attitude and attempt to explain herself (her child was sick, and she had been detained for governmental matters).

These are legitimate complaints against any holder of public office, but the reality is that for the figurehead of the state, the line between personal and public property becomes thin. Massachusetts, unlike most states, does not have a publicly owned governor's mansion, but that doesn't affect the sense of entitlement that pervades the capital. Swift was following a pattern set by numerous elected officials. In any case, she learned that the public is watching.

Her fellow policy makers are watching, as well, and their eyes at times seem riveted to her belly, to the detriment of her message. A few weeks ago, at a summit concerning the implementation of the Internet tax, she was greeted with, "Welcome, all three of you," a not-quite-charming sally. Alternately, for the daring writer, there is a temptation to name her Massachusetts' foremost "It-girl," as one Boston Globe piece styled her. Yesterday, a columnist in the same paper called her "Gidget-like."

At every turn, the press and her colleagues invoke stereotypes of female behavior, sometimes contradictory, as a way of undermining her credibility. Pegging Swift as a perky cheerleader on the Massachusetts team is as ridiculous as defining her by her motherhood.

The fact that Swift will assume office while raising a family provokes comment from countless men who have done the same thing. It is crucial to judge her job performance, and not the decision to hold a job. The fixation on her personal life has outlived its usefulness. It would be nice if, just once, an article about the soon-to-be governor would forsake the clever adjectives in favor of action verbs that show us what she's doing, not what kind of maternity top she's wearing. That's just good writing.

And Cellucci? He has two.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

MLB on web, see for a fee

ADAM MARTIGNETTI

Last week, the Major League Baseball season began much to the delight of fantasy junkies, season ticket holders and die-hard fans alike – whether they root for the Cubs or the Red Sox or the Braves or the Yankees. Mark McGwire has started his chase for 71, Griffey continues his chase for 756, the Yankees are seeking the elusive, historical four-peat and Todd Helton has launched yet another assault on .400.

Among all the record chasing though, another potentially historic achievement is in the works. Online streaming media company, Real Networks has signed a landmark agreement with MLB to carry every single regular season game through its service. For anybody unfamiliar with Real's services, it's a little blue icon that sits, generally, in the lower right corner of your computer screen. It looks kind of like the Nike swoosh. When you're surfing the Internet and you click on something having to do with sound or video, Real Networks' program pops up and effortlessly handles the task. It has become the primary Internet player for all things media-related – a Microsoft of its time.

Anyway, for $4.95, somebody can buy this MLB direct service, which allows users to listen to any baseball game via the Internet and to access a searchable database of video highlights. This is the equivalent of buying NESN (to use a local reference) cable service to see the Red Sox home games.

On the surface of things, this is an absolutely great deal – something which baseball purists and the causal fan should embrace. Imagine this situation. You're a rabid Red Sox fan. You've lived in Boston for your entire life. Since Little League, you've rooted for the Fenway boys, every year hoping that that stupid curse would be broken, and every year meeting with heartbreak and disappointment as the Sox failed to win the Series. You have Carlton Fisk's 1975 World Series homerun on videotape and you watch it every night before going to bed. You have Bill Buckner's face on your dartboard. Now, you graduate college and get a job, say in California.

Three thousand miles away from home, you're stranded in a land of sunshine and Anaheim Angels? Anaheim! There's no way to access your beloved Red Sox games, except during two-minute intervals on the nightly edition of Sportscenter. In steps Real Networks. For five bucks, you can listen to every Sox game via the Internet and even see the last inning of Hideo Nomo's no-no performance thanks to the Real video service. Bandwidth considerations aside (let's assume that everyone has a cable modem for the sake of argument), this is an absolutely great deal for you. Real Networks and MLB have brought everyone's home team home for an incredibly cheap price.

Now imagine this equally plausible situation. You've yet to acquire high-speed Internet access – be it the cable modems described above or DSL – so you've been using one of those "free" Internet services, say Juno. Now, you're having a merry time surfing the Net for free, accessing, among other sites, Warner Brothers online. Say, for argument's sake, "Dawson's Creek" is your favorite show, so you hit up the WB online a lot.

One day, you go to the WB's website and you can't get in. Moreover, a persistent pop-up window keeps prompting you to enter your credit card number and to sign up for some type of "service." Annoyed, but curious, you read on. It seems that for a monthly fee of $4.95, you can sign up for the "WB Online Service." This service allows you to access not only the WB website, but all Time Warner content online. As an interesting postscript, the box says that this content is free to all America Online subscribers – all 18 million of them.

What exactly has happened here?

Well to summarize: the thing (and I'll get to defining this later), which seemed so good, so beneficial and so right in the first case, became extremely annoying in the second case. That is, the Internet content, which users desire so much, was made available more widely in the first example and restricted in the second.

What's noticeably absent from the Real Networks deal is that all those games were absolutely free before the deal. Before this deal, I could hear all the Braves games through one of the local Atlanta radio stations. Now, I'll have to pay for them. What's noticeably absent from the Real Networks deal is that AOL, which recently purchased Time-Warner, one of the largest media companies in the world, could very easily do the exact same thing.

What's preventing AOL from taking all of Time Warner's content off the Web (including your favorite WB website) and saying that, unless you subscribe to AOL's Internet Service, you'll have to pay to access it?

The answer is absolutely nothing. The answer is possibly the future of the Internet – a future based very much on a cable TV model. As large media conglomerates realize that there is certain content people desire a lot – whether it be access to the WB website or every Red Sox home game – they're going to make people pay for it. They're not going to give it away for free, as is done all over the Internet now.

Television companies realized that people are willing to pay extra money for NESN or ESPN, so we got cable TV. Real Networks realized that people may be willing to pay extra to listen to MLB games via the Internet, so we get this deal. If it is successful, however, beware of other Internet giants following suit. You may never realize how great that WB site is until you have to pay for it.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian columnist

Spring Concert Exposed

RYAN BEN HARRIS

If you do not know, I am the Assistant News Editor for this paper. I figured I'd establish that for the people who know me only by my editorials. I am also a journalist for the news department, reporting on a variety of stories. Ever since I was the Arts and Living Editor a year ago, it has been my job to report on the last two Spring Concerts.

As a journalist, it is my job to remain neutral and report on what I see without any personal bias. I have realized that for this particular topic, I cannot do that.

First of all, if you flip to today's front page, you'll see that finalized plans for this year's spring concert have been announced. You'll also notice that I did not write the story. I removed myself from reporting on the concert when I came to the decision that personal politics and utter disgust left me with way too much of an opinion to stay neutral. So instead of playing by the journalistic rule of "keep your business out of your job," I decided to have an opinion and quit instead.

As a member of a news department, I have "inside, un-named sources," just like you see in those movies about sleazy newspaper people. These people divulge rumors and fuel the fire that can eventually make or break a big story. Tony Soprano may call these people rats, but I call them gifts from God.

One of my inside sources told me that the Student Government Association's (SGA) Ways and Means Committee is considering cutting the budget of every registered student organization for next year. This person mentioned that University Productions and Concerts (UPC) could be hacked by up to $15,000. (Please keep in mind that this is just a rumor and not confirmed!)

For a second, let's assume it is true. This is the last sharp straw in a stack of backstabbing tools the SGA could plant in UPC's back. After a year of completely screwing over the organization that puts on Spring Concert by not giving them money or paying any attention to it at all, this would quite simply be the ultimate blow to the head, the coupe de gras if you will.

Cutting the Spring Concert budget is cheating the students. It is unacceptable, and the SGA has no right to do it. The concert is an event that ostensibly everyone looks forward to every year. The SGA doesn't care, though. Its members are so overly consumed with their own abuse of power and fighting over who can be a bigger jerk, that they don't even bother to stop and realize what terrible examples they are setting for the rest of the University.

If you ask the SGA why they would take $15,000 away from UPC, they will tell you it's because everyone needs to be funded equally. In theory, this is true, but, in theory, the women's lacrosse team should be on television just as much as the men's basketball team. We all know why they're not. The Spring Concert is an event much more important than anything else all year, because it brings together the most students. It should certainly deserve more attention and more money.

The fact that it brings students together more than anything is not my words though. Seth Avakian, the former Student Trustee said, in one breath, "When I see students gathering together it's at convocation, graduation and Spring Concert, and that's it." In the next breath he said, "We need to fund everyone equally." How Avakian could not read between the lines and realize that Spring Concert should be a priority is beyond me. He's a smart guy though: I don't think he needs that to be pointed out.

The truth is that the SGA is still upset over last year's concert when they agreed to take the hit of unsold tickets that was much bigger than they expected. So instead of sucking up the loss, they have made UPC pay for not selling enough tickets several times. This has left UPC constantly fighting for money.

UPC has had to fight almost everyone in last year's SGA staff. I believed UPC president Amanda Paoella when she told me former SGA president Jeff Howe "lied to her." Howe formed his presidency campaign in 2000 by saying he would get Spring Concert to be held outside, and when Amanda told him that it would be difficult he said he would take care of it and work with her. This is coming from a man who has not returned a single phone call from our newspaper all semester and then had the nerve to get up on a podium at a Senate meeting and criticize our ability to cover the SGA. I was asked by newly elected SGA members, "Why doesn't the Collegian cover the SGA in an unbiased way? Why don't you have the opinion of 'the other side' in there?" Well, to those people and anyone else who has wondered this in the past, know this: Every time Jeff Howe was contacted about anything all semester he gave the Collegian the silent "go to hell" treatment. We were never deliberately biased. We didn't run a comment from the SGA president because we never had one!

To make matters worse, another inside source told me that UPC could have signed the Counting Crows as this year's headlining act if they only had $1,500 more. That rumor kills me, because quite simply an act like that would've shut up every whiner on this campus about the quality of the acts right up.

People will most definitely complain about Lil' Kim and the rest of the line-up, and that is understandable. (Although I love Uncle Kracker, and if you don't know who he is, definitely check him out.) However, I don't blame UPC for one second if the students are not happy. First of all, UPC has had a very difficult time getting any help from the organization that should be helping them in arranging this event. Secondly, if the students are not happy, it is mostly their own fault. For every spoiled brat that's going to complain about the concert undeniably sucking, you can be sure that that person did not get off his or her ass to help plan it.

Well now, Mr./Ms. hung over lazy UMass-Amherst student, it's time to get off your ass. Do not let UPC take this severe hit. If its budget is cut by something like $15,000, there may not be a Spring Concert in 2002. Actually, there might be one, but the only act will be a polar bear with a banjo or Carrot Top.

I'd hope SGA would care more about this. I am a good friend of President John Sheehan. I know he has the ability to stand up for UPC and would hope he would do all he can for the students.

I also know this: If all of the clubs' budgets are being cut, I don't know where that money's going. $15,000 lying around could definitely be enough to throw a phat party on the Cape. Maybe rent out someone's house and buy some booze and hardcore narcotics. Woo hoo, yeah fifteen grand! Not that I'm insinuating at all.

My emotional attachment certainly withstands. I say this because UPC has been my one major regret in my four years at the University. I honestly wish that I had the opportunity to work for it. Instead of being the reporter on the side over the past two years, I would have loved to be in the front line of this war, fighting for the money that UPC so desperately needed to do to make this an excellent event.

I took myself off of reporting the story to write this editorial because I care more about each student knowing the possible effects of something this harsh than the job I love so much. As a figure in the public's eye, I see it as my responsibility to put the interests of 25,000 other people above my own, even if it means jeopardizing my integrity. This is something that the people at the SGA need to learn. UPC is trying to put on a concert and is unfortunately trapped in the middle of an awful SGA.

Students of UMass, you're being cheated out of something that you've paid for. Do something about it! If you don't want to go down to the Student Union and voice your opinion in person to these groups, you can always write an email. Write an email to the SGA. Write an email to UPC. Hell, write an email to me (benharri@student.umass.edu) and I'll make sure every person's opinion gets passed along one-by-one, but please don't overlook the gravity of these rumored wrongdoings.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

WELCOME TO PRISON, MAGGOT! SOCIETY HAS HAD A BELLY FULL OF HARDENED CRIMINALS LIKE YOU. YOU'RE DOIN' HARD TIME IN A MAN'S LOCKUP. FORGET YOUR OLD LIFE—YOUR TIME IS MINE NOW. I MAKE THE RULES. FOR STARTERS: HAND OVER THE "BINKY."
BUDS OF TOMORROW BUILD PRISON

Today is the last day to submit your pictures to the Collegian Spring Break Photo Contest! Drop off your prints at the Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement by 4 pm. Questions, comments? E-mail the photo department at collegianpics@yahoo.com or call the Batphone at 577-3835 and ask for Maureen or Tibi.

The fine print: Pictures may be in black and white or color, must be 8x10 or smaller, unframed and unmatted, and submitted in an envelope with a form which may be obtained in the Collegian office. Pictures will be available to be picked up at the close of the contest. No porn.

Aging metal acts wade through uncertainty

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

FEAR FACTORY
Digimortal
Roadrunner

SEPULTURA
Nation
Roadrunner

COURTESY ROADRUNNER RECORDS
Sepultura can't pull themselves out of their own rut.

To see a band at a crossroads is confusing and frustrating, especially for a fan. Turned on to Fear Factory in high school, I was fully taken in by the amazing Demanufacture, the precursor (and superior in nearly all cases) to many of today's sample-laden, keyboard-backed techno metal. I went further back into their catalogue and was intrigued by the slightly more traditional death metal Soul of a New Machine, and was primed and ready on release day to snatch up the summer of 1998's Obsolete. FF's most focused release, Obsolete had a screenworthy man vs. machine lyrical narrative, experimental dance rhythms ("Descent"), and vocalist Burton C. Bell taking his "Cycle of Sixty" work with G/Z/R one step further with the affecting "Timelessness."

I found Sepultura in high school, too, and was knee deep in the back-to-back masterpieces Chaos A.D. and Roots for quite some time. The punk energy running through both releases coupled with mind-expanding Brazilian tribal rhythms and flat out metal riffs and vocals are what maintain each album's status as a seminal heavy music classic. After the band split with frontman Max Cavalera, I followed the resulting two bands, the Cavalera-headed Soulfly and the new Sepultura with vocalist Derrick Green. Soulfly's self-titled debut was incredible and a worthy successor to the late Sepultura legacy, and was followed by 2000's scattershot, but worthwhile, Primitive. Less impressive was Sepultura's post-break follow-up Against, the basic blueprint for the more fully realized Nation.

It's hard to fault Sepultura, as they are among the most socially conscious, intelligent and progressive bands in metal, even today, years past their prime. But the simple fact is that it's hard to get excited about a new Sep release nowadays. Derrick Green is not to blame for this, but he's not part of the solution. His traditional hardcore vocals just aren't as grabbing or passionate as Cavalera's, whom the band refuses to mention by name in Nation's press, except as their former "lead singer."

The simultaneous exit of both Cavalera and Sepultura being a major player is wrongly seen as evidence that Cavalera was the driving force behind the band. He was, and still is, an exceptional frontman, but chances are after the creative zenith of Chaos A.D. and Roots, the band would have settled into their current self, regardless of singer. The current state of Sepultura, for all the sound and fury of Nation, is one of predictability and the absence of a reason for fans to get excited about their future.

The rallying cry of "Sepulnation" and forceful "Border Wars" are studied, professional, impressive to newcomers, and exactly what fans saw coming. The feeling of familiarity continues through the speed metal blasts of "Revolt" and "Human Cause," down through "Valtio," the closing collaboration with the Finnish String Quartet Apocalyptica. "Politricks," which pairs the band with Jello Biafra, is almost comically hackneyed, and doesn't hold a candle to previous work with the punk icon like "Biotech is Godzilla" or their cover of the Dead Kennedy's "Drug Me."

Guitarist Andres Kisser still kicks up some solid compositions, and the excellent "Vox Populi," similar to Against's "Floaters in Mud," proves that the band still has some eccentric and grabbing sounds up its sleeve. Truth be told, nearly none of today's new metal bands have close to the level of talent or will to push musical boundaries that Sepultura does, 15 years into their career. But for all of the seemingly right ingredients, the failure of Nation to light any kind of spark speaks as either a cry for some change of direction for the band or a sign that maybe these are the last days for the legendary Sepultura.

Only on their fourth proper release, the future is brighter for Fear Factory, but the title of Digimortal's opening track taken as a question is an apt outlook: what will become? Whereas Sepultura is sandwiching the exceptional middle portion of their career with unexceptional thrash in the beginning, and now unexceptional hardcore at the end, Fear Factory has essentially been on the same page for the most part of their nearly decade-long existence. Since Demanufacture, their sound has remained strong and progressed little, and therein lies the semi-problem.

Semi-problem because, as Digimortal proves, FF can cruise in neutral and still put out a solid and engaging album. "You can't change me," Bell sings on "Linchpin," and he means it.

The music is simple and hits you right in the face. Bone-rattling riff/drum rumble combo, yelled/spooky recited lyrics, transcendent and beautifully sung chorus, repeat. Fans know the drill, and being one, I can't complain or find much fault in it. If the songs were any less memorable, we could talk about critique, but this is good stuff.

As he has stated in the press, guitarist Dino Cazares favored simple, wide-open riffs this time around for both their primal simplicity and the room they leave open for keyboards and samples. The gritty "Damaged" and "No One" are both cases where a little less knob turning and more refinement would have helped, but they're by no means bad.

As similar as they might be, the tight crafting and chard to swallow pop sense (Dino is a Beatles fan, after all) present in most of the songs keeps each one fresh and distinct. The album does have some standard and workmanlike tracks toward the end, but nothing that will have the listener lunging for the stop button. The only track with the potential to do that is the mortifying "Back The Fuck Up," a metal/hip-hop hybrid collaboration with B-Real from Cypress Hill. This is the flat out worst song Fear Factory has and conceivably ever will record, and its unintentional hilarity ranks up there with Hulk Hogan and The Wrestling Boot Band's Hulk Rules.

Both Nation and Digimortal leave their respective bands with uncertain paths before them. Will Sepultura continue down this fruitless path of mediocrity? Will Fear Factory maintain this level of quality for future solid but predictable releases? Who knows? After all, Fear Factory, with their technological paranoia, asks, "What will we be/ when we can see our own eternity?" We'll barely be living, just trudging through a predestined course. Whether these bands follow or lead in the future is anyone's guess.

COURTESY ROADRUNNER RECORDS
Fear Factory's latest gestures toward a brighter (so to speak) future.

Box hosts ska concert

By Dan Paladino
Collegian Staff

ASIAN MAN RECORDS SHOWCASE
Skybox
April 6

Ah, crowd surfing and chainsaws – the raging and juvenile heart of punk beat strong during Friday night's ska showcase at the Skybox, which featured three bands from the well-known Asian Man Records label. An initially tiny crowd of rain-soaked teens and college students rushed into the comfort able venue, most waiting to see crowd favorites Big D and the Kids Table. A fledgling punk band, The Lawrence Arms, proved incredibly entertaining and pumped out melodic punk tunes to open up the show.

The Lawrence Arms feature Brendan Kelly, the talented former singer from the now defunct punk-ska band Slapstick, on bass and lead vocals. The three-piece group stuck to a collection of punk songs and sung and performed aggressively with superb drumming, pushing the crowd to a mosh-pit frenzy and crowd surfing antics early into the evening. Brendan's energetic and vigorous bass play often involved swinging the bass around his body and jumping around the stage; the movements mixed with the powerful drumbeats to establish a lightning pace the band would maintain throughout the set. The back-up vocalist and guitar player sufficiently strung out the chords while Brendan sang with a clear and sarcastic tone that is so reminiscent of the punk style. The band was the only non-ska act of the night, and with their hard rocking punk sound and clear vocals, The Lawrence Arms impressed the small crowd until it came time for Boston ska favorites, Big D and the Kids Table.

The crowd seemed suddenly to double in number as the mob moved closer to the stage where the ten-man ska group, Big D and the Kids Table (after all) present in most of the songs keeps each one fresh and distinct. The album does have some standard and workmanlike tracks toward the end, but nothing that will have the listener lunging for the stop button. The only track with the potential to do that is the mortifying "Back The Fuck Up," a metal/hip-hop hybrid collaboration with B-Real from Cypress Hill. This is the flat out worst song Fear Factory has and conceivably ever will record, and its unintentional hilarity ranks up there with Hulk Hogan and The Wrestling Boot Band's Hulk Rules.

Both Nation and Digimortal leave their respective bands with uncertain paths before them. Will Sepultura continue down this fruitless path of mediocrity? Will Fear Factory maintain this level of quality for future solid but predictable releases? Who knows? After all, Fear Factory, with their technological paranoia, asks, "What will we be/ when we can see our own eternity?" We'll barely be living, just trudging through a predestined course. Whether these bands follow or lead in the future is anyone's guess.

Donning black shirts with the number "330" printed in red, MU330 maintained the tempo left by Big D and performed a set of danceable ska tunes while adding in some unique touches that definitely left a lasting impression upon the remaining crowd. A five-man ska outfit from St. Louis, MU330 sported a reduced horn section that played well executed extended melodies blending nicely with the punkish Buddy Holly look-alike singer's scattered vocals. In between MU330's set, the lead singer, Dan, beckoned for a guitar player in the audience to play the band's next tune – two eager fans hopped on stage and Dan taught them each the chords (all four of them!) so they could have a play-off to see who would stay with the band during the song. The winner jammed out the ska chord progression as the singer urged the fans to sing along – despite the shrunken crowd, MU330 interacted with the audience marvelously. With dreads flailing through the air, the band's energetic drummer pounded out the beats as the crowd danced with renewed vigor. The climax of the evening, so to speak, occurred when Gerry, a rather bulky trombone player, sang a soft song with a hoarse voice and finished off the show by swinging a buzzing chainsaw around the stage. The sound rumbled through the Skybox as fans stared in disbelief and laughed endlessly until the final drum beats sounded, putting an end to the shenanigans of MU330.

The Eighties – some kind of sick joke?

Style File
WITH SHAUNA BILLNGS

Ladies, it's a crazy, crazy world out there this spring. Once again, just about everything you could possibly imagine is in style – which sometimes is a great and wonderful thing. It means you can make a fashionable outfit with almost anything you own, and it's much easier to get the cheaper versions of high fashion when there are more styles to select from. You can also have a different look for yourself every day. But then, alas, there are the bad sides as well...actually, let me just change that to bad side, and take a brief look at the fashion fiasco – the return of the 80's.

I don't know which brilliant designer had the idea to disinter the 80's look from its shallow grave, and to put it, partially decomposed and rather rancid, back into the pages of Vogue, but we have got to do something about this guy. He's a danger to society. Reasons why the 80's is a bad thing? Read on, my friends, read on.

There are rules about bringing back a decade. Last season, 40's style suits were big, and that was cool, because we were not around for those suits the first time they came into fashion. Even the 70's disco resurgence was okay, because any of us alive during that time were too small to remember anything. However, it is just cruel to bring back the 80's. We all lived through it, even if we were just in elementary school. And it's too painful to have the memories back so soon. We'd all just rather forget the MC Hammer pants and slouch socks, and we would have by now if Mom hadn't left that giant portrait of me in neon and snap bracelets up on top of the piano. When you have twenty-year-olds grumbling about the latest fashion, you know you have a loser. What's going to be next spring, a return to the 90's? Half my clothes are from the 90's, seeing as it was a mere 2 years ago! But wait, I'm giving them ideas.

The 80's, without a doubt, was the biggest fashion faux pas ever. It's tough to beat a ten-year stretch when no redeeming fashions were created. Think about it. Leg warmers. NO. Batwing sleeves. Uh-uh. Tightrolled, acid washed jeans? Hell no! The list goes on, with such gems as feather earrings, airbrushed T-shirts, neckless and one-shouldered sweatshirts, and, dare I say it, leggings and jumbo shirts. There is no reason for anyone to want to wear any of the above, unless you have a mullet, or need leg warmers due to the severe circulation disorder that you have.

Let's not feed the fashion industry's current laziness. They haven't made us anything new. Instead of sitting at their desks and drawing brand new designs for us, they are all sitting in Maui, sipping on Melon Martinis, and laughing about how we'll buy anything they deem is hot. It could be years before they get out of their hammocks and do some work, if we don't demand some new styles!

I don't mean to bust out with another of my fashion conspiracy theories, but I wonder if this was just a sick joke that spiraled out of control. You know how you'll tell this simple little lie, to get out of going somewhere, and it spirals more and more out of control, until suddenly everyone thinks that your boyfriend is working off a gambling debt crushing grapes with his bare feet at a vineyard in the south of France and you have a baboon heart that sometimes makes you crave bananas? Okay, everyone was following me until I busted out with that sentence, but let's just keep going. Maybe, as a joke, someone put a couple Madonna numbers into their show, or a Hollywood starlet spilled mustard on her Oscar dress, so she had to wear her old metallic green puffy prom dress circa 1986. In an effort to protect their image, these people had to act as if the fashions of the 80's were the best thing ever, and the hottest thing to come around since, well, since the 80's. And then everyone just fell into it. But now, the lie has become so deep that there is no way out. It would explain a lot.

But girls, don't stress, because while the 80's look is a big part of this spring's fashion line-up, it's not the only thing out there. Tiny mini skirts are joining the knee length variety this season, much to the glee of many of the guys out there who have been patiently awaiting its return. Black and white is the timeless color combination that just can't be beat, and stripes and geometric prints are being put boldly onto pants and skirts to be worn with a plain top. Gentle earthtones in military style dresses and shirts are camouflaging the fashion spreads in Elle and Mademoiselle. And to counter fatigues, the feminine style is still going strong with flowing sundresses, gentle pastels and vibrant floral patterns.

Don't have much money this semester? Try just buying a few accessories to spruce up your wardrobe – get a silk flower to wear in your hair, a camouflage belt and a black and white handbag. But please, let's band together as a college community and tell the fashion industry that we will not take these shady 80's shenanigans any longer. Don't bow to peer pressure, just say "No!" to fingerless gloves.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian Columnist.

Buckcherry reach beyond their oldschool influenes

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

BUCKCHERRY
Time Bomb
Dreamworks

You can probably decide whether or not you'll like Time Bomb, Buckcherry's sophomore album, based solely on two facts: 1) that the best song is called "Slit My Wrists," and 2) that "Slit My Wrists" is an upbeat song.

When Buckcherry's self-titled debut came out in '99, it was like a breath of old air. The album was hailed as revolutionary not because it broke new ground, but because it dared to be oldschool, evoking classic 70s Aerosmith. Appetite for Destruction-era Guns 'N Roses, and AC/DC. It was the anti-Significant Other.

As good as that was, however, it was still limited by its concepts. As fun and shamelessly rockin' as that album was, you'd heard it before. When a band only tries to go for a retro sound, they can't help but sound like something you've heard before. Good rock music is good rock music, regardless of originality, so the album was rightly a hit, but it then faded away, as happens to all non-inventive bands.

Time Bomb is the next step. Buckcherry have taken that classic hard rock sound and brought it to a new level. What level is that? It is the level of actually melding great songwriting with that classic hard-rock sound.

"Slit My Wrists" is the perfect example. Over fast riffs and rock-solid drumming, frontman Josh Todd sings "maybe we can work it out you know I hate to see you when you cry... slit my wrists and I'll just fade away" in a voice that isn't tormented, or hurt, but instead biting and with even a hint of sly smile behind it. "Yeah, I try to kill myself sometimes," he seems to be saying, "That doesn't mean I have to be a pussy about it. Doesn't mean I can't rawk."

That's what makes this album so new. It progresses the classic format to where the originators never got to take it. I can't help but feeling that this is an album that Aerosmith could have made if they hadn't gone pop, that Guns 'N Roses could have produced if they hadn't gotten so full of themselves and 15-minute songs, that AC/DC might have come up with if they stopped thinking with their penises for just a moment. Those bands never managed to escape themselves and their cliches. Buckcherry shatters them.

Sometimes the change is so subtle that the realization dawns only slowly. "Whiskey in the Morning," for instance, is your basic booze-glorifying rock anthem, something you'd listen to while shotgunning to give you some motivation. Then you realize that it's about alcoholism, and Todd is explicitly stating that it's going to kill him if he doesn't stop.

Even a song called "Porno Star," which anyone would think must simply be too limited by that title to have any subtle meaning behind the screaming vocals and crunch-crunch guitars, manages to surprise. "A good job from a working man, never had a chance to love you never want to see you cry" hits you, and then you see that the song isn't just about sex, but the consequences of the paid variety. It may not be the deepest subject in the world, but by God, it's further than any band of this type has ever gone before.

Unfortunately, this standard doesn't hold up for the entire album. Maybe a fourth of it is the same standard stuff that made Buckcherry known in the first place. First single "Ridin" and the title track (featuring classical lyrical stylings such as "and if you want a roller coaster just take a slow ride on my shotgun" and "can't stop now, I got bitches and money") are more of the same. Not bad, just... not memorable.

In the end, though, it is the progression that captures the ears and makes this album special. Aerosmith with a brain, Guns 'N Roses with a social conscience, AC/DC with songwriting by Aaron Lewis... call it what you will, but perhaps the best label that can be given is 'the Buckcherry sound.'

With Time Bomb Buckcherry have outdone their influences. Let this become the standard for future badasses to follow.

COURTESY ALISON DYER

Buckcherry: a new classic?

Memento is a brilliant success wrought of masterful writing

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

MEMENTO
Directed by Christopher Nolan with Guy Pearce, Carrie-Anne Moss,
Playing at Pleasant St. Theater

Time doesn't really exist. Memories come and go, drifting through the air like particles of dust. You're aware, perhaps, that they are there, but only occasionally, only if you see a streak a light stretch out across an otherwise dark room. You wake up in a room. You don't know where you are. You check the drawers – only a Bible, only a hotel room. You wake up in a room. You don't know where you are. You check the drawers – a Bible and a gun. How'd it get there? You don't know.

That is the world of Leonard Shelby, or a man claiming to be Leonard. "Lenny," as he is begrudgingly called, suffers from short-term memory loss. He can't form new memories as the result of a horrific attack that also left his wife raped and murdered. Leonard uses a meticulous system of photographs, notes, routine and tattoos just to make it through daily life. Why? He wants to hunt down and kill the mysterious John or James G. who perpetrated the attack.

And so goes the brilliant and cunning Memento – a striking piece of film noir and, indeed, a striking piece of film. However, it does not go so easily, nor does it goes so linearly or rationally or mundanely, if those are words that can be used to describe traditional storytelling.

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Carrie-Anne Moss as Lenny's pal Natalie.

The film is in fact shot backward – working from the final sequence back toward the accident. In that sense, it's like an intricate jigsaw puzzle, with beginning and end plainly visible, but the connecting pieces all looking the same. However, Memento is not exercising structural flexibility for artistic or comic (see "Seinfeld") purposes, but rather out of authenticity to its main character, Leonard. As he says in the film, time does not exist for him. He only knows the distant past and the immediate present, so, like Leonard, the audience takes this journey through moments of time, different in that we can piece these moments together while he cannot.

What makes films like these work, other than unflinching direction and superb acting, is our ability to believe the (unreliable) narrator. One only has to look at equally brilliant films like Fight Club or The Usual Suspects to see how these movies play off the audience's trust of whoever is presented as the main character. Manipulative? Perhaps. Good storytelling? Undoubtedly, equally and uniquely in all three cases.

While Memento doesn't have quite the scope of Suspects or the political bite of Fight Club, it does offer a charismatic and, at times, haunting performance by Guy Pearce. Pearce (LA Confidential) holds together what could have been a muddled composition much like Kevin Spacey or Edward Norton's voiceovers do in the above films. His keen confidence and casual demeanor hide shades of Leonard's character that can only be revealed as the film progresses. Pearce manages to walk a thin line between reckless vigilante and helpless victim – and he still keeps the audience's interest throughout.

One could hardly ask more from director/screenwriter Christopher Nolan. As a writer, Nolan, not so much places, but tucks away little gems, weaving them fluently into the story like Agatha Christie or Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. As the director, he has the bravado and purpose to make the film work. In the end, Memento is not really a complete picture – sure, the story is completed, but only within Nolan's restrictions – rather, like a memory, a small slice of what really happened.

Memento is also indescribably unique, an achievement that has to be celebrated because it comes along so infrequently. The Usual Suspects is almost universally heralded (deservedly so) and has become a widespread cult classic. Memento succeeds in the same type of genre, or genre defying film. Not only is it a great piece of film noir, but also one of the best movies in a long time.

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Guy Pearce as the tortured Leonard Shelby.

"Sopranos" lawsuit misses point

RYAN BENHARRIS

After three years, "The Sopranos" is finally receiving attention that is not praise-based. According to the Associated Press, an Italian-American legal group from Chicago has filed a suit against producers of the immensely popular and award-winning series, claiming that it depicts all Italians as "born criminals."

Television is quickly becoming a place where we expect to see a true depiction of real life, regardless of what we are watching. "Survivor" and its thousands of impersonators have set the standard for an expectation of factuality on television, and some people have become so accustomed to it that they have disregarded the fact that entertainment is for entertainment purposes only. In a world where a desire for realism has engulfed television, it is becoming much more difficult to draw that thin line between veracity and fantasy – much less acknowledge that it even exists.

As a fan of "The Sopranos," I immediately find it difficult to criticize it for anything. In my opinion, it is one of the best drama series ever to grace the small screen. The writing is perfect. The acting is marvelous. And each episode only improves on the previous one.

I am not an Italian-American. I, therefore, would never make any assumptions about the show's ability to portray accurately a culture that I have absolutely no personal affiliation with. I know very little about Italian-American culture, and will not attempt to prove the group that is suing the show's producers wrong, or say that they have no grounds to file a complaint. I do, however know this. As one of the series' biggest fans, I do not use it as my weekly lesson on Italian life. I fully understand that people out there are not as open-minded as I, and that some fans will use "The Sopranos" as a guide to culture. There is certainly a responsibility level that we need to attain as viewers, if we are to sensibly get in touch with the absolute reality of the show.

The first and most obvious aspect to realize is that the show is not real at all. Tony Soprano is not a real person. The stories are fake. The people are fictitious and the world of "The Sopranos" is as pretend as the Land of Make-Believe from "Mr. Rogers." This should definitely be taken into account when watching it. The group that filed suit suing is giving the show's producers way too much credit for establishing a leadership role. Obviously David Chase and his production crew for "The Sopranos" want to create something with substance and believable accounts, but they certainly do not want to make concrete, real life.

Secondly, "The Sopranos" is no more of a painted picture of an Italian than "Ally McBeal" creates for lawyers, or "Friends" does for upper-middle class New York City residents. We will all agree that Ally McBeal is not the ideal lawyer, and that Phoebe Bouffe' is not the supreme New Yorker, or that all aliens don't look like ALF. So, whoever is assuming that Tony Soprano is a model example of Italian existence simply needs a lesson in human representation.

Of all the things "The Sopranos" could be criticized for, this took me by the most surprise. The show is graphically violent. It is immensely profane. Many of the characters are totally void of any ability to do anything morally right. All of those things were overlooked, and instead, it is under the microscope for this. The fact that it is being challenged for racism is something that I would have never expected. I really hope that people do not take the series as an accurate depiction of Italian-American life. There is a point where we, as a television-obsessed public, need to finally realize that our magical Idiot box does not produce the essential description of everything in the whole world.

"The Sopranos" is wonderful, perfectly crafted fiction. But it's still just fiction. Let's leave it at that instead of ascribing to it the ability to teach us about the real world. Quite simply, in reality the series will never be that important.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist.

CineMark brings end to AMC

On Friday, March 30, the AMC 4 Theatres at Mountain Farms Plaza at last closed its doors to business after several years of being the sole movie house near Pioneer Valley residents. A move that was somewhat expected since the November opening of the CineMark 12 multiplex in the Hampshire Mall, AMC continued to show several prominent Hollywood features, before it ultimately shuttered its cameras last week. The closing of the Hadley theatre is only one of 300 closings that the AMC corporation plans to do over the next four years. The vacant space has no definitive plans as of yet, though many community members have expressed hope that the theatre will be converted to an art-house cinema, showing independent and foreign film fare similar to that of The Pleasant Street Theatre and The Academy of Music in nearby Northampton. Other rumors floating around include the notion that the space may become a restaurant.

–Jake D. Lewis

Now don't make me tell ya twice... you better be readin' Arts. All them young ladies like young men who read Collegian Arts. Makes ya sound real smart and such.

Retire before you Graduate!

Get PAID for your time online. Whatever you are doing e-mail, chat, instant messaging while downloading music. Searching, shopping, surfing, or playing games, whatever you're doing, your time is worth $$$$$$$. Start getting PAID for it!!

Going Platinum is about to launch in April, the first CO-OPERATIVE REVENUE SHARING COMMUNITY. The Company is currently in a pre-launch drive to build it's membership base and offers an extraordinary financial opportunity for members who position themselves now. Visit:

Visit:
http://www.goingplatinum.com/member/vking

Munchie Madness 3-6PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Nachos Especial 8.75 4.38
Potato Skins Supreme 8.50 4.25
Shrimp Cocktail 6.25 3.13
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
OCMP Welcome Here
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

Commuter Students!
On behalf of the Commuter Area Government, you can see the UMTG's Production of HAIR for FREE!
Be one of the first 100 commuter students to stop by Tix Unlimited in the Student Union and tell them you are a commuter student and receive one free ticket for Thursday, Friday or Saturday Show.
Hair will be performed April 11th - 14th at 8pm in the Student Union Ballroom. Additional show: Saturday at 2pm.
Don't Miss Out!!!

men's lax

continued from page 10

said of his junior gunner.

Little finished with a career-high five goals (16 on the year) while classmate Morley finished with four including a beautiful breakaway goal in the fateful first.

The game was never in doubt after Canella's crew dropped the hammer in the opening period, but that didn't stop the Maroon and White attack squad from attending open season on Retriever goalkeeper Steve Cusa.

The Minutemen's top scorers, Rich Kunkel (18 goals, 12 assists) and Kevin Leveille (15 goals, 12 assists), were not kept out of hunting season in Maryland as the pair combined for seven points with the super sophomore netting the hat trick.

Alex Racioppi, Dan Paccione, Jeremy Guski all got in on the action with one tally a piece.

After a physical, emotional home win over Penn State, UMass welcomed the chance to go on the road and take on a somewhat lighter UMBC squad.

"UMBC played a little soft on us," Canella said. "We told our guys to just move the ball and find the open man."

The Minutemen did just that, as the Retrievers could do nothing but yelp at the balance and strength of their opponents.

It was much the same story on the other side of the ball with the Maroon and Whites notoriously physical defense at the helm.

"Big Nasty," Matt McFarland hit the crossbar on a bid for his second goal of the year, and, as expected, that orange pipe was not the only thing he rung in sixty minutes.

Fellow bash master Fallon swooped down like an Angel of Death on unsuspecting attackmen looking for the net while senior Chris Gabrielli was a thorn in the side of UMBC's best scorers.

In the most important game of the year against a very dangerous opponent, the Maroon and White put together a complete effort to cage the dogs and move to 4-0 in the conference.

"This game was huge, we needed to win," Morley said. "This takes a little bit of the pressure of our shoulders."

The Minutemen are now at the top of the ECAC all by their lonesome, a game ahead of April 21 opponent Georgetown. Hopefully with such a meteoric rise to the peak they were able to shed the label of overachievers as well.

"We don't want to be the underdog anymore," Morley said. "We want to be on top."

b-day

continued from page 10

The Minutemen had already been tested a few times (Penn State, Navy, Hofstra) this season, but most critics looked to the UMBC game as a telltale point for the first part of the season.

UMass' first response was an early explosion that resulted in a five-goal first quarter jump. And the Retrievers didn't recover. UMBC cut the lead to three goals but that's as close as it would come to evening the score.

Don Little's career-high five goals paced the Minutemen offense. The junior scored the first the goal of each period in UMass' key Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference victory.

"It was great that something like that just happened," Little said. "We have so much depth that one day someone can do well and the next week another person can do well. When it's your time you just have to take advantage of that opportunity.

"[I was] just shooting and not thinking too much," he continued. "When you think about shooting that's when the goalie makes a save."

Little's first goal came just under two minutes into the game when he beat his man on the left side and fired a left-handed long bounce shot into the low side of the net. With 4:50 left in the first quarter, Little fired the ball into the top right corner in the face of UMBC's Joey Kesterman.

"Don Little is one of the hardest working individuals on our team," Cannella said. "He is out there early every day shooting on goal and he has really developed into an outstanding player because of that work ethic."

The next two Little tallies were typical "Donnie Lacrosse" blasts from the perimeter. His final tally came on an underhand laser from the left wing in the final stanza. The Retrievers never knew what hit them.

"They thought we were the same team as last year, but obviously we're not," Little said.

The tailgaters, including Seals, saluted Little, who celebrated his 22nd birthday on Friday, after the game with a loud cry of "Happy Birthday."

"We have so much support from our parents, fans and friends – just everybody," Little said. "For this many people to follow us down to Maryland is huge. [Our fan support] is one of the reasons why we're winning."

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Don Little scored a career-high five goals in the Minutemen's 16-10 win over UMBC on Saturday.

Sreak reaches 'lucky' 13

Minutewomen sweep weekend with St. Bonaventure

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

At the start of the season, it looked as though the young Massachusetts softball team would experience growing pains. The slow start might have been due to the level of competition that it was playing, or maybe the lack of outdoor practice that the Minutewomen had, but nonetheless it prepared them for what was to come.

With a three-game weekend sweep of Atlantic 10 opponent St. Bonaventure, UMass [20-9, 6-0 A-10] extended its winning streak to 13 games.

But the extension of the streak would not be easy as it took extra innings for the Minutewomen to down the Bonnies yesterday, 7-2.

A five-run explosion in the top of the eighth inning sealed the fate of the Bonnies. After taking a 2-1 lead in the third, SBU was unable to muster any offense over the game's final five innings, which resulted in UMass improving its record to 27-0 all-time versus the Bonnies.

The Minutewomen batted around in the eighth with juniors Cherra Wheeler and Ashley Bakken providing the offense. They had a two-run double and two-run triple, respectively, to put the game out of reach. Also helping the cause at the plate was Teri Rooney. The junior co-captain went three-for-three with a triple and RBI.

UMass 5, St. Bonaventure 0

In the opening game of the weekend series, UMass got out to a quick start and never looked back as it scored two runs in the top of the first and added three more in third to beat St. Bonaventure, 5-0.

The Minutewomen got on the board early. With runners on the corners and no outs, UMass pulled off a double-steal to plate the game's first run, and then scored another when sophomore Brandi Cross singled to center.

Freshman Jamie Cahalan smacked a two-run triple in the third inning to expand the Minutewomen lead.

Junior pitcher Jen Hadley improved her record to 5-5 with the win. With the shutout Hadley improved her consecutive scoreless innings streak to 22. The Bristol Conn. native scattered three hits while striking out 10 in the complete-game victory.

Rooney was the offensive star on this day as she went three-for-four (five-for-eight in the double-header) with an RBI.

UMass 4, St. Bonaventure 0

Once again, a first inning-run would be all the Maroon and White would needed is it blanked SBU 4-0 in game two of Saturday's double-header.

UMass plated single runs in the first, third, fifth and seventh innings to keep the Bonnies at bay for the entire game.

Just as in the first game of the double-header, it was the pitching that proved to be the difference.

Carrie Jeffries entered the seventh inning with a perfect game before making a mistake for which Bernice St. Clair made her pay. The junior laced a leadoff single in the final frame, but Jeffries recovered and finished the day allowing two hits, striking out nine and walking only one in the complete-game shutout. The win improves the senior's record to a team-best 6-3.

At the plate, the tandem of Wheeler and Rooney again paced UMass. Both were two-for-four with Wheeler contributing two RBI and Rooney crossing the plate three times.

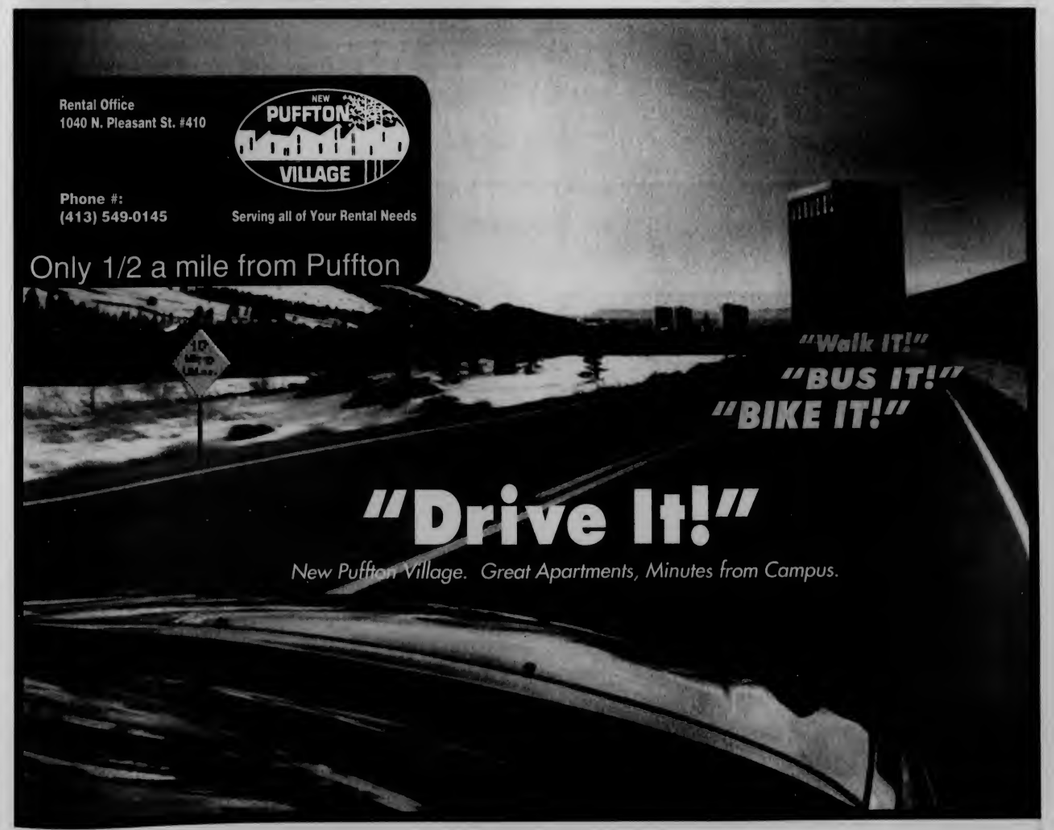
On the afternoon, Rooney singlehandedly matched the hit output of the Bonnies with Rooney and SBU each having five.

Sophomores Emily Robustelli and Cross also had good days at the plate with the former tripling and scoring a run, while the later swatted her team-leading eighth double of the season as well as a single.

UMass will return to action on Wednesday as it takes to the field for a double-header with Rutgers in Piscataway, N.J. The first pitch scheduled to be thrown at 2:00 p.m.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The UMass softball team extended its winning streak to 13 games with a weekend sweep of A-10 rival St. Bonaventure.



COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

3 Bedroom 2 bath Puffton Apartment available June 1st w/option of renew. Good times. Call 549-7782

4 Bedroom on Main St. Lease starting June 1st. Call 253-5180

Furnished Apt. in Boulders. 2 bedroom, 1 bath, on bus route, kitchen fully equiped. $820/month. Available June 15. Heat and hot water inc. 1yr lease. Call Stacey or Jeff 256-3731

30 Second Walk from Campus Looking for 2 Females to share a room in a house on Nutting Ave. Great deal! Call Sarah 549-6603

Two Bedroom Apt available June 3rd for sublet. Inexpensive only $600/month. Huge rooms- can easily accomadate four people. Call 253-6311

Amherst Center
1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos
3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincol-nrealty.com

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass cernter, bus. $550, hear, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Female Wanted to share apt @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

2 Bedroom in Colonial Village available June 1. $600/month. Call 253-5351

Large 4 Bedroom on Main St. Washer/dryer. Available June 1st. Call 253-5151

Large Private Bedroom in 8 bedroom house on Main St. All utilities included. Available June 1st. Call 256-4627

3 Bedroom renovated apartment in Puffton Village. Available June 1st. Call 549-3557

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts.com or 549-0600.

2 Bedroom in Puffton Rennovated. Great location. June 1 - Sept 1. Call 549-7791

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Summer Sublet with option to lease start June first. 4 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, utilities included, sliding glass doors, two balconeys, on bus route. 253-5388

Summer Sublet or lease take over! Puffton - 3 bedrm., 2 bath, part. furn, bus, heat+hot water. Cheap! Starts 6/1. Call 549-4918!

Avelible Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earth-link.net

1 Bedroom Available June-August 15 Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. $600 a month 665-8480

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

95 Dodge Neon 4 dr. $4500 O.B.O 413-527-3665

1991 Mitsubishi Eclipse GS $1500 549-4436(H) 545-0479(W) Denis

EMPLOYMENT

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.wantnetwealth.com

EMPLOYMENT

TOP BOYS SPORTS CAMP IN MAINE!
PLAY & COACH SPORTS - HAVE FUN - MAKE $$ CAMP COB-BOSSEE - Positions available in: ALL TEAM & INDIVIDUAL SPORTS, ALL WATER SPORTS, PLUS: Camping & hiking, Ropes & Rock Climbing, Ice Hockey, Roller Hockey, Arts & Crafts, Martial Arts. Top Salaries, Excellent Facilities, FREE ROOM, BOARD, LAUNDRY. Travel Allowance. www.campcob-bossee.com ON LINE APPLICATION or call: (800) 473-6104

Personal Care Assistant to work Tuesday early eveining for retired teacher/songwriter with MS. $10/hr. Call 256-8784

Counselors Wanted Co-ed Jewish overnight camp in Maine offers competitive salary plus room and board. All positions available! For more information, contact Ava or Meridith at 617-244-5124 or via email at info@kingswood.org

$10/hr GUARANTEED Work on campus F/T or P/T for as little as 5-10 hrs/wk or as many as 40 hrs/ wk. Be your own boss. Create your own schedule. Limited positions. Call 1-800-808-7442 x 80

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS Cool jobs, free housing in Boston. Join our international team at 1-888-COUNCIL or nhelander@councilex-changes.org

Lifeguerds
Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

Fraternities * Sororities
Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, 8 minutes from UMass. Available June 1. Call RJ 253-6469

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st- Sept 1 Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

One Female Looking for one male or female to share one bedroom with study. Puffton Apartments. June, July & August. Rent (VERY) negotiable. Call Megan 546-2602

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available 2 bedroom apt. Clean with carpet and dish-washer. M/F $300/mo. Available now. Call Gareth 665-8693

2 Females looking for 1 or 2 roommates to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting Sept. 1. Call Laura 546-5525

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Availeble in 2br Colonial Village Apt. $300/month starting June 1. 253-5350

2 Femeles looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

SERVICES

Experienced College Student looking for residents in need of fast, cheap yard cleanups. Call Mark 256-3133

Pregnent? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Availeble in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighboors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woody!

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

Two Bedroom Apartment in the Boulders for information call 256-4782

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

Starting June 1! 3 Bedroom Apt., Puffton Villege $1010 a month Call 549-9959

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

TICKETS FOR SALE

Clepton Tickets for sale Call 546-6913

TRAVEL

FLY 4STANDBY...FLY 4 CHEAP! Europe $169 o/w (+tx) Lon, Fra, Mad, Ams, Par, & more 4STANDBY.COM or 800-326-2009

WANTED

JEWISH EGG DONORS NEEDED
$10,000
(plus all expenses)
We have many infertile families in need of the help of compassionate women in order to realize their dream of having a child. We are seeking women who are attractive, intelligent, between the ages of 18-30, physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help a family and would like more informaiton please contact us. 1-800-264-8828 or 1-619-234-6649 Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 • HSCN Bulletin Board
3 • CBS 3 Hartford
4 • CBS 4 Boston
5 • ABC 40 Springfield
6 • FOX 25 Norfolk/Taft
7 • HSCN Movie Channel
8 • UPN 20 Hartford
9 • HSCN New Movie Channel
10 • NBC 30 New Britain
11 • Fox 61 Hartford
12 • FOX 24 Hartford
13 • NBC 40 Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • HSCN Academic Channel
16 • WB 30 New Haven
17 • ESPN
18 • ESPN2
19 • LIVE TV (Academic Channel)
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Cable Cable
22 • C-Span
23 • CNN
24 • The Box Beatline News
25 • Lifetime
26 • A&E
27 • TBS
28 • TNT
29 • BET
30 • Sci-Fi
31 • Discovery
32 • Nick@Nite
33 • Cartoon Network
34 • Nickelodeon
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BRAVO
38 • Univision
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • Cable TV Network
41 • MTV2
42 • MTV3
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel

USA DAILY COLLEGIAN APRIL 9, 2001 - APRIL 15, 2001 GRID #1 01AMHERS.DAT

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 9, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Antiques Roadshow (N)		They Came for Good: A History of Jews in the United States				Connecticut Journal
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "The Gay Divorcee"	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "The Gay Divorcee"	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	inside Edition	Chronicle	"Final Jeopardy" (2001, Suspense)	Dana Delany, Billy Burke,			Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Kiss" (In Stereo)	Gilmore Girls		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)	First Years (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date	Blind Date	7th Heaven "Kiss" (In Stereo)	Gilmore Girls		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)	First Years (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Boston Public "Chapter Nine"	Ally McBeal "Without a Net"		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)	First Years (N) (In Stereo)		Third Watch (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	4	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Antiques Roadshow (N)	American Experience: Joe DiMaggio Hero		Game			Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	29	News	ABC News	Spin City	Frasier	"Final Jeopardy" (2001, Suspense)	Dana Delany, Billy Burke,		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	41		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Frasier	Frasier	Moesha	Hughleys	Parkers	Girlfriends	Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Med Abt. You
WTBS	42		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Dr. Seuss' The Lorax" (1972, Children) Voices: Lorax, Thneedville Narrator							"Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas" (1966)
A&E	43		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Corpus Delicti"		Biography: Hugh Hefner		100 Centre Street		Investigative Reports (N)	Law & Order "Kids"
CNN	44	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	45	38	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	TV Funhouse	Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	46		Ultimate Guide "Muscle Cars"		Pet Love		Giants: Lizards and Snakes		Walking With Dinosaurs		Making-Dinosaurs		Justice Files "Vigilantes"
ESPN	47		Sportscenter		Outside the Lines (N)		Flashing Before My Eyes		NFL's Greatest Moments (N)		Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	48		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		It's "Love Can't Be Murder" (1992, Fantasy) Jaclyn Smith,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	49		Making Band	Making Band	Making Band	TRL (In Stereo)			Cribs	Making-Video	Teen People (N) (In Stereo)		Celebrity Undr	Tom Green
NICK	50		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	51		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5		Crusade "Racing the Night"		"Scavengers Point" (1999, Science Fiction) Olivier Gruner,				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	52	28	Trauma: Life in the ER		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Junkyard Wars		Police, Camera, Action! (N)		Supersleuths: Ivan Mikel (N)		Junkyard Wars
TNT	53		ER "Dr. Carter, I Presume"		Pretender "Undertaker"		e's "Last Stand at Saber River" (1997, Western) Tom Selleck,		e's "Riders of the Purple Sage" (1996, Western) Ed Harris,
USA	54		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Second Sight" (In Stereo)		e's "Cries and Present Danger" (1994, Drama) Harrison Ford, Willem Defoe (In Stereo)						Martin	Martin
HBO	55		e's "Another Stakeout" (1993) Richard Dreyfuss,				"Kiss" (2000, Drama) Emma Thompson,			e's "Love N Life" (1999, Drama) Usher Raymond, (N)			Taxicab 7
MAX	61		e: "Wild Wild West" (1999, Western) Will Smith, "PG-13"				e's "Gremlins" (1984, Fantasy) Zach Galligan, (In Stereo) "PG"			"Certain Guys" (1999, Comedy-Drama) Diedrich Bader, "NR"
SHOW	65		e's "Cheech & Chong's The Corsican Brothers" (1984) "PG"				e's "Dirty Dancing" (1987, Drama) Jennifer Grey, "PG-13"			Chris Isaak "The Real Me" (N)			Playboy 2000: The Party

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

WHAT WOULD ERIC DO...
ERIC STUDIES LONG HOURS INTO THE NIGHT TO DO WELL ON HIS TESTS
ERIC
WHAT WOULD ADAM DO...
ADAM SLEEPS WITH HIS TEACHERS TO GET THE "A" ADAM
ERIC HELPS THE FOUR OLD LADY WITH CARRYING HER BAG OF GROCERIES
ADAM PUSHES HER DOWN AND STEALS HER CANE

Masked Dropout By Bob Hewitt

I HOOKED UP WITH ANOTHER RANDOM GIRL LAST NIGHT, AND IT GOT ME THINKING...
HOW MANY ONE-NIGHT-STANDS IS IT GONNA TAKE TO GET THE SAME FULFILLMENT AS ONE MEANINGFUL RELATIONSHIP?
I'D GUESS ABOUT NINE
NINE?!
FULFILLMENT... HERE I COME!!
MASKED DROPOUT by Bob Hewitt ©2001

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

HEY MOBY, CHECK OUT MY NEW SONG.
I ALREADY SAMPLED IT AND MADE IT INTO A TECHNO HIT.
OH HERE, MEET MY GIRLFRIEND.
I ALREADY SAMPLED HER AND MADE HER INTO MY DOWN FLY GIRLFRIEND.
8TH GRADE FEVER!

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes

AT MONTGOMERY'S
LUNENBURN, (SOMEWHERE NEAR THE BOARDER).
HOME TO THE WINOS AND DRUMPOKING WALPOLERS FROM SKID ROW AND OTHER REPROACHING CHAMPIONS OF THE BOTTLE. A TAVERN KNOWN AS "THE DIVE" LOCATED SOUTHWEST 2 MILES IN THE WOODS KNOWN FOR ITS FIRES AND ALSO THE SECRET HOME TO TOP COCK-FIGHTING BREEDERS IN THE BACKROOM WHO HAVE RAISED THEIR POULTRY WELL INDEED. THEY NEED NO GUARD DOG TO HELP KEEP ANY SMITCHING RASCALS AWAY - NO SUCH SENTINEL IS NEEDED - GIBBONS. THEIR CHAMPION HEN CAN MONITOR THE PREMISIS AGAINST EVEN THE MOST UNWANTED INQUISITORS PROWLING AROUND

Hell Hath No Fury By Pedro Gomes

HEY SATAN, WHAT YOU READING?
OH I'M JUST READING THE MINUTEMAN.
YOU KNOW WHAT BUB? THE MINUTEMAN HAS MORE PROPAGANDA THAN THE OLD TESTAMENT.
MINUTEMAN
http://bigpetrified.com/main.htm

Sometimes By Jacob Jones

Sometimes I like to eat at my grandma's house. She lets me eat ice-cream sandwiches for lunch.
One time though, I jumped into her really hard and my ice-cream fell on her good floor.
My grandma said "Hey! Watch it you little ASSHOLE!" Grandma's are really great.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Quote of the Day

"The space between what's right and wrong is where I'll be hiding out, waiting for you."

–Dave Matthews Band

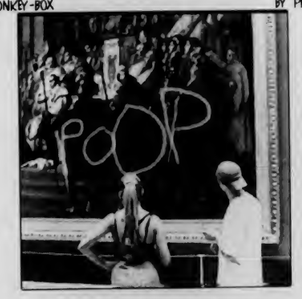
Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 61 LOW: 37	HIGH: 63 LOW: 39	HIGH: 61 LOW: 35

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19)- Doing the same thing day after day with the same person gets a little bit boring, especially today. If you aren't in a committed relationship, go out of your way to meet someone different from your usual type. If you are attached, do something surprising to add some zing to your relationship.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)- Strangers and loved ones will always leave you guessing, but today will be especially bad. Thing will not go as you planned at all today. However, no matter how determined you are, be gentle in your persuasion.
GEMINI (May 21-June 21)- You want to do what feels good, but good for whom? Certain traditions must be satisfied. Consider touring a museum or looking into some other vessel of history. This dilemma has occurred before.
CANCER (June 22-July 22)- Get your way by assuming that you've already won. Some would call it 'the big lie,' while others see it as 'manifesting your reality.' The strong always manage to survive – maybe it's because they take risks.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)- The good times seem to have passed you by. Few people care about your core issues or cherished memories. Maybe what you feel are growing pains. Like everyone else, you have to take your turn.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)- Surrender to impulse. Be a sucker for a pretty face. You're within your rights, and you're feeling lucky. The people with whom you break your date probably have something better to do anyway.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.23)- Be wary when starting a new relationship. The fireworks are great to look at while they're going off, but they don't last long. You might be better off looking for someone who has less flash and more substance.
SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21)- Your brain and your heart are an unbeatable team. Life is an open buffet table with lots of variety and unlimited portions. You'll get what you deserve, and you'll get enough of it.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)- You wish that you'd been paying attention when the current activity was being planned. You won't learn if you don't participate. Hold out your hand, confident that someone will take it.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)- Do you ever get the feeling like you're the one making all of the effort in your relationship? Pull back and let your partner take the reins for a while. If they refuse, perhaps you should rethink your commitment.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)- You feel like interpreting the rules literally, no matter where that takes you. Someone is sure to remember you for your role in today's discussion. Follow your heart today; it is sure to guide you correctly in your decisions.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)- Are you knocking on a door that refuses to open? You're either in the right place at the wrong time, or in the wrong place altogether. Scan the environment for subtle clues that pertain to your dilemma.

MONKEY-BOX BY PREJ



IT WASN'T INGRES' GREATEST WORK, BUT HIS MESSAGE WAS STILL LOUD AND CLEAR.
© 2001
www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Quarters (P) (B, F, H)

Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

BBQ Chicken (W)

DINNER

Greek Style Chicken(P)

Vegetable Cacciatore (vegan) (B, H, W)

Grilled Marinated Tofu with Black Bean Salsa (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Mortagnet
Photo Technician	Dan Santello
Copy Editor	Melissa Hamrick
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Jarrett Brimmer, Mike Kulek

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED COMPANY
256-BEDS (2337)/ 256-BEDS(2337)
228 College Street, Amherst

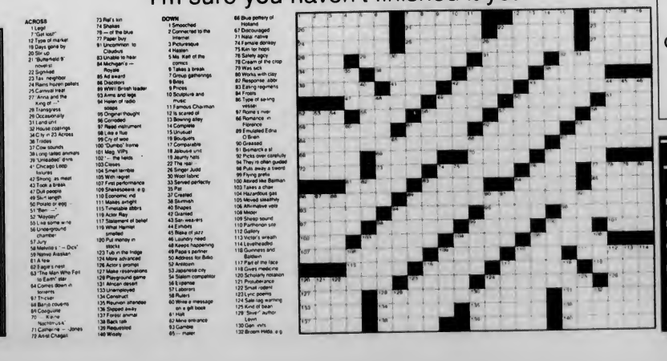
FINALLY!! Amherst has a mattress & futon store conveniently located near downtown, next to The Spirit Haus on Rt. 9

GRAND OPENING & OPEN HOUSE

(FREE FOOD!!)
SAT. MARCH 31 10-6
SUN. APRIL 1 12-5

futons-mattresses-beds-daybeds decorative pillows-lamps-storage platform beds-room dividers-rugs interior plants-end/coffee tables cots-foam-puff/pouf/papasan, ETC

I'm sure you haven't finished it yet.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen remain perfect

Little's five goals pace UMass in win

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team improved its record to 8-0 with a thrilling, 16-10 victory over UMBC on Saturday.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

BALTIMORE – The Maryland-Baltimore County field officials had an ambulance present just in case Tom Fallon disrupted someone's vital signs – the only thing in danger of flat lining was the Retrievers' chance for a victory.

Descriptions of exhaustion and head spinning were reported from the UMBC defense, as the lethal Minutemen attack reeled off 16 goals in a six-goal romp that silenced the demons of a home overtime loss in 2000.

"We had a meeting and they showed us the video of the game winning goal in overtime and all there players running onto our field," Marc Morley said. "That got us pretty fired up to play."

"Fired up" would prove to be an understatement, as the Minutemen (8-0, 4-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) employed their own brand of shock treatment by taking a 5-1 lead after the first and never looking back.

The Retrievers (4-3, 2-3 ECAC) closed the gap to three when a Justin Smith marker brought the count to 6-3, but UMBC would get no closer, as the Maroon and White netted 10 of the next 17 goals to close out a 16-10 win.

Deviating from its usual routine, UMass decided to dispatch of its opponent in the opening frame instead of executing the customary third quarter barrage.

"To get an early lead takes the other team out of it a little bit," coach Greg Canella said. "They start to question their confidence."

Don Little led a five-goal charge with two bullets from the off wing that pierced the defense and shook the side netting.

"I don't think there is a goalie in the country that could have stopped some of those shots today," Canella

Turn to MEN'S LAX, page 7

Little things lead to b-day lax prize

BALTIMORE – He usually has no problem finding the tailgate party.

Down the steps of Richard F. Garber field and twenty short paces over to Boyden Gymnasium has been his route for six consecutive home games.

But it wasn't that easy for Jeff Seals Saturday after his Massachusetts men's lacrosse team beat the University of Maryland Baltimore County 16-10 at the UMBC Stadium Complex in Baltimore.

Last out of the locker room, the Minutemen's senior face-off man found himself in the Complex's lower dirt parking lot 30 minutes after the game with only the team's bus driver – and means of transportation – as familiar company.

Unfortunately, no one told him the UMass parents decided to set up this week's version of the Maroon and White victory bash in a lot directly behind a giant hill – one so perfectly placed next to the Retrievers' field it hid the catered barbecue.

Soon enough, Seals found the gathering and promptly joined his hungry teammates in the food line. It was time to enjoy this one.

Two years ago, UMass struggled repeatedly to find happy endings. The tailgates, of course, just aren't entertaining after losses such as last year's 9-8 overtime stumble at home versus UMBC and its 19-18 letdown at Georgetown just two weeks later. Losing at Syracuse by 10 goals doesn't make the burgers taste better either.

Coach Greg Cannella's high-octane, run-and-gun offensive approach was one of the reasons for the struggle. His Minutemen had a tough time getting used to the switch from the slower half-field focus to the up-and-down shot infested style of play.

But now the transition has been made. And you could see it on everyone's face Saturday. Manhandling No. 15 UMBC this weekend lifted a great deal of pressure from the shoulders of each player donning the maroon and white.

No one was sure how this contest was going play out.

Turn to B-DAY, page 7

UMass splits double-header with Dukes

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

In college athletics, unless a team is among the elite squads in the country, its conference games are what will determine its postseason fate, even in the early stages of the season.

The Massachusetts baseball team came into this weekend needing a strong performance against conference foe Duquesne. On Saturday, the Minutemen split the scheduled double-header, taking game one but failing to sweep the afternoon. Game three of the series, originally scheduled for yesterday afternoon, was postponed until today at 11:30 a.m. due to inclement weather.

In the first game, the Minutemen (6-11, 3-2 Atlantic 10) used a 10-hit barrage to upend Duquesne (10-15, 1-4 A-10) 9-5. Junior Aaron Senez trotted home in the bottom of the fourth on an error by Duquesne hurler Jim Popp to put UMass ahead for good.

Sophomore Matt Boulanger and junior Connell Clark led the way on offense for the Minutemen, while senior starter Craig Szado went the distance to improve his record to 1-2 on the season. Boulanger went one-for-two with a two-RBI double following Senez's score, while Clark went two-for-three and put the icing on UMass' win by slamming a two-run homerun to left field in the bottom of the sixth.

"The first [game] was pretty good for us, since we came back and won," coach Mike Stone said. "On offense, we had one inning's worth I guess, and we had the homerun in the last."

Duquesne got off to a 3-0 lead in the top of the third inning. Szado gave up a leadoff single to leftfielder Jim Onder, and sophomore Mark Lyons followed Onder with a hard grounder to third base. After trying to rush the double play, Senez threw the ball over the head of second baseman Sean Sarno and into right field.

Next up was the Dukes' leading hitter, Jason Startari, who ripped Szado's first offering over the left field wall for the three-run homer. Szado settled down, though, turning away the next three hitters in order to end the rally.

"[Szado] started to bear down a lot better after the first," Stone said. "It didn't even look like he was loose almost, and then he started to free up and really started to pitch. He gave us a good performance."

The Maroon and White came back in the bottom half of the third when junior Mike Kulak walked and sophomore Tom Ellerbrook singled to start off the inning. Boulanger followed with a sacrifice bunt, and Sarno kept the rally alive by hitting a slow-rolling infield single to second base that scored Kulak.

Ellerbrook scored soon after when Sarno stole second and the throw from catcher Gary Lee went wild. Clark followed with a walk, and then senior captain Nick Gorneault roped an RBI double to left field to give the Maroon and White the 7-3 lead.

After a brief break, UMass and Duquesne started off in game two of the day, and, in what has become a hallmark of the 2001 season, the Minutemen began fighting themselves out of an early hole.

Junior hurler Jesse Santos, coming off a strong outing against Fairfield last week in which he picked up 11-0 victory, gave up homeruns to three consecutive hitters in the top of the first, as the Dukes collected hits in five consecutive at bats.

"We're just not executing enough pitches," Stone said. "We've got to get a gutsier performance on the mound all the time. Not just one guy; there's a lot of guys who can pitch better than they're pitching."

Santos settled down after that, and struck out four batters in a row at one point. He kept the Minutemen in striking distance, and in the bottom of the third, they again responded by posting five runs in the inning to take the lead.

Ellerbrook walked to lead off the inning, and was followed onto base by Sarno and Clark, who were also issued walks by Duquesne pitcher Chris Lewis. With the bases full, senior captain Nick Gorneault slapped a single into right to score Ellerbrook. Sophomore first baseman Jeff Altieri reached on an error to send Sarno across the plate, and was sent home himself two batters later, when Aaron Senez ripped a single to short that put UMass ahead 5-4. The lead was short lived, though, as the Dukes used a three-run fifth to claim the game's final lead change.

Duquesne centerfielder Mark Lyons took Santos deep early in the sixth, prompting Stone to insert freshman Eric Chown to help settle the Duquesne offense. Chown performed well in his two innings of work, allowing only two hits and no runs.

"He's got the velocity, so that helped, and he had some movement," Stone said. "He throws strikes, so it was good to get him in there."

The pitching change did little to infuse the UMass offense, however, picking up only a single run in the bottom of the sixth to cap the scoring. Santos took the loss for UMass, falling to 3-1 on the season, while Matt McMunn picked up the win for Duquesne, improving to 2-4 for the year.

Following today's makeup game against the Dukes, the Minutemen again return to Earl Lorden Field on Wednesday to play host to Sacred Heart. The game is scheduled for 3 p.m.

Matt Despres contributed to this article.

The UMass baseball team split a double-header on Saturday with A-10 foe Duquesne. The rubber match, which was scheduled to be played yesterday, will take place this afternoon at 11:30 a.m.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Women's lax grabs first A-10 victory

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It was the start of a new season for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team.

The out of conference schedule had not gone well, as the Minutewomen stumbled out of the gates to a 1-6 record against some very tough competition, and made it impossible for redemption to come outside the Atlantic 10.

Well, with the non-A-10 portion of the schedule basically finished, the new year opened to mixed reviews, as the Maroon and White was able to down St. Joseph's Friday 14-8, but then fell to Temple two days later by an 11-7 count.

With the pair of games under its belt, UMass now stands at 2-7 (1-1 A-10) on the year with only six regular season games remaining.

Meanwhile, the Hawks dropped to 3-5 (0-1 A-10) at the conclusion of the weekend's festivities, and the Owls improved to 5-4 (1-0 A-10) after the win against the Minutewomen.

Against St. Joe's, the score remained close until UMass went on a 7-2 run to close out the game, and secured itself the victory. Jada Emery and Rachel Ingraffea paced the offense with a hat trick apiece, while senior co-captain Fay Naber added a score to go along with three assists.

Freshmen Nicole Chominski and Angela McMahon also got into the act with a pair of goals apiece, and Miriam Godfrey, Kelli Kurtz and Leslie Pollock closed out the scoring by each adding a solo tally of their own.

Overall, the Maroon and White out shot the Hawks 32-20, and totaled a 4-0 free position shot advantage. In goal, the Minutewomen also had the upper edge, as Jen Nardi posted 12 saves to top her Hawk counterpart, Lauren Bradley, who was able to stop only 10 UMass shots.

St. Joseph's got on the board first in Friday's contest, but then fell victim to five unanswered Massachusetts goals. It did not give up, however, and promptly ran off a 3-0 run of its own to close the gap to one. Each team added a goal before the half, and the teams went into the break with the Minutewomen up 6-5.

In the beginning of the second frame, the teams each picked up a score to keep the Maroon and White advantage at one, but from there, UMass just took over, scoring seven of the next nine goals to take the commanding lead and to squash any hopes of a Hawks victory.

Overall, the Minutewomen outscored the opposition 8-3 in the second half, and eventually coasted to the much-needed win.

Against Temple things reversed, as the Maroon and White suffered through a similar late game run to the one it had just handed the Hawks two days earlier.

In the first half, neither team could gain an advantage, and the score at the break read 4-4. This trend continued partway through the second frame, as the two teams found themselves deadlocked at six.

However, that is were the Owls took over, going on a 5-1 game-ending run to put UMass away.

For Temple, Jen Jefferson led her squad with three goals, while Deanna Radcliffe and Liz Frengs added two scores each. Frengs' tallies were especially important, as they both came in the late-game run that won the game for the Owls. In goal, Sheena Oommen recorded seven pivotal saves, making sure that the Maroon and White did not get back in it, once her team took the lead for good midway through the second half.

On the Minutewomen side, Rachel Ingraffea posted her second hat trick in as many games and her fourth on the year, but was unable to do it all by herself. No other Massachusetts player would total more than a single tally, and this ended up costing the team dearly.

UMass next competes on April 13 at home against Duquesne. Start time is scheduled for 3:30 p.m.

Parisian duo Daft Punk adds a wild, futuristic aesthetic to its funky house music. You'll need your own helmet to withstand the force of Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The baseball team earned a doubly delicious win over Duquesne yesterday.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 113 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, April 10, 2001

SPOTLIGHT on CURRICULUM

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The addition of a new course in a multi-part [illegible] or redesigned course [illegible] may be of special interest to students during pre-registration.

According to a popular search engine, there are over 1,347,000,000 pages posted on the World Wide Web. University of Massachusetts professor John Nelson thinks it's about time students started learning how to use them.

Nelson, who teaches in the UMass English department and serves as director of the Professional Writing program, has joined forces with professor Steven Reising of the department of Electrical and Computer Engineering in bringing an all new course to the school's curriculum for next semester. The course, designated in both departments as 297B, is entitled "Contemporary Internet Communications: Writing, Information Design and Research on the Web."

This first-ever collaboration between the two departments is intended to give its non-technical audience a fundamental understanding of what's on the Web and how it can best be put to use for research purposes.

"What I see today's employers looking for is a combination of the creative / intuitive aspect of writing and the logical / scientific aspects of the Web," said Nelson. "This course hopes to address both sides of that."

That split discipline approach should give students a better understanding of the differences between creating Internet content and writing for more conventional outlets, according to the course's originators. Reising points out that the process of writing code and hosting will be left for other more technical courses within his department, while this class will seek to give experienced writers from other areas of study the transitional skills to put their talents online.

"This is not about the technical aspects of web pages – there are other courses offered within the department that cover that," Reising said. "This is how to go about writing for a web page, as well as understanding what's on the web and how it has evolved."

The Engineering professor claims that many otherwise-skilled students have only that last bridge of knowledge standing between them and a career in writing for the Web.

"There are so many positions being created for people without technical computer background that aren't being filled," Reising said. "Students from majors like the humanities and social sciences could become eligible for these positions if they got the expertise and experience in writing for the Web."

The course, which was designed as part of UMass' new Information Technology (IT) minor, will also cover such Internet issues as reliability of content, security and the future of the medium. Nelson says that both professors have taken into consideration the rapid pace at which Internet technology moves, and have designed 297B to have more of a fundamental approach and less of a specific application focus. Both he and Reising agree that such a plan will make the skills within their course relevant for years to come.

"Knowledge follows a path, whether it be computers or something as simple as home building techniques," Nelson said. "If you want to get [illegible] is something like [illegible] can't stand on the sidelines – you've got to jump in somewhere. The learning curve isn't going to get any flatter. But this course is designed to start you at a sort of [illegible]."

Another portion of the [illegible] listed course will deal with the infusion of graphics into [illegible]

Turn to CURRICULUM, page 3

UMass just says no to RA unions

By Adam Marignetti
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts denied an appeal by Resident Assistants to be recognized as an official labor union yesterday, according to Asif Sayani, co-chair of the RA Council.

Members representing RAs met with Susan Pearson, Associate Provost, from 3 to 5 p.m. Monday afternoon to discuss their complaints about RA life and the manner in which the University deals with the primary authority in its dormitories. According to Sayani, Pearson failed to provide an official University reason for not acknowledging the RAs as a union.

"She denied recognizing us as a bargaining unit. She denied signing a neutrality check, saying that the University would not use lawyers or run an anti-union campaign," said Sayani. "She denied us a card check system to recognize RAs as a union."

David Synnot, an RA in John Adams dormitory and one of the people responsible for the union push, went further, accusing Pearson of deliberately stalling to discourage potential union members.

"She knows that we are a valid bargaining unit, but she's stalling in bad faith in hopes that we give this up," he said. "She's a very unethical public employee. She's going to use her lawyers against us at the Massachusetts Labor Relations Board [M.L.R.B]. She's just trying to delay. She's violating the law by doing this."

UMass RAs are seeking to become the first undergraduate labor union at any university to date. Among their complaints are the University's discipline system for RAs, unfair compensation and extended hours beyond the terms of their contract. Synnot described the current University system as "arbitrary and capricious."

"When you look at average universities that are UMass' size, they make about $2,000 more than we do," said Sayani. "We make $4,800 per year and that includes room. Our room value is subtracted from our salary and then given to us, supposedly for free."

In order to become a union, the RAs need at least 30 percent to sign a petition declaring their intention to join. Once that goal is achieved, the case is presented to the M.L.R.B, which bases its decision on two factors. The board must determine if the RAs are eligible to unionize – that is, if they are more than casual state employees. It also must determine if they share a common community of interest with other RAs on campus. If the board finds that the RAs meet these two conditions, then the union issue is put to a vote before the potential members. The percentage of RAs in favor of unionizing would then need to be at least a majority for the process to be finalized.

According to leaders of the union movement, a clear majority of RAs have already signed a petition expressing their desire to join, and that number is pushing two-thirds. The RAs would join the United Auto Workers union, of which the UMass graduate students are already a part.

In a statement made by News Director Barbara Pitoniak, the University said that they would listen to RA's complaints, but did not support the union efforts.

"The University does not support the efforts of students to unionize," said Pitoniak, "but will follow established procedure to listen to deal with their efforts."

Other University officials have been more tentative in dealing with the unionizing efforts.

"There's different ways of looking at," said Javier Cevallos, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs. "We're going to try to figure out where we and see what resources we have available for dealing with the situation."

Lisa Giddons, Student Development Specialist and one of the people instrumental in hiring and training RAs, said that UMass has been very supportive of unions in the past. She cited this as a possible reason for the University being the site for the first undergraduate union bid.

"I think that UMass, in general, has been pretty supportive of unions. A lot of institutions don't have union faculty or union staff," said Giddons. "Not many have graduate student unions either. When you have an environment that's pretty supportive, you're more likely to try to improve your conditions, improve your standing."

Although both Sayani and Synnot have asserted that well over half the RAs have shown a willingness to unionize, a silent dissention has arisen among some. Several RAs said that the current

Turn to UNION, page 3

Locals witness how drug war losing out

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

AMHERST – Massachusetts residents recently traveled to Colombia to witness the impact of the $1.5 billion U.S. "war on drugs" that they say is causing a humanitarian and ecological catastrophe and fails to address the drug problem at home.

Kate Harris of Amherst and Tad Montgomery of Montague traveled with 100 Americans in the Witness for Peace delegation to observe the result of "Plan-Colombia," a military aid package passed by Congress in August. According to Harris and Montgomery and human rights organizations like Amnesty International, the aid is being used primarily to fund the Colombian armed forces.

"There is no way to justify sending any military aid to Colombia whatsoever," Harris said during a Five College lecture series April 3-5, on Plan-Colombia at the University of Massachusetts, addressing the political, ecological and social implications of the U.S. drug policy in Latin America. According to the lecture speakers, Plan-Colombia is fueling a violent civil conflict between the Colombian government and guerrilla revolutionaries, but fails to affect the drug problem.

Sanho Tree, Director of Drug Policy at the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C., spoke at the lecture on how America's drug policy in Latin America is potentially disastrous.

Tree said that Plan-Colombia was the result of election year politics and misguided drug policies. He said that in 1998, a study was conducted by the RAND Corp. to estimate the cost of reducing cocaine consumption in the United States. The study stated that addiction treatment programs are by far the most effective means to combat drug use. Tree said that according to the study, drug treatment is 23 times more effective at stopping drug use than source intervention in drug producing countries like Colombia. Regardless of this data, Congress overwhelming passed Plan-Colombia in August.

"Because this was sold primarily as a anti-drug bill, no one is going to vote against this," Tree said. Both Massachusetts Senators Ted Kennedy and John Kerry voted in support of Plan Colombia.

The United States has no treatment on demand programs, so even addicts that want treatment are often denied, Tree said.

"It's ludicrous not to give these people treatment when they ask for it," said Tree. "These are the people providing the vacuum that is America's drug problem — the people who use drugs day in and day out."

Treatment for drug addiction is not freely available in the United States because of the opposition from legislatures who prefer incarceration, Tree said. Out of the 8 million people incarcerated in the world, 2 million are in American prisons. Out of those two million, 500,000 are in jailed for non-violent drug offences.

It is impossible to make an impact on drug use by waging a war against the countries that produce drugs because the demand for drugs is too high said Tree.

"Undiminished demand and hard currency to back it up," are fueling the production of drugs, Tree said.

"When you look at drugs, they are cheaper, purer and more available than ever before," Tree said. "This should tell you that this war is failing"

According to Tree, there is too much land to cultivate drugs like marijuana, coca and poppy, because they all grow like weeds in almost any climate, from the Amazon basin to the Andes Mountains. All the U.S. drug war has accomplished is to turn weeds into valuable commodities, Tree said.

"Remember the alchemists who tried to turn lead into gold?" said Tree. "All we've done is turn weeds into gold.

"If you take marijuana - it's now worth its weight in gold, ounce for ounce," Tree said. "Heroin, coke - they're worth many more times their weight in gold"

The strategy of Plan-Colombia is to destroy the coca plantations by spraying them with a powerful herbicide called glyphosate. The U.S. and Colombian governments said that according to their tests, glyphosate poses no harm to humans or the environment. But directions on RoundUp, the less concentrated retail version of glyphosate, warn users not to use "this product in a way that will contact workers or other persons, either directly or through drift"

Since fumigation began in December 2000, there have been complaints of severe skin rashes, diarrhea, vomiting and headaches. In addition, two Colombians spoke at the lecture at UMass, reporting that 100,000 livestock have died from the fumigation and 75,000 acres of farmland have been destroyed, leaving thousands of farmers facing starvation.

Harris said that she traveled to Colombia in March because she wanted to see what her tax dollars were funding. During her trip to Colombia, she witnessed first hand the result of widespread fumigation of coca fields with glyphosate.

"I was amazed by the generosity and compassion and warmth of the Colombian people even though their children were covered in sores and some had already died," from the fumigation, Harris said.

Regulo Madero, the president of the Regional Corporation for the Defense of Human Rights (CREDHOS), was one of the Colombians that traveled to the U.S. to plead with Americans to end military aid to Colombia. Speaking through an interpreter at the conference, he said that the drug war is not only destroying their countryside, but is fueling the violent conflict in Colombia.

Madero said that Colombia's U.S. funded anti-narcotics campaign is a counter-insurgency war against the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC). He said that the counter-narcotics wings of the Colombian military are collaborating directly with the paramilitary to secure guerrilla territory, using terror and violence to displace the inhabitants of the region. The Colombian Defense Ministry reported that the paramilitaries are responsible for 70 percent of human rights violations in 1999. These paramilitary groups continue to produce cocaine to fund their own operations.

While Colombia insists it is using the U.S. aid to destroy coca plantations and to crack down on outlawed paramilitary groups, theses same groups brag they are spearheading the U.S. funded offensive to wipe out the FARC's coca plantations. The Boston

Turn to DRUGS page 3

MARK HOLLOWAY/ COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sunshine Superman

Due to the most beautiful day of this millenium, students crawled out of their caves to enjoy the Spring.

U of H faculty walks the line

By Jennifer Humphrey
Ka Leo O Hawai

(U-WIRE) HONOLULU – Though sunburned with aching feet, University of Hawaii faculty avoided the classroom for a second day on Friday, as they continued to hope for a contract settlement.

The pickets come in three-hour shifts, with as many as 100 people signing up for any given shift and some faculty staying for longer periods of time.

"I'd rather be teaching," read a sign held by one faculty walking the picket line.

"Lecturers cannot live on bread alone" was painted onto the top of Don Dugal's umbrella. Dugal is a lecturer in the art department.

Overall, faculty seemed motivated and in good spirits while they walked the line, but that will not last, said Joel Fischer, from the School of Social Work.

The lines have been cordial so far, he said, but felt that things will get worse the longer the strike lasts.

Fisher said he is disappointed that all other unions have received higher increases than the state is offering the faculty. He said the governor is making it punitive.

As the faculty circled around the entrances to campus, students and other campus employees not striking waited patiently to enter campus.

Fischer said he understood some people have to cross the pickets lines to take care of animals or finish experiments but wishes students would not cross.

He said that Ka Leo employees crossing the line to publish the paper weakens the effect of the strike, as they are non-essential workers.

LaRene Despain, a professor in the English department, said that overall the students have been very supportive of the strike, but knows that if it lasts too long the students will get worried.

At least one student is already worried, and questions why this happened.

"I think they deserve a raise, I just don't like the strike," Derek

"Cap" Yuen said.

Yuen crossed the picket line, and later stood on the line with a sign asking why the students should support the faculty. Yuen said the faculty did not oppose the tuition hike with the students but rallied for students to support them.

Yuen said he is confused because some of the faculty are not teaching class, but still want the students to do the work on time, and that is contradictory.

"Right now, they are breaking their responsibilities to the students," he said.

Despite that, Yuen said he thinks the strike will end soon, and students will complete the semester.

Faculty on the lines appear to have the support of community, as well.

Despain and Fischer both said community members have dropped off food and water for the faculty.

"I think the community supports this (faculty strike) and the public teachers because they support education," Despain said.

She said faculty members remain positive while on the picket lines, despite the fact that no one wants to be there.

In addition to the faculty, community and students also have lined the streets, showing their support for the faculty.

Lt. Gov. Mazie Hirono visited the faculty on Thursday, and Richard Port, the former chairman of the democratic party in Hawaii, was on the lines Friday.

"I'm here to show support for university professors," he said. "I think they're asking for a reasonable amount."

On Friday, no talks between the state and the union were scheduled.

"We are ready to negotiate any time, any place," J.N. Musto, the executive director for UHPA, said.

Laiana Wong from the Hawaiian Language Department hopes a negotiation can be reached soon, but said he is in it for the long haul.

He called the strike symbolic, and said he is frustrated with the political regime that hasn't supported education.

Irene Jacinto, a student majoring in business management supports the strike and the professors.

Turn to FACULTY page 3

International Briefs

Compiled by Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Americas

Canada – Health Minister Allen Rock announced that the government would make it easier for patients to use marijuana for medical purposes.

Mr. Rock explained that the government is trying to be compassionate and help relieve excruciating pain suffered by those with HIV and AIDS, multiple sclerosis, epilepsy, spinal cord injury, cancer and arthritis.

Though the health department is easing up on the law, there is still a ban on the drug in the country and only those who apply for special exemptions are allowed to grow and use the drug legally.

Mr. Rock commented at a recent news conference that he did not believe that this is the first step toward its decriminalization. Canadians were first allowed to apply for medical marijuana in May of 1989.

Peru – Campaigning continues for the upcoming presidential race in Peru, and it has come down to the wire for the three main candidates opposing current president Fujimori. Alan Garcia, Alejandro Toledo and former congresswoman Lourdes Flores have all led furious campaigns in order to win the seat that will free Peru from a decade of corruption by Fujimori.

Leading the polls so far has been Toledo, running on a liberal rags-to-riches platform. Behind him Flores, a moderate conservative, has won the following of women and the middle-class. Finally, Garcia, who is a left-wing populist, was the president of Peru during the mid-eighties, and although he has been running positive TV spots, memories of the hyperinflation and corruption in his administration are still fresh in the minds of voters.

The three candidates are all running on separate issues, with positions spanning the spectrum from pro-privatization and deregulation, to indigenous rights. With Toledo playing the race card and calling himself a Cholo, meaning someone with Indian blood, he has gained a strong footing on otherwise shaky ground. However, Flores and Garcia are right behind him with their own constituencies.

The vote was set for Sunday, and as of Monday evening, Mr. Toledo had 36 percent of the vote, with Garcia at 25 percent and Flores with 23. Only 17 percent of the vote had been counted.

Colombia – President Andres Pastrana met with visiting Mexican president Vicente Fox to discuss efforts to stop the drug trade. The two countries combine to make up the largest illegal drug exporting states in the world, with a multi-billion dollar industry thriving in both North America and South America.

Fox and Pastrana have agreed to join forces to stop the drug trade, teaming up against the violence and corruption rampant in both countries. In a radical move, Fox announced that he will only allow the Colombian rebel forces, the FARC, to maintain offices in Mexico if they remain loyal and active in peace talks with the Colombian government.

Previous Mexican presidents have been hesitant to support the government side of the 40 year-old Colombian civil war. However, Fox has unequivocally decided to support Pastrana and hopefully bring peace to both countries.

The rebel forces in Colombia have been taxing the drug trade in order to fund their revolutionary activities. Pastrana and Fox believe that halting drug trafficking will end drug violence, enforce the peace process and eventually benefit all of Latin America.

Asia-Pacific

South Korea – Last week, an official protest was lodged against Japan over

Tokyo's approval of a new textbook. South Koreans are enraged because they believe that the textbook underscores or even glosses over Japanese atrocities during the Second World War. Since the approval was announced in Tokyo, the South Korean protest has only gotten stronger and yesterday the ambassador to Japan was recalled back his homeland.

South Korean Foreign Minister spokesman Kim Eui-Taek said in a news conference that the recall is not permanent. The ambassador will only stay in South Korea long enough to discuss the textbook issue and decide on a course of action.

In a statement made by the spokesman, the textbook reportedly included material "rationalizing and glorifying Japan's wrongdoings, based on a self-centered interpretation of history," according to the BBC world service. The books also describe Korean women as being used as sex slaves for Japanese soldiers. That element has angered the female population.

So far the books have also been protested by China, Taiwan and North Korea. South Korea also has plans to bring up the indignities of the textbooks to the United Nations in its next meeting. They also have considered other counter-measures such as cutting off trade and postponing the opening of their market to Japanese goods.

India – The earthquake that hit almost two months ago continues to have devastating consequences, from the million homes destroyed to the hundreds of thousands of people killed. However, there is hope growing that the country will begin to rebuild and recover.

After over 11,000 elementary and secondary schools were destroyed in the quake, a group of relief workers has begun to set up new schools under tents. The schools may be makeshift, but so far have been hailed as the largest, best organized, and most honest private effort to provide schooling for the thousands of homeless and school-less children of the country.

Unicel, which has been providing school materials such as pencils, crayons, notebooks and erasers, has been lobbying the government to let the private organizations remain in control of the more than 7,000 temporary tent schools and run summer school to keep the children busy and learning during the repair and rebuilding of lives and villages.

So far the project has been a huge success and more than 400 children have signed up for school each day.

Africa

Zambia – The rebel faction that was holding up the engagement of United Nations observers has agreed to pull back its fighters and let the UN troops through to the Congo. The rebels have also agreed to this pullback without any conditions, a rare maneuver in situations of this kind.

According to a UN agreement, all government, allied and rebel forces were to have retreated nine miles from the border between the Congo and Zambia by the end of March. However, the Movement for the Liberation of Congo factions refused to follow the accord and set up roadblocks. After receiving assurances from the UN that local people would be protected, the fighters were disengaged.

Zimbabwe, Angola and Namibia have all agreed to support President Joseph Kabila in his struggle against rebels from the Uganda and Rwanda. The United Nations would like to see an end to the civil war that has raged in the Congo, and is backed by neighboring and fighting countries.

Nigeria – After a long court battle, the individual oil producing areas of Nigeria have finally won the right to receive a percentage of the revenue from the oil that they produce.

The battle has developed between the inland oil-rich areas and the costal states that claim that they should receive revenues from the oil retrieved from offshore productions. The government claims that the offshore oil is produced in territorial waters and therefore should benefit the entire country. The state governments are each arguing for their own share of the oil profits.

Since nothing has been achieved, the matter has made it to the Supreme Court, and the first hearing had over 200 lawyers from state jurisdictions to private oil firm representatives. Other government lawyers claim that the issue is one of international law because the oil is pumped from territorial waters.

The lawsuit has now been postponed until the 21 of May in order to give all the parties involved enough time to file their petitions and submit their grievances. So far the lawsuit will only be covering Nigerian law, but may lead to some international petitions.

Information from the Washington Post online, the BBC online and the New York Times online was used in these briefs.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Sagar Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Muske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Atlantis
Behind Antonio's Pizza in Amherst
NO COVER – $2 COVER AFTER
TUES: Greek Night w/Karaoke
THURS: Hip Hop and R & B w/ DJ Big Phil
FRI: Growroom presents "House on the Rochs" w/ DJs Hush & Salty
SAT: Hip-Hop and Reggae with DJ Trendz
SUN: Open Mic – Open Turntable

STUDENT TRAVEL
EUROPE ON SALE!!!

London.....$385
Rome.....$418
Paris.....$388
Frankfurt.....$313
Rio de Janeiro....$651
Prague.....$458
San Jose.....$505
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

Who wants a cruise for two?
(who doesn't?!?)
In one of the issues of the Collegian each week there will be a clue: Uncover the item at which the clue is hinting, collect it, and hold on to it!
When the taste of UMass rolls around, bring all the items you have collected and you will receive the FINAL CLUE...

The first person to bring the last item back to the TASTE OF UMASS will win an AMAZING seven day cruise for two!
Coca-Cola •••• brought to you by •••• The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

ctnow.com Meadows Music & Events an alternative web BROADBAND
EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES
Join us at Connecticut's Premier Amphitheater for the most exciting summer employment opportunities around! Ever wonder what it takes to throw a concert? Enjoy working with people? Looking to make extra money during the summer months? If you've said yes, then please join us during our up-coming Job Fairs!
SEASONAL POSITIONS ARE AVAILABLE IN THESE DEPARTMENTS
* Maintenance * Internships *Supervisory Positions * Security * Volunteers
* Aramark Food Services * Grounds-Keeping * Ushers * Ticket Takers
Apply Now at the ctnow.com Meadows Music Centre, ctnow.com Oakdale or by e-mail at:
www.meadowsmusic.com
There will be JOB FAIRS on APRIL 14th & APRIL 21st from 9:00AM to 2:00PM.
All applicants must have 2 forms of valid I.D. for employment. 1 must be a photo I.D.
Must be at least 16 years of age, with valid working papers if under 18 years of age.
Please Note: Residents of the City of Hartford possessing the necessary qualifications, will be given priority consideration in the selection process. AA/EOE
For Directions to our location, please call: 203-269-8721

drugs

continued from page 3

Globe reported in March that right-wing forces are functioning as the vanguard of Plan-Colombia, clearing the way for the U.S.-trained anti-narcotic forces to secure territory being fumigated with herbicide.

Madero said that Farmers in Colombia earn about a dollar a day and are caught in a violent conflict between the Colombian government, rightist paramilitary groups and the FARC. Because of strict trade restrictions imposed on Colombia by the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, Madero said, the government cannot impose tariffs to protect Colombian agriculture, and farmers who cannot compete with international prices are increasingly turning to coca production. These farmers are now the target of the anti-narcotic campaign.

Another Colombian who spoke at the conference asked that he not be quoted directly or photographed, because his life has been threatened so many times. Also speaking through an interpreter, he defended the life of the peasant farmer, or campesinos, who grew coca to survive. Without the advances in agricultural technologies that allow industrialized countries to produce crops at lower prices, campesinos cannot produce crops that are competitive with foreign markets.

"The U.S. policy is wrong because it is not attacking the strongest link in the drug production, but the weakest link – the campesinos," the Colombian said. Instead of fighting narcotics, he said, the U.S. is fighting a counter-insurgency war against the rebels and the peasants in Colombia.

"Because your tax dollars are funding the poisoning of our animals, food and land, we are risking our lives to come here to implore you to end the war against Colombia," the Colombian said.

Madero said that Colombia is wealthy in natural resources but the people have been subjected to poverty, with 60 percent of the population living under the poverty rate and 80 percent of the population working for less than a living wage. Madero said that the current armed conflict has displaced nearly 2 million people out of a total population of 40 million, and 29-38,000 are killed a year in the civil conflict.

"Always ask yourselves what is the financial reasons behind Plan-Colombia," Madero said, "and what is the interest of corporations lobbying for Plan Colombia.

"We believe that this policy is driven by oil interests," said Madero. "Plan Colombia is backed by the U.S. to facilitate acquisition of our oil reserves"

Oil companies like Occidental oil are heavily invested in oil production in Colombia, and the vice president of Occidental lobbied before Congress in support of Plan-Colombia. Madero said that the interests of these multi-national companies are vested in deepening the conflict in Colombia to displace the populations that live over large oil reserves.

According to the Boston Globe, 75,000 acres of coca leaf have been destroyed by the fumigation, exceeding the goal set for first two years of Plan-Colombia. There are no official numbers on how many acres of legal farmland were destroyed, how many livestock have died, or how many people have been displaced by the fumigation.

Tree said that the only thing fumigation will accomplishment is to squeeze drug production into neighboring countries. Tree said that according to a high ranking State Department official whom he could not name, the U.S. knows specifically that their current military campaign is pushing coca production directly into the Amazon basin, in Brazil.

"Why is it that the more we fight the drug problem, the worst it gets?" Tree asked.

Harris and Montgomery said that before they returned from Colombia, the 100-member delegation pledged to do everything in their power to convince Americans that the current drug policy is misguided and destructive. Harris said she was so deeply moved by what she saw in Colombia, she was dedicating her life opposing the drug war.

"The world cannot continue to sustain our lifestyles," Harris said.

MARK HOLLOWAY / COLLEGIAN STAFF

Careful with that axe, Eugene

Music Theory grad student, Rafael Florez, takes time out of his hectic schedule to give Tiffany Jackson, a senior BDIC Major, a guitar lesson.

curriculum

continued from page 1

web content, and will require students to take original digital photographs in conjunction with their literary pieces.

These images, shot on a pair of digital cameras that the class will share, will then be processed and manipulated using Photoshop software in a three-computer lab already set up in Bartlett Hall.

Nelson calls 297B an "experimental course" on what is essentially the flagship campus for the IT minor. Support and leadership for the program has come from such high-level places as the office of president William Bulger, leading to resources like the $1,000 resource book budget allotted to the two professors.

English / ECE 297B will have only one prerequisite, the university's freshman writing requirement. It will be open to all majors and will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 2:30 to 5:45 p.m., in a room to be announced.

Any professors who wish to have their courses featured as a part of this series, please contact Adam White or Adam Martignetti at 545-4829.

union

continued from page 1

conditions were more than equitable and that the current union bid was only being forced onto them by a select few.

"I think that the conditions are very good and we do get a free double-single on campus on campus. We get respect from the AD [Area Director], the ARD [Area Residential Director] and the UMass police department," said an RA in Orchard Hill who wished to remain anonymous. "I don't think it's necessary to have an RA union on campus. It would cause chaos and disagreement. There would be too much turmoil and everyone would have a different view. Nothing would get done."

"We are striving for 100 percent or 90 percent," said Sayani of anyone who has not signed the petition. "The more RAs we have, the greater the impact."

No date has been set for the RAs to present their case to the NLRB.

"We've tried so much to improve our conditions and we've been rebuffed," said Synnot. "We've been not listed to. Talking employment to management hasn't worked. We aren't going to be objectified and treated as thrown-away employees anymore."

faculty

continued from page xx

"I support the professors and hope they get what they deserve," Iacinto said.

Iacinto attended school during the strike because she had classes and works on campus.

Exercise sports science student Melanie Migita also supports the professors but attended her classes during the strike.

"I felt guilty coming to school, so I snuck around the picketers," Migita said. "I have to go to my classes because my teacher is not a part of the union and is requiring me to attend, and I must take tests."

Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Phone #:
(413) 549-0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving all of Your Rental Needs
Only 1/2 a mile from Puffton

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Tuesday April 10, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com
4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

A Swift-ly Tilting Persona:
Stereotypes pigeonhole new Governor

As tensions continue to mount between China and the United States, we really have to wonder: is this worth it? Our plane may or may not have been spying on the only other real superpower in the world, China (and that superpower status is really up to debate). We may, or may not have, strayed into China's airspace during the mission.

What we do know is that at least one Chinese pilot is presumed dead and that the United States soldiers, whom some have called "hostages," have a Chinese chef who specializes in American cuisine feeding them. These are not the things that start a war, and all of the ridiculous hyperbole surrounding this obvious accident is the true threat.

President Bush declaring that he won't apologize solves nothing. China declaring that they will wait for that coming apology before they budge isn't helping either. Instead, like two little kids fighting over the last slice of pie, both countries seem complacent to risk the well-being of their foreign relations with one another over one destroyed plane and another missing one.

This isn't worth it.

A world at peace, or at least a world where superpowers are at a relative peace, without the threat of intense violence, is the kind of world that we all need. There are serious problems that need serious solutions without our superpowers masculine posturing.

Unfortunately, both U.S. President George W. Bush and Chinese Premier Jiang Zemin seem unwilling to compromise.

Kofi Annan, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, has offered to mediate the conflict, an offer that the Daily Collegian hopes both sides will consider. After all, who better than the United Nations to endorse peace and well-being?

That said, we can only hope that both sides will be willing to consider that, for all involved, peace is far more beneficial than any other possible situation. While no one wants to mention the most dangerous of words – war – there is clearly a coming conflict with our massive Asian ally. Risking that alliance is worth nothing.

The United States loses on out on the possibility of massive new markets; China risks losing out on cooperation with the world's current superpower. Why anyone is interested in anything else is completely unknown, as it will only hurt everyone involved.

Both China and the United States have created a cavernous divide where once there was none (human rights violations notwithstanding). It's a worthless condition and situation and we can only hope that somebody is willing to be responsible and mature enough to admit that they're wrong.

After all, both sides are, in fact, wrong.

The only question is whether anybody is going to be willing to admit that.

Unsigned editorials represent the opinion of the majority of the Collegian editorial board.

Spies, lies and Dubya's

MELODY ZAGAMI

Ah, Spring. Budding daffodils, frat boys playing whiffle ball, the smell of newly spread mulch and the onslaught of cold war. Now, in addition to writing in all the Dubyas, the Bush administration has to worry about a little blunder akin to the Clinton administration's bombing of the Chinese embassy (Georgie is not as slick as Willy was, so this one could last a little longer in the public eye). In case you live in a bubble (and chances are you do because you attend this university), I will remind you that the Sunday before last, a Chinese plane collided with an American "covert operations plane" (that's spy plane for us simple folk). The Chinese pilot is missing and assumed dead and the American crew is being held in custody until the U.S. can express their regret for being in airspace where they shouldn't have been. Pentagon officials and everyone else in Washington claims that this wasn't a "spy plane." Really? But it was full of secret equipment, listening devices and instrument panels, so basically it was just like anything else that flies out of Bradley International.

Spy planes, angry diplomats, a flustered president and heart attack No. 3 for Dick Cheney. I exaggerate when I say that this will lead to a cold war. It won't; it just fit nicely at the beginning of the column. China can never be compared to Russia. China is a nation in transition between being an industrial nation from an agrarian one. China poses no real threat to the U.S., and has only recently been grasped by the monster of factories and pollution. In other words, it's only just beginning to look like us.

The question, though, that I'd like to raise here is: what is the value of a human life to the leaders of a nation? The elements in this international situation of espionage and demanded apologies are ridiculous. You have two countries; America refuses to apologize because it says it didn't do anything that warrants apology. China will not accept this because they say that we were sticking our noses where they shouldn't have been (oh, silly China, when has that ever happened? Just try to give me one example). America is macho, the bully in the locker room after gym, picking on the little guy, taking his underwear, flushing his head down the toilet in front of all the other boys, while China is a nation just coming into the market so they're trying to save face. They're the smart nerd who's saying "Gentlemen I hardly think this warrants you flushing my head down the toilet" while he's being humiliated.

> "I don't thinkwe should aplologize because I don't have evidence that we were doing something we shouldn't have been. But I think we have to admit responsibility because there are human lives at sstake here. . . But we are stubborn and certainly not going to back down before the little guy does."

We (The American Public) don't know if we were right or wrong in this situation. Our country lies to us a lot. Everything our politicians say is to be taken with a grain of salt and transformed into an SNL sketch later on that week. But if you can't trust Colin Powell than who can you trust? The man, whether you like him or not, is an American hero. He says we didn't do anything wrong, but then again, he is part of the Bush administration. A FoxNews poll said that 73% of Americans don't think we should apologize. I don't think we should apologize because I don't have evidence that we were doing something we shouldn't have been. But I think we have to admit responsibility because there are human lives at stake here. There are there, across an ocean, in a potentially harmful situation and they have families and babies at home. But we are stubborn and certainly not going to back down before the little guy does.

Any American citizen would be crazy for thinking that we would or we should. Of course the whole Happy Valley thinks so, but that's a given.

China wants an explanation of our actions. Why were we in their airspace? Why was a team of American technical military personnel just flying over? There are questions, and there must be answers. Just for a laugh I want you to turn on CNN and watch Dubya give statements. He looks like a third grader giving his science report on the mating habits of Pandas up there behind the podium:

Press: Mr. President, you and your staff say that it wasn't a spy plane, yet it was full of special, highly developed instruments. Can you explain?

George: Ah, ah (and that's a quote; he says ah before he speaks, a lot, way too much for the leader of the most powerful nation on earth) it wasn't, it wasn't a spy plane it was. . .

Then a press secretary steps in while George runs to the oval office to place a phone call to Big George who will hopefully know what to say to satiate the press, calm the American public and shut up Chinese officials.

What I want you to get out of this column and be thinking about is not that I think George is a buffoon and am hopping the next train to Canada, but that there are twenty four Americans over there and they will stay there until two nations can step beyond their foolish public images, come to their senses and do what is right.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

3/26

The media: What is too much?

MATTHEW DESPRES

I sat home this weekend, alone in my room, thinking over things that the busy weekdays don't often allow for, when from the back of my head crept a familiar thought. Something unshakable and, lately, worrisome.

At 21, I've decided to spend my life judging other people; the things they create, the things they do, the way they spend their lives and the motivations underlying all of that.

The question eating away at me – who am I to have a hand in any of that?

I began writing for this paper three years ago, finding an open door in the sports department and working my way up and around from there. As enjoyable and rewarding as sports writing can be, it requires that you take a step back into objectivity and critique the performance of a given team or athlete. It's a difficult line to walk at times, that between being a fan and being a professional. When you want to cheer, the job dictates that you can't; when you get pen in hand and forge ahead with wildly biased opinions, the job once again reins you in.

Quite suddenly, the power to dismiss and expose the weaknesses or talent of a particular individual lies in your hands; that unique ability that any writer is given to mold a particular situation. The chance to praise is equally here, of course, but something sinister and alluring remains when offered the chance to look down from upon an invisible pedestal. Mighty is the pen, indeed.

Which is what got to bothering me. Who am I to comment on the abilities of athletes who have dedicated their entire lives to a sport, who have spent countless hours in practice only to have me come along and laugh it away in a space where others can read? Not that sportswriters don't put in countless hours perfecting their craft either; a good sportswriter tells stories, digs below the surface and finds something to say that even those at the game were unaware of. When done well, it can be as honorable and rewarding a craft as there is.

The same can be said, equally as much, for those who cover the arts, from music and dance to literature and film. It's easy to sit back and form opinions which, of course, are what all reviews are: opinions expressed by those who, in theory, can write a little bit better than you. As easy as it is to form those opinions, it's even easier to get carried away with them, in either lavishing praise on the work or ridiculing it. As writers (often viewed as failures in the field which they cover), the sudden power is extraordinarily appealing.

Aside from my own personal worries, I bring the topic up because, and this is certainly no mystery, the media often oversteps its boundaries of being a responsible press, taking that individual criticism to an extreme. Naturally, there is a great deal of freedom granted to journalists; largely protected by the First Amendment, and with the root function of being a watchdog for the people, the media exists because somebody needs to be keeping tabs on corporate and governmental America. That right, however, is abused more than I would care to admit, and brings me back to my original train of thought: as easy as it is for an individual to get carried away with his/her assessment of a particular group, it's just as easy for the media to saturate our lives with fatty leftovers after the initial and actual story has been covered. Boundaries are constantly stepped over and common, everyday privacies are invaded. Almost all aspects of the popular media are pegged as bloodthirsty, ready and willing to go for the throats of citizens both public and private. This is what I want to do?

As a college student, it's easy to view the situation from a romantic standpoint, and say that once I get out there I can change it all, helping to instill some integrity back into a field that should have our trust but, in fact, loses more of it everyday. Writing is one of the few things that truly makes me happy, and even now I won't hesitate to try and make a career out of it. However, I'd like to think that I can attach myself to a profession that is seen with respect and as useful to society, not as something that exists only to exploit and chase after the public it serves.

Doubts are, of course, common in all of our lives, and that's something I'll have to deal with. When you see those things in action, however, the very things causing your doubts, and they're being performed by people in positions you want, the uncertainty is that much harder to wash away. Even though can be a funny thing to deal with, I have faith that it can be seen as a respectable career, as something that people will once again feel comfortable trusting and learning from.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

Learning outside the classroom

NATALYA WEINSTEIN-ROBERTS

Dennisha shakily grabbed the microphone and quickly, yet with conviction, rattled off her rehearsed speech. "If I Ruled the World, I would give everyone a house to live in." She was part of the third grade class presenting their art during the Black History Month Celebration at their elementary school in Boston. Their performance consisted of grooving to the popular song "If I Ruled the World," by Nas and Lauryn Hill, Malik doing some questionably safe handstands, and their speeches about what they would do if they ruled the world.

I worked with these bright, energetic third-graders all last year, through the City Year program. City Year is a ten-month long community service program for 17-24 year-olds, which is founded on the values of idealism, diversity and social justice. It is an AmeriCorps (the domestic Peace Corps) program which exists in thirteen cities all over the United States. Corps members work in schools, run after-school programs, teach AIDS/HIV and domestic violence prevention curriculum to high school students, run camps and do transformative physical service. It is a volunteer organization, but the Corps members receive a modest living stipend, and a $5,000 education award upon completion of 1700 hours of service.

City Year reshaped my values and social views, taught me valuable life skills and helped me figure out what I want to do with the rest of my life. Working with children who were acknowledging the lack of affordable housing at the early age of 9, such as Dennisha, forced me to reflect on the differences and challenges that many children face on a day-to-day basis. I became more aware of how my white, middle-class privilege has shaped my assumptions about the world, and now try to explore other perspectives. I no longer take my opportunities for granted. I value diversity; my team had people on it of different ages, socio-economic status, ethnicities and backgrounds. Diversity is crucial in helping people get along, learning how to work together and in educating people about other cultures and lifestyles.

I also gained a newfound appreciation for education. I hated doing all the busy work in high school, and was not looking forward to college at all. That's why I decided to take a year off before continuing my education. After working last year by supporting and teaching others at an 8 - 5:30 job every day for 10 months, I was excited to go back to the self-enrichment and relative relaxation of learning. I now realize the privilege of having the financial resources and a solid secondary education to be able to attend college. I also know the advantage I will have with a college degree upon entering the work force. I experienced trying to budget on sub-minimum wages, and realized that college will offer me a measure of financial security so that hopefully I won't have to go waiting under the couch for quarters to do my laundry.

Having the opportunity to plan events and structure activities for communities and for children taught me many skills. I learned how to pre-plan and be flexible when organizing events. I learned how to teach kids with a mixture of information and activities to make their experience enjoyable. I learned to take the initiative and lead our corporate sponsors to interact and connect with the communities that we were working in. I learned how to work with a team, to have patience and to compromise.

The most influential part of City Year was that it helped me find my focus and motivation in life. Institutional education can often be disconnected from first-hand experiences. Ironically, the teachers and texts that we are learning from draw their lessons from life experiences, and so for our education to be meaningful, we too need exposure to diverse life experiences. In high school, I applied to colleges as a biology major. I had no clue what I would want to do for the rest of my life. During City Year I realized my attraction and passion was working with people, especially children. I really enjoyed structuring my own programs for children and getting involved in helping build self-sufficient communities. I am now considering majoring in STEPC or Sociology. City Year made me take a break in my education to reflect on the meaning and purpose of learning.

If you have ever had similar feelings about not knowing what you want to do at college, if you aren't motivated in your classes, if you are searching for your passion, then maybe a program like City Year, or taking some time off, would be useful. There are may programs through AmeriCorps, such as the NCCC, which is a program for 18-24 year-olds which deals with environmental issues, education, disaster relief and the needs of communities. There are many AmeriCorps statewide programs which aren't as much of a time commitment. There are a lot of other options available besides college, and taking advantage of those choices really helped me find my direction in life, and rekindled my desire to learn.

The AmeriCorps website is www.AmeriCorps.org

Natalya Weinstein-Roberts is a UMass student.

Moby has launched a new summer music festival, Area:One.

Tuesday, April 10, 2001
Arts Editor • David Troupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com
5

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Daft Punk blasts off with grand electronica

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

DAFT PUNK
Discovery
Virgin

Aside from another memorable addition to their library of super-hip videos, the clip for "One More Time," the first single off of Discovery, in many ways is a mirror to Daft Punk's sound, past and present.

The Japanese anime animation style portrays an outer space band performing a concert on a spacecraft before it gets ambushed by a group of unidentified gas mask-wearing soldiers. The clip is rendered in full anime splendor, complete with outrageously stylized lines that serve to create characters of idealized proportions. The camera also maximizes the importance of the characters, drooling over them in long pan shots, emphasizing their flawlessness in close-ups, and setting them against fuzzy and static backdrops that highlight their polished features.

The video serves as a perfect mirror to the philosophy of Daft Punk, the Parisian duo of Thomas Bangalter and Guy-Manuel de Homem Christo, a group that accentuates the flashy and uplifting in their funky house music. These aren't the 'dirty beats' referred to by Roni Size. It's an outlook that characterized their 1996 masterpiece Homework, and now emerges once again in even bolder and less restrained fashion in "One More Time."

Like the anime or Manga art style, "One More Time" is all about instant gratification. The listener isn't waiting around for this track to reach its zenith in the eighth minute; the bouncy beat kicks in at second one, and when the vocals of Romanthony kick in one has all of the tools they're going to need to kick back and enjoy. Like the out-of-focus backgrounds in the video, there isn't a party going on behind the scenes in the song; no hidden samples or subtle shifts, it's all right in the forefront. And the distorted vocals of Romanthony are like the sleek band members in the video, glossy and immediate, not awakening the soul but grabbing the spirit. And the spirit goes for a ride on Discovery, and while it may always stay at a surface level, it's nonetheless a captivating journey. The drive of the first seven songs (broken up only by the bland "Night Vision") is so invigorating that it makes other so-called inspirational electronic music seem lifeless by comparison. The excitement culminates in the giddy "Superheroes," the aural equivalent of a big outdoor party with fireworks going off overhead if there ever was one. It's true, though, that the best stuff is on the first half, and only momentary flashes of brilliance ("Face to Face") can be found on the frankly disappointing second half. Note to the Daft duo: leave the chill-out music to Air and Groove Armada, you guys are way too funky to be as subdued as you are on "Short Circuit."

It's interesting that even in the future and in space, the "One More Time" clip tells us, there will still be guitars and drums and keyboards and vocalists. One would think that Daft Punk, being such a futuristic duo, would have abandoned these archaic devices and use strictly space age music devices. On the contrary, they retain rockin' guitar solos and a disco nostalgia (see "Aerodynamic") that, like fellow Frenchmen Phoenix, make them seem not as much retro as timeless.

Discovery isn't so much like its title as it is a reminder of how much fun music can be when two talented individuals let loose with minimal pretension. The duo is even conducting interviews and shooting press photos in robotic costumes to conceal their identity. Another way of focusing strictly on the music or a cheesy publicity stunt? Probably more the latter, but with the vision and credentials they possess, they know they're afforded some lenience. So they straddle the line both in public and on disc between outrageous funkiness and studied, club-conscious techno, making sure to please everyone at once. And they do it so well.

Daft Punk: future feels good.

Spy Kids is fun for everyone

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

SPY KIDS
directed by Robert Rodriguez with Daryl Sabara, Alexa Vega, Antonio Banderas, Carla Gugino
playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

To say Spy Kids is a brilliant movie might make an individual question my ability to properly critique films. But consider this: Spy Kids is, without argument, a film that would be classified under the commonly-dubbed "family movie" genre. It makes sense that a family movie should appeal to all household parties, from the toddler to the adolescent to the mom and dad (and let's even throw in the grandparents). It doesn't insult kids' intelligence like the foolish See Spot Run, or bore adults out of their minds like the recent dud Recess: School's Out. Instead, Spy Kids uniquely targets and delights any age group.

Spy Kids director and writer Robert Rodriguez has become known in the States for his action-packed movies From Dusk Till Dawn and Desperado (we'll forgive him for The Faculty). In Spy Kids, he recruits friend Antonio Banderas, who also played the title role in the latter film, to star as Gregorio Cortez, a spy who falls in love with one of his rivals, Gregorio and Ingrid get married, retire from the spy biz, and have two spirited kids, Carmen (Alexa Vega) and Juni (Daryl Sabara). When several fellow O.S.S. spies go missing, Gregorio and Ingrid return to the job, only to disappear themselves! It's up to their kids to save them and the other missing agents.

The evidence soon points to Fegan Floop (Alan Cumming), the host of a zany and otherworldly children's television show (imagine an even further-twisted version of "Pee Wee's Playhouse"). In an effort to take over the world, Floop's sidekick Minion (Tony Shalhoub) has created a machine that creates indestructible clones of famous people's children. Only one thing is missing, though, and that's The Third Brain, an invention Cortez took with him when he retired from the spy life. Capture Cortez, and The Third Brain is as good as his.

Anyone can feel like a kid again while watching this movie and seeing all the zany fun that the creators must have had while putting it together. Almost like a James Bond movie, Spy Kids is the premiere place to catch the hip new Isuzu Axiom, but the car's 21st century appearance isn't all it has going for it. The inner-child in you comes alive when it plunges off a California mountain road into the watery depths below, seeing it turn into an underwater vessel with the wheels as propellers. Or later, when the spy kids themselves engineer a small submersible vehicle that has everything needed to travel nowadays – beds, a refrigerator, and a toilet that flushes itself and thanks you for your deposit. When the kids take refuge in a secret hideout, more hi-tech gadgets and gizmos appear, from jetpacks to x-ray glasses and watches with cool little antennas on them (who cares what they actually do). The sheer futuristic, Sharper Image feel to the movie is only one reason why it is so much fun to watch.

Turn to SPYKIDS, page 06

Spider slaughters good book

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

ALONG CAME A SPIDER
directed by Lee Tamahori with Morgan Freeman, Monica Potter playing at CineMark 12

Morgan Freeman and Monica Potter

I am one of the few literature enthusiasts who love seeing books adapted to the silver screen. Many people become skeptical when they see the latest novel turned into a movie, because there is now solid evidence about how the story and characters look and feel, when readers have developed their own ideas about these factors. Other people, however, will frown upon such movies because once the screenwriters are done with it, the movie may be wholly different than the book. This frustrates me more than the former; why adapt a book to the screen if you're not going to translate a practically identical story? You might as well make another movie altogether if that's your plan.

Keep this in mind if you decide to see Along Came A Spider, a very loose adaptation of the national bestseller from the Mastermind of Mystery, James Patterson. Very few pieces of the beloved novel remain intact after novice screenwriter Marc Moss takes it to the butchering block. Only a few characters' names are the same, but as for the story itself? Fuhgeddaboudit. Moss has sadistically disgraced Patterson and his millions of fans to run with his own cockamamie idea of a suspense thriller. At the very least, Along Came a Spider should have been re-titled so that Patterson won't be blamed for the abhorrent script that is apparent to those who have read the book. But no such luck here. Not since Dean Koontz have I seen such a horrible adaptation of a book to a motion picture, and I can't for the life of me understand why Patterson let this fly.

But the movie can't be horrible just because it didn't adhere at all to the book. It must be evaluated on its own merits (of which there are very few). Morgan Freeman returning to the role he originated in Kiss the Girls is the real draw of the movie. His stoicism and intelligence make every thriller he's in all the more tense (witness his unruffled demeanor in the final scene of Se7en). Perhaps one of the most underrated actors around, Freeman doesn't really fit the role of Cross as described in the book, but he makes up for it by his thoughtful portrayal of the role, and his dedication to it. Even with a script as bad as this, Freeman can bring it some dignity and worth. His co-star, Michael Wincott (last seen in Before Night Falls), is equally as convincing as the part of the villain, doing it justice. It's only a shame that the movie must vary so greatly from the book, where Wincott's character would have spent far more time on screen were it a properly interpreted adaptation. Here, though, Wincott is not as visible as we would like. In the only female role of the film is Monica Potter (best known for Patch Adams), who, until now, I thought had some promise as an actress. But after seeing her whiny and tedious portrayal of FBI agent Jezzie Flannagan, my mindset of her is beginning to shift.

As forensic psychologist Alex Cross, Freeman is unwittingly pulled into a game of cat-and-mouse (which is the title of Along Came A Spider's sequel) by the expert and ruthless Gary Soneji, a master of disguise who has spent the past two years incognito teaching history at a prep school for the children of famous public figures. He kidnaps Megan Rose Durine, not for money or a personal vendetta, but because he wants to be famous, or, rather, infamous. Refreshing idea, certainly, and quite similar to the book, but that's the last glimpse you'll get of any resemblance of the novel until the film's climax.

There's a need for red herrings in mystery novels, to be sure, but they have to exhibit some substance. Halfway through the movie, Spider begins to drop hints that a friend of the missing Megan has something to do with the crime. The idea of a child being involved in a high offense like this kidnapping is nothing new. In fact, it was the basis for one of Patterson's other novels, Jack and Jill. Even with this stolen concept, nothing ever becomes of it. We're left to merely ponder what the point was of that small plot inclusion. In the middle of the movie, too, screenwriter Moss steals from another Patterson book, Roses Are Red, for a ransom exchange scene that takes place on a crowded subway train. By doing this, Moss has practically ruled out any notions for further Alex Cross books turned movies (unless he hideously disfigures those scripts too, that is). And it won't shock anyone that Hollywood opted for a happy ending, by killing off the bad guy, as opposed to the novel, which has Soneji still alive and mentally deranged. For that clear reason, the abovementioned Cat & Mouse most likely will not be turned into a movie anytime soon. It's a shame that Moss has unknowingly ruled out any further proliferation of these fabulous thrillers, especially when Hollywood is itching for a good script. (What's the last good thriller you saw? The Watcher? Case closed.)

Director Lee Tamahori (The Edge, Mulholland Falls) gets the film off to a pulse-pounding start in a scene reminiscent of the tragic and gripping opening to Cliffhanger (by "gripping," there is no pun intended). But don't be mislead to commend the director too quickly; very often, Tamahori doesn't keep the action fast enough; the thrills suspenseful enough, or generally, the movie convincing enough. There's a great sense of disbelief to the movie, and the final twist is something that is predicted long before it takes place.

I really wanted to praise and recommend Along Came A Spider. Ever since I read the book, I couldn't wait for the movie to come out. But instead, I am disgusted to see such a sloppy adaptation of one of my favorite books. Along Came A Spider is a solid example of how Hollywood still mistreats exceptional stories that hardly ever come along nowadays.

Pearl Street crowd gets Pork-ed by a Tornado

By Dave Siegel
Collegian Staff

PORK TORNADO
Pearl Street Nightclub
April 5

On Thursday April 5 Pork Tornado began their spring tour with a show at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. They must like Pearl Street as a jumping off point, as they started their last tour there last spring. From last year's experience, I was going to this show to hear five talented musicians jam out on some solid funk classics with a few spicy originals in between. Last year's show was filled with wall-to-wall energy and excitement. For the first set this year, I was unpleasantly surprised with the lackluster, flat performance. On the very first song, "Everything I play will be funky," it seemed as if bassist Aaron Hersey had to struggle just to get the lyrics out. The energy level stayed pretty low throughout the first set as they steamrolled through some great funky covers. First, they broke out a decent rendition of James Brown's "Sex Machine," with a nice solo by saxophonist Joe Moore. Next up came the unmistakable opening drum beats to Tom Jones' classic "Hooked on a Feeling." The first set continued somewhat uneventfully with a few slower country, blues tunes before ending with a reggae laced "Dreams."

This band is made up of five very well trained and experienced musicians, and although I was a bit disappointed at a few moments throughout the show, I found it hard not to appreciate their amazing talent and command they had of their instruments. The line-up of the band is most certainly a very impressive one. On guitar is the legendary Dan Archer. For those who do not know the Phish-lore, Archer helped produce and engineer Phish's album Lawn Boy at his own Archer Studios up in Winooski, Vermont. While on the subject of Phish, most of the crowd in attendance was there to see one man and one man only...the amazing Jon Fishman on drums. Although Fish did have a bit more soloing than last year, it was still not nearly enough. Playing an amazing kick pattern throughout was Aaron Hersey. Hersey is perhaps most well known for his work with the James Harvey Quartet. On keyboards is the well traveled Phil Abair, who is probably most well known for his production of Strangelolk's breakout album Weightless in Water. Last but most certainly not the least is the energetic Joe Moore on saxophone. I was thoroughly impressed throughout the show with the showmanship and skill with which the band played.

After a short intermission, Pork Tornado returned onstage with a real funky song with a heavy thumping bass solo by Hersey. For me, Hersey was the shining light of the evening as he meshed everything together to give them their distinctive sound. They then played a cover from the renowned Parliament Funkadelic before inviting an old friend onstage. The moment they said "special guest" my heart, along with many other phans, stopped in anticipation of another possible Phish sighting. To my chagrin, it was the now retired Mr. Scorcessi, a high school music teacher from Agawam with some connection to the band. He sat in on keyboards for a few blowz, almost twangs songs before being replaced again by Abair.

The band led into a Frank Zappa cover before really getting excited. By introducing the next song as "one that will not be on their next album" Joe Moore did a jaw dropping Madonna-esque performance on the "I Touch Myself" by the Divinyles. I will go out on a limb here and say that Jim Morrison got arrested for far less back in Miami in 1969. The set ended with the customary "Jungle Boogie" with the usual "hippy chick" dancers onstage. The band returned onstage for a slow blues tune. Next up was the song that I had been waiting for all night, the famed "Kiss My Black Ass" sung so poignantly by Joe Moore. Honestly, the first time I heard this song last year, it actually gave me nightmares. It wasn't that bad this time however, as it was filled with some great solos, especially by the men of the evening Jon Fishman and Aaron Hersey.

I am glad to say that the energy level was considerably higher from the moment that the second set began. It turned out to be quite an amazing concert, with many twists and surprises. Look out for them later this year, as they will probably be playing more this year due to the Phish hiatus.

Mascis wastes a performance

Stellar music falls on deaf ears

By Esteban Arguello
Collegian Correspondent

J MASCIS & THE FOG
Skybox
April7

With streaking gray hair, an open old Hawaiian t-shirt, and his old purple Jazzmaster guitar, ex-Dinosaur Jr. frontman J Mascis took the stage. Right off, J and the FOG began with the hard-hitting "Loose." The bassist, Mike Watt (a good Bob Villa look alike) from the Minutemen, screamed the lyrics and shook his head violently, only to finish the song by giving the crowd a big "fuck you" as he broke one of his bass strings.

J Mascis jumped into an unprepared "Keeblin' " (a song off J Mascis' previous solo album, Martin & Mel to give Mike some time to prepare his bass. Mascis got to showcase his grungy vocals on the song. His voice has grown rougher over the years, which only makes it more suited for his proto - punk music. He seemed dazed up on stage, his vocals never really too solid, his guitar solos sometimes off-key, and the songs tended to suffer. A little could be attributed to the Skybox's poor speaker placement that made the lyrics hard to decipher and the music come out a mush. To a first time listener, this would have been a bad experience, especially at times when it seemed like all three members were playing solos.

Mike Watt played the bass like a guitar, sliding up and down the neck, never really focusing a specific scale or key. J Mascis would in turn provide his own crazy guitar heroics, going in hazy weird direction. The only sure thing was ex-Dinosaur Jr. drummer George Bentz, but he too sometimes felt free to bang out some solos. All three were going in cool directions, but not necessarily together. If it hadn't been for the pre-recorded harmony being mixed in, most songs would have sounded like the same muddle of music. On the other hand, it was a legendary appearance. J Mascis and Mike Watt have changed the face of music. They helped push the whole grunge movement in the early 90's and thousands of bands have named them as influences. The music they played is classic. They covered the Stooges "TV eye," several Dinosaur Jr. songs such as "Blowin' It," "Repulsion," "Freak Scene," and even some semi-current covers such as Pavement's "Range Life." The mere guitar heroics and awesome bass playing was a sight to see for any musician. Unfortunately all these talents seemed a waste at the hands of the Skybox's bad scene.

The crowd never really got into it, except for the two or three hardcore fans at the front. There was no crowd surfing, no clapping along, and no girls on their boyfriends' shoulders hoping to catch a better view. The scene was very mellow; few people were jumping up and down. Many just lounged around in the back as Watt sang his lungs out, Bentz banged his heart out, and Mascis beat roll 5-piece band, they had a one stringed Gordaline, a moog, and an accordion. These catchy songs juxtaposed to J Mascis and the FOG's loud guitar heroics made it quite a diverse evening. Unfortunately, the setting turned what could have been a great concert into a mediocre event.

COURTESY BROOKE WILSON

Despite their talent, J Mascis and co. couldn't get the Skybox crowd interested.

COURTESY JOEL MEYEROWITZ

A real soprano

Soprano Dawn Upshaw will appear at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on April 28, performing folk melodies as interpreted by a great variety of composers.

■ spykids

continued from page 05

More often than not, family films are pretty straightforward – the good guys versus the bad ones. But for those who have become slightly bored with that cliché, Spy Kids offers a different point of view, which suggests that even people with a villainous surface have a good heart underneath. Family films always tend to have that touching "Full House" moment to them, and it would be a lie to say that Spy Kids stays away from this. There's a tiny subplot of Gregorio's estranged brother Machete (Danny Trejo, who is in every Latin-American based movie), which is used to parallel the cute relationship between young Carmen and Juni. This is a bittersweet yet expected segment, but is over before it gets drawn out and dull. Spy Kids does go slightly overboard at the end with a schmaltzy and sentimental conclusion, about how family is the main necessity in life and how much they all love each other. That's great. There's your moral to the story, kids.

Even with a cheesy ending, the audience doesn't seem to mind, since Rodriguez successfully avoids putting the corny moments in the main body of the film when all the audience wants to see is more action, cutting-edge toys and fast-paced storytelling.

As absurd as this may sound, the quality of talent amassed in this movie is astounding. One of Broadway's most versatile actors, Alan Cumming is nothing short of captivating as Floop, and Shalhoub brings the same dry wit to Minion as he did in Men In Black and Galaxy Quest. Equally as enjoyable is Banderas, who has shown his extremely talented Hollywood chops recently, from action films (The Mask of Zorro) to musicals (Evita) to being behind the camera, directing (Crazy In Alabama). The spy kids themselves, Vega and Sabara, have enormous screen presence, which they share admirably, never upstaging another. As an added thrill, several actors make cameos, including Cheech Marin, Terri Hatcher, Robert Patrick, and, for want of surprise, one actor who has recently become one of Hollywood's biggest names. His appearance in the film's epilogue not only drops hints for a Spy Kids 2, but gets back to my original point that family films can be for grown-ups too.

Your mission, should you choose to accept it, is to see Spy Kids.

COURTESY DISNEY.COM

Daryl Sabara as Juni.

THE
EDWIN M. ROSSMAN
ALUMNI CAREER FORUMS
MATHEMATICS

DATE: WEDNESDAY APRIL 11, 2001
TIME: 3:45 PM
LOCATION: ROOM 1033 LGRT

SPONSORED BY:
CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
DEPARTMENT OF MATHEMATICS AND STATISTICS

This is an opportunity to meet with alumni and discuss thier experiences in the working world. Don't miss this important panel discussion!

ALUMNI PANELIST

Gerri Amprimo '75	Retired Formerly Vice President of Consulting McKesson HBOC, Amhest, MA
Roy Perdue '73	Manager of Development Solutions by Computer Springfield, MA
Timothy Tracy '92	Group Valuation Actuary Sun Life of Canada Wellesley Hills, MA
Cori Ashworth	Math Career Counselor Campus Career Network

For more information, please contact:
Career Network 545.2224

Henna Arts & Supplies
10% off with this coupon!
413-256-3756

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDER SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Travel to Learn this Summer!
These programs provide a dynamic learning experience—a lively blend of classroom and field activities resulting in a true appreciation of the host country.
Field School in Prehistoric Archaeology in Belize
Haiti Today: Culture and Politics
Ireland Today: Politics and Society
Spanish Language and Culture in Mexico
Vietnam Today: Culture, History and Politics
For more information, contact
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Corporate, Continuing, and Distance Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston, MA 02125-3393
call us 617.287.7913
visit us www.conted.umb.edu
UMASS BOSTON

NHL playoffs set to roll

The Collegian's NHL columnists, Matthew F. Sacco and Matt Brady, give their expert analysis on the opening round of the playoffs.

SACCO'S SELECTIONS:

EASTERN CONFERENCE

#1 New Jersey Devils vs. #8 Carolina Hurricanes
For the 'Canes to have a chance in this one they are going to need a miracle to happen. Fortunately for the ex-Whale, the Devils have been known to offer up a few miracles in their time but its unlikely that any divine intervention could alter the fact that the Hurricanes absolutely suck.
Jason Arnott, Martin Brodeur, Scott Stevens, Patrick Elias... the list goes on. The 'Canes have a much shorter list of a good players and will have a much shorter postseason.
Prediction: Devils in 4.

#2 Ottawa Senators vs. #7 Toronto Maple Leafs
This could easily be the most exciting series of the first round. If the Leafs decide that they are a good team again, then Ottawa could be in for a rough opening round.
Mats Sundin is one of the best players in the world while Sergei Berezin, Steve Thomas and company provide some good goal scoring support. Another factor that the Leafs have going for them is that they are built for a playoff run. They have stellar goaltending in Curtis Joseph, toughness in Shayne Corson and Alexander Kapovtsev and the depth of three quality-scoring lines.
The problem is that the Sens have the NHL's fastest and most skilled forwards in the likes of Alexei Yashin, Marian Hossa, Radek Bonk, Magnus Arvedson and Daniel Alfredsson. The Leafs will not be able to keep up with Ottawa for an entire series and as good as Cujo is, he won't be able to win the series by himself.
Prediction: Ottawa in 6.

#3 Washington Capitals vs. #6 Pittsburgh Penguins
The Caps benefited from playing in the most pathetic division in the NHL, what they won't benefit from is the neck pains they will have from watching Mario Lemieux and Jaromir Jagr skate circles around them. Sergei Gonchar may be one of the league's best defensemen but he doesn't have the ability to stop the yellow and black attack all by his lonesome, especially when Alexei Kovalev is beating goalies like they stole something.
Prediction: Penguins in 6.

#4 Philadelphia Flyers vs. #5 Buffalo Sabres
In years past, Dominik Hasek has been able to win series by himself. Don't expect that to happen this time. The Flyers have grown stronger with every foot they have distanced themselves from Eric Lindros while the Sabres have gotten weaker without Michael Peca. Add a healthy and very motivated John Leclair to a finely tuned roster with Keith Primeau and Mark Recchi and you have a series win...that is if Bobby Clarke keeps his mouth shut. Hasek may steal a game or two but the Flyers will simply outmuscle the diminutive Sabres.
Prediction: Flyers in 6.

BRADY'S BRACKET:

EASTERN CONFERENCE

#1 New Jersey Devils vs. #8 Carolina Hurricanes
The defending Stanley Cup champions versus the Carolina Hurricanes...advantage Devils. The 'Canes match up somewhat well against the Devils, but when the Devs are all healthy, they run like a well-oiled machine. No one on Carolina can come close to stopping the top line for the champs, not to mention the fact that the Devils still have one of the strongest defensive cores in the league.
Veterans Scott Stevens and Scott Niedermayer provide the leadership for two of the best young defensemen in the league in Brian Rafalski and Colin White. Plus, the Devils have Martin Brodeur in net, and when he's on his game, he's one of the best in the business. All that adds up to is a long, tiring series for Arturs Irbe and the 'Canes. For Carolina to pull off the upset, Jeff O'Neill will have to keep up his 40 goal production to post about...40 goals in the series.
Prediction: Devils in 4.

#2 Ottawa Senators vs. #7 Toronto Maple Leafs
The Senators were one of the best teams in the NHL this year, led by a plethora of offensive talent and a stifling defense. Alexei Yashin's return to prominence in the Canadian media which wanted to hang him one year ago might have been the NHL's second-biggest story of the year.
The Leafs came into the playoffs on a bit of a skid, but their forward talent is still up there among the NHL ranks. Plus, with Curtis Joseph in net, anything is possible. Still, the Sens are too talented to not advance.
Prediction: Senators in 6.

#3 Washington Capitals vs. #6 Pittsburgh Penguins
This is possibly the most intriguing first-round matchup. The Caps are an underrated team, but come in with just a handful more points than the Penguins.
The Pens have the far more talented offense, but they are very suspect on defense and in net. The Capitals do have the potent offensive combo of Peter Bondra and Adam Oates up front, though. Unless Olie the Goalie gives Washington a flawless performance in net, Pittsburgh's big guns of Jaromir Jagr, Martin Straka, Alexei Kovalev and ...there's one more...oh yeah, that guy Mario Lemieux, should find the net on many occasions.
Prediction: Penguins in 7.

#4 Philadelphia Flyers vs. #5 Buffalo Sabres
Buffalo was one of the best teams in the Eastern Conference for much of the second half of the season. There was only one problem. No matter how hard they fought, they couldn't beat Philly. Roman Cechmanek brings reminders of Brian Boucher last year. Philly's muscle and defensive presence combined with the potentially amazing netminding should be a lot for Buffalo to handle.
Dominik Hasek can go through unbeatable stretches where he raises his team on his shoulders. This season, he has been his usual amazing self despite not being in the limelight. The Dominator is ready to step it up once again, and look for the Flyers to be the unlucky victims.
Prediction: Sabres in 7.

WESTERN CONFERENCE

#1 Colorado Avalanche vs. #8 Vancouver Canucks
Colorado is the best team in the NHL. Period. Need I list the superstars on this team? If so, you should pick up the newspaper a little more often. Give Vancouver a win on a lucky bounce.
Prediction: Avalanche in 5.

#2 Detroit Red Wings vs. #7 Los Angeles Kings
The Kings looked like they were going to be contenders until they dealt Rob Blake. Still, after they send him packing, they continued to play strong hockey, mostly due to Felix Potvin. The Cat only has nine lives, though, and he'd need many more than that to stop an explosive but underrated Detroit team. This isn't a team as strong as the ones that won back-to-back Cups, but they have received next to no attention because of the strength of the Avalanche.
Prediction: Red Wings in 5.

#5 Dallas Stars vs. #6 Edmonton Oilers
Dallas and Edmonton. Sound familiar? It should. These two teams have met in the first round 3 of the last four years and have played each other in all four. Edmonton is strong and matches up very well against the Stars. But Eddie Belfour is simply a great playoff goaltender. Unless he has a subpar series, the Stars should roll.
Prediction: Stars in 6.

#4 St. Louis Blues vs. #5 San Jose Sharks
Painful memories. Last year, the Sharks stuck it to the top-seeded Blues and sent shock waves through the hockey world as Roman Turek was a sieve for St. Louis. Both teams went out and acquired quality forwards in Keith Tkachuk and Teemu Selanne.
If Turek falters this time, he has Brent Johnson to bail him out. Evgeny Nabokov is amazing at times on the other end of the ice. This is a seven-gamer, with the goaltending providing the swing in the series. I'll give the edge to the Blues just for the revenge factor.
Prediction: Blues in 7.
Matt Brady is Collegian columnist.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

Men's and women's track teams show well in opener

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Because of the rainstorm two weekends ago, the Massachusetts men's and women's track teams had to wait an additional week to begin their outdoor campaigns. The cancellation of the Smith Invitational, scheduled to be the first meet on the new season, now meant that the first competition for the two squads would take place last Saturday against a plethora of tough opposition.

Maybe the cancellation was a blessing in disguise.

The transfer from the indoor setting to the concrete and dirt didn't seem to faze the Maroon and White, as the women's and men's squadrons finished first and second, respectively, at the SCSU Invitational in New Haven. The high finishes that both teams enjoyed shouldn't come as a surprise, however, as they are coming off successful indoor seasons which each ended with a third place finish in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutewomen finished the day with a total of 126 points, besting a field of eight teams that included UNH, Maine and St. John's. Their dominance did not result because of an abundance of first place finishes but rather with a balanced all-around attack that saw strong finishes from their runners, jumpers, and throwers.

Senior Megan McCormick led the Maroon and White's charge with a first place in the 1500-meter run, besting her competition with a time of just over 4:43. Teammate Melissa Henderson was right on her heels as she took third in the event with a time of 4:45 flat. The team got quality performances in the 3000-meter run as well, with Molly Ketschek and Sharon Tillotson garnering a second and fourth place finish, respectively.

In other events, the Minutewomen delivered a one-two knockout punch to the rest of the competition in the pole vault. Rhianna DaCruz and Brandy Green finished first and second in the event, with DaCruz winning with a vault of 11 feet flat. She also took second in the javelin with a throw of 134 feet.

For the Minutemen, quality performances were plentiful in every aspect of the meet. Freshman Jeff Jason transferred his dominance in the throwing events from the indoor venue to the outdoor track as he took home first in the discus, besting his closest foe by over seven feet. Jason also took third in the shot put. The Maroon and White also took home first and second in the javelin, as Chad Schwarz and Jesse Austin made the event laughable as they threw for 207 and 202 feet, respectively. No other competitor in the javelin threw even 183 feet.

Other UMass successes came from Brendan Sullivan with a first place in the 5000-meter steeplechase, as well as Tony Ortega in the long jump with a leap of just over 21 feet. Senior Hugh Reid also continued to contribute in the sprints as he clocked in second with a time of 11.38 seconds.

Both teams are back in action next weekend as they travel to Northeastern University.

COURTESY MELISSA HENDERSON

Senior Melissa Ward made her mark in the track team's first place finish by placing third in the long jump.

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
✸ See what you eat!
✸ See what you drink!
✸ See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS — See You There — DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

Commuter Students!
On behalf of the Commuter Area Government, you can see the UMTG's Production of HAIR for FREE!
Be one of the first 100 commuter students to stop by Tix Unlimited in the Student Union and tell them you are a commuter student and receive one free ticket for Thursday, Friday or Saturday Show.
Hair will be performed April 11th - 14th at 8pm in the Student Union Ballroom. Additional show: Saturday at 2pm.
Don't Miss Out!!!

Unplanned Pregnancy?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
413-584-0441
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten years Adoption Experience
A FULL CIRCLE adoptions
19 Main Street, Northampton, MA 01060
adoptions@fullcircleadoptions.com

Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 3
You woke up late and you're on the run,
Flying to class, blinded by snow and sun.
You need some juice to get your butt going,
So pick up some Minute Maid to get your blood flowing.
Peel off the label to save, instead of sleeping in class,
And you may end up in tropical waters having a blast!
Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "taste of Umass".
If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.
.... From your Friends at.... COLLEGIAN

Travel europe for as little as $219
• Europe's Best Travel Network
• Exclusively For Independent Travelers
• 14 Countries & 70 Cities, Towns & Villages
• Door to Door Hostel Booking and Drop Off Service
• Flexible Travel Pass
• Safe, Comfortable, Air-Conditioned & Smoke Free Coaches
• Fun, Informative On Board Reps
For a FREE brochure and booking information visit your local Student Travel office
www.busabout.com
BUSABOUT Europe
Take control of your own adventure

Shear Bliss
5 minutes from Uptown on 116W
Offering:
· Hemp perms and products
· Organic Italian Hair Color
· Body Sugaring - ONCE YOU'VE BEEN SUGARED YOU'LL NEVER WAX AGAIN!
· And Much More
479 West Street, Amherst · 253-2322

Retire before you Graduate!
Get PAID for your time online. Whatever you are doing e-mail, chat, instant messaging while downloading music. Searching, shopping, surfing, or playing games, whatever you're doing, your time is worth $$$$$$$. Start getting PAID for it!!
Going Platinum is about to launch in April, the first CO-OPERATIVE REVENUE SHARING COMMUNITY. The Company is currently in a pre-launch drive to build it's membership base and offers an extraordinary financial opportunity for members who position themselves now.
Visit:
http://www.goingplatinum.com/member/vking

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

1 Bedroom North Pleasant St. Apt. Heat/hot water included. Available May 1. Call 256-4287

Amherst Apartment Available June 1st for summer sublet with fall option. One bedroom in North East Terrace Condominium Complex. Single occupancy only. $675 a month. Call 256-4135

3 Bedroom 2 bath Puffton Apartment available June 1st w/option of renew. Good times. Call 549-7782

4 Bedroom on Main St. Lease starting June 1st. Call 253-5180

Furnished Apt. in Boulders. 2 bedroom, 1 bath, on bus route, kitchen fully equiped. $820/month. Available June 15. Heat and hot water inc. 1yr lease. Call Stacey or Jeff 256-3731

2 Bedroom in Colonial Village available June 1. $600/month. Call 253-5351

APARTMENT FOR RENT

30 Second Walk from Campus Looking for 2 Females to share a room in a house on Nutting Ave. Great deal! Call Sarah 549-6603

Amherst Center
1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos
3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass cernter, bus. $550, hear, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Female Wanted to share apt @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

Large 4 Bedroom on Main St. Washer/dryer. Available June 1st. Call 253-5151

Large Private Bedroom in 8 bedroom house on Main St. All utilities included. Available June 1st. Call 256-4627

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 Bedroom renovated apartment in Puffton Village. Available June 1st. Call 549-3557

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

Summer Sublet with option to lease start June first. 4 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, utilities included, sliding glass doors, two balconeys, on bus route. 253-5388

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

2 Bedroom in Puffton Rennovated. Great location. June 1 - Sept 1. Call 549-7791

1 Bedroom Available June-August 15 Summer sublet or lease option. Cliffside Apts. $600 a month 665-8480

AUTO FOR SALE

95 Dodge Neon 4 dr. $4500 O.B.O 413-527-3665

EMPLOYMENT

TEENAGE BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Be at Teen Tour Leader this summer. Trips in USA, Canada, Europe. We need a 4-week time commitment - end of June through July, salary plus expenses paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, CONWAY, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, bicycletrips.com

Personal Care Assistant to work Tuesday early evening for retired teacher/songwriter with MS. $10/hr. Call 256-8784

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.want-netwealth.com

Lifeguards
Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

Summer Jobs & Internships available at resident camp for girls in Connecticut. Lifeguards, counselors, unit directors & horseback riding instructors needed. Call 800-842-1143

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, 8 minutes from UMass. Available June 1. Call RJ 253-6469

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, large yard. Min minutes from UMass. 548-8800

ROOM FOR RENT

One Female Looking for one male or female to share one bedroom with study. Puffton Apartments. June, July & August. Rent (VERY) negotiable. Call Megan 546-2602

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

1 Bedroom in Sunderland Cliffside Apts. on bus route $310 a month all inclusive 546-3609

1 Bedroom Available 2 bedroom apt. Clean with carpet and dishwasher. M/F $300/mo. Available now. Call Gareth 665-8693

2 Females looking for 1 or 2 roommates to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting Sept. 1. Call Laura 546-5525

1 Bedroom Available in 2br Colonial Village Apt. $300/month starting June 1. 253-5350

2 Females looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

Experienced College Student looking for residents in need of fast, cheap yard cleanups. Call Mark 256-3133

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Summer Sublet 2 bedrooms Colonial Village $600 a month 256-8027

Puffton Newly renovated 3 bedroom/2bath. Take over our lease partially furnished if needed fall option available 549-0432

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighboors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woodyl

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Room in 2 Bedroom brandywine apt. $365/1 person, $265/2 people each/ month. Call 549-6104

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

Starting June 1! 3 Bedroom Apt., Puffton Village $1010 a month Call 549-9959

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

TICKETS FOR SALE

Clapton Tickets for sale Call 546-6913

WANTED

JEWISH EGG DONORS NEEDED
$10,000
(plus all expenses)
We have many infertile families in need of the help of compassionate women in order to realize their dream of having a child. We are seeking women who are attractive, intelligent, between the ages of 18-30, physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help a family and would like more informaiton please contact us.
1-800-264-8828 or 1-619-234-6649
Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com
www.aperfectmatch.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 USA Bulletin Board
2 CBS / Boston
3 ABC 40 Springfield
4 NBC 10 Providence
5 FOX 25 Worcester/Channel
6 UPN 38 Hartford
7 WSBK 38 Worcester/Channel
8 WLVI 56 Cambridge
9 WHDH 7 Boston/Channel
10 WTXX 20 Hartford
11 WCVB 5 Boston/Channel
12 WWLP 22 Springfield/Channel
13 UMASS Cablecast Channel
14 WTNH 8 New Haven
15 WNEU
16 WSBE
17 UMASS Cablecast Channel
18 WGBY 57 Springfield/Channel
19 WGBH 2 Boston/Channel
20 WGBX 44 Boston/Channel
21 C-Span
22 CNN
23 New Hampshire News
24 Cablevision
25 USA
26 ESPN
27 ESPN 2
28 Sci-Fi
29 Discovery
30 Nickelodeon
31 Cartoon Network
32 Nick at Nite
33 TV Land
34 Comedy Central
35 BET
36 Lifetime
37 Home Shopping Network
38 College TV Network
39 MTV2
40 MTV
41 VH1
42 The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 10, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Survivor MD" (N)		Frontline "Medicating Kids"		Conversation With Elie Wiesel
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "Salvation" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Salvation" (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	About Joan	NYPD Blue "Nariz a Nariz"		News	Nightline
WLVI	9	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Redefinition" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fighting Fitz	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date	Blind Date	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Redefinition" (In Stereo)		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Fighting Fitz	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus (N)	Boot Camp (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fighting Fitz	DAG (N)	Frasier (N)	Three Sisters	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Survivor MD" (N)		Frontline "Medicating Kids"		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Spin City	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	About Joan	NYPD Blue "Nariz a Nariz"		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Frasier	Frasier	"Sneezer With the Vampire" (1954, Horror) Tom Cruise.				Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Med Abt. You
WTBS	72	Rosanne	Rosanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Philadelphia 76ers at Miami Heat. (Live)					Inside NBA	"Internal Affairs" (1990)
A&E	41	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Smith		City Confidential (N)		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Blood Libel"
CNN	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents a "Still Smokin'" (1983) Tommy Chong.				Premiere	Bartleboots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	42	Wild Discovery: Dolphins		Wild Discovery:	Ride	Prosecutors-Justice		New Detectives		FBI Files "A Master Plan"		Justice Files "DNA on Trial"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		Up Close Primetime		Bikes, Blades and Boards		Action Sports and Music Awards (N)				Sportscenter
LIFE	37	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Betty White"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		a/k/a "A Case for Life" (1994, Drama) Valerie Bertinelli.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	43	Meking-Band	Meking-Band	Meking-Band	TRL (In Stereo)			Music Videos (In Stereo)				Celebrity Undr	Contests
NICK	53	Pinky & Brain	Caldog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All In Family	All In Family
SCIFI	45	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Babylon Squared"		Crusade "The Needs of Earth"		a/k/a "Eagle From Mars" (1999, Science Fiction) Christina Elliott.				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Trauma: Life In the ER		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Treume: Life In the ER		Saving Life and Limb		Critical Incident 2: Priority One		Trauma: Life In the ER
TNT	63	ER "Let the Games Begn"		Pretender "Pool" (In Stereo)		Figure Skating: Champions on Ice. (In Stereo)						"Flying the Coop" (1997)
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Wilderness of Mirrors"		Intlantol Sled Dog Race (N) (In Stereo)				Eco-Challenge Borneo: Start to Finish (N) (In Stereo)
HBO	46	(5:00) "Sweet"	"The Chansaw Kid" (1996, Comedy) Sinbad.			"Where the Heart Is" (2000, Drama) Natalie Portman.		Making of 61		"Hanging Up" (2000) Meg Ryan.		Meid of Honor	Soprance "Second Opinion"
MAX	48	(5:00)	"Universal Soldier: The Return" (1999)			"Hanging Up" (2000) Meg Ryan.				"Late Placid" (1999) Bill Pullman.			"Andromina"
SHOW	49	"Things You Can Tell Just by Looking at Her" (2000)				"MOW" (1999) Elisabeth Shue.				Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)		Queer as Folk

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

WHAT WOULD ERIC DO...
ERIC STUDIES LONG HOURS INTO THE NIGHT TO DO WELL ON HIS TESTS
ERIC HELPS THE FOUR OLD LADY WITH CARRYING HER BAG OF GROCERIES
WHAT WOULD ADAM DO...
ADAM SLEEPS WITH HIS TEACHER'S TO GET THE 'A'
ADAM PUSHES HER DOWN AND STEALS HER CANE

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

HEY MOBY CHECK OUT MY NEW SONG.
I ALREADY SAMPLED IT AND MADE IT INTO A TECHNO HIT.
OH HERE, MEET MY GIRLFRIEND.
I ALREADY SAMPLED HER AND MADE HER INTO MY OWN FILM GIRLFRIEND.
8TH GRADE FEVER!

Hell Hath No Fury By Pedro Gomes

HEY SATAN, WHAT YOU READING?
OH I'M JUST READING THE MINUTEMAN.
YOU KNOW WHAT BUB? THE MINUTEMAN HAS MORE PROPAGANDA THAN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Masked Dropout By Bob Hewitt

I HOOKED UP WITH ANOTHER RANDOM GIRL LAST NIGHT, AND IT GOT ME THINKING...
HOW MANY ONE-NIGHT STANDS IS IT GONNA TAKE TO GET THE SAME FULFILLMENT AS ONE MEANINGFUL RELATIONSHIP?
I'D GUESS ABOUT NINE.
NINE?!
PERFECT. HERE I COME!!
MASKED DROPOUT by Bob Hewitt ©2001

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes

AT MONTGOMERY'S
LUNENBURN, (SOMEWHERE NEAR THE BOARDER).

HOME TO THE WINOS AND DRUMPKOCKING WALPOLERS FROM SKID ROW AND OTHER REPROACHING CHAMPIONS OF THE BOTTLE. A TAVERN KNOWN AS "THE DIVE" LOCATED SOUTHWEST 2 MILES IN THE WOODS. KNOWN FOR ITS FIRES AND ALSO THE SECRET HOME TO TOP COCK-FIGHTING BREEDERS IN THE BACKROOM WHO HAVE RAISED THEIR POULTRY WELL. INDEED. THEY NEED NO GUARD DOG TO HELP KEEP ANY SNITCHING RASCALS AWAY - NO SUCH SENTINEL IS NEEDED – GIBBONS. THEIR CHAMPION HEN CAN MONITOR THE PREMISIS AGAINST EVEN THE MOST UNWANTED INQUISITORS PROWLING AROUND.

Sometimes By Jacob Jones

Sometimes I like to eat at my grandma's house. She lets me eat ice-cream sandwiches for lunch.
one time though, I bumped into her really hard and my ice-cream fell on her good floor.
My grandma said "Hey! watch it you little ASSHOLE!" grandmas are really great.

Quote of the Day

"The space between what's right and wrong is where I'll be hiding out, waiting for you."

–Dave Matthews Band

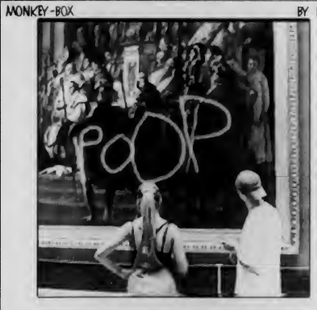
Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 61 LOW: 37	HIGH: 63 LOW: 39	HIGH: 61 LOW: 35

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19)- Doing the same thing day after day with the same person gets a little bit boring, especially today. If you aren't in a committed relationship, go out of your way to meet someone different from your usual type. If you are attached, do something surprising to add some zing to your relationship.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)- Strangers and loved ones will always leave you guessing, but today will be especially bad. Thing will not go as you planned at all today. However, no matter how determined you are, be gentle in your persuasion.
GEMINI (May 21-June 21)- You want to do what feels good, but good for whom? Certain traditions must be satisfied. Consider touring a museum or looking into some other vessel of history. This dilemma has occurred before.
CANCER (June 22-July 22)- Get your way by assuming that you've already won. Some would call it 'the big lie,' while others see it as 'manifesting your reality.' The strong always manage to survive – maybe it's because they take risks.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)- The good times seem to have passed you by. Few people care about your core issues or cherished memories. Maybe what you feel are growing pains. Like everyone else, you have to take your turn.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)- Surrender to impulse. Be a sucker for a pretty face. You're within your rights, and you're feeling lucky. The people with whom you break your date probably have something better to do anyway.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.23)- Be wary when starting a new relationship. The fireworks are great to look at while they're going off, but they don't last long. You might be better off looking for someone who has less flash and more substance.
SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21)- Your brain and your heart are an unbeatable team. Life is an open buffet table with lots of variety and unlimited portions. You'll get what you deserve, and you'll get enough of it.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)- You wish that you'd been paying attention when the current activity was being planned. You won't learn if you don't participate. Hold out your hand, confident that someone will take it.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)- Do you ever get the feeling like you're the one making all of the effort in your relationship? Pull back and let your partner take the reins for a while. If they refuse, perhaps you should rethink your commitment.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)- You feel like interpreting the rules literally, no matter where that takes you. Someone is sure to remember you for your role in today's discussion. Follow your heart today; it is sure to guide you correctly in your decisions.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)- Are you knocking on a door that refuses to open? You're either in the right place at the wrong time, or in the wrong place altogether. Scan the environment for subtle clues that pertain to your dilemma.

MONKEY-BOX BY PB&J



IT WASN'T INGRES' GREATEST WORK, BUT HIS MESSAGE WAS STILL LOUD AND CLEAR.

© 2001

www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Quarters (P) (B, F, H)

Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

BBQ Chicken (W)

DINNER

Greek Style Chicken(P)

Vegetable Cacciatore (vegan) (B, H, W)

Grilled Marinated Tofu with Black Bean Salsa (vegan)

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED COMPANY
298-BEDS (2337)/ 256-BEDS(2337)
328 College Street, Amherst

FINALLY!!! Amherst has a mattress & futon store conveniently located near downtown, next to The Spirit Haus on Rt. 9

GRAND OPENING & OPEN HOUSE

(FREE FOOD!!!)
SAT. MARCH 31 10-6
SUN. APRIL 1 12-5

futons-mattresses-beds-daybeds decorative pillows-lamps-storage platform beds-room dividers-rugs interior plants-end/coffee tables cots-foam-put/pout/papasan, ETC

I'm sure you haven't finished it yet.

ACROSS
1 Legit
7 "Get lost!"
12 Type of market
18 Days gone by
20 Dirt-ball
21 Blathered it
22 Signified
23 Sugar additive
24 Rams' horsin' partners
26 Curmudgeon
27 Land of 1-Across and the kung-fu
28 Euro-pipers
29 Occasionally
31 Land of 1-Across
32 Indoor cooking
34 Cry to 23 Across
36 Fishes
37 Sound words
40 Long-lasting animals
41 Unwasted drink
42 Chicago Loop features
45 Set-height
47 Touch of gray
48 Tic-tac-toe win
50 "Mercies"
51 44-across-ing
54 Underground chamber
57 Jacks
58 Mitchell's "__ Dick"
59 Name-dasher
61 A hoe
62 Fungus-eaters
63 Lawyer who's Fed
64 Lumber down in torrents
65 Cindy, eg.
66 Cry
67 Dryer
68 Bar's choices
69 Cindy, eg.

73 Pet's kin
74 Shylock
76 — of the blue
77 Paper bus
81 Uncommon to Claudius
82 Undone to near
83 Bowl-shaped
84 Ms. Gabor
85 Ad award
86 Dolphins
89 WWII Br-ish leader
92 Arms and legs
94 Helen of Idaho
95 Ms. Gabor
96 Original thought
98 Canceled
99 Cleaning powders
101 Use a fork
104 City of woe
106 "Dumbo" frame
109 Mrs. Vic's
110 "... the hells
113 Coners
114 Small terrible
115 Both regard
117 First performance
118 Dutch cheese
119 Expensive ind.
121 Makes bright
123 Treatable odds-n
124 Actor Ray
127 Supplement of belief
128 Small Hamlet smarted

130 Put money in shirt-n
131 Tub-n-the-bubble
132 Actor Lugosi
134 Actor's prompt
137 Make reservations
138 Playground game
139 Artisan desert
140 Unemployed
141 Compliant
142 Mr. Jones
143 Bleed

DOWN
1 Smeached
2 Connected to the Internet
3 Picturesque
4 Harden
5 Mr. Kerr of the comics
6 Takes a break
7 Group gatherings
8 Bray
9 Pinches
10 Sculpture and music
11 Famous Chairman
12 Is scared of
13 Starving artsy
14 Computer
15 Urgent
16 Blue-pants
17 Computer-ize
18 Jealous-y and
19 Jaunty hats
22 Tar sea-
25 Singer Judd
30 Mountains
33 Served perfectly
35 Fined
37 Crewed
38 Swimsuit
39 Snapped
42 Grossed
43 Tan-wearers
46 Exhibits
47 Relax in pain
49 Laundry need
50 Kelvin happening
52 Pepsi's partner
53 Mrs. Fonda's Bikko
55 Anteaten
56 Japanese city
60 Sweet-companion
64 Expense
71 Jobbers
76 Rulers
80 Write a message on a gift base
81 Hello-ers
82 Make entrance
83 Gambles
85 — mater
86 Blue pottery of Holland
87 Discouraged
91 Nana, nahua
94 Farmer's delight
95 Bray
97 Pinches
98 Type of sa-ing vessel
99 Florence
100 Nonsense
101 Bonkers's id
102 Picks over carefully
104 They're often guided
106 Puts away a sword
107 Penny pinchy
108 Perfect tee Batman
111 Fined
112 Hazardous gas
115 Moved slowlyly
116 Affirmative vote
118 Motor
119 Shade sound
120 Furthermore-ish
122 Gallery
123 Victor's wreath
124 Sophisticated
126 Gumshoe's aid
129 Bamboo
131 Part of the face
133 Does medicine
135 Scholarly notation
137 Prudular-ance
138 Small cabinet
139 Lyric poems
139 Same-say summary
140 Kind of bean
141 "Beetle" author Lewis
142 Dan. mrs.
143 Broken-Hebb-e-g

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Dan Santella
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santora
Production Staff	Jarrett Brimmer, Mike Kulak

The puck drops here: NHL playoff preview inside

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, April 10, 2001 | 10

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass pitching keeps Dukes down

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

Different day, different game. The simple beauty of baseball.

The Massachusetts baseball team [7-11, 4-2 Atlantic 10] bounced back yesterday afternoon with a strong nine innings of baseball against Duquesne [10-16, 1-5 A-10], after playing the Dukes to mixed results this weekend. Taking advantage of both strong pitching and batting, the Minutemen downed the Dukes 7-1, to take the series 2-1 and gain important conference ground.

Senior pitcher Nick Skirkanich earned the complete game win, allowing one run on eight hits and striking out 10 to improve to 3-1 on the season. It was his composure on the mound, says head coach Mike Stone, that gave UMass ample opportunity to take the game.

"It was an outstanding job by Nick on the mound," Stone said. "It set the tone for everything. [Skirkanich] was really the story; he did a great job against some pretty good hitters out there."

The Duquesne hitters got an early jump on Skirkanich in the top of the first, though, when sophomore outfielder Mark Lyons took the UMass righty deep, his third long ball of the series with the Minutemen, to give the Dukes the 1-0 lead. The lone run would constitute Duquesne's scoring for the day, however, as Skirkanich quickly went to work with a solid defense behind him.

After scoring a single run in the bottom of the first, the Minutemen began to break away in the bottom of the sixth inning, bringing home two runs off the bat of junior third baseman Aaron Senez.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Aaron Senez led the offensive charge for the Minutemen in their 7-1 win over Duquesne. Senez delivered the go-ahead single in the bottom of the sixth.

Senior Nick Gorneault led off the inning on an error by Dukes shortstop Dan Schwartzbauer, and was followed onto the base paths by first baseman Jeff Altieri, who took an off-speed pitch to the body. Senior Gavin Clark advanced the runners with a sacrifice bunt, setting up Senez, who ripped a single up the middle to score the runners and give the Minutemen a 3-1 lead.

Senez battled well at the plate all afternoon, picking up three RBI's and a hit to augment his defensively sound performance in the field.

"You could tell by [Senez's] body language that he was really tearing down out there," Stone said. "He had two strong appearances, with the walk and then the single. It was great. We need more performances like that."

Defensively, the Minutemen performed solidly for the full nine, overcoming two errors with what was otherwise an exceptional clinic in proper fielding. In the top of the sixth, the UMass infield smothered the Duquesne offense, as it would for much of the afternoon. Skirkanich picked up a strikeout, and shortstop Matt Boulanger made a stellar grab off the dirt, sending the ball across the infield to a lunging Altieri at first to retire the side.

UMass added three more runs in the bottom of the seventh, thanks in part to the Duquesne pitching staff. The DU hurlers struggled around the plate all afternoon, walking six Minuteman batters and giving up a number of hard groundballs that would prove costly.

Gorneault stepped up to the plate with one out and two runners on and slapped a single to center, scoring sophomore Matt Boulanger. Altieri was again hit by a pitch to load the bases, setting up Senez, who was issued a walk to force in Connell Clark from third. Gorneault himself would cap the rally he began, scoring on a wild pitch to put the Minutemen up 6-1.

UMass was able to turn a number of routine grounders into legitimate scoring chances all afternoon with smart base running and capitalize on a handful of mental errors by the Dukes.

Altieri would pick up an RBI in the eighth, sending home Clark to top off the scoring. UMass collected eight hits to secure the victory, their sixth in the last 10 games. For Stone, the win comes at a welcome time and is an indicator of what the near future holds for his club.

"Any time you take a series, it's important," Stone said. "I still believe we can play better, a lot better, and there are certain things we can improve on. We got the second win, though, and we've got seven [on the year] now. We did a good job."

***

Stone and Co. will take this afternoon off, and get back into action tomorrow when Sacred Heart University [5-17] visits Earl Lorden Field. Despite sitting a daunting 12 games under .500, Sacred Heart has the potential to upset a surging UMass squad, which will need strong performances from its top guns to steal the game.

Altieri has been strong since stepping up to the leadership role Stone penciled him in for prior to the season. The sophomore leads the team in RBI's with 21, and in 66 plate appearances has garnered 23 hits, including three homeruns. Altieri has also brought a stellar defensive awareness to first, routinely flagging down balls headed out of play.

Gorneault has quietly moved to the top of the offensive categories as well, turning his four years of college experience into intelligent and well-fought plate appearances. Through 18 games, the senior captain leads the club in batting at .415, and hits, with 27, including two homeruns and 13 RBI's.

On the mound, junior Brian Hourigan will see his first action since April 4, when he allowed seven hits and seven runs in only 2 1/3 innings of work to Central Connecticut State. With enough run support behind him, however, Hourigan can dictate the mood of a game, and will be looking to do what he can to help UMass inch closer to the .500 mark.

"We just need to play well," Stone said. "They should be a tough team to beat. If this team plays like they can, and if [we] play team oriented baseball, we'll have a good showing. Everyday we'll be a decent ball club, and we should be a tough team to beat."

Tennis tops Owls in pivotal match

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's tennis team journeyed to West Point, N.Y. Saturday to face one of its most critical challenges of the season from Atlantic 10 foe Temple University.

After the Colonials of George Washington cancelled in March due to inclement weather, Judy Dixon and her crew knew that the match with the Owls would be pivotal in terms of seeding for the upcoming conference tournament. The Maroon and White rose to the occasion with a 4-3 victory that sent Temple packing.

"It was a huge victory," said assistant Coach Scott Wilkins. "We knew going into [the match] how important it was to get a seed in the top four for the A-10 tournament. With this win we're estimating that we have the two seed. This is the first time we've beaten Temple. We actually lost last year 7-0 so we're happy to avenge that."

The doubles play set the tone for the Minutemen as all three tandems defeated their opposition and captured points for the squad. The duos of Steve Prisco/Brent Davis and Rory Theis/Bill Greener breezed past their competitors 8-3. The pair of Will Shaw and Todd Champeau squeezed out a 9-8 win against the Owls' Jensen Bascome/Gaurav Kumar.

With that point under their belt, freshmen Theis and Davis pulled out key singles wins 6-1, 6-3 and 7-5, 7-5 respectively. With the score tied at 3-3, the entire match rested on the shoulders of the experienced senior captain Greener.

"It came down to Billy at the end," said Prisco. "No one played really well except Bill. He won the first set and then lost the second set 1-6. He was down 2-0 in the third set and then he just pulled through and won six straight games."

While the Owls flew home, the Maroon and White stepped up to its next challenge in the doubleheader Saturday as they took on host Army. With their victory posted, the squad was all smiles in a relaxed, low-key match against a tough opponent.

"We lost 6-1, but anything we did against Army was pretty much icing on the cake," said Champeau. "We were competitive and there were a lot of tight matches. Everyone played well."

Prisco, at No. 1 singles, was the lone member of the squad to pull out a win 7-5 against Marshall Clay of Army.

Sunday would have concluded the all-important weekend for the UMass men with a match against the Wildcats of Villanova University. However, the match was cancelled due to rain and will not be rescheduled with the Atlantic 10 tournament approaching on Thursday.

"With the win against Temple we see ourselves as probably at the two seed," said Wilkins. "We'll have a bye in the first round and then potentially we'll play Dayton at No. 7 in the semifinals.

"If we win, we would play St. Bonaventure in the finals," he continued. "St. Bonaventure is the team to beat right now, in our opinion. The top five are all pretty close but we see them as being just a little better than everybody else."

If the squad manages to be crowned Atlantic 10 champions they will compete in the NCAA tournament for the first time in UMass men's tennis history.

Minutemen end dream season

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's gymnastics team finished off the season at the NCAA Championship last weekend in the 11 spot, a place that's been so familiar all season.

Last Wednesday, the Minutemen headed to Ohio State for the annual tourney of the best of the best. The team started off in 10th place, a spot it has bounced back and forth from, and on Thursday it placed its third highest score of the season with a score of 208.700.

The Maroon and White placed fifth behind Oklahoma, California-Berkley, Penn State and Illinois. UMass was able to pull five points ahead of Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) rival Temple, but was unsuccessful in qualifying for the team finals on Friday.

"I thought our effort was outstanding," head coach Roy Johnson said. "To come to the NCAAs and record one of your highest scores of the season shows that you have some talent."

Four top gymnasts from UMass qualified for the individual round on Friday. Freshman Patrick McFarlin took second place on the pommel horse on Thursday, earning him a spot, while Brian Peterson and Justin Hammar also competed individually on the pommel horse.

Frosh Darren Morace tied with Hammar on the pommel but did not continue to Friday. In the event of a tie, the gymnast with the highest total individual score continues on. McFarlin finished 59th on Friday on the pommel horse, while Hammar was just behind at 42nd. Peterson led the pack by finishing in the 32nd spot.

Senior Brian McNulty qualified on Thursday for the individual competition on the floor exercise. McNulty advanced to Friday with a 9.2 on the floor exercise, in eighth place. The veteran continued to the individual finals and finished 11th in the country at 8.425.

"We knew Brian was capable of hitting his floor set," Johnson said.

The Minutemen have had a consistent campaign this season, showing growth from last year. The team won its third straight conference championship.

"The season was just great," Johnson said. "We were better than last year. We were really in the hunt."

The team will lose some of its top gymnasts to graduation this spring. The 2000-01 season was the last for Michael Alexander, Eric Bacon, Chad Bennett, Ben Kandel, McNulty, Hammar, Andy Leis and J.J. Hershey.

"I'll miss the leadership of those six guys and the I'll especially miss the captainship of Andy Leis and J.J. Hershey," Johnson said.

Even with the a chunk of the team moving on, UMass still has next season to look forward to. The underclassmen of the men's gymnastics team will look to move it a step ahead of this season. The Minutemen have finished their competition for the winter season, but coach Johnson will continue to work with his team at modified practices to be ready for next winter.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Bryan McNulty qualified for the individual competition in the floor excercise at the NCAA tournament. McNulty's score of 8.425 earned him 11th place in the nation.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Spring Guide 2001

Wednesday, April 11, 2001 www.dailycollegian.com

Movin' on up, UMass style

Hey, you mustered enough independence to leave the nest and come away to college, didn't you? Now don't you think it's about time you got out of the dorms and got your own place?

Every spring, thousands of University of Massachusetts students make that very decision and begin the sometimes mind-boggling task of finding a rental property. These students have reached the University's requirements for off-campus living, and are often just plain sick of all the hassles of dormitory living.

They're sick of the floor meetings and fire alarms. The debacle of "move in day" and the chaos of alcohol-fueled weekends. The sweltering days in stuffy, cell-like rooms and the frustrating nights spent driving aimlessly around campus in search of a parking space.

So let's say it's you who has made the decision to finally move off campus. What next? The Pioneer Valley is literally strewn with apartment complexes, dozens of them, as well as hundreds of individual rental properties that each offers a somewhat unique living environment. Sorting through all the residence possibilities can leave you a bit frazzled, if not completely burnt out.

But once again, the Collegian has come to your rescue.

We are pleased to present this year's Collegian Apartment Guide, a comprehensive compilation of the most useful information any rental property hunter might need. It all starts up front, where you'll find our own personal experiences with many of the area's biggest complexes. Through the collective rental experience of our staff, you'll get first-hand accounts of just what each area has to offer, as well as some possible snags you should be on the lookout for.

Turning to the inside reveals a wealth of advertising, allowing the complexes and agencies themselves a chance to provide you with contact information as well as all the necessary details to get you acquainted with their operations. Rounding out the guide is a special collection of housing classifieds, offering a plethora of unique situational opportunities that may or may not fit your housing needs to a T.

Of course, there are still a lot of choices to be made. House or apartment? Townhouse or flat? Uptown or on the outskirts? Though you will have many decisions to make in the quest for perfect housing, there are a few questions that you should always keep in mind when considering a rental property:

1. Location. Can you walk to campus? Is it on the PVTA bus line?

2. Efficiency. What type of fuel is used to heat or cool the property? Can I expect spikes in utility bills during the summer and winter?

3. Parking. Are stickers issued? Is there guest parking? What is the towing policy?

4. Maintenance. Is there an on-site staff? How long do they typically take to respond? What about snow and trash removal?

5. Amenities. Are there laundry machines available? How about recreational facilities? What is the mail system like?

6. Monetary issues. How long is the lease? How big is the security deposit? Do they offer a referral program?

With these questions and a little common sense, your search for the perfect rental property should be ultimately successful. Happy Hunting!

-Adam White

SCOTT ELDREDGE II / COLLEGIAN

One of the uniquely shaped units at Puffton Village. See write-up on back cover.

Under your own roof: houses versus apartments

ADAM DEYOUNG

Next year while living off-campus you could shovel your own driveway, pay an arm and a leg for electricity and drive to campus and try to find a place to park. You could lose your money, use community laundry and have all of your friends towed for parking. Which will it be for you? I have lived off campus in both an apartment complex and a house so I thought I should compare them for those of you who can't decide where to live.

Over the past year I have had the opportunity to live in a house with six other guys. Luckily for me, all of them are fairly neat and easy to live with so that was not a problem. There were, however, some problems with living in a house. First off, the electric bill was not included in our rent; the heat was electric and the bill was out of control. From month to month, our electric bill would range from $200-$300. The second problem with living in a house is that you, in most cases, have to shovel your own driveway (not to mention mowing the lawn in the spring and summer). Maybe I am jaded after the marathon winter we had this year, but it was unbearable and made it very difficult to make it to class on a snowy morning. The other major problem was the distance we had to travel to campus. While our house was fairly close to a bus route, the bus that made it down that way only came once an hour. This being said, driving to campus can be difficult since everyone knows how much of a pain parking can be.

There certainly are some positives to living in a house. You are further out of the way, so therefore it is easier to throw a party and not have it get shut down. Secondly, parking is never a problem. There has always been plenty of room at our house to park. One of the best advantages to having a house is that we have a huge yard, which was nice for having bar-b-ques and other get-togethers where guests could spread out.

Living in an apartment complex can be difficult too. One of the major problems with living in an apartment complex is parking. While living there I found it very difficult to find parking for friends and family who wanted to come visit. There was very limited visitor parking and when visitors would use resident parking they would, more often than not, get towed (at $100 a pop). Secondly, community laundry can be a pain. If you can get a place that has it's own washer and dryer, go for it, but if not, that can be a major problem when looking to move into an apartment complex. The other major problem was trying to get back our security deposit from the management of the complex. They were very inattentive to our needs throughout the year for getting repairs done on the apartment, but when it came time to moving out, they were very detailed in their inspection and the amount of money they subtracted from our final security deposit was outrageous. Motto here...be careful, you could get screwed.

Apartment complexes can also be a lot of fun. Living in a community of hundreds of other students can be very interesting at times, but it can also be fun in that you are meeting quite a few people, of your own age. Another upside to living in an apartment is that most apartment complexes are right on a bus route, making it extremely easy to get to campus. Never underestimate the power of the PVTA. There is one final thing that is great about living in an apartment complex: looking for something to do on the weekends? There's always a party going on throughout the complex.

So, the moral of this little story is this. If you are looking for a good time, date in and day out, move into an apartment complex. If you are looking for a spacious area where you can frolic and throw crazy parties once in a while a house is for you. However, for my money, an apartment is the way to go, there are far less hassles to deal with and plenty of fun to be had.

Adam DeYoung is a UMass student.

Hampton Gardens

For those who wish to live within Northampton's culturally diverse borders, Hampton Gardens offers one-bedroom flats and two, three or four-bedroom townhouses.

Each unit has been recently renovated, and features many creature comforts to please any potential renter.

A new gas furnace heats each unit. For those summer months, each unit has two sleeves for air conditioning. Tenets may provide their own AC units or lease them from Hampton Gardens. Utilities, both gas and electric, average about $80 combined per month. Kitchens are fully equipped with gas ranges, dishwashers and refrigerators.

Hampton Garden's round the clock maintenance staff is on-site, each equipped with a cell phone to ensure quick, responsive service. There are two snowplows and one sander truck owned by the complex, as well as several snow blowers. Snow removal is right to the doorsteps.

There are two trash centers on the complex property. Tenets need only bring their trash there, and recycling is not mandatory.

Parking, the bane of Amherst living, is not a problem at Hampton Gardens. Situated on 20 acres, the complex has six official parking lots and a long road setting it back from town and adjoining properties.

Residents and visitors alike can park where they please, so long as the snow parking policy is not in effect. Those are the only circumstances which cars are towed, baring emergencies.

There is also a child's playground on the property.

Hampton Gardens is on the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority's bus route, and a short ride will put you in Northampton center, with connections to the University of Massachusetts, Amherst College and the rest of the Pioneer Valley.

If you can stand the commute, you'll benefit from Northampton's entertainment and artistic centers. The Ironhorse, the Calvin theatre, as well as night clubs, bars, taverns, galleries, museums and countless other cultural goldmines lay waiting in your back yard. Northampton is also the county seat, meaning no more long trips for jury duty or to appeal that "disorderly conduct" mix-up from last Thursday.

– Ken Campbell

Southpoint Apartments

Located down Route 116 in South Amherst, Southpoint offers apartments of virtually every size and in two different styles. The townhouses are comprised of a lower living room / dining room / half-bath / kitchen area with a sliding glass back door, with an upstairs of bedrooms and a full bath. The flats offer both walled and open-air kitchens as well as wall-to-wall carpeting and liberal closet space.

The key word when it comes to Southpoint is efficient. Heat and hot water are included in the monthly rental costs, keeping utility bills to a minimum and allowing residents to keep their apartments as comfortable as they'd like during the winter.

When it comes to maintenance, Southpoint has one of the friendliest and most knowledgeable staffs around. Willie and his crew seem to be everywhere at once, and they possess enough maintenance expertise to fix most apartment problems (even appliance repairs) on the spot and in a timely fashion.

There are dumpsters situated throughout the complex, so residents don't have to worry about paying extra for trash removal. Snow plowing is also taken care of by the management.

Parking regulations at Southpoint are surprisingly lax – no stickers are necessary, yet there never seems to be too much of a shortage of spaces. That comes in handy when guests come to visit and don't need to worry about being towed.

Mail is delivered to a central building, where residents use their own key to access individual boxes. One upside of the mail system at Southpoint is that when agents like UPS and Fed Ex try to deliver packages and the recipient isn't home, they can leave the packages off at the rental office for pickup later.

Recreational areas are where Southpoint sets itself apart from the competition. The complex boasts a soccer field – complete with goals – as well as full-sized basketball and tennis courts. These areas are seldom too crowded but when the sun is shining, it's easy to find fellow residents with which to strike up a friendly game.

Getting between Southpoint and campus doesn't even require a car – Route 31 of the PVTA circles right through the complex's parking lot daily. The Hampshire Mall and Wal Mart are also situated within a five-minute drive of Southpoint, giving residents easy access to lots of retail shopping possibilities.

There are a few things that potential residents should keep in mind when considering Southpoint. First of all, the complex is home to a number of families, so the presence of children pretty much comes with the territory. This comes into play most often on the basketball court, where games will commonly feature players ranging from junior high to college age.

The second thing to consider is laundry. The individual units themselves do not have hookups for laundry machines – coin-operated machines are instead situated in central areas for a number of units to share. Each load costs $1 (seemingly a fair deal), but the machines are smaller than commercial ones and the dryers usually require two cycles to fully dry your clothes. Plus, if you don't monitor your load too closely, you could end up with your clothes piled up on top of a machine by the impatient fellow-resident who is next in line.

But these are relatively small prices to pay for the affordable and comfortable lifestyle you will enjoy living at Southpoint Apartments and Townhouses.

-Adam White

Uncommonly Alpine Commons

Located off of Route 9, Alpine Commons brings its outstanding quality of living for students at the University of Massachusetts.

It houses either a two bedroom or four bedroom apartment that cost around $360 per month per person. While the cost of living might seem like a lot, there are many things that the apartment complex includes.

One advantage right off the bat is that the apartment comes with heat, hot water and air conditioning. The heat and hot water keeps you nice and warm during the long, long stretch of bitter cold air that Amherst feels during the fall and winter months. However, the AC is an added bonus because when it finally does get hot during the beginning and the end of the school year, it can get sweltering. Having the AC included gives you comfort in your apartment and saves you money from having to buy a fan that won't work or an AC that will hang in your window in only one room, not the entire apartment.

All this and you don't have to pay any electrical or heating bills, so you keep your apartment cool in the summer, hot in the winter and a little lighter on the pocket.

Another advantage is that the apartment does not require a car to get on campus. Alpine Commons is located a stone's throw away from Colonial Village. Route number 30 of the UMass Transit System runs daily and until at least 1:00 a.m.

The four bedroom apartments offer two bathrooms, which is a definite advantage. This is especially important just in case you have those roommates who take a long time to get ready for anything. Also, the apartment includes a dishwasher. While it might be a minor detail to some, how many students really feel like they have the time to clean dishes with everything else going on in their life?

Another advantage is that the apartment is located within walking distance of Cumberland Farms. What advantage you might ask? Well, during the weekend you might do a little drinking and you might need a snack afterwards. What better place to grab a snack than at Cumberland Farms?

The only drawback for residents would be parking on the weekends. With no visitor parking lot and not enough room to have one, parking on Friday and Saturday nights can be a hassle. With the majority of cars double and triple parked, plan on getting a ride for whatever weekend pleasure you decide to undertake.

If you can stand the cramped weekend parking and are looking for a great place to live, then Alpine Commons fits the bill.

-David Rose

SCOTT ELDREDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S

Now...The lifestyle you've been waiting for...
Luxury two and three bedroom apartment in Amherst

Amenities Include:
- Central Location
- Mountain Views
- Private Entries! Select Apartments
- On PVTA Bus route
- On site day care center
- Play areas
- Victory Gardens
- Tennis & Basketball Courts
- Laundry Room

We Offer:
- Heat & Hot Water included in your rent
- Wall to Wall Carpet
- Washer/Dryer Hookups
- Air Conditioning
- Fully Appliances Kitchens dishwashers, disposals
- Intercom (Entry) System
- Professional On Site Management
- 24 Hour Maintenance

420 Riverglade Drive, Amherst
Just off Rt. 9, Take West St. (Rt. 116) to East Hadley Rd.
Take First Left onto Riverglade Drive.

Equal Housing Opportunity

- Apartments in All Sizes -
We even have 4 & 5 Bedroom Apartments

Square Village

- ✓ Spacious Bedrooms
- ✓ High-speed Internet service available
- ✓ In-ground swimming pool
- ✓ On free PVTA bus service to UMass and the Five College Area
- ✓ Located near a shopping center with a 24 hour convenience store and a coffee shop
- ✓ Air conditioning
- ✓ Large walk-in closets
- ✓ Wall-to-wall carpeting
- ✓ Fully applianced, including dishwasher
- ✓ Ceramic tiled bathrooms
- ✓ Hot water included in all 1 & 2 Bedroom
- ✓ Large windows, including a sliding glass door in the Dining Room
- ✓ Ample, well-lit parking on-site
- ✓ Smart card laundry facility on-site
- ✓ On-site management and maintenance

Spacious Apartments in a Scenic Location
279 Amherst Road · Sunderland, MA 01375 · (413) 665-2203

We have your reasons for living off- campus!!!

Come by and see our model

Monday - Thursday
9 am - 5 pm
Friday 9 am - 6pm

Evenings & Saturdays by appointment

BRANDYWINE AT AMHERST

- Spacious 1 and 2 Bedroom
- Close to Umass
- On-site Laundry Facilities
- Swimming Pool
- Beautiful Grounds
- Central Air Conditioning
- On the Bus Line
- Heat, ot Water, Gas Inc.
- Private Balconies
- Sorry, No Pets

Brandywine Apartments
549-0600
www.brandywine-apts.com
16G Brandywine Dr., Amherst, MA 01002

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

1 Bedroom North Pleasant St. Apt. Heat/hot water included. Available May 1. Call 256-4287

2 Bdrm Available in 3bdrm apt. Turn of century home on the Commons in Belchertown Center. Beautiful wood floors, washer/dryer. Parking and lawn space. House is literally seconds from bus stop. (413) 323-0584 tuck@unbounded.com

Take over our lease 2 bedroom apt. Starting June 1st. Call 549-7053 for details.

Summer Sublet/Fall Option 1 Bedroom on bus route. Call 665-6799

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom apt. on Main St. $775/month. Washer/dryer & dishwasher. Utilities not included. Call 256-1809

Take over our lease We'll split the summer with you. 549-9653

Summer Sublet with fall option in Brandywine. Furniture included. 548-6991

Salem Place 3 bedroom, 2 bath. Great location, all new appliances. $1265/mo. Available June 1. Call 253-6733

Beautiful Apartment with best view in Boulders. Very spacious, private, clean. Great for four or two! Singles also welcome. Refurnished cabinets and bathroom & walk-in closets. Security Dep. Req. - Call Patrick or Peter 256-3045

Amherst Apartment Available June 1st for summer sublet with fall option. One bedroom in North East Terrace Condominium Complex. Single occupancy only. $675 a month. Call 256-4135

3 Bedroom 2 bath Puffton Apartment available June 1st w/option of renew. Good times. Call 549-7782

4 Bedroom on Main St. Lease starting June 1st. Call 253-5180

Furnished Apt. in Boulders. 2 bedroom, 1 bath, on bus route, kitchen fully equiped. $820/month. Available June 15. Heat and hot water inc. 1yr lease. Call Stacey or Jeff 256-3731

30 Second Walk from Campus Looking for 2 Females to share a room in a house on Nutting Ave. Great deal! Call Sarah 549-6603

Amherst Center
1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos
3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass cernter, bus. $550, hear, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Female Wanted to share apt @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

2 Bedroom in Colonial Village available June 1. $600/month. Call 253-5351

Large 4 Bedroom on Main St. Washer/dryer. Available June 1st. Call 253-5151

Large Private Bedroom in 8 bedroom house on Main St. All utilities included. Available June 1st. Call 256-4627

3 Bedroom renovated apartment in Puffton Village. Available June 1st. Call 549-3557

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts. com or 549-0600.

Puffton Village 3 Bedroom renovated near bus stop available June 1. 549-9486

Renovated, Puffton Apartment. Available 6-1. 3 bedroom, $1155. 549-7465

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighbors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woody

2 Bedroom Puffton Available June 1st A/C, hot water, renovated. Call 549-9468

Take over our lease for Puffton 3 bedroom furniture option. Lease date negotiable. Call Nikki at 549-0909

4 Bedroom Apt. available June 1. On bus Rt. 1 mile from campus, lots of space. Shed for storage. Cable

Sugarloaf Estates & Alpine Commons

- A+ Luxury 2 Bedroom Apartment Houses
- A+ Free Heat & Hot Water
- A+ Washers & Dryers Selected Styles
- A+ New Oak Kitchens
- A+ Designer Baths
- A+ Elegant Mirrored Accents
- A+ Sand Volleyball Courts
- A+ Sparkling Inground Pool

- A+ Spacious 4 Bedroom Floor Plan
- A+ 2 Full Private Baths
- A+ Sliding Doors To Private Balconies
- A+ All Utilities Included
- A+ On-Site Laundry Facilities
- A+ 3 Miles From Campus
- A+ Oak Kitchens With Breakfast Bars
- A+ Picnic Area/BBQ

28 River Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
sugarloaf· estates@aspensquare.com
665-3856

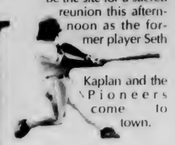
133 Belchertown Road
Amherst, MA 01002
alpine commons@aspensquare.com
256-0741

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 114 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, April 11, 2001

Big Pun is still releasing albums. Turn to Arts for the review.

ARTS p. 6



Earl Lorden Field will be the site for a sacred reunion this afternoon as the former player Seth Kaplan and the Pioneers come to town.

SPORTS p. 12

UMass-Boston gets chancellor via ODU

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The Boston campus of the University of Massachusetts has a new chancellor. President William Bulger announced Monday that Dr. Jo Ann Gora, currently provost at Old Dominion University, will be submitted for the Board of Trustees' approval.

Dr. Gora will succeed former Chancellor Sherry Penney, who resigned after a critical evaluation was leaked to the Boston Globe.

"Dr. Gora is a builder and a leader," Bulger said. "She has faced challenges, fashioned responses and enjoyed impressive success.

"Jo Ann Gora is a creative, imaginative, dynamic leader, and we are very pleased to welcome her to the University of Massachusetts family," UMass President William M. Bulger added. "Dr. Gora is a passionate advocate for public higher education and brings with her a proven record of accomplishment. She is the right person at the right time for this campus."

Dr. Gora, a graduate of Vassar College and Rutgers University, has been Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs since 1992. She has authored a book on feminism and criminal trends, and coauthored another on professionalism among volunteer medics. She has also published numerous articles in the fields of criminology, medical sociology and organizational behavior. Among her accomplishments at Old Dominion was the institution of a program that places students in an internship in their field of study, guaranteed.

"Dr. Gora is exceptionally well qualified for the Chancellorship at the University of Massachusetts at Boston," Old Dominion President James Koch said. "She is well-versed on metropolitan institutions and, as Acting President here, has led one very capably. She is going to be an outstanding leader."

"I come to the University of Massachusetts-Boston with a great sense of excitement and purpose. UMass-Boston is poised to become a true 21st century university – focused on the community, fostering economic development, contributing to policy formation and providing opportunities for lifelong learning," Gora said.

"I look forward to working with the campus community in this effort and am confident that we can help the campus fulfill its boundless promise."

Former co-workers at ODU will miss Gora, but are happy for her success.

"She's a great administrator," Associate Vice President for Academic Affairs David Hager said. "Our loss is UMass-Boston's gain."

"I think she'll make some significant steps at UMass that will fit very nicely with the type of university that UMass Boston is," John R. Broderick, Vice President for Institutional Advancement, said. "She's done a very good job here of reaching out to the non-traditional student body. I think a lot of what she's been able to do at Old Dominion is either needed or wanted at UMass-Boston.

"One thing you can rest assured of, she's an academic and a strong academic," Broderick added. "She's going to let research be her guide. Good administrators know that you don't take a step forward unless you look around and see what's in place."

COURTESY OLD DOMINION UNIVERSITY

Dr. Jo Ann Gora was announced as Chancellor of Umass-Boston.

Police account auto destruction

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Two students were arrested in separate incidents for destruction of motor vehicles this weekend as part of an ongoing process by the University of Massachusetts Police Department to crack down on crimes of this type.

Nineteen-year-old Peter Bottachiari of Medway was arrested on early Sunday morning in lot 32 after he was observed kicking in a front passenger marker directional light and cracking it. He was charged with wanton destruction of property valued at under $250.

Another arrest was made on Sunday in lot 27 at 2:56 a.m. when 20-year-old David Dow of Carlisle was also arrested for wanton destruction of property valued at over $250. An officer patrolling the lot observed him smashing the mirror on the driver's side of a vehicle parked in lot 27.

Jim Lyons, spokesman for the UMPD explained that students should be on the lookout for issues that surround their vehicles and report to the police any damage or missing items from their vehicles. In the past few weeks there have been a number of vehicles that have either been damaged or broken into.

Police received a call about a suspicious person in Chadbourn Dormitory on Thursday. Nineteen-year-old Todd Rathier of Leominster was arrested for trespassing

Turn to POLICE page 3

UMass walks for more safety

SCOTT BLEDSOE/ COLLEGIAN

Jim Eltringham (center), Speaker of the SGA Senate, stands outside the Student Union before taking part in the Safety Walk.

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

A walk for safety engulfed the University of Massachusetts last night for the second time this year.

"The overall goal here is to enhance safety on campus, especially after dark," said Jack Luippold, UMass police department's Chief of Police.

The walk included several representatives of the area community, as well as public officials such as members of UMass Police, Environmental Health and Safety, Parking Services, the Student Government Association (SGA) and Housing Services.

The event takes place each semester when the sun goes down in hopes to identify areas of possible un-safe activity. According to Luippold, UMass students are asked where they would like the walk to take place, and then an assessment of where they actually go is determined.

"The purposes [of the walk] are two-fold," said Luippold. "One [purpose] is going around and identifying lighting that needs to be replaced, and the second is identifying areas that may need new lights, new help phones."

Before the walk began everyone in attendance was split into a group and sent to a specific area on campus. One group was sent to Southwest, one group to Lower Central, one group to the North Village area, and one group around the area known as the "academic circle" which extends from the proximity of the campus center to the fine arts center.

During the walk, which took approximately one hour, trekkers were encouraged to point out anything that they felt could be a possible problem, as well as give immediate suggestions on how to fix it.

"Pipe up when you have a suggestion," exclaimed SGA representative Jim Eltringham.

Some of the things that were found to be problematic included lights either not turned on, or positioned in a way that did not lend to their optimum visual capabilities, as well as sidewalks being chopped apart by the roots of large trees.

Patrick Daly, the associate director of utilities and engineering pointed out a newly constructed Stockdale Road, which he said there was a request from the state to repair. Ed Kammerer, a sophomore English major who was participating with the group that explored Lower Central, quickly pointed out that all of the lights leading up the trail from the bottom of Orchard Hill, to the top were not lit.

Eltringham noted the crosswalks in front of the Hills buildings as a point of his personal interest, saying that they may be positioned in the wrong places. "You really have to have your head in the game if you're going to walk the crosswalks there," he said.

After the walk, all of the suggestions made will be typed up and sent to a safety commission, and things will be followed up on.

To those involved, the safety walk appeared a success. "I was impressed with the turnout," said Officer David Black of the UMass Police Department. "It's good to see students taking the time to be with us. It's just reassuring the efforts the university has gone through to make to make the university better."

As for the repairs that may have been discovered, Daly said that light installation and expensive jobs would take a little time, but necessary repairs to lights would be done immediately.

Kammerer expressed a very positive feeling about his duty towards the community. "It was very good and helpful," he said. "It's a way for myself and my friends can walk on campus." Kammerer is also a university tour guide, and said that being involved makes it more possible for him to honestly pass safety information on to perspective students.

"I thought it went well," said Eltringham. "We had a really astute group. The more walks you go on, the more progress you see."

Amherst Police get state accreditation

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Police Department was awarded the distinction of becoming the only department aside from the Waltham Police Department to receive accreditation from the state.

Accreditation is given to outstanding police departments throughout the state and is a voluntary process that requires departments to apply and then be evaluated by a commission of chosen individuals. The rules for accreditation are stringent, with a department being faced with meeting 250 of the commission's mandatory standards and 60 percent of the 123 optional standards set forth. In the case of the Amherst Police Department, all of the required standards were met along with 82 percent of the optional standards. The department was praised by the committee for their procedures regarding recruiting and training officers, managing monetary flow and mentoring officers that had been promoted into upper ranks. The department was also praised for both their willingness to learn and their go-getter attitude. One assessment team member explained that the department was both highly motivated and extremely professional.

Members of the committee spend several days in January observing the department and made their evaluations about the policies and quality of the agency at that time.

Established in 1997, the commission according to former Governor William Weld's standards was to both evaluate and seek to improve the quality of police forces statewide. Over 152 agencies have applied for evaluation through the accreditation process, including both the Northampton Police Department and the University of Massachusetts Police Department.

The Amherst Police Department received its accreditation on Friday, April 6 in at a meeting of the Massachusetts Police Accreditation Council in the Town Hall. The members voted unanimously to give the department its accreditation. Thirty officers, three Select Board members, Town Manager Barry Del Castilho and Northwestern District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel, attended the meeting.

"From the first moment we walked through the door the pride that they had in their agency and their community was obvious," Wayne Sampson, Shrewsbury Police Chief and member of the commission, told the Daily Hampshire Gazette. "This agency exemplifies every standard that this commission is trying to implement throughout the state."

Attributing everything to those who both worked with him and came before him Amherst Police Chief Charles Scherpa explained that the accreditation for the department the result of hard work by a group of people. He thanked current officers Sgt. Jennifer Gundersen, Officer Jamie Magarian, and Captain Jeffery L. Roy for assisting him in the accreditation process and then thanked former Chief Donald S. Maia for initiating the process in 1998 before he left.

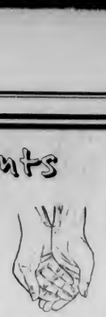
"One of the reasons for our success is the support that we get from the Amherst community," Sherpa said to the Gazette. "This department is the best, and we are striving to get better every day."

Information from the Daily Hampshire Gazette was used in this article.

MARK HOLLOWAY/ COLLEGIAN

The Amherst Police Department became only the second force in the state to receive accreditation. The Waltham Police isthe only other to have the distinction.

Cultural Events Calendar



ACTIVISM
AMHERST – The Valentine Quadrangle at Amherst College will feature the Five College Clothesline Project on Wednesday April 11 and Thursday, April 12 as part of "Breaking the Silence: Sexual Violence Awareness Week." On Thursday, April 12, a candlelight healing vigil will take place at 7:30 p.m., beginning at the Amherst College Campus Center.

SOCIAL
NORTHAMPTON – A "Gala Latin Night" to benefit the International Language Institute of Massachusetts will take place in the Inn at Northampton on Friday, April 27 at 8 p.m. The Grand Ballroom will be transformed into a Latin paradise when Yoshi Kogo, of Yoshi Productions, will present the live Latin sounds of Ray Gonzalez and his 11-piece jazz band Orquesta Versaill. This is the kick-off night for a series of multi-cultural local events. Advance tickets are $25 per person, and $45 per couple. To purchase tickets, contact Sue Arthen at (413) 586-7569.
UMASS – The Office of Jewish Affairs and the Black Student cordially invites students to attend Freedom Seder 2001, a celebration of unity and liberation for the Jewish and AUANA communities, on April 22. RSVP by April 13. For more information, call 545-3642 or email goldbaum@admin.umass.edu.
NORTHAMPTON – "Africa Day Cultural Show" will include poetry, dance, skits and a fashion show from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. at Smith College's John M. Greene Hall, on Saturday, April 14. This event is part of "Journeys of Discovery, Journeys of Rebirth: Migration and Displacement in Africa and the Diaspora," in celebration of African and Caribbean Awareness Week. Tickets are $3. For more information, call (413) 585-4820.
UMASS – There will be a Holocaust Memorial Service on Thursday, April 19 on the Campus Pond Lawn at 7:00 p.m. Rain or location is the Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union. Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, Hillel House, and the Jewish Student Union.

FILM/VIDEO SCREENINGS
UMASS – A multicultural film festival, "Border Crossing: Cinema and Video at Century's Turn," will be held on dates from Feb. 16 to May 10. The series highlights the fluidity and permanence of artistic, technical, geographic, cultural, political and personal borders and includes film and vide screenings and panel presentations. For more information, call Film Studies at 545-3659.

RELIGIOUS
AMHERST – Shabbat services are held on Fridays at 6 p.m. followed by Shabbat dinner at 7:15 p.m. in Hillel House.

LECTURE/DISCUSSION
UMASS –Eugene Pogany, author of In My Brother's Image, will speak and read at 8:00 p.m. on Friday, April 13 at Hillel House.
SOUTH HADLEY – Susan Sontag, novelist, essayist and critic, will read from works in progress and her novel In America on Thursday, April 12 at 7:30 p.m., Gamble Auditorium, Mount Holyoke College. Free, open to the public and wheelchair accessible.
NORTHAMPTON – "Journeys of Discovery, Journeys of Rebirth,: Migration and Displacement in Africa and the Diaspora," a round-table discussion on migration and displacement focusing on identity, will take place at 5:30 p.m. in the Nelson Library Browsing Room at Smith College on Wednesday, April 11.
NORTHAMPTON – Lasli Millere-Bashir, author of "Do They Hear You When You Cry?" will speak on female genital mutilation in Africa at 7:30 p.m. in Stoddard Auditorium of Smith College, on Wednesday, April 11.
UMASS – Regina Kunzel, Professor of History at Williams College, will present "Situating Sex: The Problem of Prison Culture in the Mid-Century U.S." in the Campus Center room 904-08 at 12:30 p.m. on Thursday, April 12. Kunzel will discuss the notion of "situational homosexuality" and the relationship of prison sexual culture to the formation of a modern sexual regime.
SMITH COLLEGE – "The Future of Feminist Scholarship? A Glimpse at the Third World. Work in Progress." This lecture will be given by Kum-Kum Bhavnani, Senior Editor of Meridians and Visiting Professor of Women's Studies at Smith College, on Monday, April 16 at 4:15 p.m. in Seelye 207 Free.
AMHERST – "Of Rumi & Related Matters: Love & Beautiful Manners in the Sufi Path to God," on Saturday, April 14 at 2 p.m. at Johnson Chapel, Amherst College. The event is free and presented by NOOR, an Amherst College student organization directed at raising positive awareness of Islam and Muslims in Western Massachusetts.
UMASS – James Allan, a graduate student in Communications at UMass Amherst will present a lecture entitled, "And Baby Makes Three… Gay Men, Straight Women and the Parental Imperative in Film and Television" on Thursday, April 26 at 12:30 p.m. in the Campus Center room 904-08.
NORTHAMPTON – "Media, Gender and Culture," a panel discussion moderated by author Mary Pipher and including panelists Jean Kilbourne, Ann Arnett Ferguson and Michael Kimmel, will take place on Friday, April 20 from 10:00 a.m. to noon at John M. Greene Hall, Smith College. For more information call (413) 584-9500.
UMASS – Aviva Ben-Ur, Professor of Judaic Studies and Near Eastern Studies, will give a lecture entitled "Through Sephardi Eyes: The "Other" Jewish Holocaust" on Tuesday, April 17 at 7:00 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge. A showing of the film Triumph of the Spirit will follow.
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, Hillel House, and the Jewish Student Union.
UMASS – Cast members from MTV's "The Real World" will hold a conversation on sex, being queer and life behind the camera on Thursday, April 26 at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. This event is sponsored by the Stonewall Center, and will feature a performance by the Not Reads for Bedtime Players. Tickets are $3 for UMass students, and $5 for non-students.

PERFORMANCE
AMHERST – Amherst College presents "Desdemona," a dark, provocative look at the lives of the women in Shakespeare's Othello, on April 12-14 at 8:00 p.m. in the Experimental Theater. Admission is free, but reservations are recommended. Call the box office at 542-2277 from 1-4:30 p.m. weekdays, and until 8:00 p.m. on performance evenings. UMASS – "Stop Kiss" traces the experiences of Callie and Sarah, two young women who are dealing with all the usual issues as well as falling in love with each other. The show young adult issues as well as falling in love with each other. The show explores the theme of honesty, and the hostility of a homophobic society to such honesty. The show will take place at 8 p.m. in the Curtain Theater on April 5 through 7, and April 10 through 13. For tickets, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.
UMASS – "Nuyorican Stories" will be performed with sidesplitting humor by the members of Culture Clash, who blend poetry, dance, music and visual arts. The show will be performed at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday, April 19. For tickets, which range from $5 to $10, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.
UMASS – "Bugaku: Japanese Court Dance" will be performed by Arawana Hyashi and the Jo Ha Kyu ensemble on Thursday, April 19, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. This program in the spring finale of the Asian Dance and Music Program Series.
UMASS – "I Remember Mapa," a comical one-man show starring Alec Mapa, will be performed one night only at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on May 10. Based on his true-life experiences, the piece chronicles Mapa's colorful adventures through rise, fall and rebirth as a gay Filipino American actor in the entertainment industry. For tickets, which range from $5 to $10, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.
SOUTH HADLEY – The Mount Holyoke College Concert Choir will present its Spring Concert in the Abbey Memorial Chapel on April 22 at 2:00 p.m.
UMASS – The poetry-in-performance series "Words She Spoke" presents spoken word with Staceyann Chin and Melinda Corazon Foley at 6:30 p.m. on April 24 at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library.
SOUTH HADLEY – The first annual W.A.M. (Women and Music) festival, featuring Cane Curtis, Melissa Ferrick, Erica Wheeler, and Alix Olson, among others, will take place on Saturday, April 28 at Mount Holyoke College, beginning at 11 a.m. The event will include vendors as well as arts and crafts. Tickets are available at B-Side Records in Northampton, For the Record in Amherst, and all Strawberries stores.

EXHIBITIONS
NORTHAMPTON – Ongoing exhibition "The Strongest of Bonds: William Allan Neilson, Internationalism and Exiles at Smith College" will run through June 30 in the third floor of Neilson Library at Smith College.
NORTHAMPTON – "The Refugees," two life-sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck, can be viewed through May 28 in the third floor of Neilson Library at Smith College.
AMHERST – "Of Many Colors: Portraits of Multiracial Families," an award winning photo text exhibit will be at the Keefe Campus Center Auditorium from April 15-21. The event is sponsored by Students of Mixed Heritage at Amherst College.

This calendar, which previews local events of interest to under-represented groups on campus and in the community, runs on Wednesdays. Submit notices of events to Tanya Mannes, Diversity Editor, and Chanel Dubofsky, Assistant Diversity Editor. Standard entry forms are available in the Collegian office.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, making it both a broadsheet publication since January 1968. For advertising rates or to place a classified, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schaltz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Kreichmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

new balance
Don't Miss Your Shot!
Haigis Hoopla
the action happens
April 28th & 29th
Mail your team entry by April 16th or drop it off by April 20th.
Stop by Curry Hicks, Room #5 to pick up a registration brochure. Call 545-5689 for more information. Or visit us at http://haigishoopla.zminutemen.com
presented by UMASS Sport Management Program
ACDelco · Pure Rock Lazer 99 · Coca-Cola · InsideSUIT · zMinutemen.com · Spalding · Yoohoo · Your Plan · Kaplan

Peer Health Education
What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and
❒ A. Contracting an STI.
❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.
Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits
Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, a 2-semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.
Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/ COLLEGIAN

Just kickin' it...
A group of students enjoy the spring air outside the Student Union yesterday afternoon.

Police Log

Breaking and Entering

April 7
There was a vehicle broken into in lot 35 on University Drive.
There was a vehicle broken into in lot 22 on University Drive, a CD player and personal items were stolen from the car.
A vehicle was broken into in lot 22 on University Drive.
There was a vehicle broken into in lot 22 on University Drive.

April 8
There was a vehicle broken into in lot 44 outside of Sylvan living area. A stereo system was stolen.
A vehicle was broken into in lot 22 and a CD player was stolen.
A vehicle was broken into on Massachusetts Ave. in lot 34 and a stereo was stolen.
A vehicle was broken into in lot 34 and a cd player was stolen.

Larceny

April 3
License plates were stolen from a vehicle in lot 11.

April 5
License plates were reported stolen from a vehicle in lot 29 below Butterfield Dormitory.
A cell phone was reported stolen from Goussman Annex.
A cell phone was reported stolen from Patterson Dormitory.
License plates were stolen from a vehicle in lot 44.

April 6
A cell phone was stolen from Boyden Gymnasium.

April 8
Pizza was stolen from a delivery person's vehicle outside of Moore Dormitory.
A parking decal was stolen from a car in lot 40, North of Boyden Gymnasium.
A wallet was stolen from Boyden Gymnasium.

Vandalism

April 5
There was damage done to a laundry machine in Coolidge Dormitory.

April 6
There were eggs thrown at a vehicle in lot 22.
There was homophobic graffiti written on a message board in Kennedy Dormitory.

April 8
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 29.
There was anti-Semitic graffiti found on the wall of Pierpont Dormitory.
Th ere was damage done to two vehicles in lot 34.
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 22.

April 9
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 50 outside of Kennedy, Melville, and Thoreau dormitories.
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 44 outside of Sylvan living area.

Eminem gets probation

Rapper Eminem was sentenced to two years probation in a Michigan court yesterday. Eminem, whose real name is Marshall Matthers pleaded guilty in February to a charge of carrying a concealed weapon.

"The judge treated me fair like any other human being," Eminem told reporters after the sentencing. "I just want to get it behind me and get back to spending time with my little girl and making music," he announced.

Eminem, who has been in the news constantly since the release of his first album, The Slim Shady LP was arrested on June 4, 2000 when he allegedly pistol-whipped a man who he claimed was kissing his wife. This came after a long string of problems with his wife, Kim Matthers that led to their divorce in November. Ms. Matthers even sued her husband for emotional damages after he wrote several songs about murdering her and kidnapping their child.

The charge against Eminem carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison. Besides the probation, he was fined $2,500 and forced to enter counseling for aggression. During the two years, he must now also ask the court's permission to leave the country.

As this is not the first time Eminem has been in the courts, he has had legal problems with rap group Insane Clown Posse. He also has been involved in civil law suits with his mother, Deborah Matthers, who sued him for defortpation of character.

Eminem has been vocal about his court cases at many of his concerts. In an appearance in Worcester, Mass. this summer on Dr. Dre's "Up in Smoke Tour," he said, "My lawyers said I'm not supposed to talk about my cases, but…"

Besides the arrests, Eminem was involved in a wealth of criticism about his most recent and critically acclaimed album, The Marshall Mathers LP. Opponents of the rapper and his music typically disapprove of his lyrics, which they feel are offensive. Hip-Hop artist Eminem's, The Marshall Mathers LP, contains the most blatantly offensive homophobic lyrics the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD) has seen in many years," GLAAD said in a press release.

The height of Eminem's criticism came during February's Grammy awards. The Marshall Matther's LP was nominated for four awards, and it won two. Protests took place before during and after the ceremonies.

Eminem is currently working with his group D-12.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this article.

-Ryan Benharris

police

continued from page 1

and for possession of a class D substance.

Lyons explained that he had been warned for trespassing before and that he had an active trespassing warning.

"He was reported to have been living in the dorm without permission," Lyons said. "As a result of a search following his arrest he was found to have some marijuana on him."

When a student receives a trespassing citation on campus he receives a written warning that in nearly all cases bars he or she from returning to campus for two years. Traditionally these people are not affiliated with the University and if he or she is spotted on campus the individual will be arrested. There is an appeals process for these types of warnings that begins with the police department.

There were two other related arrests that were also trespassing violations. On Sunday, 19-year-old Norman Kane Cote of Amherst and Maxwell Jacob Britt, 19, also of Amherst were arrested in the Campus Center for trespassing and for possession of alcohol by someone under the age of 21.

An officer working at a dance in the Campus Center Auditorium spotted Cote, whom he identified because he previously arrested him, and approached him. The officer discovered that both Cote and Britt were trespassing and arrested them.

On Saturday, Tony Inobaptiste, 33, of Amherst was arrested for speeding and driving with a suspended license. An officer on Campus Center Way spotted him at approximately one a.m.

A woman in Patterson Dormitory reported to police that at approximately five a.m. on Sunday morning, she walked down her hallway to the bathroom when she was stopped by a man in the hallway and engaged in conversation about her dating status. When she returned to her room, the man followed and tried to gain access to her room. She locked the door and called the police – when officers arrived the man had fled the scene. The case is still under investigation and the man may be sought on charges of nighttime breaking and entering.

Oh the Collegian. Oh Oh Ohhhhhh the Collegian...

Massachusetts School of Law
AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS 600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

Retire before you Graduate!
Get PAID for your time online. Whatever you are doing e-mail, chat, instant messaging while downloading music. Searching, shopping, surfing, or playing games, whatever you're doing, your time is worth $$$$$$$. Start getting PAID for it!!
Going Platinum is about to launch in April, the first PROFIT SHARING INTERNET COMMUNITY. The Company is currently in a pre-launch drive to build it's membership base and offers an extraordinary financial opportunity for members who position themselves now.
Visit:
http://www.goingplatinum.com/member/vking

STUDENT TRAVEL
EUROPE ON SALE!!!
London.....$385
Rome.....$418
Paris.....$388
Frankfurt.....$313
Rio de Janeiro....$651
Prague.....$458
San Jose.....$509
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

HAIR CUTS NOW WITH KATE
$20
(Weds. & Sat.)
Eric Scot
Experience the art of hair for less
79 south pleasant street
Amherst
413.256.3440

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
U-SAVE
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

WRITE FOR NEWS... OR BE EXTERMINATED!

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

The Black Sheep
THE BLACK SHEEP has been serving the UMass community for over 15 years.
We are a delicatessen, all butter scratch bakery, gourmet food purveyor and full service caterer.
THE BLACK SHEEP is renowned for providing the most memorable and best tasting GRADUATION PARTIES in the Valley.
Stop by for a cup of coffee, overstuffed sandwich, or homemade dessert and see what we have to offer.
THE BLACK SHEEP
79 MAIN ST. AMHERST
253-3442
OCMP, VISA/MASTERCARD ACCEPTED.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

To protest or talk
Club has rights

David Horowitz's recent on-campus appearance following his reparations ad controversy was marked by much intense debate and protest.

Horowitz's speech was marked with protesters outside the door being watched warily by UMass police, and a planned protest inside the event held where much of the audience walked out on cue.

The question-and-answer period following the Horowitz speech was also marked by people not asking questions as much as making accusations, baiting the speaker and trying to embarrass him with rudeness rather than asking a pointed question which might make him sweat a little.

The hosts of the event, the UMass Republican Club, have a problem with this, and a solution. And they are entirely right.

"The people who we're bringing to campus are in many ways once in a lifetime opportunities – but that doesn't mean that everyone will agree with what they have to say," said Zack Spilman, a Republican Club member who is very involved in bringing these speakers to campus.

Spilman and the Club plan to have a set time and place after future controversial speakers for debate after the event.

"I want to talk about these issues. The club wants to talk about these issues," Spilman said. "Hear him, then come back and engage in a debate."

Notice that the key terms are 'talk' and 'debate.' 'Protest' is not included in these plans.

Protest is not about open debate. Protest is about disruption, about one-sided yelling, about an effort to drown out the voice of the opposing view.

The protesters at the Horowitz event did not want to discuss the issues raised by the speaker's ad. They wanted to disrupt the event, make it so that he was possibly unable to speak and then, if he was able to, it would be met with frequent interruptions and outright callous rudeness to detract from the points he was making.

On this point the Republican Club is entirely correct. The proper way, the educational way, the way which provides the most opportunity for growth is not to protest, but to discuss. It is not enough to merely demonstrate that you have a differing opinion – the important part is to say why.

A set-up and organized meeting with differing views being heard and discussed in a civilized manner and with respect and courtesy to the opposition is an ideal that is worth striving for.

The Collegian does not always agree with the speakers that the Republican Club brings in, but they are undoubtedly an opportunity for growth and discussion. The Club's attempt to foster debate after an event rather than mindless protest during it is a meaningful step in the right direction.

As Spilman said, "Prove us wrong." And the way to do that is with meaningful words, not shouted slogans.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Higher ed & pop culture

Taking a look at American culture at the dawn of the twentieth century, Henry Adams suggested that "society seemed to delight in talking with solemn conviction about serious values, and in paying fantastic prices for nothing but the most futile." We can always learn from the redoubtable Mr. Adams. The lesson he has to teach us here is a particularly apt description of declining university standards. We often talk about the need for serious education, but we prefer the diversions of pop culture. The trouble is this: education has become about "self-esteem" and not about, well, education. But that has left university students, and especially graduates, at a loss. Many of them feel a sense of entitlement – they are college grads, are they not? – and want to think of themselves as educated. Only, in most cases, we haven't educated them and so they end up feeling resentful. They either insist that whatever it is that they've been given is an education, or they demand that whatever tastes they've developed in the absence of real education are equal to what once was considered educated. Either way, we've debased the sense of self that's supposed to come with education. In the name of self-esteem, we've given them a hollow sense of themselves.

GEORGE THOMAS

Take this relative of mine. (Please, take her – I'll give you 50 bucks.) Let's call her L. Simpson. No, let's call her Lisa S. At the drop of a hat she'll deliver a lecture on the decline of western civilization, with snooty references to vulgar tastes and snide remarks about how people don't care about culture anymore. It's no joke, I've heard the lecture at least a half-dozen times. This from a woman who can't make her way through the Great Gatsby. I'm telling you, try as she might, she just cannot read it. Fine, so she doesn't like F. Scott. If only. It's much worse. She pretends she likes him, and demands that everyone else think he's important, but simply has no taste for reading novels – make that books – of any kind. The Sun Also Rises? "Boring." Huck Finn? "Is this funny?" Her idea of sophistication is a silly TV show where the men and women pee in the same bathroom. Her college "education" leaves her alienated and restive. She feels entitled to a sense of importance that's not forthcoming.

Don't get me wrong, pop culture has its place. There is, after all, the Simpsons, where Homer dispenses such pearls of wisdom as, "Go back to Massachusetts" when confronted with chowda-headed nonsense of the lefty-Cambridge variety. Or, my favorite, when Grandpa Simpson starts getting checks from Bart and Lisa's cartoons, they ask, "Grandpa, didn't you wonder why you were getting free money?" To wit: "I thought the Dem-E-crats was in power again." The Simpsons is so good, it should always come in pairs. Ditto the Sopranos. Still, there's a drawback. It's that pop culture threatens to replace – wholesale – higher forms of culture, as we pump out college grad after college grad with no taste for the urbane. Think about it: Mark Twain was once a popular novelist. While higher culture is praised, it is rarely loved. Instead, we love self-esteem. So we pretend that everyone is equally educated, or we pretend that, all things considered, if I may steal a line from Homer, "eating a packet of powdered gravy [you] found in the parking lot" is equal to just different from – reading old F. Scott.

A university education has become a middle class entitlement, not something you earn. This fits the ethos of our democratic culture. In the name of equality, everyone should be educated. But rather than actually educating them, as some people would obviously fail, we simply say it is so. This is a depraved sense of equality. It's also what's behind grade inflation and the rejection of high standards. If we're in the business of self-esteem, giving students bad grades makes them feel bad. So why bother?

Lurking behind these educational theories is a crude form of cultural relativism. The very notion of standards suggests inequality: An "A" paper is better, is it not, than a "C" paper? And so, in the name of crude equality, we equalize standards to make these students feel good about themselves.

Only it doesn't. Self-esteem that comes on the cheap, is cheap. Nobody feels particularly good about themselves when the praise is hollow. Students who don't really work very hard for their grades, or get the degree without the education, know the truth deep down, which may well drain their sense of self-esteem. Go figure. A true sense of self-worth comes from being pushed and rising to the occasion – even if that means failure along the way. Instead, we impart Homer's advice to Bart and Lisa, "You tried and failed. Lesson: never try again." And so we fail to cultivate abiding attachments in our students to anything beyond the shallow and ephemeral world of easy entertainment. St. Augustine (for those keeping score I'm passing up a great Simpson's reference) once said that we can judge a people by what they love. More and more, we love nothing at all.

George Thomas is a UMass graduate student.

"The whole world is rotting"

Every time I look at a rainbow, I am reminded of God's promise to never again destroy the world with a great flood. Unfortunately, we don't need God's help, as we are quite capable of doing it ourselves. President Bush's repudiation of the Kyoto Protocol will ensure that the United States, a country with only 4 percent of the world's population producing 25 percent of the greenhouse gases, will not join the rest of the world in trying to stunt the effects of global climate change.

Ironically, in February the CEOs of the world's 1000 largest corporations met at the World Economic Forum and voted climate change as the most urgent problem facing humanity. Yet even if the protocol was adopted and put into effect tomorrow, the predicted rise in temperatures would still occur. That means that perhaps by 2100 AD, temperatures are likely to rise anywhere between 4-11 degree Fahrenheit and the sea level by perhaps five or six meters. Keep in mind that a 9 degree Fahrenheit increase was enough to end the Ice Age.

The United States is practically alone in its refusal to change. Holland is promising an 80 percent cut in emissions in the next 40 years, Britain a 60 percent cut by 2050, and Germany a 50 percent cut by the same time. The Europeans are so serious about climate change that they may move ahead unilaterally.

What makes Bush's decision even more insane is that the effects of climate change are already being felt in a big way. Ross Gelbspan wrote for the FPIF Institute. "Within the past year, drought-driven wildfires consumed more than six million acres in the West, [and] the nine-foot-deep ice pack at the North Pole melted into a mile-wide lake."

If humans are still around in 2100, they'll probably have to be living somewhere besides Earth, because the planet is clearly dying. It can be seen everywhere. I like the way Darryl B. Wilson, a Hopi Indian, put it in a letter to President Nixon, that is much more relevant today than when it was written. He wrote, "The whole world is rotting. The water is poisoned, the air polluted, the politics deformed, the land gutted, the forests pillaged, the shores ruined, the towns burned, the lives of the people destroyed..." You can be assured that the plundering of the planet will reach a fever pitch under Bush and Cheney, the latter seeming to have a fatalistic desire to wreak havoc on this world before he leaves it. Just a few days ago in The Times, Mark Henderson reported that scientists think they can create a futuristic moon base by 2007. Personally, I like this planet and think we should try to keep it.

SIMON PONGRATZ

What sort of big picture is the U.S. looking at that would make the administration do such a stupid thing? I think it has everything to do with power. Eqbal Ahmed, in his PAWSS TV lecture the other night, threw out some interesting ideas that didn't really have to do with global warming, but that I will take one step further. Europe and Japan consume something like 90% of the oil produced by the Middle East. Therefore, if the United States wants to control Europe and Japan, they must control the oil – and therein lies US Middle East policy.

He also spoke about the U.S. plan to develop pipelines from the oilfields of Central Asia through Georgia and Turkey, effectively cutting the Russians off from the natural resources in their own backyard, which they desperately need for economic development. As the U.S. plays power politics with oil in the Middle East, it does so in Asia. Oil, then, is the key to power in a US dominated multi-polar world.

So now it's beginning to seem like the United States is resisting the switch to renewable resources to protect one of its most effective methods of control. To draw a historical parallel, the switch would have the same effects on the United States as the commissioning of the HMS Dreadnought had on England.

The Dreadnought was a British battleship that was christened on Feb. 10, 1906. The revolutionary design instantly made obsolete all existing capital ships, and its sudden appearance on the scene in the middle of the Anglo-German arms race caused an uproar in Germany. The Germans decided the design must be copied, and fast.

Previously, the Royal Navy had had a tremendous superiority in both number and quality of ships, possessing 40 battleships that were larger and more heavily armed than Germany's 20. With the unveiling of the Dreadnought, Britain effectively eliminated this advantage and reduced its margin to only one. The arms race continued and was ignited by the spark at Sarajevo into World War I.

Where is all this rambling going? If the United States were to make a serious investment in renewable resources, not only would this further aggravate the dismal economic outlook and energy crisis, it would also have the effect of eliminating one of the most effective means of control the US has found. If nobody needed oil anymore, our margin of control, like Britain's, would disappear. We would have to start all over again by retooling our infrastructure, and so would everyone else. It would level the playing field.

Finally, remember that the Senate probably would not ratify the Kyoto accords because, despite all its flaws, it's still representative of the American people, and we don't care what the hell is going on anywhere else. As long as unemployment stays low and we can buy gasoline, our leaders have a free hand to do whatever they want to the rest of the world. Since the implementation of the protocol would cause major problems with both of those, Americans probably would never accept it. Besides, what's a little 10 degrees Fahrenheit rise in temperatures when we have air conditioners and bottled water anyway? It's not the end of the world.

Information from Battleships by Antony Preston, The Twentieth Century by Howard Zinn, "Foreign Policy in Focus Institute, and Popular Science Magazine" was used in this article.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist.

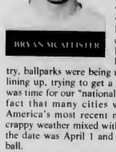
LIFE IN HELL ©1997 BY MATT GROENING

YOUR SUMMER MOVIE CHECKLIST
☐NOW THAT'S WHAT I CALL A MEGABUDGET! ☐LOOK! THE HERO IS SQUINTING! HE'S REALLY DETERMINED NOW! ☐UH OH! THE WAY THAT VILLAIN IS GLOATING, I'LL BET HE HAS PLANTED A POWERFUL TIME-BOMB! ☐AMAZING! THAT FRAIL-LOOKING ACTRESS IS A KUNG-FU MASTER! ☐MY, THAT SEWER IS WELL-LIT! ☐NOW THERE'S SOMETHING YOU DON'T SEE EVERY DAY! THE HUMAN'S HEAD IS MORPHING INTO THE ALIENS HEAD! ☐ISN'T THE HUMAN SPIRIT GREAT? LOOK AT THAT PLUCKY KID PUMPING HIS FIST IN THE AIR AND SAYING "YESSSS!!!" ☐OH NO! THAT DOG IS GOING TO BE BURNED ALIVE IN THE FIERY INFERNO! WILL IT BE ABLE TO LEAP TO SAFETY IN THE NICK OF TIME? ☐YOU CAN TELL THE VILLAIN IS GETTING ANNOYED-- LOOK HOW HE'S CLENCHING HIS TEETH SO HIS JAW MUSCLE TWITCHES! ☐SPOT THAT PRODUCT PLACEMENT! ☐LISTEN TO THE AUDIENCE HOOT! ☐LISTEN TO THE AUDIENCE BARK! ☐LISTEN TO THE AUDIENCE HAVING CONVERSATIONS TOTALLY UNRELATED TO THE MOVIE! ☐WOW! SOME OF THOSE COMPUTERIZED SPECIAL EFFECTS ARE SO IMPRESSIVE, IT'S A SHAME THEY DIDN'T HAVE TIME TO FIX THE ONES THAT DIDN'T WORK! ☐AM I CRAZY, OR WERE HER BREASTS SMALLER LAST SUMMER? ☐THEY HAVE NOTHING TO DO WITH THE ON SCREEN STORY, BUT AREN'T THOSE POP SONGS ON THE SOUNDTRACK CATCHY? ☐CAN YOU TELL WHEN THE ACTORS HATE THE LINES THEY ARE SAYING? I'LL BET YOU CAN! ☐HEY, IT MAY BE LOUSY WRITING, BUT IT TESTED THROUGH THE ROOF! ☐THANK GOD THAT VENTILATION DUCT IS BIG ENOUGH TO CRAWL THROUGH! ☐SURE THERE'S NO STORY, BUT HOW ABOUT THAT EXPLODING FIREBALL? ☐SURE THERE'S NO CHARACTERIZATION, BUT HOW ABOUT THAT COMPUTER-ANIMATED DEBRIS HURTLING TOWARD THE CAMERA? ☐SURE THERE'S NO EMOTION, BUT HOW ABOUT THAT TORN BLOUSE? ☐WILL THERE BE A HAPPY ENDING? OUR MARKET RESEARCH SAYS YES! ☐WHEN IT'S ALL SAID AND DONE, THAT WAS A PRETTY DARN ENTERTAINING FLICK! ☐AND YOU'RE ONLY TWO HOURS CLOSED TO THE GRAVE!

Opening Day once again



BRYAN MCALLISTER

April 1, 2001. That was April Fools Day (just kidding!), and fittingly, there was something strange going on in the weather. Mushy, browny snow layered the frozen grass and sloshy mud was sprayed upon the sidewalks from dirty cars. It was cold – not freezing, but cold, and damp, and dark, and simply very wet. It wasn't a day for baseball, yet around the country, ballparks were being unveiled and crowds were lining up, trying to get a glimpse of the players. It was time for our "national pastime," and despite the fact that many cities were still dealing with America's most recent national pastime - really crappy weather mixed with horrible foreign policy - the date was April 1 and it was time to play baseball.

In fact, on that day, in sunny Puerto Rico, Ivan Rodriguez and Carlos Delgado held up flags from their native country and were cheered – no, absolutely heralded – as they were introduced to the fans. Go to a soccer game in England, or small-city Italy, or pretty much anywhere besides the U.S., and you will see fans that we would call "insane." They chant and cheer and light fireworks and joke with each other and generally are on a permanent high. And this, this opening day game in Puerto Rico, offered a glimpse of that sane devoted frenzy.

So did April 4. On that day, back on the east coast, Hideo Nomo, one of Japan's first shining international stars, threw an absolutely dominating no-hitter against the Orioles. A couple of days later, the latest Japanese abroad sensation, Ichiro Suzuki, hit a game-winning home run in the 10th inning to propel the Mariners to victory. And just this past Sunday, Pedro Martinez provided another countless reason why he's the best pitcher in baseball.

That's only a short list. As the baseball season opens, there are equally countless heroes already, heroes that are making baseball huge, fun, and respected again. It was only a couple of years ago when the strike threatened to kill baseball forever. People just didn't care anymore. Baseball was too slow, too quiet, too unmarketable. But now that Michael Jordan is gone from basketball and everyone has realized the NBA sucks, it's safe to say that baseball has gotten a bit of a rejuvenation.

Now ballparks offer state-of-the-art facilities and fans love them. Great new rule changes like the higher strike zone have balanced too much offense of past years. And players like Sammy Sosa, Martinez, Ramirez and Rodriguez have re-ignited sparks that have been lying flintless for years. It's not hard just to look at those names and realize baseball, really, has been saved by its diversity.

Absolutely wonderful diversity. Not the kind where you just assemble some people together, give some statistics, and say you're being "diverse." (Hmmm... can't think of who does that... but they start with a U, then a M, then an A, then a S...). Not the kind where you say you're being diverse, then don't follow up on your promises (Hmmm...Go! Go U! Go UMass!). Not the kind where you ignore the very thing you always champion (nothing like Chancellor Scott finally writing an email to us last month about the ALANA situation, only to have it be all about how Whitmore takeovers are bad for business).

No, instead, if you look at any major league team, these players actually seem to be enjoying and reveling in their diversity. The key is they never seem to look at the word "diverse" as just a word. They don't think they're the second coming of Martin Luther King if they have a couple of different skin colors on the bench. Instead, they actually seem to like each others' idiosyncrasies, to support and cherish each others' cultures.

Take the Red Sox, for instance. Now, the Sox, historically, have never been a diverse team. I remember when I was in like sixth grade, and the Sox had Ellis Burks and like one other black player – Sam Horn. Boston was, and probably to some extent, still is, pretty much the worst place to play in the country if you weren't white and at least 8 percent Irish.

Now, look at this team. Martinez, Nomo, Tomo Okha. Rolando Arrojo. Ramirez. Carl Everett. Rich Garces. It is a changed team, and, most importantly, a team that melds together. When Nomo threw his no-hitter last week, the most excited person in the stadium was Martinez. When Martinez first came to Boston, Spanish translations of his games were being written in the Boston Globe. When Ramirez came to Boston this fall, people began to understand that he appeared shy and reserved only because he wasn't used to speaking English.

And chills ran down my spine last week, in that opening day game in Puerto Rico. You could see the excitement in the kids' eyes as their heroes took the field, and the heroes themselves were genuinely, honorably, touched that they could return to their home country and play baseball before them. Among those throwing out the first pitch was Clara Clemente, the widow of Roberto Clemente, one of the first of many classy, classy international superstars to make baseball fun again. It was another chilling moment.

Sure, there is a long way to go. I'm not saying baseball is some metaphor for our great American melting pot, and baseball has had its racial and diversity problems before. But it is a step forward. After all, this is our national pastime. It's American as it gets.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian columnist.

The China crisis: two students offer views

KEN CAMPBELL

Once again, I'm ashamed to be called a member of the media. Once again, misunderstanding and lack of intelligence - meaning data, although in some cases, the other usage may apply - have turned what is already a tragic accident into a call of war.

Once again I want to smack people.

'Spy plane,' 'where they shouldn't be,' 'what right do we have?,' – all these phrases have been ringing the air lately, as would-be pundits try and explain to the truly vapid public that currently China is holding 24 members of the United States Navy. They aren't hostages in the conventional sense. China doesn't want money. They aren't being held for ransom of gold bullion. They are being held because China wants an apology for that tragic accident that occurred on April 1, when a Chinese fighter jet and a Navy reconnaissance plane collided about 70 miles off the coast of Hainan Island. Hainan is just off the coast of mainland China.

The Navy plane was in international airspace. Now, to explain this to some folk, including reporters who seem to believe otherwise, you can do anything you want in international airspace. Fidel Castro could smoke crack, molest sheep, and conduct bodily functions on the American flag in international waters or airspace and nobody could do anything about it. So could you, if crack-smoking lamb-loving is what you desire.

International air and waters are those spaces outside a 12 nautical mile perimeter of a country. To say that the plane was in Chinese airspace is ludicrous. First of all, the United States doesn't do that kind of thing anymore. See, this guy named Gary Powers got shot down doing a recon of the Soviet Union. Ever since then we've been sort of wary about putting our birds over other people's territory. Second of all, if the plane was in Chinese airspace, why didn't the two F-8 fighters that were sent to check it out shoot it down?

There's precedent for this too. In 1983 the U.S.S.R. thought a spy plane was invading its airspace near the Sea of Japan. It sent up a SV-15 fighter to check it out. The jet shot the plane down and it tumbled into the sea. Turns out the "spy plane" was a Korean Air Lines 747 with 269 people on board. Everyone died.

Since the F-8s didn't send the lumbering, four-engine plane into the sea, that must have meant they were in the clear. Others say the fact that this plane was being trailed by two fighters means something. It doesn't. This was a routine mission, for both the EP-3E and the Chinese. In fact, the Navy's got photos of the pilot of the F-8 from previous encounters. In one, he's holding up a piece of paper with his email address on it. This is a lot like the scene from Top Gun, where the Americans take pictures of the Russian pilots while inverted over them.

After the collision, the plane declared a mayday on the international emergency frequency. This means they could land in Tienemen Square if they had too. China is required by treaty to assist the plane in and then repair and return both it and the crew. They haven't repaired the plane, and some think they may have already started stripping it down. It has taken care of the crew though. They are being well cared for. But they're still over there, and there's no need for them to be. None of them are wounded or require hospitalization. They are being held in limbo by a belligerent nation, being used as a political bargaining chip to shame the U.S. in the eyes of the word and somehow raise their own stature in the global scale.

Some critics start out with the "spy plane" argument. Since the end of the Second World War, the United States has been acting as big brother to the little guys of the world. Sometimes, it tends to be in our best interests, such as the Gulf War. In others, such as Vietnam and Korea, it's had bad results. The little guy in this case is Taiwan. That little island off the coast of China is democratic, and has been ever since China went Red. It has been the standard doctrine of the United States to protect other democracies, seeing as how we are the biggest (in terms of prestige; India has far more people) on the block. And it's not as if China has been entirely innocent. It has routinely made threatening advances toward Taiwan. The United States has supplied Taiwan with weapons, ships, planes, etc and is still negotiating arms deals with the tiny island. China, obviously, doesn't like this, since they regard Taiwan as a part of their nation in rebellion. However, the US trade with China, as well as our overlooking of certain human rights violations in order to ease China's way into the World Trade Organization.

However, Taiwan remains a sticking point, especially since we make it a point to watch out for them. This includes routinely checking on the military buildups along the coast of China. However, it would be a clear violation of international law and the rules of engagement to send an aircraft carrier and its escorts into Shanghai or Hong Kong and start knocking on doors. Long range surveillance, such as the EP-3E is designed for, is the perfect solution. It is unobtrusive. And with its unique listening capabilities, the military can fill in what the satellite photos don't show. What? You don't think we have an eye in the sky?

This type of military voyeurism is perfectly legal and accepted. Keep in mind, the United States would not go to war with China. China would go to war with Taiwan, and we'd supply advisors and equipment. Sound familiar? Yeah, good-bye my sweetheart, hello Vietnam.

Anyway, by sending these flights 70 miles off the coast of China, and dealing with the occasional interception by Chinese fighters, we can make sure that nobody's planning on doing anything stupid. What right do we have? Well, more than right, we have a duty to protect Taiwan from its bigger, and overtly hostile, brother.

It's not really about the planes. It was a tragic accident, which could have not been caused by the U.S. – the plane was on autopilot, and couldn't make any "sharp left turns" – and it cost the life of a pilot. That is horrible. However, to say that the U.S. is at fault, that the US is obtrusive and invasive of another nation, simply because we protect someone, is nothing short of painfully wrong.

It is not about patriotism. This isn't just a bunch of pro-America rhetoric. They are cold, hard facts. A man is dead. That is tragic, and the US has already extended its condolences to the family of the pilot. However, making a mountain out of a molehill isn't making things any better. Send our men and women home. They didn't do anything wrong.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian staff member.

BILL LARKIN

"Although the Chinese government wants to preserve "face" or respect by demanding an apology from the United States, America must not admit wrongdoing in the East.

If they were to apologize, the White House would be humbled to Asian nations abroad and conservative Republicans at home."

On Tuesday evening, U.S. Army Brig. Gen. Neal Sealock met with the crew of the downed U.S. Navy EP-3E reconnaissance plane for the fifth time.

Sealock was pleased that the 21 men and three women, who have been detained by Chinese authorities on the island of Hainan for the past ten days, have been granted extra privileges, including the freedom to exercise in the building of their captivity. He reported that while the crew was aware of the political gridlock preventing their release, they hoped for a quick resolution to the dispute between the two nations.

However, the airplane crew may have to wait many more days before their liberation.

Chinese President Jiang Zemin lacks the unilateral diplomatic control of the American president. He heads a divided government and must find a consensus on every important decision.

Although China is a Communist Party dictatorship, policy is no longer mandated from the magnetism of powerful leaders such as Mao Zedong or Deng Xiaoping. To lead the country, Jiang must satisfy a variety of interests, from bureaucrats and ministers, to generals and citizens.

Although the Navy crew's quick release would have facilitated China's countership with the West, Jiang wants China to join the World Trade Organization), many Chinese military officials are opposed to Sino-American relations.

In 1999, American airplanes bombed the Chinese embassy in Belgrade. More recently, a high-ranking Chinese Army officer defected to the United States.

The conservative Chinese military would like to undermine Jiang by frustrating China's WTO membership, which they believe would excite social disorder and further empower the Western nations. The Sunday's Liberation Army Daily said China had the right to "investigate thoroughly" the commanders of the American aircraft.

Although Jiang has acted independently in the past, he'll most likely adopt the will of the military. Next year he will cease to be the Communist Party chief, and the year after that his term as President will expire.

However, he is rumored to assert his position as chairman of the Central Military Commission, which oversees the People's Liberation Army.

The Chinese government will probably not release the crew until either the U.S. issues a formal apology for the incident or the body of the missing Chinese pilot is found. Although China was pleased by U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell's weekend statement that Washington was "sorry" for the pilot's fate, they have since repeated their demands for a formal apology.

On Tuesday, the president warned the Chinese that "the longer it goes, there's a point at which our relations could become damaged." He must ensure that the United States does not apologize – America did nothing to provoke the incident.

According to Western sources, the two planes collided in free-flying international airspace 70 nautical miles southeast of Hainan Island after a Chinese F-8 interceptor started to fly directly below a U.S. surveillance plane and the U.S. aircraft executed a banking maneuver to the left.

The U.S. Navy EP-3E Aries II reconnaissance plane was being shadowed by two Chinese F-8s, and one of the F-8s buzzed the American plane twice.

A U.S. defense official said Chinese planes began flying extremely close to U.S. surveillance planes late last fall, prompting the United States to raise the issue with the Chinese in December. Chinese pilots have been coming as close as 50 feet to U.S. planes, the official said.

China has also violated the Vienna convention's rules for the treatment of those arrested in foreign countries. Under the convention, U.S. diplomats are to be allowed prompt consular access to detained citizens.

Although the Chinese government wants to preserve "face" or respect by demanding an apology from the United States, America must not admit wrongdoing in the East.

If they were to apologize, the White House would be humbled to Asian nations abroad and conservative Republicans at home. It might give China the legal freedom to coerce compensation from the United States, or allow an agreement that would end the Navy's surveillance practices in the South China Sea, limiting U.S. influence in China and setting a precedent of American weakness.

Instead of surrendering to our hearts and apologizing to China to secure the release of our aviators, America must confront the Chinese saber. Jiang might appear resolute and he'll capitalize after a while. The preservation of U.S. power in the East is worth a few more weeks of discomfort for the captives.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

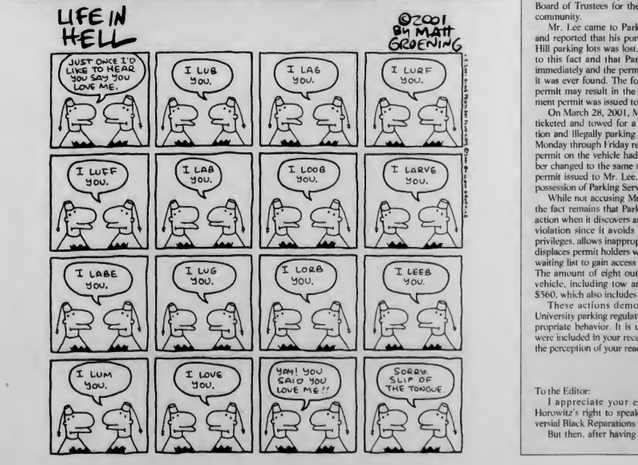
Doonesbury By Garry Trudeau

DADDY, IF YOU WANTED TO MEET ANDRUS, ALL YOU HAD TO DO TO ASK ME...
THERE HE IS— OVER BY THE COPY MACHINE!
YUP! THAT'S HIM!
THE ONE WITH THE MULTIPLE FACE PIERCINGS?
HE LOOKS LIKE SOMEONE ATTACKED HIM WITH A NAIL GUN.
I KNOW— ANDRUS IS MAD, EGGS! COME ON!

LIFE IN HELL ©2001 BY MATT GROENING



Letters to the Editor
Frank's car towed for a reason

To the Editor:

I write in response to the article concerning Mr. Frank Melberg and roommate, Mr. Nicholas Lee's assertions that Parking Services has stolen Mr. Melberg's vehicle. I wish to clarify the facts that led to the towing of Mr. Melberg's vehicle. The accusations contained in the article are misleading and incorrect. Parking Services does not steal vehicles; it administers parking regulations approved by the Board of Trustees for the benefit of the entire University community.

Mr. Lee came to Parking Services on Sept. 13, 2000 and reported that his portable permit for Lot 49 Orchard Hill parking lots was lost. Mr. Lee signed a form attesting to this fact and that Parking Services must be notified immediately and the permit returned to Parking Services if it was ever found. The form further states that use of the permit may result in the vehicle being towed. A replacement permit was issued to Mr. Lee at no charge.

On March 28, 2001, Mr. Frank Melberg had his vehicle ticketed and towed for a Fraudulent Use of Permit violation and illegally parking in a fire lane in a 24-hour-a-day Monday through Friday restricted lot. It was noted that the permit on the vehicle had been altered and its serial number changed to the same serial number as the replacement permit issued to Mr. Lee. The altered permit is not in the possession of Parking Services.

While not accusing Mr. Melberg and Mr. Lee of fraud, the fact remains that Parking Services is obligated to take action when it discovers an altered permit. This is a serious violation since it avoids legitimate payment for parking privileges, allows inappropriate access to restricted lots and displaces permit holders who have paid for access to and are waiting list to gain access to the Orchard Hill parking lots. The amount of eight outstanding citations issued to the vehicle, including tow and storage charges, is currently $560, which also includes seven unpaid past citations.

These actions demonstrate a clear disregard for University parking regulations and reflect a pattern of inappropriate behavior. It is unfortunate that not all the facts were included in your recent article. They may have altered the perception of your readers on this matter.

Michael Brennan
Parking Services

To the Editor:

I appreciate your editorial championing David Horowitz's right to speak to our students on the controversial Black Reparations issue.

But then, after having denied your readers a chance to read the advertisement on the issue by forbidding its publication in your paper, you damn it as being an "outrageous commentary." This is practically to tell your readers to sneer, not to listen with open minds.

You say nothing to support your claim of outrageousness. From my reading of the text in The Minuteman, I find Horowitz's 10 points strongly expressed and worth debating but in no way outrageous.

If his arguments can and should be heard on campus, as you advocate, why can't they appear in an advertisement in a student paper? You may say that covering his "lecture is akin to running the advertisement," but that is nonsense. Your coverage obviously will not be as fully developed or focussed (sic) as was his ad; and had he not been invited here to speak, the campus would never have known his views, you having denied him the right to express them in your paper.

You cannot avoid the fact that your present safe defense of free speech is somewhat hypocritical since it did not prevent you and dozens of other college papers from blocking and therefore censoring Horowitz's advertisement. You took no risks in defending free speech, as did the courageous editors at Brown and Wisconsin. Once again we see that political correctness is the enemy of both democracy and a free university.

Arnold Silver
Professor, Department of English

To the Editor:

As a senior having read most every Collegian in my eight semesters here at UMass, I found Laura Sicilano's editorial in the April 2 edition of this newspaper to be shamefully blind, redundant and hypocritical. She starts by proclaiming that the conservative newspaper is in fact conservative. Simply speaking The Minuteman makes no effort to hide its dogmatic views. Ms. Sicilano on the other hand claims that she is, "basically a liberal but I have conservative views," which I construed as an attempt at being objective.

We know Ms. Sicilano does not want anything to do with objectivity when she drops the not-so-subtle him that The Minuteman newspaper staff might as well be "drunk, obnoxious, rude, sometimes smelly and often disgusting people."

It should not be difficult to write intelligent thought-provoking commentary about a dogmatic newspaper like The Minuteman without resorting to crude inferences.

Yang Tang Central

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor •
David Troupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Artsy magazine debuts
Hopes to display women in arts

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

The founders of Artsy magazine want you to know that women do have a place in the arts.

The new, student-created art magazine is due for its first publication and distribution next month.

Artsy was just a gleam in the eye of UMass senior Jasmine Trabelsi while she was working at Fitness Magazine in New York City this past summer.

In the city, she assumed that there must be an overwhelming amount of art made by people of diverse backgrounds. But, while looking at photography featured by a camera company, she realized that only one of the photographers was a woman. When she contacted the company, they told her that there just weren't that many working female photographers.

"Of course there are," Jasmine said. And instead of getting angry, she got to thinking. She knew that there were countless women artists. But, where were they?

She contacted her friend Julia Laricheva, who was also in NYC, working for Paper Magazine. Laricheva is a UMass senior with a BDIC major in creative socially aware advertising and a minor in fine arts.

She knew just what Trabelsi was talking about. They knew that there were plenty of women in the arts, and thes needed a way to communicate their ideas.

The idea for Artsy magazine was thus born. Back at UMass, the two were joined by their third founding member, Jenni Bachman.

The actual physical work began at the beginning of the spring semester for this, their senior thesis project.

"It's been really really crazy," says Laricheva about the pace at which they are working. "it's been a lot of work."

It is not merely the academic aspects of the publication, though, that keeps the magazine going. It is the founders' belief in the ideas behind their project that makes them want to continue this work after graduation.

"We hope to become a real magazine, featuring female work," says Laricheva.

Helping the three women along this road to publication are 15 assistants. Trabelsi makes final editorial decisions, but she is hesitant to designate specific functions to herself or her co-workers.

She points out that it is a collective of people, who are working and making decisions together.

A collective, she stresses, that is part of a larger society.

"We're not just UMass students. This is a community of artists," Trabelsi says.

"Our main focus is on visual art, but also any really great work by female artists," Trabelsi says. Along with visual arts from diverse media, the first issue will include submissions of literature.

"We've gotten submisslons from London and France, but mainly from galleries in Brooklyn," says Laricheva.

They will publish work and interviews with some established names, like Judy Chicago, a prominent artist who founded the Feminist Art Program. But their main concern is emerging talent, or artists who haven't had the chance to display their work.

"We're trying to get exposure to new artists," says Laricheva.

As this is a non-profit project, the first publication will be distributed to art galleries in Massachusetts, New York, San Francisco, France and London and a few art schools throughout the country.

It will be a 16-page full color glossy. In order to display the art in the best way possible, and there will be approximately 1000 copies made, which will incur some rather large expenses.

"We've gotten a lot of funding from the Honors department, BDIC, and the Alumni Association," says Trabelsi, "and we're in the process of looking for advertisers."

The circulation may double by 2002, the founders say, and continue to grow in the years after that, because of the enthusiasm that they encountered in the process.

With its inception, Artsy's goal is to create an accessible, sustainable support system for women in the arts. And, if all goes as planned, it will continue to do so for years to come.

COURTESY ARTIST

Jasmine Trabelsi, Julia Laricheva, and Jenni Bachman, co-founders of Artsy.

Semisonic tonight at Skybox

Tonight at Skybox, Pete Yorn and Semisonic will share their energy and creativity with the University of Massachusetts. Semisonic is promoting their third album All About Chemistry and Pete Yorn is on tour for his record musicforthemorningafter.

Yorn, a New Jersey native, was playing the guitar and making music by the age of 12. His sound has been described as mixing the pop-rock melodies and deep "self-observant" lyrics that connect with fans. His style and sound began to gain a following in Los Angeles at the Café Largo. One of his fans was producer Bradley Thomas and asked Yorn to for contributions for the Me, Myself and Irene soundtrack, as well as the songs on the soundtrack the Farrelly's asked Yorn to compose the score for the film. Yorn's material can be found in the music used for "Felicity" and in Songs from Dawson's Creek Volume 2.

Semisonic'lon the other hand is a band with recognizable hits, Grammy nominated songs and a platinum album. Feeling Strangely Fine gave the band not only more notoriety but also a hit song ("Closing Time") that can be heard in bars and weddings across the country. Showing that they passed the sophomore album challenge (a step that many times makes or breaks a band) the Minneapolis trio began creating All About Chemistry to break away from the introspective previous album. It tells stories of friends in Anytown, USA.

"On the last album, I wrote almost all the songs as secrets", says guitarist/songwriter Dan Wilson. "This time around, I envisioned a big group of friends at a great party, where everyone has done a few things they'll remember forever..."

Both Semisonic and Yorn should not only provide an excellent show but they should also produce unbelievable energy for all the music fans in the club feel of The Skybox. Tickets at the door are $15 and doors open at 7:30 p.m.

– Nicholas Pizzolato

Easy ways to bring the Spring to your dorm room
And cool smoothies and refreshers to chill you out

THIS WEEK'S WHAT'S THE WEATHER: SPRING THINGS

Finally. How long have we endured snow piles, gray skies, rainy walks to class, frozen toes and cheeks... commonly known in good ol' Mass as winter torture? Since Thanksgiving? Yeah, I think an appropriate phrase would be – enough is enough. You heard me, buddy – bring on Spring, just bring it. Just in case you are counting the days until it's here – and you want to get a jump-start on spring fever, I have something stashed in my pocket for you – a couple things that will hopefully summon some sun.

Teenie Weenie Gardens: This goes out to all of us who have the luxury of suicide windows. Don't let the fact that you can't actually open your windows get you down this spring.
Whoever said that cultivation wasn't allowed in Southwest? (naughty naughty – I'm talking about flowers.) Run out and pick up something that can hold dirt. Wait, that's too vague. Try small tin, plastic, ceramic or glass containers. Think watering your little guys – you don't want Hurricane Floyd episode two in your room. Then, of course, to give your planter a touch of you – decorate it. Decoupage it. (by now you should know what I mean – glue cutouts onto a surface with a decoupage medium), paint it, cover it with stickers, tissue paper, ribbons, fabric (use tacky glue for fabric) or hot glue trinkets all over it. By trinkets, by the way, I don't mean beer bottle caps. What's my number one rule? Be creative and be yourself! Then when you have covered your surface, drop into one of the local markets that sell agricultural products such as seeds – you only have your choice of thirty on Route 9 alone. Follow the direction on the back of the seeds, or, if you think you won't have any bloomers before summer – buy little seedlings and just transfer them into your planter. Then put them in a sunny place – and keep them watered! Presto – a little garden of your own right in your room!

From Macy's to Daisies: If you are so blessed as to have a window in your pad that opens to the outside world, here's a trick that will put a little primavera in your panes. Window boxes are key for letting the spring weather seep through your home. Just the sight of flowers makes a bad day better and a good day great. Although I trust we have some Handy Andy's here at UMass, this column is called "Bag of Tricks" so we like the short cuts. Before you turn your childhood dresser over to Good Will, take this tip. Drawers can make excellent ready-made window boxes. And the knobs are quirky and cute. If you don't have a dresser destined for the trash, you can always peruse the bargain shops and back alleys for old wooden dressers with good sturdy drawers. All you will need to do is touch it up a little – once again, however it suits you. Some ideas are to paint it with a fresh color, cover it with cutouts or hand paint it. If you like the antique look – and your pick doesn't have it already – after you put a coat of paint on your drawer and it dries, rub it with steel wool in scattered places. This

by maggie lyons

technique makes for an instant antique. When you are satisfied with the way your drawer looks put a coat of outdoor finish on it (to keep the wood from rotting in the April showers), available at hardware stores. Next – borrow your dad's or your neighbor's drill and put a couple small holes in the bottom of the drawer – to let air and water leak through the soil. While you are at the hardware store also pick up a couple brackets to mount your drawer to the windowsill. You will want to attach one side of the bracket to the back of the drawer, and one to the top of your sill. Or, one side to the bottom of your drawer and one to the outside of your window just under the sill. Whichever way works better for your spot. I suggest taking advantage of the expertise of the hardware store employees – so go prepared. When you have mounted your window box, fill it with colorful blooms to celebrate the spring weather.

Homemade - Ades: Snapple makes enough money off of us college kids. This time, save your change and make a tasty cooler yourself. After all that hard work, relax your senses with these spring cooler beverages.

Energizing Mintade – Mint represents eternal refreshment – whose mouth doesn't water at that idea? With this super easy recipe for refreshment you can't go wrong!

What you will need:
Σ Two lemons, washed and sliced into squeezers
Σ A handful of fresh chopped mint leaves
Σ Two tablespoons sugar
Σ Three cups boiling water

Place squeezed lemons, mint and sugar in a pitcher. Pour in boiling water and leave to steep for two hours. Strain and serve over ice with lemons or mint to garnish.

Soothing Smoothie – This fruity combo takes minutes to make but is worth your entire day. As long as you keep a steady batch of this creamy soother going, your porch swing will become your best friend.
What you will need:
Σ 3 ounces fresh sliced mango
Σ one large or two smaller pears, sliced
Σ one banana
Σ one cup milk, or one half cup milk and some vanilla ice cream or frozen yogurt (for a creamier drink)
Σ one cup chopped ice

Blend these ingredients in the blender and serve sprinkled with cinnamon.

Raspberry Relaxer – Who doesn't like raspberries? And who knew raspberries was spelled with a "P". Thank you, spell check. I hope I didn't just make myself look dumb.

What you will need:
Σ 4 ounces fresh or frozen raspberries (unsweetened)
Σ a couple spoonfuls of plain yogurt
Σ one spoonful honey
Σ one quarter cup of milk

Blend ingredients in a blender or food processor.

Maggie Lyons is a Collegian columnist.

Blow has great cast, ok script

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

BLOW
Directed by Ted Demme
Starring: Johnny Depp, Penelope Cruz, Ray Liotta and Paul Reubens
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

To say that the movie Blow is one of the greatest movies regarding the topic of drug trafficking would be a gross mistake, as that privilege should be reserved for the likes of Brian De Palma's Scarface or possibly Steven Soderbergh's acclaimed Traffic. However, Blow, directed by Ted Demme, is a cinema masterpiece that brings together the latest cinematographical techniques with a near perfect cast.

Although personally I was not the most satisfied, because it was somewhat cheesy, I can still appreciate the attempt of the screenwriters to bring the movie to a somewhat sonber conclusion.

Blow is a true story based on the troublesome, turbulent life of George Jung. George Jung, superbly played by Johnny Depp, is a smart, aspiring kid from Weymouth, Massachusetts, who moves out to California to "sow his wild oats." Almost immediately, Depp and his buddy Tuna have the brilliant idea of selling weed to raise some money. With the assistance of an acquaintance, Paul Reubens (of Pee Wee Herman fame), George and Tuna very quickly form a very profitable pot business.

Within a few months, they conclude that they are wasting so much money by using a middleman, so they decide to buy their weed directly from a grower down in Mexico. They steal a plane and make repeated trips back and forth from California to Mexico to pick up mass amounts of their product. A few trips in, they run into a snag when Depp gets arrested with over 600 pounds of smoke. This is the first of many trips for Jung to the big house.

In jail, Jung is a roommate with a Columbian drug dealer who teaches him the ropes of the worldwide cocaine market. Through this friend, Jung begins to make contacts with worldwide drug maven Pablo Escobar.

One of my greatest faults with this film is its lack of reality in the details of the drug trade. Throughout the film, the role that Jung plays is glamorized as it makes drug-dealing look like it is all just fun and games.

Through Jung's miserable marriage to Mirtha, played adequately by Penelope Cruz, we see the dismal demise of a once powerful man who is now being pushed around by many of the same people he shoved down on the way to the top.

As the movie reaches towards the three-fourths mark, the plot takes a strange and horrible twist, as Jung is portrayed as the pathetic ex-con father, walking his daughter to and from school. From this point the movie takes a nose-dive through various cliched and clumsy scenes. Instead of the writers making the audience feel contempt towards Jung, we are made to feel almost sorry for him. In my opinion, this is despicable, as Jung only received a measly 15 years jail sentence for the boatload of trouble that he got himself into.

As I obviously did not like the ending of this movie, I would still absolutely recommend it to anyone who enjoys "drug" movies. It was completely entertaining throughout with even a little reference to UMass. The cinematography by the brilliant Ellen Kuras (Summer of Sam) is amazing, as she brings completely different texture and feel to each decade through the use of different film stocks and lighting techniques.

COURTESY OF SERGE LIGTENBERG

Hey! Where did that hand come from?

The youth theater group Theater Terra will perform "Circus" on May 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

COURTESY OF JONATHAN MANNION

Big Pun has resurrected to release newest compilation.

Posthumous Big Pun album
Proves faulted, but entertaining

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

BIG PUN
Endangered Species
Loud Records

The music industry loves to reap the benefits of a sudden death. The cardinal rule with posthumous music seems to be that it is significantly worse than anything the artist ever created while alive. The record companies sell music on the notion that it's a tribute to the fallen musician, but in reality, all you really get is a disgusting display of marketing tactics that simply disrespect the resting in peace of the deceased.

Oddly enough, this is not the case with the new release from rapper Big Pun. Big Pun, whose real name was Christopher Lee Rios died in Feb. 2000. His heart attack cost the rap world a talent that was not yet given a chance to blossom. Big Pun's death occurred right at the beginning of a career that seemed to have an obvious chance at an explosion. He was the recipient of some very prestigious awards, many tagging him as one of music's unknown genius ready to break through to the big time.

Endangered Species comes from the late Big Pun after his wonderful debut release, Capital Punishment from 1997. Capital Punishment was highlighted by an enormous radio single, "Still Not a Player," which set the basis for his short but relished career.

The album mixes Big Pun's recognizable deep voice with a variety of different, and mostly high-pitched sounds. It seems like everyone they chose to compile tracks with Big Pun has a higher and less distinctive tone.

People like Brandy and Ashanti definitely contribute a secondary pitch to Big Pun's dominance. This may actually just be because Big Pun clearly had a much more bass stable sound than practically any other member of the rap world.

The album has some awesome collaboration tracks. On "Wishful Thinking," Big Pun joins with B Real of Cypress Hill to create an incredibly smooth sounding beat with outstanding staccato lyrics.

Big Pun's release doesn't heavily waste the names of its big name guest talents that are brought in for these collaborations. It would be very easy to advertise the album as Rufl Ryders-break from their illustrious career- or a great blessing of appearance by Nas.

Instead, the album is truly a compliment of Big Pun's talent. There are really no attempts to dissipate time with worthless promotional strategies.

Of course as with all music, the album is not without fault. Endangered Species relies heavily on mass produced sound as opposed to using actual instruments. The digital work must have taken a lot of time to enhance Big Pun's already recorded tracks, and though it's better than finding an older analog recordings of an artist and trying to fix it, it still creates that feeling of un-natural-ness. This may be something that is unavoidable with posthumous records though. It may not be the fault of the creators of the album, it could just be human nature showing its biological defense mechanisms against fraud.

Another problem with Endangered Species is its apparent void of anything interesting to say. There is no heart in any of the tracks. Even the best material of the album does not produce anything thought provoking or aesthetically stimulating. Though it is not an absolute necessity for music to have a given point in order for it to step beyond the level of mindless background noise, it should have some reason for existence.

Some of the album is quite campy. Nothing proves this more than on an eerie rendition of Ricky Martin's "Livin' La Vida Loca." The annoying pop song was turned into a Latin folk tune with acoustic guitars that sound like they came right out of the Antonio Banderas film Desperado. It would be like adding Frank Sinatra's voice to Whan's "Bye, Bye, Bye" and trying to sell it as an easy listening super-smash. I'm pretty sure you're not supposed to do that with pop.

With minor flaws aside, the producers of Endangered Species genetally did a wonderful job assembling enjoyable music. If nothing else, it's certainly a step up from the usual exploitation of the recently departed. On a more surprising note, it's even better than some of music industry's exploitation of people who are still alive.

Crew enjoys only home race of season

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – The Massachusetts women's crew team hosted their only home race of the season on Saturday before heading to Beantown to face Boston University and Wisconsin on Sunday.

The Minutewomen competed last weekend against some of the toughest teams they will see this season. The regatta was originally to take place in Connecticut, but was moved up north because of frozen waters. UMass raced against Boston College, Connecticut and Delaware.

UMass fell just short of Boston College in a close second with a time of 6:14.36, less than one second behind. The Minutewomen were leading until the closing seconds of the race. Uconn came in third with Delaware taking last place.

The second race of the morning put the Minutewomen Varsity A on top by seven seconds to BC, 6:27.28 to 6:34.80, respectively. The UMass varsity B was third, followed by Delaware and Uconn.

The UMass four-women boat faltered to BC, trailing the Eagles 7:22.42 at 7:28.40.

"The Varsity 8 learned from Saturday to Sunday. It was encouraging to see," assistant coach Wendy Wilbur said.

Sunday was a brand new day for the Minutewomen.

The first race in Boston was a tough one with UMass coming in last behind BU and Wisconsin. BU led the pack five seconds ahead of the Maroon and White, with only a :14 difference to Wisconsin.

The choppy water of the Charles River kept UMass behind in the second race when a third place finish was in the cards. Wisconsin crept ahead, with BU pulling in just under 7 seconds behind. UMass followed them one second later.

The last race of the day was the four-women boats with three BU boats facing up against one UMass boat. BU's A boat took first at 8:01.0 and the Minutewomen were closed in at 8:06.0. BU's B and C boats were at the tail of the UMass, with B finishing at 8:06.5 and C at 8:07.9.

"That was an exciting race to watch," Wilbur said.

The Minutewomen went into the weekend just off the Jayhawk Invitational in Kansas. Surprisingly UMass hosted their first and only race of the season. After the two-week end race, the Minutewomen will work continue on this week as they prepare for the George Washington Invitational in Washington D.C., set for Saturday.

There's only one way to go. Up.

As you begin your ascent to the top, remember, it's what you learn along the way that assures your success. At Ernst & Young, we give our recruits total access to the tools they need to gain knowledge and learn more about the marketplace. And because leadership skills are so important, we give them the opportunity to challenge themselves by working with leading companies in leading industries. The result? An atmosphere that's stimulating, innovative and creative. Talk about a place where you can really take off.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

US SKI TEAM
Proud sponsor of the U.S. Ski Team.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

©2001 Ernst & Young LLP

Scarlet Knights next in line for UMass buzzsaw

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

To say that the 20-9 Massachusetts softball team is on a roll would be an understatement.

In the past three weeks, the Minutewomen have been driving through their competition en route to a 'lucky' 13-game winning streak.

They recently manhandled Atlantic 10 opponent, St. Bonaventure over the weekend – sweeping three games from the Bonnies.

The trio of wins – which improved UMass' A-10 record to 6-0 – was sparked by an award-winning performance from junior outfielder Teri Rooney. In fact for her efforts, the co-captain from Visalia, Calif. was named Atlantic 10 Player of the Week by the league office yesterday.

"She was fantastic," said coach Elaine Sortino. "She has really found her stride and comfort zone."

Rooney went 8-11 over the weekend - a batting average of just under .730. Sunday, in the third game against the Bonnies, she went 3-3 with a triple and a RBI. Her extraordinary play helped her team pull out an important 7-2 win in extra innings. Earlier in the week Rooney also faired well against UMass' adversaries. Against non-conference foes Central Connecticut and Boston College, she hit 3-9 – making her overall average for the week an impressive .550.

"She had a little of a rough start but we are now seeing the Teri Rooney that we have come to love," Sortino said. "She has found a balance between using her short game and her long game."

Rooney and the rest of the UMass softball squad take their winning balance of offense and defense into the Garden State today to face off in a doubleheader with Big-East opponent Rutgers University.

The Scarlet Knights (15-12, 3-3 Big East) come into the twin bill looking to improve on their record. After a 2000 campaign, which saw Rutgers go 24-16-1 and fall to make the Big East tournament for the second year in a row, they know hovering over the .500 mark is not enough to participate in the stacked Big East conference tourney.

"They are always a tough team to play," Sortino said. "They've got a great coach and they are in a great conference."

Rutgers has the honor of being one of the youngest teams in the nation. The squad is consisted of six freshmen, eight sophomores and one junior. They definitely rely on youth to get the job done.

One of those underclassmen that the Knights have relied on all season is sophomore pitcher Leah Black. Going into yesterday's doubleheader with Monmouth, Black has compiled an 8-6 record with an unbelievable 0.94 ERA.

"With a 0.94 ERA, she has to be doing something right," Sortino said.

If Black throws today she hopes to break down the Massachusetts hitting attack.

As a team the Maroon and White has a batting average of .264 - highlighted by the play of junior third baseman Cherra "Scooter" Wheeler. "Scooter" is hitting an impressive .354 mostly in the clean-up spot. For the season, she has 29 hits, three home runs, 23 RBI and a .549 slugging percentage.

For the first time all season, all three Massachusetts pitchers are playing well. Sophomore Kaila Holtz who has a 9-1 record and a 2.58 ERA leads the staff. Junior Jen Hadley has a 5-5 mark and 2.97 ERA while veteran senior Carrie Jeffries comes into New Jersey with a 6-3 record and a 2.01 ERA.

The UMass pitching staff will hope to shut down Rutgers' inauspicious offense. As of yesterday, the Knights have a .185 batting average.

Men's lax suprises nation with start

News Flash Amherst – Your State University's lacrosse team is currently ranked fourth in the nation. Now all of you college lacrosse junkies who were to afraid to show your faces in the dining halls and classrooms of the University of Massachusetts can come out and say... Go UMass Lacrosse!

So if anybody asks how the Minutemen went from 6-8 last year to 8-0 in 2001, just give them this article and ask them what the heck happened to the last seven weeks of their life.

Moving up in the world

UMass ended the 2000 campaign out of the rankings and two games under .500. This season has been the complete antithesis, as coach Greg Cunella has used a run-and-gun offense to guide his team to eight straight wins and numerous national accolades.

MATTHEW F. SACCO

The Maroon and White are most recently ranked No. 3 in the Brine/ Inside Lacrosse media poll and No. 4 in the STX/USILA poll. In both polls Princeton inhabits the top spot while Hopkins is close behind. The Minutemen actually garnered first place votes in both polls as compared to a twice-defeated Syracuse team who didn't receive any.

Surprise, Surprise

Both USA Today and the Inside Lacrosse website listed UMass as one of the biggest surprises in collegiate lacrosse.

The Minutemen were ranked No. 15 in the Face-Off Yearbook preseason poll and No. 19 in the InsideLacrosse.com preseason poll, but after four decisive wins over ranked teams the Maroon and White are putting Amherst on the collegiate lacrosse map.

In the Maroon Corner and Still Undefeated

With a 16-10 thrashing of No. 16 Maryland-Baltimore County, the Minutemen ran their undefeated streak to eight games. UMass stands at 8-0 but not all of those wins were as easy as roughing up Boston College. The Maroon and White outgunned No. 9 Hofstra to open the year and on the road to UMBC it squeaked out win over big, bad Penn State and Navy.

Tickling the Twine

If there was a red light that signaled a goal behind the nets at Richard F. Garber Field, it probably would have exploded by now. The Minutemen lead the nation in scoring with over 16 goals a game and they are only 26 goals away from surpassing last years total of 157. Another game against BC would fix that really fast.

Who just scored that goal?

The key to UMass' success in filling the nets this year has been balance. Going into this weekends contest against Yale the Minutemen have 11 players who have 10 points or more. UMass also boasts five players who have notched more than 10 goals. Rich Kunkel and sophomore phenom Kevin Leveille lead the team with 29 and 27 points respectively but if they ever need back up they certainly have it.

Smart Kids Right Ahead!

The Minutemen have two games against Ivy League opponents Yale and Harvard before the two biggest tests of the season, Georgetown comes up first for the right to an Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) title and an automatic NCAA tournament berth. Than comes defending champion Syracuse who with two losses this year looks a little more vulnerable than usual. Nevertheless, Canella and his staff have this team headed to the tournament and this program headed in the right direction. So all you UMass fans who whine about how bad the .500 basketball team is have no excuse to not come out and support a program that could be on the cusp of greatness.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

One of the reasons for the success of the men's lacrosse team has been its ability to put forth a team effort in every contest

Spring is in the UMass air, most do not have a care

There's a bird chirping on Orchard Hill. There's a kid with a guitar trying to make a girl with dreadlocks like him because he can play the opening chords of the Grateful Dead's "Truckin." Butterfield's pirate flag snaps taut in the wind. Nobody knows what time it is.

I try to shoot the ball, but it's not going to happen. There's a big lunk in front of me and I already lost my dribble. My feet are burning on the concrete and it isn't even the beginning of summer. I'm wheezing looking for the open man. I couldn't name the players on my team if I had to.

It's spring in Massachusetts, which means it's almost summer everywhere south of here. The temperature's climbed up into the lower 50's and Monday, it crept on toward 70. It was a beautiful day, the perfect day to shake off the rust, to skeletally creak for the first time since winter. It wasn't just me – everyone was out on the Hill or down in Southwest watching UMass basketball player Jameel Pugh do the only thing he can do on the court: jump like hell and make a massive crowd go 'oh.'

But basketball isn't everyone's game – the kids who never made their high school baseball team are getting their grip on the ball and whipping it back and forth. Tomorrow, everyone's going to have to ice their arms – winter rust always hurts – and then they'll go out again. The foreigners are playing soccer down near the Mullins Center and the Brazilians aren't passing to the Argentineans and everybody's shots are rolling just wide of the goals made out of tee shirts. Frisbees are getting caught in sudden gusts of wind and veering wildly off course. A few people break out the football: it's only five months till the fall.

There are at least 100 people watching Pugh play in Southwest. He's in his own dunking competition and he's better than everyone out there. Nobody can do the things that Pugh can on this campus and especially not on Orchard Hill. Kids can pass or board or hit the open jumper, but nobody is throwing down a through the legs dunk. Nobody. Southwest loves it – everybody's 'oohing' and 'aahing' when he does his thing.

SAM WILKINSON

If Pugh's spring, the kids I'm playing against on the Hill are the summer, fall and winter. Spring's the only season that makes people go 'wow.' I passed off to a kid who's a foot shorter than me and three times as fast – I'm being lazy again and hanging around the top of the key. I'd rather shoot the bank shot than fight for position underneath the basket.

I remember spring baseball tryouts and how every new season held the possibility of greatness. I remember getting the extra hour of light that meant another hour of pickup basketball, baseball practices at dusk before all the fields had lights, or late afternoon soccer with my town's foreigners.

It meant sitting on the porch in a long sleeve tee shirt because it wasn't cold enough for a sweater and it wasn't warm enough for a tee shirt. It meant getting the year's first sunburn, the one where it feels as though my skin has been stretched tight against my bones. It meant white legs scarred pale from a lack of sunlight.

I don't remember the subsequent 5-22 season. I don't remember not being able to make lay-ups. I don't remember being bitten by bugs or beaten by foreigners, shivering, the pain of the burn or the blinding glare of my legs. I only remember the good and now that I'm older, that first great day of spring still means the same great things. Maybe this will be the year that I finally get a consistent shot; maybe my arm will magically start to work again after three childhood injuries – if only I get my Moxie back. I'll stand in front of the foreigners' shots.

It might be the time for the first Red Sox game and maybe it might the point at which the NBA and NHL playoffs finally start to heat up but the real magic of spring is the fact that everyone's awakening, not just our sports heroes and the campus's squirrels. It's the chance for everyone to begin their own return to sport: be it throwing a Frisbee on Orchard Hill or watching a developing UMass player do things nobody else can. Spring isn't just a season – it's an athletic rebirth.

The kid who's half my size, he drove the lane better than I ever could and kicked it back out to me. I jump and release; that pockmarked backboard is looking so attractive with nobody guarding me. I release the ball and everybody turns away from me.

There's a ray of sunshine that cuts the shot in half. There's a kid who can't get that final chord of Grateful Dead's "Truckin" but she doesn't care. There's a bird that's chirping through the air. The flag falls softly from its pole atop of Butterfield. My shot bounces off the backboard and the right side of the rim. That big lunk who had his hand in my face? He got the rebound. It might be a great year, but I'd better follow that shot. Thank God I've got all the time in the world to.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

Collegian Sports is always looking for new writers. If interested contact Bryan Smith at 545-1749.

Commuter Students!

On behalf of the Commuter Area Government, you can see the UMTG's Production of HAIR for FREE!

Be one of the first 100 commuter students to stop by Tix Unlimited in the Student Union and tell them you are a commuter student and receive one free ticket for Thursday, Friday or Saturday Show.

Hair will be performed April 11th - 14th at 8pm in the Student Union Ballroom. Additional show: Saturday at 2pm.

Don't Miss Out!!!

Hungry?

Subway of Amherst offers fresh 6" and footlong subs, delicious salads and, for smaller appetites, 4" round sandwiches.

4 Main Street, Amherst • 256-1919 Sunday - Thursday 10 am - Midnight Friday & Saturday 10 am - 2 am

SUBWAY®

RETIREMENT INSURANCE MUTUAL FUNDS TRUST SERVICES TUITION FINANCING

Tax-deferred solutions from TIAA-CREF can help you reach your retirement goals faster.

Call us for a free tax-savings calculator

When you're investing for retirement, the adage "never put o f until tomorrow what you can do today" doesn't apply to taxes.

That's because investments that aren't eroded by taxes can add up to significantly more money—or you—money you can use to supplement your pension and Social Security.

Let our consultants show you all the advantages of tax deferral, or call us for a free tax-savings calculator.

Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs), IRAs and other tax-saving solutions—along with TIAA-CREF's low expenses and solid history of performance—can help you invest tax smart today so that you can reach your retirement goals faster in the years to come.

*Note: Under federal tax law, withdrawals prior to age 59½ may be subject to restrictions, and to a 10% additional tax.

TAX DEFERRAL MAKES A DIFFERENCE

$102,068
Tax-deferred savings after taxes*

$67,514
After-tax savings

$100 per month for 30 years

In this hypothetical example, setting aside $100 a month in a tax-deferred investment with an 8% return in a 28% tax bracket shows better growth after 30 years than the same net amount put into a savings account. Total returns and principal value of investments will fluctuate, and yield may vary. The chart above is presented for illustrative purposes only and does not reflect actual performance, or predict future results, of any TIAA-CREF account or related expenses.

TIAA-CREF Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™

1.800.842.2776
www.tiaa-cref.org

For more complete information on our securities products, call 1.800.842.2733, ext. 5509. For prospectuses, which you should read carefully before you invest: • TIAA-CREF Individual and Institutional Services, Inc., and Teachers Personal Investors Services, Inc., distribute securities products. • Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association (TIAA), New York, NY, and TIAA-CREF Life Insurance Co., New York, NY, issue insurance and annuities. • TIAA-CREF Trust Company, FSB provides trust services. • Investment products are not FDIC insured, may lose value and are not bank guaranteed. © 2001 Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund, New York, NY 10036.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

1 Bedroom North Pleasant St. Apt. Heat/hot water included. Available May 1. Call 256-4267

2 Bdrm Available in 3bdrm apt. Turn of century home on the Commons in Belchertown Center. Beautiful wood floors, washer/dryer. Parking and lawn space. House is literally seconds from bus stop. (413) 323-0584 tuckl@unbounded.com

Take over our lease 2 bedroom apt. Starting June 1st. Call 549-7053 for details.

Summer Sublet/Fall Option 1 Bedroom on bus route. Call 665-6799

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom apt. on Main St. $775/month. Washer/dryer & dishwasher. Utilities not included. Call 256-1809

Take over our lease We'll split the summer with you. 549-9653

Summer Sublet with fall option in Brandywine. Furniture included. 548-8591

Salem Place 3 bedroom, 2 bath. Great location, all new appliances. $1265/mo. Available June 1. Call 253-6733

Take over our lease for Puffton 3 bedroom furniture option. Lease date negotiable. Call Nikki at 549-0909

APARTMENT FOR RENT

3 Bedroom 2 bath Puffton Apartment available June 1st w/option of renew. Good times. Call 549-7782

Beautiful Apartment with best view in Boulders. Very spacious, private, clean. Great for four or two! Singles also welcome. Refurnished cabinets and bathroom & walk-in closets. Security Dep. Req. - Call Patrick or Peter 256-3045

Amherst Apartment Available June 1st for summer sublet with fall option. One bedroom in North East Terrace Condominium Complex. Single occupancy only. $575 a month. Call 256-4135

4 Bedroom on Main St. Lease starting June 1st. Call 253-5180

Furnished Apt. in Boulders. 2 bedroom, 1 bath, on bus route, kitchen fully equiped. $820/month. Available June 15. Heat and hot water inc. 1yr lease. Call Stacey or Jeff 256-3731

30 Second Walk from Campus Looking for 2 Females to share a room in a house on Nutting Ave. Great deal! Call Sarah 549-6603

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass center, bus. $550, heat, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Female Wanted to share apt @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

2 Bedroom in Colonial Village available June 1. $600/month. Call 253-5351

Large 4 Bedroom on Main St. Washer/dryer. Available June 1st. Call 253-5151

Large Private Bedroom in 8 bedroom house on Main St. All utilities included. Available June 1st. Call 256-4627

3 Bedroom renovated apartment in Puffton Village. Available June 1st. Call 549-3557

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts.com or 549-0600.

Puffton Village 3 Bedroom renovated near bus stop available June 1. 549-9486

Renovated, Puffton Apartment. Available 6-1. 3 bedroom, $1155. 549-7465

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighbors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woody

2 Bedroom Puffton Available June 1st A/C, hot water, renovated. Call 549-9468

Take Over Our Lease! Juns 1st. 2 Bedroom Colonial Village on bus route. $625/month 253-0645

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom Apt. available June 1. On bus Rt. 1 mile from campus, lots of space. Shed for storage. Cable internet! 253-2643

2 People Needed for 2 bedroom Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Furniture for sale also. Call 549-6307 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

1995 Saturn SL2 Auto, loaded. Excellent condition. $4000 537-0517

95 Dodge Neon 4 dr. $4500 O.B.O 413-527-3665

EMPLOYMENT

CAMP CANADENSIS, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours form New York and Philadelphia), Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, gymnastics, fishing, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20-8/17. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

Live in Babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet on Cape Cod. Salary, room, and board. Please call 508-349-6392 (no calls 3/25-4/1)

$10/hr GUARANTEED Work on campus F/T or P/T for as little as 5-10 hrs/wk or as many as 40 hrs/ wk. Be your own boss. Create your own schedule. Limited positions. Call 1-800-808-7442 x 80

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.want-netwealth.com

EMPLOYMENT

Personal Care Assistant to work Tuesday early evening for retired teacher/songwriter with MS. $10/hr. Call 256-8784

Lifeguards Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

Legal Assistents Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Compaq Desktop System Celeron 600mhz, 11 GB, 64MbRAM, CD-ROM, ethernet, 15" color monitor, Windows ME, MS Office 3000 Deluxe, Printer available. Low price-negotiable. Bert 546-3991

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, 8 minutes from UMass. Available June 1. Call RJ 253-6469

MISCELLANEOUS

Publish Your Work For $1,295 Textbooks, Novels, and More Call FirstPublish, Inc. at 888-707-7634 Or visit www.firstpublish.com

ROOM FOR RENT

One Female Looking for one male or female to share one bedroom with study. Puffton Apartments. June, July & August. Rent (VERY) negotiable. Call Megan 546-2602

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. for summer sublet. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Two Female Roommates looking for 1 or 2 other females roommates for apt in Brandywine. Call 546-2738

Looking for Roommate Female preferred, cooking skills a plus. Must be willing to win at beerpong. Contact Adam yo-st, Department 24

1 Bedroom Summer Sublet 4 females looking for another female roommate. Great house in nice quiet area of Amherst w/view of mountains, near bus route. Available June 1. Call Lara 256-2104

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom in Sunderland Cliffside Apts. on bus route $310 a month all inclusive 546-3609

1 Bedroom Available 2 bedroom apt. Clean with carpet and dishwasher. M/F $300/mo. Available now. Call Gareth 665-8693

2 Females looking for 1 or 2 roommates to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting Sept. 1. Call Laura 546-5525

1 Bedroom Available in 2br Colonial Village Apt. $300/month starting June 1. 253-5350

SERVICES

Experienced College Student looking for residents in need of fast, cheap yard cleanups. Call Mark 256-3133

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

3 Bedroom Apt. in Townehouse. Fully furnished. Rent negotiable. Call 549-0454

Summer Sublet 2 bedrooms Colonial Village $600 a month 256-8027

Puffton Newly renovated 3 bedroom/2bath. Take over our lease partially furnished if needed fall option available 549-0432

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighboors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woody!

SUMMER SUBLET

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

1 Room in 2 Bedroom brandywine apt. $365/1 person, $265/2 people each/ month. Call 549-6104

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

Starting June 1! 3 Bedroom Apt., Puffton Village $1010 a month Call 549-9959

TICKETS FOR SALE

Clapton Tickets for sale Call 546-6913

TRAVEL

FLY 4STANDBY...FLY 4 CHEAP! Europe $169 o/w (+tx) Lon, Fra, Mad, Ams, Par, & more 4STANDBY.COM or 800-326-2009

WANTED

JEWISH EGG DONORS NEEDED
$10,000
(plus all expenses)
We have many infertile families in need of the help of compassionate women in order to realize their dream of having a child. We are seeking women who are attractive, intelligent, between the ages of 18-30, physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help a family and would like more information please contact us. 1-800-264-8828 or 1-619-234-6649
Email: darlene@aperfect-match.com
www.aperfectmatch.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3 Hartford
4	CBS 4 Boston
5	ABC/40 Springfield
6	UHF/32 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	UHF/30 Hartford
9	HSCN New Movie Channel
10	NBC/40 New Britain
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	UPN/20 Hartford
13	NBC/40 Springfield
14	International Channel
15	WMAV (Amherst Channel)
16	WB/30 New Haven
17	ESPN
18	ESPN2
19	WGGB (Student Channel)
20	Weather Channel
21	Channel to Be Given
22	C-Span
23	CNN
24	CNN Headline News
25	Lifetime
26	USA
27	TBS
28	TNT
29	E!
30	A&E
31	Discovery
32	Nickelodeon
33	Cartoon Network
34	Nick at Nite
35	TV Land
36	Comedy Central
37	BET
38	Univision
39	Bloomberg Financial Network
40	College TV Network
41	MTV
42	MTV2
43	VH1
44	The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 11, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford Red.	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Great Performances "Jesus Christ Superstar" (N) (In Stereo) (C)			American High (In Stereo) (C)		Egg	Egg
WFSB	3	3	News (C)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Becker (C)	Best Friends	★★½ "Jesus" (2000, Drama) Jeremy Sisto, Gary Oldman. (C)			News (C)	Late Show (C)
WBZ	4	4	News (C)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Becker (C)	Best Friends	★★½ "Jesus" (2000, Drama) Jeremy Sisto, Gary Oldman. (C)		News (C)	Late Show (C)
WCVB	5	5	News (C)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (C)	My Wife-Kids	Whose Line?	Drew Carey (C)	The Job (N) (C)		Once and Again "Armageddon"	News (C)	Nightline (C)
WLVI	6		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends (C)	Nanny (C)	Dawson's Creek "Admissions"		Jack & Jill (N) (C)			News (C)	Friends (C)	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (C)	Ed (In Stereo) (C)		Blockbuster Entertainment Awards (N) (In Stereo) (C)			Law & Order "Endurance" (C)		Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven "Parents" (C)		Blind Date		Dawson's Creek "Admissions"		Jack & Jill (N) (C)			News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (C)		Hollywood		Ed (In Stereo) (C)			Law & Order "Endurance" (C)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	13	Simpsons (C)	Fresier (C)	Seinfeld (C)		Friends (C)		Blockbuster Entertainment Awards (N) (In Stereo) (C)			News	Friends (C)	Fraser (C)
WWLP	9	22	News (C)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (C)	Ed (In Stereo) (C)					Law & Order "Endurance" (C)	News (C)	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (C)		Great Performances "Jesus Christ Superstar" (N) (In Stereo) (C)					American High (In Stereo) (C)	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (C)
WGGB	40	29	News (C)	ABC News	Spin City (C)	Fresier (C)	My Wife-Kids	Whose Line?	Drew Carey (C)	The Job (N) (C)		Once and Again "Armageddon"	News (C)	Nightline (C)
WSBK	38		Judge Judy (C)	Judge Judy (C)	Fresier (C)	Fresier (C)	Special Unit 2 "The Brothers"		Star Trek: Voyager "22" (N) (C)			Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	49		Roseanne (C)	Roseanne (C)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		★★½ "Rio Lobo" (1970, Western) John Wayne, Jennifer O'Neill.					Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	51		Night Court	Newsradio (C)	Law & Order "Angel" (C)		Biography: Cadbury Family		American Justice			Investigative Reports (C)		Law & Order "Scoundrels" (C)
CNN	53	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N) (C)			Crossfire (C)		Wolf Blitzer	The Point (C)		Larry King Live (C)	CNN Tonight	Spin Room (C)
COM	53	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (C)	Stein's Money	★★½ "Revenge of the Nerds" (1984, Comedy) Robert Carradine.					South Park (C)	That's My	Daily Show (C)	Stein's Money
DISC	54		Wild Discovery: Kalahari		Wild Discovery "Snakelyte"		Bigmoss: Wounds of Mystery		Who Was Moses?			Deadline Discovery (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	55		Sportscenter (C)		Major League Baseball: Teams to Be Announced. (Live) (C)							Stanley Cup Playoffs: Conf. Quarters: Game 1
LIFE	56		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Delta Burke"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Motives" (2001, Drama) Sissy Spacek, Peter Coyote. (C)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	57		Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Band	TRL (In Stereo) (C)			Tom Green		True Life "I'm a Cheerleader"	Celebrity Undr	Rock 'n' Jock
NICK	58		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold! (C)	Rugrats (C)			Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All In Family	All In Family
SCIFI	59		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo) (C)				Crusade "The Memory of War"			★½ "Robocop 3" (1993, Science Fiction) Robert John Burke. (C)		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	60	28	Trauma: Life in the ER		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Metal Monsters					Robotica (N) (C)		Metal Monsters
TNT	61		ER "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" (C)		Pretender (In Stereo) (C)		NBA Basketball: New York Knicks at Indiana Pacers. (In Stereo Live) (C)						NBA	★★★ "Airplane!" (1980)
USA	62		Welker, Texas Ranger (C)		JAG "Soul Searching" (C)		Nash Bridges "The Tourist" (C)			★★★★ "Raiders of the Lost Ark" (1981, Adventure) Harrison Ford. (In Stereo) (C)				Martin (C)
HBO	63		(5:00) "Crocodile Dundee II" (C)		★★★ "Lil' (1994, Comedy) Mag Ryan. (In Stereo) 'PG' (C)				Sez and-City			Sopranos "Second Opinion" (C)	On the Record (N) (C)
MAX	64		(4:30)		★★ "Her Alibi" (1989, Comedy) Tom Selleck. (In Stereo) 'PG' (C)				★★ "No Alibi" (1999, Suspense) Dean Cain. (N) (C)			★★★ "Any Given Sunday" (1999, Drama) Al Pacino. (N) (C)
SHOW	65		★★½ "Star Trek: Insurrection" (1998) Patrick Stewart. 'PG' (C)						★½ "3 Strikes" (2000, Comedy) Brian Hooks. 'R'			Extras: Spider	Soul Food (C)	Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)	"Black Mask"

Quote of the Day

"Kramer goes to fantasy camp? Hiswhole life is a fantasy camp! People should plunk down $2000 to live like him for a week. Do nothing, fall ass-backward into money, mooch food off your neighbors and have sex without dating. That's a fantasy camp." –George Costanza

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 52 LOW: 37	HIGH: 44 LOW: 38	HIGH: 60 LOW: 38

Buttercup Festival By Eliot G. Garbauskas

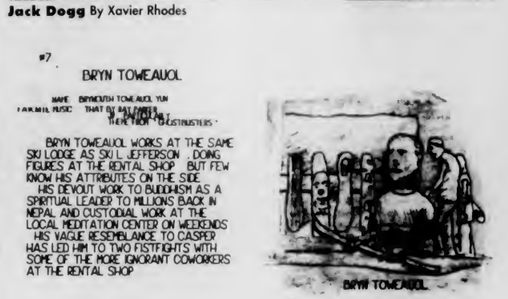
Hell Hath No Fury By Pedro Gomes

BY THE WAY I'M BEELZEBUB, BUT YOU CAN CALL ME BUB.
THIS WAY MR. SHAKESPEARE
OH AND WATCH YOUR STEP. YOU DON'T WANT TO FALL IN THE NEVERENDING HOLE LIKE JEFFREY DAHMER DID. AND WHATEVER YOU HEAR, I DIDN'T PUSH HIM IN.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

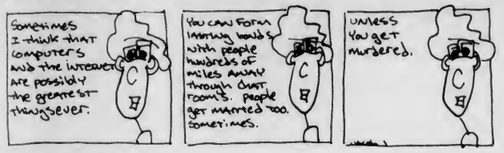
EXIT
Class, I find it extremely disruptive when you leave early. Please note the rabid Wolves I have tethered at each exit.
EXIT

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes



#7
BRYN TOWEAUOL
BRYN TOWEAUOL WORKS AT THE SAME SKI LODGE AS SKULL JEFFERSON, DOING FIGURES AT THE RENTAL SHOP. BUT FEW KNOW HIS ATTRIBUTES ON THE SIDE. HIS DEVOUT WORK TO BUDDHISM AS A SPIRITUAL LEADER TO MILLIONS BACK IN NEPAL AND CUSTODIAL WORK AT THE LOCAL MEDITATION CENTER ON WEEKENDS. HIS VAGUE RESEMBLANCE TO CASPER HAS LED HIM TO TWO FISTFIGHTS WITH SOME OF THE MORE IGNORANT COWORKERS AT THE RENTAL SHOP.
BRYN TOWEAUOL

Sometimes By Jacob Jones



Sometimes I think that computers and the internet are possibly the greatest things ever.
You can form lasting bonds with people hundreds of miles away through chat rooms. People get married too. Sometimes.
Unless you get murdered.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

HERE WE GO AGAIN, ANOTHER HOLIDAY SEASON OF GIVING...
WAL-MART FOR A BROTHER
WAL-MART FOR A SISTER
WAL-MART FOR A MOTHER
HA HA HA HA HA HA HA
NO TONGUE.
WAL-MART FOR A GRANDMA

Robotman By Jim Meddick

ANOTHER THING ABOUT THIS – HOW DID YOU GET A NUDE PHOTO OF ME? I DON'T REMEMBER POSING NUDE.
IT'S A COLLAGE. I STUCK YOUR HEAD ONTO THE BODY OF A CIRCUS GEEK.
OH. OK. RIGHT.
LET ME LOOK...
I KNOW IT KIND OF DISTURBS ME THAT I MISTOOK A CIRCUS GEEK'S BODY FOR MY OWN.
THE EXTRA NIPPLE. THE EXTRA NIPPLE'S THE GIVE AWAY.

Horoscopes

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Try to include your family in any social events that arise. You need to create a closer bond with those you love. Your entertaining nature will win favors from those you deal with at work.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't let colleagues hold you back. Do your work promptly. Don't wait around for help. You can gain additional insight if you pick up some literature that deals with your chosen field. Keep up with the times, and you'll be the one to advance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Your friends or relatives will be able to give you some good advice if you confide in them. You need to get you and enjoy yourself more often. Look for inexpensive but entertaining activities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Your life will stabilize if you restrict yourself to a tight budget. Take care not to be talked into donating to organizations that you believe in but really can't afford to help.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You have to put your energy to good use with competitive sports events, socializing with friends, or spending time with the one you love. Your passion will be hard to contain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You can learn if you listen to others. You need to stand back and decide if you are really going in a direction that will satisfy your needs.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Take time to do things for yourself. You've been so busy caring for everyone else that you've forgotten what it's like to be pampered.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Arguments will lead to anxiety and frustration, not to mention loneliness and hurt. Don't overreact to your partner's lack of time or attention. Keep busy. Get involved in your own interests, and you won't be by yourself for long.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your quick with will win you points. Voice your opinion, but don't be too pushy or opposition will arise. Physical activity will be rewarding. You will have the energy to get things finished.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Channel your efforts into fixing up your home, not arguing with those you live with. Don't let your stubborn nature lead to irreconcilable differences.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your emotional partner will be upset if you have been neglecting your duties. Someone you have become friends with has greater interest in you than you realize. Tread carefully.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Don't let yourself be dragged into a love triangle. Be sure that the person you date is free and clear of past involvements. Children will play an important role today.

MONKEY-BOX BY PBSJ

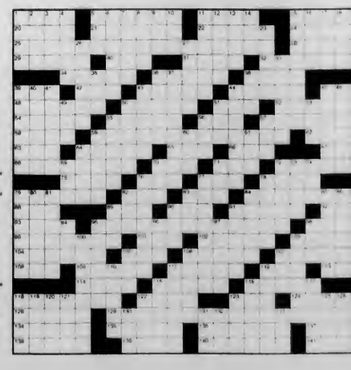
EVEN IN HIS HOME, DR. SEUSS WAS ACCOSTED BY TRUFFULA TREES DEMANDING FAIR TREATMENT IN THE LORAX. © 2001

www.monkey-box.net

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thurs. Dunk Stuntman Rock $2 cover
Sat. Crocodile Tears Blues $3 cover
Sun. Closed HAPPY EASTER
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst 413-253-4400 WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS
1 Coal or sheer
5 — the Hut
11 "Patsy and —"
14 Target heat
20 Renew
21 Grassnotes
22 Bodybuilder Charles
24 Weirdo
25 Occasionally
26 Easy entry
29 Transmitted
30 Computer abbr.
31 Mr. Mulroney's initials
32 "It half-asleep
34 Nail-holders
36 "Pray" time
38 Roberto Clemente
39 BC's neighbor
42 Level with
43 Ashes and flames
44 Dessert pancake
45 Chinese chairman
48 Be
50 Less common
51 Conductor
52 Of the kidneys
56 Farmer's daughter
57 Pick-up-and-go
59 Cat or
61 Fleeting grace
63 Wasting time
64 Headquarters
65 Slippery as an —
66 Glass planes
69 Hymn
69 Investor ratio (2 wds.)
70 Mongrel
71 Deep
72 Dr. Dre's music
77 Mile — socialist
78 Sumo gp.
79 Tennis shots
79 Bandleader Lombardo
79 Mr. Into
79 Sympathetic
79 Indian princes
82 Sack
83 Broncos' grp.
84 Conceive a picture
86 Actress — Marie Saint
89 Sphere
90 — Whatsershaw
91 Hero's honor
92 Actor Harrison
93 Domestic birds
95 Agnes deMille for one
98 Hindu morality
99 Some grass
101 Soil
102 Stage awards
103 Scene of confusion
104 Monster
105 "I spy" or ruby
106 Tangle
107 Irresistible!
108 — Aviv
109 Photographer Adams
111 Not glossy
112 Vote against
113 He's no gentleman!
114 Horse's gait
115 Make fragrant
116 Wormgear and Wyndham
118 Tumble down
122 Fierce opening
123 Toe fuel
124 Fable author
126 Crowded meetings
129 Hurricanes
(2 wds.)
134 Tot
135 Potato, e.g.
136 Bright-colored bird
137 Baseball team
138 Overpublishes
139 Williams and Kopper
140 Polish city
141 Yokes

DOWN
1 Dried tears
2 Praise highly
3 On a cruise
4 Roost
5 Bit of a fuss
6 Achilles —
7 Tortilla snacks
8 Bad time for Caesar
9 Aisha gift
10 Dear Abby's sister
11 Jealoused
12 It will pull you out
13 Cleaned
14 Beastiality Maglie
15 Lantern fuel
16 Kitty's sound
17 Some limbs
18 Mellow
19 Actress Harper
23 Swamp grass
26 Potty objects
27 Fall flower
33 — of summoning
35 Ideas on offer
36 Bright and —
37 Daytona 500 area
39 Historic period
40 Floor part
40 "—ticker
41 "— 12"
43 Pilgrim
44 Smears history?
45 Ground instrument
46 Is bratty
47 Not us
49 Opposite of "over"
50 Aggravated
53 — Swiss cheese
55 Bill
58 Historic talk
60 Layer
67 And, for Hans
68 Smears
69 Dada founder Jean
81 Sumitar rumored
84 "Nonsense!"
88 Ga. neighbor
89 Tuscaloosa sing.
71 R.N.'s specialty
72 Amazon, e.g.
73 Author Bagnold
74 LP successors
75 San — CA
77 Insults
78 Leg pump
79 Ole born again
80 White sheet
81 Tame
82 Sid's sibling
83 Lao-tzu
84 Member of song
85 Semitic language
86 Swiss city
87 Bonehead
88 Shouts of surprise
90 NASA agency
91 Bell tower
94 Cross tie —
95 "I — tell a lie"
96 Shade tree
97 Lassen or Hershey
98 Long-lasted measure
100 Down-to-earth people
103 Small domestic fowl
105 "Golly"
106 More sensible
107 Neither's partner
110 Kettle part
111 Length units
112 Dome
115 — -in: collapses
116 Boxing knockouts
117 Fishing lines
118 "Nonsense!"
119 Unsightly
120 Harvest grain
121 Statesman Lebrun
122 Scott (all)
123 Fuels
126 Go on a voyage
128 Science magazine
127 Homey desserts
130 "Squirrel" tool
131 Paint unpro
132 Keogh alternative
133 "In a — seconds"



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH
Baked Fish with Herb Topping

Plain Baked Fish(P) (B, H, W)

Ratatouille with Ricotta and Basil (vegetarian) (B, H, W)

Jamaican 3-Bean Stew (vegan)

DINNER
Texas Tech BBQ Beef Tips(P)

Mixed Bean Creole (vegan)

Spinach Tortilla Casserole (vegetarian)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Alan Bosque
Production Staff	Kara Stokes, Augusto Landaura

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Sox making the grade early on

ADAM WHITE

One of my professors asked me yesterday morning what grade I'd give the Red Sox based on their first six games of this young season.

Without hesitation, I said "A."

Sure, the loss of Nomar Garciaparra changes the team's very dynamic. But I'll contend that No. 5's injury has proved to be EXACTLY the kind of adversity this team needed to pull together and start playing as one. The attitudes of the players in regards to Nomar's absence have been universally positive – every game the oh-so predictable Boston press besieges these guys with "would Nomar have made the difference" questions and every game the answers are the same: learning to win without Nomar will make the Sox a juggernaut when he comes back.

Secondly, the pitching has been nothing short of BRILLIANT. The staff ERA of 1.65 leads the league, and the 62 strikeouts accrued by Boston pitchers at press time trailed Toronto by one for league best in that category. The team's five starters are 3-0 with a combined era of 2.32, and could easily be 5-0 had Pedro Martinez and Frank Castillo gotten a little more run support in their first outings.

And who saw the Hideo Nomo no-hitter coming? The "overpaid" tag had been firmly affixed to the righthander since his signing and forgettable spring, but all is now forgotten after his gem in Camden Yards. Nomo's resurgence is genuine, alright, and you can expect him to post more wins this season than any Sox No. 2 since Mike Boddicker (or Frank Viola, I guess). The reason is simple: high strike zone.

Rumor has it that Bret Saberhagen is inching closer to a return. I say just leave him on the bench; it's invaluable to have a grizzled, formerly sensational veteran who tutors young players on how to keep their money safe from vindictive ex-wives. I'm afraid that once his shoulder finally explodes, we'll never hear from him again.

The Sox will freely admit that last year's mound success was due in large part to their bullpen, and this year's pen looks even mightier. Sure, the loss of lefthander Rheal Cormier may hurt the team in certain situations, but Rich Garces, Rod Beck and even Rolando Arrojo have sparkled thus far (a combined one hit allowed in 7.2 innings pitched). Could Pete Schourek emerge as the team's southpaw situational specialist? I guess stranger things have happened.

Derek Lowe has been a tough-luck loser (twice already, but he hasn't pitched badly and should see his numbers bounce back in no time. Besides, he shouldn't be pitching in the games with such an anemic offense behind him anyway – that job should belong to the Hipolito Pichardos of the world.

Did I say anemic? I meant formerly anemic. The bats came alive during the team's first homestand and should stay hot. Manny Ramirez still looks a little gimpy, but when you swing the bat with such authority you can take your time going around the bases. I'm sad that he reeled in that afro, though – he was adding some much-needed flair to an otherwise tame (borderline lame) clubhouse.

This won't be the most popular opinion in Red Sox Nation, but Carl Everett could very well be the team's MVP this year. Yes, he's an absolute raving madman. But if hockey teams can have goons in their lines to protect their marquee players, why can't we have Crazy Carl to watch Manny's back in the line-up? As long as he doesn't pull a Marty McSorley on anyone, he's a vital cog in the Sox offense.

If Trot Nixon can stay in the lineup, he looks to be on the verge of a breakout year. Let's just hope that's breakout a la Mike Greenwell and not Phil Plantier.

Speaking of Mikes, I don't care if Mike Lansing makes 10 spectacular plays to save 10 no-hitters for Boston – he's a bum. His dive on the Mike Bordick flair was only necessary because he got an awful break on the ball and he's slow to begin with. Am I the only one who misses Jeff Frye?

Shea Hillenbrand will return to the minors in less than two months. Jose Offerman will return to his '99 form over the same period. Jimy Williams will return to his senses and return Dante Bichette to the DH spot full-time. I mean, come on – I like Scott Hatteberg too, but for God's sake, just trade the guy. If this club is so into rewarding homegrown players, why has it turned Lou Merloni into the human bungee cord between the majors and minors?

I still think Chris Stynes could be the most pleasant surprise of the season. Then again, I have made a lifetime of rooting for guys like Reid Nichols.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

Wild Hearts invade Lorden

Minutemen welcome Pioneers to Valley for showdown

DAN SANTILLA/COLLEGIAN

The UMass baseball season will have one of its old face return to campus in former shortstop Seth Kaplan, but do not expect the Minutemen to welcome his Sacred Heart squad with open arms.

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

After struggling out of the gates the Massachusetts baseball team is finally getting into the swing of things at the right time.

After a weekend, although it was extended until Monday due to a rainout on Sunday afternoon, where the Minutemen took two-of-three games from Atlantic foe Duquesne, UMass (7-11, 4-2 A-10) will take a break from its conference schedule for a game with Scared Heart University at Earl Lorden Field.

It may have taken nearly a month of baseball for the Maroon and White to catch stride, but nevertheless the winning ways are back on the diamond.

A large part to the recent success of the Minutemen has been consistency on the mound. In Monday's win over the Dukes Nick Skirkanich went the distance in the 7-1 victory. The senior allowed a single earned run on eight hits and struck out 10. With the win the senior improved his mark to 3-1 on the season.

The lone run that the Cheshire, Conn. native gave up came on a first inning home run to the surging Mark Lyons. Lyons tagged UMass pitching for three round-trippers in the series.

To go along with the efforts on the mound, the Maroon and White bats look as if they have come around. Leading the charge has been sophomore Jeff Altieri. Altieri has started all 18 of UMass games and compiled a .364 average and a team-leading 21 RBI. The Whitinsville, Mass. native also has three home runs as well as seven doubles.

Another player that has been shouldering the load in the absence of catcher Chris Morgan is Nick Gourmeault. The senior outfielder has played in 17 games and batted an astounding .415 (27-65) tallying 13 RBI and extra base hits (five doubles, two triples and two home runs).

A pleasant surprise at the pate has been shortstop Aaron Senez. The junior delivered the go-ahead single in Monday's win over Duquesne and has 12 RBI on the season to go along with a .308 average.

Senez's role in today's game will be doubly important as Seth Kaplan, the Minuteman shortstop from 1997-99 will return to Amherst. Kaplan revisits the Pioneer valley for the first time as a member of the Sacred Heart (7-15, 3-6 Northeast Conference) coaching staff.

The Pioneers head in this afternoon's matchup having lost six-of-seven games including a three-game weekend sweep by Central Connecticut State. Sacred Heart also dropped a pair of games to Duquesne in Homestead, Fla. in early March.

Matt Lemanczyk comes into the game as the team's leading hitter at .402 clip. In 22 games this season the junior has one home run and 14 RBI.

To combat the offensive attack the Maroon and White will send Brian Hourigan to the mound. The junior will be seeing his first action since April 4 when he allowed seven hits and seven runs in two-and-a-third innings of work.

Heading into the game coach Mike Stone stresses that his team needs to play to its potential.

"We just need to play well," Stone said. "They should be a tough team to beat. If this team plays like they can, and if [we] play team oriented baseball, we'll have a good showing. Everyday we'll be a decent ball club, and we should be a tough team to beat."

Curse remains for Jimy's kids

BRYAN SMITH

Let me start off by saying that I am a die-hard Red Sox fan. At times it is enjoyable, but many times – like now for instance – it becomes gut-wrenching.

I say this because Major League Baseball has just entered its second week of the regular season and everyone is an uproar already. The loudest cries can be heard from Boston fans who drool over the fact that Hideo Nomo pitched a no-hitter in his first start and Pedro Martinez struck out 16 batters against the Tampa Bay Devil Rays.

Realization No. 1 – Nomo had his day – or night – in the spotlight. Wait until he resorts to his old self and walks 10 batters per nine innings and has a 5.5 ERA.

Realization No. 2 – Nomar Garciaparra should have gotten his surgery a lot sooner. Leave it to Dr. Arthur Pappas to screw (has) one up. It has been an ongoing problem that could have been fixed during the off-season instead of having to be on the sideline until the All-Star break.

Realization No. 3 – Bench Manny Ramirez until he is healthy. There is no need to keep him in the lineup when the guy cannot even leg out a double off the wall. What use is a guy who can hit a ball 390 feet and can only get 90 of it back? A healthy Ramirez would be standing on second base rather than being pulled for a pinch runner late in games. Nomar is already out, why not have them both healthy for the stretch run?

Realization No. 4 – Jimy Williams is an idiot. Pedro pitching – up a run – playing a terrible hitting team in the Baltimore Orioles – he pulls the infield in? Real smart. You can have the best pitcher on the planet, as the Red Sox do, but the most foolish of managers can still mess things up. This is just one of the many shortcomings he has. He should just stay in the dugout with his hands down his pants and let Pedro do his job.

Realization No. 5 – Gene Lamont is no better than "Wave 'em in" Wendall Kim. In the same game that Williams pulled the infield in, Lamont got Chris Stynes thrown out at the plate. It is the same old story just with a different narrator. At least Kim provided a novelty with his sprint to the third base coach's box.

Realization No. 6 – The American League East is the toughest division in baseball. There is the three-time defending World Series champion Yankees to deal with. On top of this there is the upstart Toronto Blue Jays. The Yankees have the best, on paper, roster in baseball and the Blue Jays will score about a million runs this season. Both of these factors will play a huge role in whether or not the Red Sox make the playoffs with the new, unbalanced schedule that has division rival playing each other 19 times. This is great for the fans, but terrible for playoff hopes.

Realization No. 7 – Sign a player who is great in the clubhouse – David Cone – but has virtually no arm left. The perfect balance of age and injury should help for a playoff push. Cone can sit next to Bret Saberhagen at the UMass Medical Center and reminisce about Cy Youngs gone by. This would have been this best tandem in baseball in 1988. Good job by Dan Duquette. Why not bring back Bruce Hurst, I heard he had a few more pitches left – he is the left-hander that the Beantown boys have needed for 10 years.

Realization No. 8 – Darren Lewis is horrible. He couldn't hit a beach ball with a tennis racket. If Williams has Dante Bichette and Jose Offerman on the bench, is there a need to send the chipmunk to the plate? Granted, Bichette has not had a respectable season since he played a Coors Field – inflated statistics – and Offerman made an All-Star game in a season that he batted .279. Nonetheless, both are better hitters than Lewis. I would rather have Anthony the ball boy take hacks late in games than Lewis.

Realization No. 9 – It is the 100th Anniversary of the Red Sox. A century of misery was enough, but there could be another one if Duquette keeps making the managerial moves that he has in the past – what will be next a major move at the trade deadline when he re-acquires Larry Anderson off waivers. That should make Butch Hobson feel much better about himself.

Realization No. 10 – At least the Chicago Cubs are worse off than the Red Sox. Fast forward to 2086 – Red Sox-Cubs World Series – Game 7 – Sox win – world ends. That would be nice.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian columnist.

DAN SANTILLA/COLLEGIAN

The women's tennis team was once again victorious as it defeated A-10 foe Fordham at the Upper Boyden Courts yesterday afternoon.

Minutewomen drop Rams in home debut

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

While the outcome was something rather familiar to the Massachusetts women's tennis team, the setting was a little new.

After enduring 14 matches away from the friendly confines of the UMass campus to start off the spring season, the Minutewomen opened up Upper Boyden Courts in style yesterday afternoon with a 7-0 thrashing of Fordham.

Under sunny skies and hopes of an Atlantic 10 title, the Maroon and White received strong efforts from each of its six players to deliver a dominant win over the outmatched Rams. Coach Judy Dixon expected to come out on top, but emphasized that the team's main goal now is solely to get ready for next weekend's A-10 Tournament in New Jersey.

"The idea now is to get 'match-tough' for next weekend," Dixon said. "I've scheduled a lot of upcoming matches to build up our confidence before A-10's."

Freshman Francesca Mancini again contributed with another quality performance as she made quick work of her opponent 6-4, 6-1. Jafra Depontes and Susan Hyams also delivered strong outings as they won 6-2, 6-1, and 6-20, 6-, respectively. Lindsay Gilkody and Annie Hamilton also had convincing wins on the day.

The doubles point did not prove to be difficult either, as the Maroon and White swept the Rams in the three tandem matches. The newly formed duo of Mancini/Hamilton won its match 8-3, and Gilkody/Depontes took care of their foes as well, 8-3. Hyams and Helena Horak won the other doubles match, as the Minutewomen enjoyed their sixth win of the season holding their opponent scoreless.

With a match today against Rhode Island and a match tomorrow versus Williams College, the Minutewomen will be looking to continue their stellar play as of late and keep their momentum going as they journey to the conference tournament.

"We're really feeling comfortable right now, and these matches will be good warm-ups for A-10's," Hyams said.

With yesterday's win, the Minutewomen now stand at 15-6 on the entire season and have played exceptional tennis since their loss to Army on Feb. 24. Since that defeat, the team has won seven of its last nine matches (the two losses against tough Florida opposition) and reeled off five straight overall.

With the women playing up to their potential, Dixon now just wants to keep their attitude at its current level.

"We're playing fairly confident right now… what I'm trying to do is practice as little as possible," she said, explaining that at this stage in the season, not much else can be done except getting ready for matches.

"What we need to do right now is simply to stay healthy, and stay eager."

Today's match against Rhode Island begins at 3:00 at Upper Boyden Courts.

internet! 253-2643

2 People Needed for 2 bedroom Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Furniture for sale also. Call 549-6307 ASAP

Take Over Our Lease! June 1st. 2 Bedroom Colonial Village on bus route. $625/month 253-0645

Available Immediately 1 Br. Apt. Puffton Village. Bus routes, heat, gas, hot water, included. Call 508-898-2317 or dan4tw@earthlink.net

ROOM FOR RENT

One Female Looking for one male or female to share one bedroom with study. Puffton Apartments. June, July & August. Rent (VERY) negotiable. Call Megan 546-2602

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Two Female Roommates looking for 1 or 2 other females roommates for apt in Brandywine. Call 546-2738

Looking for Roommate Female preferred, cooking skills a plus. Must be willing to win at beerpong. Contact Adam yo-st, Department 24

1 Bedroom Summer Sublet 4 females looking for another female roommate. Great house in nice quiet area of Amherst w/view of mountains, near bus route. Available June 1. Call Lara 256-2104

1 Bedroom in Sunderland Cliffside Apts. on bus route $310 a month all inclusive 546-3609

1 Bedroom Available 2 bedroom apt. Clean with carpet and dishwasher. M/F $300/mo. Available now. Call Gareth 665-8693

2 Females looking for 1 or 2 roommates to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting Sept. 1. Call Laura 546-5525

1 Bedroom Available in 2br Colonial Village Apt. $300/month starting June 1. 253-5350

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. for summer sublet. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

3 Bedroom Apt. in Townehouse. Fully furnished. Rent negotiable. Call 549-0454

Summer Sublet 2 bedrooms Colonial Village $600 a month 256-8027

Puffton Newly renovated 3 bedroom/2bath. Take over our lease partially furnished if needed fall option available 549-0432

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighboors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woody!

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

1 Room in 2 Bedroom brandywine apt. $365/1 person, $265/2 people each/ month. Call 549-6104

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

TAKE OVER OUR LEASE

Starting June 1! 3 Bedroom Apt., Puffton Village $1010 a month Call 549-9959

2 Bedroom in Brandywine Starting June 1st. Call for info 549-4483

SOUTHPOINT
TOWNHOUSES & APARTMENTS
42A Southpoint Dr. Amherst, MA

- Minutes To Amherst Center, Major Shopping & Atkins Farms
- Extremely Large Living Areas
- Majors Appliance, Including Dishwasher
- Scenic Country Setting On Nearly 20 Acres
- Directly On Free 5-College Bus Route (Every 20 Minutes)
- Located Within Excellent Amherst School System
- Tennis Courts
- Both Townhouse & Garden Style
- Professional Management & Maintenance
- No Pets

(413) 253-4055 Southpoint Apartments & Townhouses

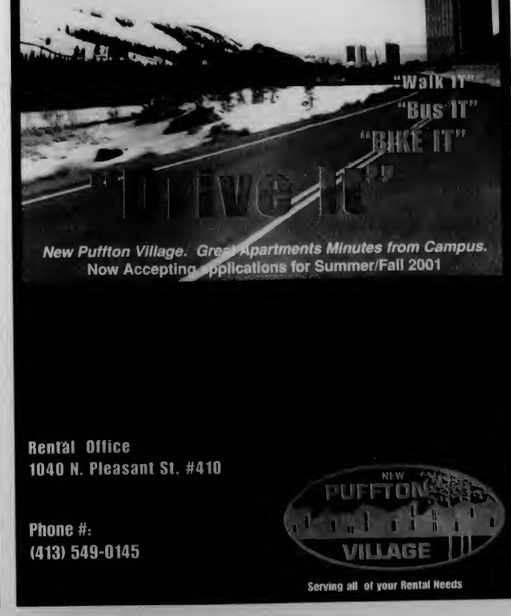
Managed by. RONEX CORP. Mon-Fri 10am-6pm• Sat 10am-5pm • Sun 12pm-4pm

HARLOW PROPERTIES

COME SEE US FOR QUALITY RENTALS IN THE VALLEY.

PERSONALIZED SERVICE... WE GET THE JOB DONE!

Check out our web page!!
www.harlowproperties.com
See Jeanne or e-mail
jeanne@harlowproperties.com
73 Main Street, Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 256-3442



New Puffton Village. Great Apartments Minutes from Campus.
Now Accepting Applications for Summer/Fall 2001

Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410

Phone #:
(413) 549-0145

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

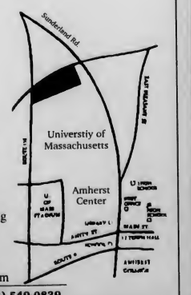
Serving all of your Rental Needs

Townehouse of Amherst CONDOMINIUMS

Make TowneHouse "Your home away from home!"

TWO & THREE BEDROOM CONDOMINIUMS

- Two Different Floor Plans
- All Two Stories
- Gas heating (most), Electric (few)
- Fully applianced
- Air Conditioners
- Wall-to-wall carpet
- Bath and 1/2 lav.
- Spacious living room
- Individual patio
- Cable ready
- On Bus Route
- Ample Resident Parking



Look us up on the World Wide Web at WWW.The-Spa.com/Townehouse/Th-main.htm

50 Meadow Street ● Amherst, MA 01002 ● Tel. (413) 549-0839

Mill Valley Estates

Situated in the heart of picturesque South Amherst is the beautifully landscaped Mill Valley Estates.

Mill Valley offers residents that crave the finer things in life an opportunity to indulge themselves. Each building offers two and three-bedroom apartments - there are select number of buildings that offer four bedroom living spaces.

One major attraction to Mill Valley is that no matter what the size of the apartment, each are equipped with two full-service bathrooms. All versions have one bathroom that is centrally located while the other adjoins to the master bedroom. This makes it the perfect fit for college students, as most tend to be on a relatively similar class schedule.

All units have the have completely modern kitchenettes standard with a spacious refrigerator, garbage disposal and dishwasher. All three possess their individual wealth - a spacious refrigerator offers the opportunity to purchase in bulk to save money - a garbage disposal allows left-over food to be thrown away without having to take out the trash out (dumpsters are located throughout the complex) - the dishwasher provides students with the thing they love to do most, procrastinate. When dishes are used they can be stored in the dishwasher and cleaned at a later time rather than immediately after use. Also standard in the kitchen is a large electrical stove.

With appliances it is worth mentioning that the maintenance staff is prepared to handle any problems that may be brought about, from a leaky faucet to and malfunctioning dishwasher. The staff is on call 24 hours to deal with all problems.

Closet space within the units is not a problem as there are closets in both the hallways as well as the bedrooms. This is also the space with cabinet space in both the kitchen and the bathrooms. This again allows students to purchase in bulk without having to worry if there will be storage space.

One of the more luxurious offerings are air conditioners. All units have two, one in the living space and the other in the master bedroom. As luxurious as this may be, it may not be the most economical as electric is not included in the rental cost – heat and hot water are. Nonetheless, the air conditioner is a hands asset on days when the air is hot.

With leisure in mind Mill Valley has a full-sized basketball court that overlooks Hickory Ridge Country Club (golf course) as well as a tennis court. There is also ample grass in that provides a forum for anything from sunbathing to Frisbee-chucking.

Mail is centrally located in the building that also houses the facility's management. Each apartment has its own, private mailbox that can only be opened via key. For bigger packages there is an oversized mailbox – the mailman puts a key in the apartment's mailbox that allows access to the larger box. As far as private shipping goes, if a package is delivered and the recipient is not home it will be stored in the office and the management will make the tenant aware of its arrival.

Laundry is located on site with six washing machines and eight dryers. Both are the latest in the industry, but constant use has taken its toll as dryers take more than one cycle to dry.

Another luxury is the on-site day care service. This makes it convenient for those with young ones to leave their kin in safe hands while they go to work. The day care is private which allows others to take advantage of the service as well.

In the winter plowing and shoveling walkways is taken care of expediently by the facilities maintenance staff.

The drawbacks are few, but as in all places there must be some. Parking is a problem as there are not enough spaces as there are stickers given out and there are no lights in the bedrooms. Another drawback is that it is not conducive to the party lifestyle as the environment is more family-oriented. This is not to say that there are no students there - the ratio is approximately 50-50. Also, the Route 31 PVTA bus is somewhat of a hassle to get to as it does not stop on the premises, but on East Hadley Rd. the walk differs depending upon where you apartment is situated within the complex.

Despite the drawbacks Mill Valley Estates is a quite, pleasant place to live.

- Bryan Smith

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

The Village

Colonial Village is located on the east side of town along rt. 9, just beyond reasonable walking distance from either the UMass campus or Amherst center.

Plenty of parking is available (theoretically requiring a sticker, although few cars display them and sticker-checkers have yet to be spotted), and it receives direct service on the PVTA's Belchertown Road route, making commuting easy.

Snow removal in the winter can be slow and inconsistent, making the short walk to both a 24-hour Cumberland farms and Mike's Billiards a much-appreciated convenience.

The modestly-priced rent includes only hot water, and heat is electric, so care must be taken to moderate heat use and keep the heat off when no one's home, or the monthly energy bills can become considerable; with a little vigilance about curbing heat and light wastefulness, however, this shouldn't be a problem.

The standard two-bedroom apartment (and they're all cut from the same mold) has a small kitchen and a large living room with a picture window. The bedrooms themselves are of decent size, if austere, and the details are of the sort you'd expect from low-end college town apartments: doors that close against walls instead of into them, low-flow showerheads that take a beating every time someone flushes, etc.

In consideration of the low-end rent and good location, however, there's nothing extreme about these drawbacks. The maintenance service is thorough, if at times slow to respond, and summer grounds keeping is consistent.

Along with the convenience of the location, one of Colonial Village's strongest selling points is the relative peacefulness of the surroundings; apart from rush hour traffic is moderate, and neighbors are generally quiet and considerate.

-David Troupes

Don't forget...

ask about pets!

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

The Townehouses

If meeting new people in a diverse environment is what you are searching for, look no further, Townehouse of Amherst located on Meadow Street may be the place for you.

A variety of different people are one thing that the Townehouses can boast about, catering to the needs of approximately 50 percent students, graduate students and even area professors.

"We like to think of ourselves as a 'home away from home'" Judi Johnson from Townehouse of Amherst said. "We are very student friendly and we have every spectrum of people here."

Beyond being a friendly and diverse atmosphere the Townehouses are also easy to get to, situated six tenths of a mile from campus and directly on a bus line for easy access to anywhere in Amherst. For those students with vehicles, the complex also takes care of those as well. Students are issued two free stickers per housing unit and are required to pay for any additional stickers that they require. Extended parking for the complex is owned the Condo Association.

The mini-condominiums are available with two to three bedrooms, with wall-to-wall carpeting and ceramic and vinyl tile. The apartments can comfortably house up to four people per living space. Each living space also includes a kitchen, living room and bathroom.

All of the living units are cable ready and roadrunner accessible, there are also phone jacks located in nearly every room. Laundry facilities are located on the premises and are coin-operated.

The complex boasts catering to students with trash removal receptacles on the premises, snow removal provided by the complex and an easily accessible maintenance staff in case anything within the individual housing complexes goes wrong.

Utilities are all electric with the exception of heating. Tenants there have the choice of natural gas heating which will cost approximately $4400 per year or strict electric heating which costs in the neighborhood of $20-25 per month, per person. One drawback however is that the apartments do not include air conditioning.

One unique quality about the Townehouses is their bookkeeping. As opposed to many others complexes in the area, the Townehouses will keep track of individual renter's payments rather than adding everything on to one tally. This can allow individuals to make their own payments for their rent.

All of these factors included make the Townehouses an interesting and comfortable option for anyone searching for an apartment.

-Melissa Hammel

Puffton Village: close and comfortable

MORGAN TAYLOR

I have lived in Puffton Village for the past two school years now and for the most part, I have nothing but good things to say about it. My friends and I chose Puffton because it is conveniently located near several other off-campus living areas (Brandywine, Hobart, etc.). While we do not have the advantage of being in town, it has proven to be worthwhile living in such a college-student concentrated area. There is always something to do in the immediate area because of this.

Puffton has many advantages for its tenants. There are well-kept, fenced-in basketball and tennis courts, which are available to everyone. This area becomes a common "hang-out" place when the weather gets warm. There are always games being played. Additionally, there is a swimming pool, but, unfortunately, it is only open during the summer months (i.e., when college students are not around to destroy it). Since it is always closed when I am at school, I cannot say if it is well maintained or used, for that matter.

One of the biggest perks of living in Puffton for UMass students is having one of the major bus stops right in the complex. Buses come every fifteen minutes and have always proved to be very reliable in my own opinion. This is also nice on weekends when the bus can be easily taken to go uptown or to other parts of Amherst without having to drive.

Maintenance seems to be of utmost importance to the Puffton staff. Most of the times that we have had problems in our apartment, a member of the maintenance staff has come over to fix it almost immediately, and, most often, they are very friendly. In the spring, summer and fall months, the grass is mowed once a week religiously. Snow removal can sometimes be slow, but they do seem to be faster than Brandywine.

One unfortunate thing about Puffton apartments is their lack of proper insulation. During the dead of winter, the apartments tend to be freezing, even with the heat on 85! But with some persistence, the Puffton maintenance crews will put plastic on your windows. We finally got them to do this and it made a drastic difference. We do not pay for heat or hot water, only for electricity and phone. Air conditioning tends to be expensive, but we haven't needed to use it all that much, since our apartment has been vacant both summers that we leased it.

Overall, I have really enjoyed living in Puffton, and would recommend it to anyone looking for a comfortable and affordable off-campus apartment that is conveniently located near UMass.

-Morgan Taylor is a Collegian staff member.

Brandywine fits the bill

Location, location, location! This is probably the best aspect of living in Brandywine. Located just a half mile down the road from the UMass campus, Brandywine is close enough to walk to and from in nicer weather and situated on two bus lines, Sunderland and North Amherst, for those not so nice days. Downtown Amherst is easily accessible and busses currently run through quarter past one on weekend nights, allowing students time to make that all important stop at Club Sidewalk before making their way back home.

Apartments are one floor and either one or two bedrooms with rent varying depending on the level on which you reside, first second or third, and pond/no pond view. Each kitchen includes a gas stove, refrigerator and dishwasher and is large enough to accommodate a kitchen table and two students cooking their Ramen noodles. Balconies with sliding glass doors provide lots of sunlight and a place to hang out (i.e. procrastinate) in the warmer months. Words to the wise though, no matter how much snow accumulates on the ground do not attempt to jump from your second floor balcony. Cooley-Dickinson is not a fun place to be at 3am. The complex grounds are attractive and include a small pond, home to many area ducks, and grassy areas that are perfect for weekend Frisbee games and midnight snowball fights. Rent includes heat, hot water and gas for cooking and each unit comes with A/C. Electric bills are typically the same from September through May but do increase sharply in the summer due to air conditioning costs. Management is on-sight and maintenance is typically quick to respond to problems.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Most residents are students, as are those who live in nearby Puffton, The Townhouses and Hobart Lane. The past year has seen the management become more and more strict about parties, which has somewhat, dampened the social atmosphere on the weekends. They have also broadened their definition of "party" to include four roommates watching Monday Night RAW, but whatever...

The biggest problem, however, for Brandywine residents has been the parking situation. There are not enough spots for residents, each apartment is allotted only two parking stickers, let alone guests and towing is an almost daily occurrence. This can sometimes lead to an increase in "utility" costs for students.

Sugarloaf and Squire Village

Do you want an apartment complex that has its own in-ground swimming pool on the premises? Well that is just one of the some of the outstanding qualities that make both Squire Village Apartments and Sugarloaf Estates in Sunderland special places.

The Squire Village Apartments feature a number of different options for interested students. The complex can offer smaller one to two bedroom apartments or accommodate larger groups with four to five bedrooms living spaces.

The wall-to-wall carpeted apartments are fully stocked with modern appliances and include the luxury of a dishwasher.

Although air conditioning is available in the apartments neither AC nor heat are included in the bill, hot water however, is provided for in the one to two bedroom living spaces.

A well-lit parking lot is located on the premises that give tenants ample space to park their vehicles if they choose not to ride the bus.

Another distinctive feature to these apartments is the large walk in closets that are included in every apartment and sliding glass doors in the dining room. One downfall to the complex may be the laundry facility, which is operated by card access only.

Sugarloaf Apartments is also distinctive in its own way as well.

These two bedroom apartments allow for selected washers and dryers inside some of the apartment complexes, both a convenience and a rarity for all other apartment complexes in the area, while for the others on-site laundry facilities are available.

The new oak kitchens boast breakfast bars, and the bathrooms enjoy the luxury of two full private designer baths. Another interesting touch is sliding doors that lead out to private balconies.

All utilities are included in the rent and free heat and hot water are just part of the deal when you are living in Sugarloaf Estates.

What makes Sugarloaf Estates especially interesting however is both the sand volleyball courts and the picnic and BBQ area that allows those interested to pass the time in the summer either swimming, playing volleyball or having personal picnics.

Both Squire Village and Sugarloaf Estates are located in Sunderland, home to a 24-hour 7-11 convenience store, shopping center and one of the best coffee shops in the Pioneer Valley, the Dove's Nest.

A short ride up Route 116 allows access to two of the area's most popular attractions, the Yankee Candle Company and the Whately Diner.

The area is also ripe with recreational areas geared toward the outdoorsy type, especially wooded trails perfect for hiking and mountain biking.

Both complexes are situated on a bus line that leads to campus. Although the ride may be a little longer than for other complexes in the Amherst area, the added amenities and surroundings of both Sugarloaf Estates and Squire Village make them a worthy choice when it comes to apartment hunting.

-Melissa Hammel

Arts brings you thrilling behind-the-scenes chats with the creators of the Collegian's student comic strips. ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Monty Mack won Dr. J's award last night. To find out who won the rest of the awards, see Sports. SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 115 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, April 12, 2001

SHALINI MARTI/COLLEGIAN

Remember

These shirts are part of a t-shirt project going on at Amherst College to remember victims of rape. A similar event will be going on at UMass next month.

Water main fills Hill with misery

By Katherine Ross
Collegian Correspondent

Orchard Hill residents were left with dirty teeth, shampoo in their hair and unflushable toilets as they watched the water meant for their building flooding out onto the sidewalk early Friday, April 6.

At about 8:20 a.m., a construction crew working on the Steam Line Project in Orchard Hill accidentally cut a water main. Water stopped flowing, and students emerged from showers damp and confused. Water was lost in Field, Grayson, and Dickinson dorms for a half-hour and in Webster for just over three hours.

"I seriously cannot believe there's no water," one groggy, half-showered woman said, as an entire bathroom full of others nodded and voiced their assent.

Sophomore Webster resident and Political Science/Italian double major Christina Laude summed up student opinion, saying, "This sucks. UMass hired some incompetent people to take care of the project."

Another Webster resident, Julie Flanders, a sophomore Communications major, sighed and took the event in stride. "It doesn't take me by surprise," Flanders said. "It always seems like the fate of the college to have setbacks in rather important projects. The water main break just adds more headaches to being at UMass, and yet we've all learned to deal."

An hour after the break, members of the construction crew pumping out the area were still unclear about what had happened.

"A big rock was underneath the main, and when they were digging, they hit it," said worker Carlton Edwards.

Another worker, walking by as Edwards spoke, shook his head.

"I don't know, it just happened. It happens," he said over his shoulder, declining to say more or give his name.

Bruce Thomas, the UMass Project Manager in charge of the Steam Line Project, said that the water main broke because it was old and brittle.

"It broke because it was in a fragile condition. They were excavating, and it broke during excavation," he said.

Students and workers seemed to agree that it couldn't have happened at a worse time. "It's always a Friday or a Monday," said one worker.

Laude, who learned about the cut main halfway through her morning shower, agreed.

"Friday, you don't want added stress. It's the weekend. Friday is my worst day, with the most classes," she said. "I don't need this."

The Steam Line Replacement Project is under way to replace the existing steam line between University Health Services (UHS) and the Orchard Hill residential area. Workers are also installing a new walkway and stairs on the North side of UHS to replace the so-called "goat trail," according to the UMass Facilities Planning Division website.

This is not the first major inconvenience that the construction has caused.

Turn to WATER page 3

It's only one week...

Facing an uphill battle with hope and confidence

SHALINI MARTI/COLLEGIAN

Seth Avakkian

SHALINI MARTI/COLLEGIAN

Jim Eltringham

RESPECT
THE DIFFICULT TASK IN STORE FOR THE NEW PRESIDENT AND TRUSTEE...
I THINK I FELT IT MOVE!
YOU WANT ME TO TRY PUSHING?
S.G.A.
CANADA '02

SHALINI MARTI/COLLEGIAN

John Sheehan

SHALINI MARTI/COLLEGIAN

Jon Laubinger

By Jaret Barr and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

It's been a shaky first week for John Sheehan and Jon Laubinger, the new Student Government Association President and Trustee. For a job where the first week is equivalent to the first 100 days of the United States President, the past seven days haven't treated either of the two particularly well.

Both have an infectious optimism for their new positions. After winning an election that was never as close as it seemed, John and Jon approached the interview for this article with the same excitement that they'd been approaching their new responsibilities on campus. It was their first time to talk from a position of power.

They're excited to try to rebuild a Student Government Association split apart by a year's worth of infighting in which the Senate was elected and then removed for Constitutional reasons and then re-elected. Little of what anyone would call progress occurred, a key tenet in the Jo(h)n's campaign, and both are anxious to see a productive Senate working for the student good.

They both hope for big things.

"They're going to see a new SGA," Sheehan said, referring to the students. "It's going to take help on all ends but we're going to do our damndest to give [The Collegian] good news to print."

Sheehan wants to see reform in Parking Services, ALANA enrollment and a change in the laundry machine fee, which he thinks is too high at $1.25 a load. Laubinger's for the same things, except he also wants to the see the University Meal Plan altered and a change in the Housing Appeals Board. Both of them realize it is going to take more than issues to win over the students, to triumph they must recover some of the legitimacy that was lost over the past year.

All promises aside, the beginning of their regime seemed more like the end of the last than it does something completely new.

Some panacea. Neither showed up for Tuesday's Safety Walk because of academic expectations. The annual event attempts to establish what could be done to make the University a safer place. Many people work hard to put the walk together, and, because of the tensions on this campus about safety issues, it was covered by the Daily Hampshire Gazette and Channel 22.

The Minuteman slammed them for their possible promotion of Mike Marin, a former Republican Club president who resigned from office, to Attorney General. Some people say Marin was forced from office. Few seem to believe that he has the experience necessary to have such a job.

As for Marin, both John and Jon are keeping mum. (He was appointed as the SGA's Secretary of Finance last night.)

And then there was their swearing in.

The first official meeting that the John and Jon held under their new regime scarily reflected the old. The SGA president didn't show up. The roll call started a fight. People chatted, laughed and rolled their eyes. A member of the ALANA Caucus made the same allegation that was made last year: because no President

SHALINI MARTI/COLLEGIAN

Jon Laubinger and John Sheehan(right) at last night's SGA meeting.

Turn to SGA page 2

■ SGA

continued from page 1

was sworn in by April 1, it was the Speaker of the Senate, Jim Eltringham, and not John Sheehan, who was to be President for the next year. A heated debate ensued. They agreed to disagree, and then they agreed to table their bickering, just long enough for John Sheehan and Jon Laubinger to speak.

John and Jon took the podium, but nothing had changed yet. Sheehan thanked his supporters, and promised change. People snickered and laugh. One Senator turned to another and said, "Ya, right. Maybe they'll throw more parties." The back of the room got a quick laugh. The hope that they had promised had not taken to the SGA yet. Before they make a believer out of the students, they must make believers out of the Senators.

Sheehan is full of crap," one Senator said. "You're full of crap," the other answered. Sheehan paused at the chatter.

"I don't care what side of the isle you sit on, we are here for the students," Sheehan exclaimed. If nothing else, it established temporary silence, a moment for the Senate to reflect their reasons for being there. A moment it lasted, and in a moment it left.

It was a first week chock-full of examples reminiscent of last year's SGA. It's what John and Jon want to change, but it's going to be an uphill battle. A recent Collegian political cartoon showed them trying to pull a boulder up a sheer cliff, but it might be harder than that.

Then again, it might not be. At least one member of this past year's uber-contentious SGA, the oft-criticized Eltringham, said he anticipates an easier year for the new President and Trustee. When asked how they would do, Eltringham stayed contemplative, slowly choosing his words.

"The last year is over," he said. "We have a group that's going to do some great things. The SGA you're going to see next year, and over the next couple of years, is going to be one where people are a lot more civil, more focused."

That wasn't enough for Eltringham. It was like he realized it didn't seem emphatic enough. "You'll see an SGA that can, no, that will blow your mind with the things they can accomplish." Eltringham predicted that the cycle of turmoil had run its course for the next few years.

Of course, the diminutive Speaker had the same thoughts about his own role in office. He didn't have any idea what was going to happen. For Eltringham, who twice ran and lost Presidential campaigns, this past year wasn't the ending he had in mind. He says he thought of things that he would have liked to do had he won the Presidency, but he also says he never looked at the Senate Speakership as some sort of "consolation prize."

Prize or not, there's no way that the past year went like anyone thought it would. An immediate schism developed between Eltringham and the then President and Trustee. A Senate was thrown out on Constitutional grounds and it was Eltringham who took the serious credibility hit. Seth Avakian, the Trustee, stopped attending meetings while the fight was taking place. Jeff Howe, the President, tried the case against Eltringham and won.

A second election was held and a month after that, it was time for the Presidential elections. Eltringham's chance at an SGA legacy was down to being remembered as the man at the helm of two different Senates in the same year. And now, with one more election to sit through, the one for his position. Eltringham's view of the SGA is still hopeful. He said he respected what Howe had gone through with his Trustee run (when he lost but was dragged through the SGA's mudpit) three years ago and again when Howe told Eltringham that he would have been comfortable with a loss to the current speaker.

"The strife plagued us because of personal attitudes to a great degree. But no one's hands are clean coming out of that," Eltringham said, referencing the intense battle. But he wouldn't declare that the Senate had failed the UMass students. "For me to say that they failed the students is arrogant and for anyone to say the same thing is being arrogant and overestimating their position." He stopped.

"But maybe I failed the students," Eltringham wondered. "Maybe Jeff and Seth did too."

Seth Avakian, agreed to a point. "We didn't do the job that we were put there to do," Avakian said. He acknowledged the crisis and the internal struggles but, like Eltringham, he thoughtfully commented on the success of recent elections and about the resilience of the SGA as a whole. "...the Senate is back and strong. The process of carrying on Speakers of the long term strength and importance of the SGA."

After a year of intense confusion, few of the proverbial 'old guard' will return to the SGA next year.

When it comes to a Senatorial critique, John and Jon don't pull the same punches as their predecessors. It wasn't their Senate after all – it wasn't their botched election – it wasn't their fight. Sheehan's blatant about it: "Yes, I'd say the SGA failed the students." He said that everybody's personal agenda got in the way. But Sheehan's careful with his evaluation.

"That's not a reflection on the people in the offices, but rather the environment that we bring people into," Sheehan said. "People can come into it, and if we're having fun, if we're trying to solve the problems with the school..."

There's a shaky hope in his voice. He wants to finish with something successful but he doesn't. Laubinger is silent too. They both seem to know what they're facing. But they're optimistic, at least in part, because there is certain newness to the SGA. Yes, the same old fights occurred, but didn't they at least involve new people?

Then again, are John and Jon really the outsiders they claim to be? Are they not from the same loop that brought Howe and Akakian and Eltringham and the chaos that ensued to the Student Government Association? Did Sheehan not fill the same position that Howe had as Orchard Hill Area Governor? Was Laubinger not a part of Howe's cabinet? Regardless of the inevitable ties that link the old and new regimes the lot(h)ns are trying to wipe the slate clean. Or at least in reality only take the positive and beneficial element from the past in to the new generation.

Both have attempted to move past their old responsibilities and learn lessons for the future. If they see themselves as new, then perhaps they are. Perhaps through a force of will, they will become new. Sheehan doesn't discuss his previous alliances; Laubinger stepped down from the SGA in the midst of the internal fighting. Both believe that they have the answer. While it might be overly poetic to conceive the new administration as a phoenix rising from the flames of the old institution, it is certainly an image that abides in the mind.

The sense that they will take they will extract the positive from last's years administration and subtract the negative seems to be prevalent when both speak about their commitments to the Senate, but a new start is in order.

"I'm excited because there's new blood in the SGA and I think that's going to help," Sheehan said. "And all I can do is ask for [students] support. I'm going to ask for it because it doesn't have to be that way. This about keeping the faith and making the student voice heard and all I can do is ask for that chance."

Laubinger was more confident.

"We bring something totally new. We are John and Jon, we don't have egos, we still are students, we still know who we work for," Laubinger said. "We are going to operate."

Or at least most expect that the two will. Jeff Howe wouldn't comment for this story, but his former running mate Seth Avakian thinks that great things are in store for the lot(h)ns. Eltringham predicts thing's that will blow the students' minds. The two new candidates still seem to have their confidence, regardless of a difficult first week.

But who know what will be the case a week from now, after all a week is a long time in politics; and there may be more difficult weeks. According to some, the fight over Marin and other possible appointments is only going to get more ferocious; similar predictions have been made for the next Speaker election.

Seth Avakian said that a Speaker that can work with the SGA Administration would be a key to success the new Speaker will have to learn the ropes quickly if the SGA is to rebuild and maintain a degree of productive consistency. Everybody thinks it will; it just had better go easier than the past week did. The honeymoon period in student politics is not a long one.

SHAUNA MARTIN/COLLEGIAN

Members of the SGA judiciary milling at last night's meeting.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Manke Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargunta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
✸ See what you eat!
✸ See what you drink!
✸ See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS
See You There
DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

University Liquors
beer • wine • liquor • cigarettes • phonecards
Napa Ridge Cab/Sauv $9.99
Blackston Merlot 75 ..... $9.99
Mondavi Coastal Piontnair 750 ..... $9.99
Wyndham Estate Shiraz 750 ..... $7.99
Columbia Cresi Merlot/Cab 750 ..... $6.99
Sutter Home White Zin. case of 3 ..... $11.00
Pabst case of 24 ..... $9.99 + dep
Haney Brawn 12 pack ..... $7.99 + dep
Heineken/Becks/Amstel 12 pack ..... $10.99 + dep
Bacardi Light and Gold 1.75 ..... $16.99
Rubinaff Vodka 1.75 ..... $9.99
Fighting Cock Bourbon 1 liter $14.99
Crown Rayal 750 ..... $19.99
Have a Happy Easter!

The Ultimate Graduation Gift
Say goodbye to student loan debt
Sign up today! It's FREE! Win $500!
GradFree.com
A student loan "gift registry"
Let the people who care about you lighten the load.

Atlantis
Behind Antonio's Pizza in Amherst
$2 COVER AFTER 11 PM
TUES: Greek Night w/Karaoke
THURS: Hip Hop and R & B w/ DJ Big Phil
FRI: Growroom presents "House on the Rochs" w/ DJs Hush & Salty
SAT: Hip-Hop and Reggae with DJ Trendz
"Ladies Night" – Ladies get in FREE
SUN: Open Mic – Open Turntable

Massachusetts School of Law
AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS
600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

DELIVERY HOTLINE
549-0077
Newly Rennovated Sushi Bar!
CHINESE & JAPANESE RESTAURANT
103 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413)256-8923 • 256-8924
NOW ACCEPTING OCMP!

SGA cabinet sworn in last night

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Last night's Student Government Association meeting went on the road to the Malcolm X Cultural Center in Southwest.

The meeting centered on the elections of the Chief and Associate Chief Justices as well as the Senate's approval of the newly appointed Executive Cabinet.

The issue of an Undergraduate Resident Advisor Union was one issue brought before the Senate once again. Senator David Synnot continued to advocate on behalf of RA's on campus stating that they will win the battle. Synnot furthered to explain that the Administration is scared to equalize power and just scared of change.

"We have not yet begun to fight, and we will fight them," Synnot said. "We represent almost two thirds of the RA's on this campus, and it's like rain, you can try and stop it, but it's still going to come down."

Other issues brought forth included budget cuts involving the English as a Second Language program at UMass. Student Trustee Seth Avakian's assistant Luis Nieves brought forth a report explaining the need to request three year contracts to be assigned to two professors who's contracts were not renewed.

Due to recent budget cuts, the ESL program will be losing two professors, thus leaving the program lacking staff. Nieves presented a motion to ensure ESL staff contracts in order to insure the program's continuance at UMass. However, the motion was moved to special motions and will be placed on next week's Senate meeting agenda.

The Senate's approval of President John Sheehan's appointed Executive Cabinet was also on last night's agenda. Senators were asked to focus on what each candidate had to offer versus personal biases and opinions.

"I have full confidence in the individuals that I have appointed," Sheehan said. "The students picked me for this position for a reason, so we need to leave personal stuff out of this and keep this respective."

Unlike previous appointments into office, the Senate had numerous questions for each of the appointee's. Issues surrounding each individual's ability as well as commitment were just a few of the many questions asked.

Senator Mike Marin was appointed to the Secretary of Finance position, which has been in limbo for the past few semesters. He explained that he would provide stability, as it is one thing he has seen the position lacking.

"We've seen a lack of work ethic and we've seen a lot of problems with integrity and I'll bring those things back into order," Marin said.

Other candidates up for approval were Chris Rue to Secretary of Diversity Issues, Senator Ed Kammerer to Secretary of Registry, Colleen Gilchrist to Secretary of Administrative Affairs, Gabriel Tavares to Attorney General, Jennifer Casavant to Secretary of University Policy, and Senator Tom Fleenor to Secretary of Public Policy and Relations.

Rue brought up issues surrounding the diversity of campus, and its affects on the enrollment of Asian, Latino, African and Native American [ALANA] students at UMass.

"I want students to feel comfortable to go here and be comfortable in their environment," Rue said. "I would like students to get a better feel for this University during orientation, and I'd like to restructure some of the programs offered here."

Also addressed were issues involving the students' views of the SGA and what they [appointees] could do to change that.

"Our image will be the first thing I work on," Fleenor said. "I want to work extensively with the media outlets here on campus and make some good relations so that we can work together to solve this issue."

The Senate voted all of the appointed candidates for the Executive Cabinet into office without any needs for debate.

The Judiciary Committee elected Winnie Chen as their new Chief Justice and Marina Grullon was elected as her Associate Chief Justice as well.

"I'm ecstatic to have the opportunity to work with all of the new members of the Executive Cabinet, and I couldn't ask for a more dedicated group of kids," Sheehan said. "It was interesting to see so many questions, because there generally is not, but it shows that we have a Senate that is jaded by last year and wants to see an group of people willing to work."

Sheehan furthered commented by explaining that he felt that due to last semester the SGA as a whole had learned from their mistakes.

"We've all learned out lessons from last semester and are ready to work," Sheehan said.

■ water

continued from page 1

for Orchard Hill residents. Fencing erected around the digging sites has cut off easy access to the three paths down campus from the dorms on the Hill. Residents of Webster have to walk around the entire "bowl" area to reach either the Chancellor's Road or the path to Northeast, and residents of the other three buildings must do the same to reach the path down towards lower Central and Franklin DC. In addition, no cars or other traffic can get through the area.

Students are finding the construction to be a bigger headache daily.

"I want the road back. This is ugly," said junior English major Erin O'Brien.

"They're trying to cut us off from campus," junior Music Education major Jessica Faber agreed. "It's not in any of the information they gave us. They put up posters, and nowhere does it say the road is closing."

Chancellor's Drive and Orchard Hill Drive were supposed to be closed on April 4-6, according to the web site's "Shutdown Notices and Closures" listing. However, the gaping holes in the middle of Orchard Hill Drive suggest that the road will remain closed for a while yet.

Thomas explained, "Everything always runs longer than you expect." He cited "unforeseen reasons" as the cause of the extended road closure.

"There were more utilities than we knew about," Thomas said. "We have to thread the new steam line in and basically unthread the old steam line."

Thomas also said that the original deadline for the completion of the project, June 15, has been pushed back "12 or so" days to June 29 or 30.

www.dailycollegian.com

Walking for cancer awareness

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

Lisa Andreoli, a senior Comparative Literature major, will participate to raise funds and awareness about breast cancer at the annual Avon 3-Day Breast Cancer walk held in Boston from May 18-20.

The walk, which last three days and covers 60 miles, begins in Leominster and terminates at the Boston Commons. At night, the 2,500 walkers who will raise funds for non-profit breast cancer health programs, will camp in designated locations. Similar events take place in Atlanta, Chicago, Los Angeles, New York, San Francisco and Washington, D.C. In its eight years, the Avon Breast Cancer Crusade has raised $100 million for international women's health.

Andreoli was first drawn to the walk because of her personal connection to the disease.

"My sister happened to cross the event; she asked my mother and me to participate. We also asked my mom's younger sister," said Andreoli. "My mom's older sister and my cousin are both survivors of breast cancer. I also have two friends who are survivors."

She hopes her participation will help bring proper treatment to women on every social stratum.

"The reason I'm personally doing it is that I consider women's health very important," she explained. "As a young college student, I don't have money to give, but I do have a body with two legs that work, so I'm going to put it to use.

"Also by doing this walk with my mom and aunt, it was something to do as a family that we all felt strongly about. One of the things I was happy about is that this walk helps lower income women get not only screenings, but also it raises money for their treatment. It's easy to find modestly priced breast cancer screens, but when it comes to treatment, lower income women just can't pay."

Andreoli encourages all students to be concerned with breast cancer, because of its seriousness and pervasiveness.

"According to the American Cancer Society, one in eight women in the US will be diagnosed with breast cancer over their life time," she said. "180,000 women will be diagnosed with it this year, and over 40,000 will die."

While getting in shape for the walk, Andreoli has found herself grateful for UMass' sprawling campus.

"For training, I thought that I was going to have to do a lot of extra walking, but the I realized I walk from the yellow lot to Herter a couple of times a day," she said. "It adds up pretty quickly. I walk an average of six miles a day on campus."

In addition to walking she have been doing cross training by strength training and rock climbing, explaining "I've never had muscles before."

She has this advice to give serious walkers: "The hardest part about walking is that your feet may believe your stamina. You feet go numb, so part of training is getting your feet a work out."

In order to participate in the event, Andreoli must raise $1900.

"I'm still looking for help and any donations will be greatly appreciated," she said. Andreoli can be contacted at bellarieca@yahoo.com. To learn more about the Avon Breast Cancer 3-Day walk visit www.breastcancer3day.org.

Lisa Andreoli

Celebrate Holy Week!
Holy Thursday 5:15PM
The Last Supper and Washing of the Feet
Good Friday 3:00PM
Share in Remembrance of Christ's Crucifixion
New! Holy Saturday Easter Vigil 8PM
Celebrate in Christ's Resurrection
Easter Sunday
8AM, 10:30AM &12:15PM
Christ is Alive!
the Newman Center
472 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
413.549.0300

new balance
Haigis Hoopla
Don't Miss Your Shot!
the action happens
April 28th & 29th
Mail your team entry by April 16th or drop it off by April 20th.
Stop by Curry Hicks, Room #5 to pick up a registration brochure. Call 545-5689 for more information. Or visit us at http://haigishoopla.zminutemen.com
presented by UMASS Sport Management Program
YOUR PLAN
zMinutemen
KAPLAN

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, April 12, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Always take precautions to be safe on campus

The recent Safety Walk across campus served to highlight areas where students could be at risk. Broken lights, poorly placed crosswalks, and scant call-boxes were all on the list of hazards that can make UMass a dangerous place to call home.

What was not noted, however, was that many of these faults can be alleviated by a level of awareness and the taking of precautions to ensure that personal risk is placed at a minimum while students are walking across campus.

Broken lights do result in dark patches which can be dangerous. Predators can use these spots to their advantage; broken ground or potholes can be harder to anticipate and result in injury. This threat can be neutralized simply by fulfilling that basic commandment of UMass life: never walk alone at night. Ever. It will severely decrease the chances of you being attacked and, if you do fall victim to an injury which results in you being unable to walk, someone will be there to help you.

There is no reason that a UMass student should ever be in danger in a crosswalk, no matter how poorly it may be placed. The majority of students seem to feel that the twin white lines of the crosswalk are blessed with a magical spell or a "Star Trek"-like force field which immediately compels cars to stop.

There is no excuse for simply walking into a crosswalk without glancing, simply assuming that no one is there or that they will instantly stop for you. It is reckless, endangering, and all too common.

Look before you cross.

The issue of the lack of call-boxes, however, in another matter. There is nothing that one can do besides the purchasing of a cellular phone – which we are by no means advocating or assuming, considering the expense involved – to ensure that, in the case of an emergency, help may be obtained.

This is where the University comes in. UMass must take steps to correct this problem, far beyond what has already been done. More boxes should be installed at the nearest possible opportunity, labeled as clearly as possible and spread out over campus as much as is feasible.

Safety is a matter for each student to handle individuality – there are things that everyone can do to ensure that their next trek across this vast university remains as pleasant as the last. Where that planning cannot succeed, the administration must step in to settle matters for the common good.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Am I hot or not?

SHARON STIMPFLE

"It's not the worst picture... but it's not one of your better ones."

It was an unexpected remark. I suppose I underestimate the superficiality of the general public at times... or at least that of my best friend.

"I asked you to give me a review of the article, Lauren, not the picture!"

I was somewhat annoyed. True, after a friendship of a little over twelve years, what I value most in Lauren is her brutal honesty. And true, the picture isn't the greatest. Although black and white is supposed to be the most flattering... but is that what it really comes down to? The 1 by 2 license shot which runs prominently alongside my bi-weekly editorial?

I don't think most of you realize how intimidating it is to have your picture plastered on the most circulated campus newspaper, especially in the editorial section. It's where the most controversial topics of our campus, and in our world media, are brought to light. It just takes that one comment, that solid declaration of opinion, and before you know it you're finding yourself being chased down on campus by someone who, recognizing you from your picture, vehemently disagrees with your latest argument that – contrary to popular opinion on this campus – the New York Yankees are the best baseball team around. Your photo soon serves less as an identification piece and more of a 'UMass Most Wanted' sticker.

But, no, this article isn't about the dangerous work of a Collegian columnist. It isn't about the many hours of deliberation we spend every other week as to what subject matter we will grace the campus with in our next editorial. No – you see – it isn't a question of free speech, of artistic writing, or of valued opinions. The question boils down to this: Am I hot or not?

Hmmm... 'Am I hot or not?'... Perhaps some of you are familiar with the website www.hotornot.com. If not, let me give you a brief synopsis. Basically, what the site consists of is a one to ten point rating system, as it features cringing pictures of guys and girls posing for that same ridiculous question: 'Am I hot or not'? Like it makes any difference if you have a 5.15 or a 9.87 standing from the often drunk, sometimes perverted, and overall shallow voters out there?

Personally, I think that most of the people on the site don't even know they are on it. I mean, why is it that most of those photos are action shots? I bet friends just post them on there as some sick, twisted joke, only to reveal, some months later, that the poor soul only got a measly 2.39 to show for it. But then again, maybe that's just me rationalizing why anybody would ever want their picture on a website, asking the most juvenile of questions.

The questions do not stop there, however.

The site www.amiabeautyorthebeast, in which the pressing question stands as ('I'm sure you've already guessed it'), 'Am I a Beauty or the Beast?' is another widely known rating page. Then there is the ever so popular 'How many beers would it take?' in which photos, again, are presented but this time the rating system is designed under the assumption that you are to hook up with the person in the picture, then asking: how many beers would you need to complete the task? In effect, the choices span from sober to three beers, a six pack... and the list goes on until the final option, which is a whole 30-pack.

Comical? Yes. Ridiculous? Of course. But where is the line drawn between being a ridiculous game played in good spirits and a statement about what our society values? I mean, where are the websites: www.howfunnyami.com, or www.amiromantic-cornot? Has our society become so eye-besotted that the web pages flashing on millions of campus computers are those of ranking looks? And let's not even get into the site 'Rank my Rack.'

All I have are questions, questions answered by more questions...

And so the final question will not be 'Am I hot or not?' but rather 'Did I reach you or not'? Too bad there is no www.quickanswers.com for that one. Then again, Lauren is only a phone call away. And knowing her, I will get the most honest of answers.

Sharon Stimpfle is a Collegian Columnist.

DAD, I'D LIKE YOU TO MEET YOUR MOST VALUABLE PART-TIME EMPLOYEE – ANGUS MURPHY!
Valued
NICE TO MEET YOU, ANGUS
HEY
HEY! JUST HEY!
EARTH TO ANGUS: NICE TO MEET YOU, TOO, SIR.
NICE TO MEET YOU, TOO, SIR.
WOW. WE REALLY ARE ON THE SAME WAVELENGTH!

A typo was made in a letter to the editor by Michael Brennan printed yesterday. It should have read "The altered permit is now in the possession of Parking Services," rather than "not" in the possession. We apologize for the error.

Opposing opinions: do RAs need a union?

My thoughts? Kill the union

ROB SCHULZE

An RA union is a bad idea.

I should probably get it right out in the open that I am an RA. John Adams Tower, to be exact. Come say hi.

Now, I will be the first to admit that the RA job is not all peaches and cream. Being on duty is alternately deathly boring or borderline dangerous. People expect us to be encyclopedias of University knowledge. If someone knocks on your door and you have the audacity to not be there, then you are a bad RA. Your last name instantly becomes Miami, as in 'This is Rob, my RA.' I have literally had my life threatened on more than one occasion.

Of course, these are not the reasons that are being bandied about as why we should be organized into a union. When the people call me, knock on my door, stop me around campus, and just generally harass me to sign the petition (which I have not done), the fact that being an RA is pain in the ass because we can't drink illegally like everyone else is not brought up.

If you haven't been following the story, it goes something like this: RAs do not make enough money. We aren't appreciated. Our disciplinary system is unfair. We have to be role models and that makes our job special and complicated.

What utter, utter crap. It would be funny if it wasn't so pathetic.

RAs make what I would consider to be damned good money. The commonly shouted figure is that RAs make (gasp) "Only make fifty bucks a week! And we get paid for 20 hours a week but sometimes work more!" This is, for all intents and purposes, accurate – on my weekly paycheck I receive $50.29 for my services as a Resident Assistant. Of course, as everyone knows but is seldom mentioned in the diatribes, RAs also receive a free double-single dorm room for their living pleasure. According to the UMass admissions website, the average room fee is $2,638 per year. That's for a person living in a single or a double with a roommate; since RAs get a double single to themselves, they are essentially getting two rooms for free for themselves and their absent roommate), so we can double that figure to $2,638 a semester. I realize that if, by serendipity, a regular resident ends up without a roommate in a double, they have to pay a much smaller fee for the privilege. The fact remains that there is never the option of having another resident in the RA room, so UMass automatically forfeits that money to the Resident Assistant. I include it when I discuss my salary.

By my calculations, the semester is roughly 16 weeks long, from the beginning of February to the middle of May. 16 multiplied by $50.29 is $804.64. Add $2,638 to that we get $3,442.64, and when we divide that by 16 we realize that RAs make $215.17 per week. The horrible figure of 20 hours a week figured into that, and RAs make right around $10.76 per hour. Should an RA kick it into overdrive and work extra ten hours, they make right around $7.17. Not exactly slave labor.

Then there's the 'RAs aren't appreciated' grievance. Doesn't it make you laugh? Cry me a river, guys. Really. Do you seriously want a union just to mandate group hugs? Just because no one bakes us cookies or sends us cards on our birthday... oh, wait, people from Residence Life have made me cookies and did send me cards on my birthday. There are numerous events to appreciate RAs, including (sweet Jesus) RA Appreciation Week and the RA Recognition Event, which is coming up on May 9th – put it on your calendars, kiddies. If you feel that no one likes you, I'm afraid that's your problem. Organized labor is probably not the answer; maybe you should try, oh, deodorant.

Evidently our disciplinary system is unfair. I'm going to have to fail my readership in making this point because there are RA confidentiality issues involved and I feel honorbound not to talk about certain things. Let me assure you, however, that doing one bad thing (or even one truly horrible thing) is not enough to get you summarily removed from your position and your sweet, sweet double single. There is an appeals process, as well. And my personal opinion is that if you do get caught flagrantly breaking policy as an RA, you should be fired. We're here to enforce the rules, not break them. Or at least be smart enough to not get caught.

Of course, that argument completely counteracts the organizers' final point that our job is special because we're role models, and thus aren't breaking any policy. To refute this I have but little to say: RAs, like everyone else, are role models simply because of who they are and what they do naturally. Being a role model isn't something you are trained for or have to spend time to master; either you are or you are not. If you are a good person, and you conduct yourself well and treat others with respect, then you are a role model. If you have an RA job or not. If you do not do those things, then you are not a role model, and no job can change that, and no union can enforce it.

As you can no doubt see, the reasons for an RA union are either flat-out wrong, simply hilarious, or beyond the scope of organized labor. My opposition to this union goes beyond this, however.

"The reasons for an RA union are either flat-out wrong, simply hilarious, or beyond the scope of organized labor. My opposition to this union goes beyond this, however."

If RAs do get a union, the primary motivation – greed – will probably be satisfied, with ridiculous pay raises that the student body in general will have to pay for. Those, like me, who have opposed the measure will be blacklisted or simply cold-shouldered and forced out (which has, actually, already begun).

The real losers, however, will be the residents. Can you imagine the RA RAs who barely program while others are expected to; there are RAs who barely work while others are expected to. That's the breakdown of the Orchard Hill-Southwest argument. One side argues that all they do is actually work (that'd be the Southwest Soldiers) while the other claims they're forced to program out the proverbial yin-yang (and those would be the Orchard Hilltoppers). The point isn't which side is right – both and neither probably, as it is with all problems – the point is that there are apparently very different requirements on people getting paid to do, presumably, the same job.

And speaking of pay, Fierro reported that, while compensation wasn't the biggest issue that the RA Union wanted to touch, few RA's were amused to the University claim that rooms were free. They aren't; instead, money is taken out of the RA paychecks to cover the cost of a double single. They're paying the same as we are at the end of the day.

Fierro's got a good political question in his back pocket for this argument. "What companies charge their employees for desk space?" That's a good one and he better remember it because the battle on this campus for this union, if the RAs are truly serious, is only going to get worse before it gets better. A free room might go a long way toward cooler heads.

Fierro's got his head on his shoulders; he didn't try to win me with numbers or complex arguments. He made simple observations like the one about the desk and I was ready to listen. But honestly, I'd been ready to listen before I heard his argument. I was ready because I heard the inane arguments against the union.

"Security tried to unionize and they weren't essential workers. It's the same with RAs. They shouldn't get to unionize." To bust out a pre-World War II retort, poppycock. A security staff is asked to work a very easy job (no offense you guys, you're just a few steps from being taken seriously, I swear) and when the shift is up, the shift is up. Not so as an RA, where the individual is on call at literally all times. Twenty hours a week might be contracted, but if it's Thursday morning and an RA has already put in his twenty hours, that doesn't stop a student from asking for assistance at four in the morning. In other words, RAs aren't allowed to say no.

"RA's sign a contract, they know what they're getting into. They can't complain now!" Chris Fierro's response was better than mine. I was going to say that's stupid. He explained that they understand the contract they're being asked to sign; they just want the right to bargain about that contract's contents. Doesn't seem so unrealistic.

"They'll just be another waste of space union like GEO, a group that cares more for its personal goals than the good of its constituents." Now, this is a tough one, and this is a sticking point for me about this damned union idea. GEO is a complete and total waste of space. Well, that's not true, but within the concept of the unions that I've seen, it is.

Let me start by saying that I've only ever really seen the United Mine-Workers of America at work, but I don't ever remember them attaching riders onto their contractual bargains. Never was there a call for more "diversity" in a mine and a fifty-cent raise. There were continued calls for more money, more health insurance, more bargaining power; they were never attached to ideas of social justice. GEO is being arrogant in its avoidance of the key issues facing graduate students. By making these ridiculous demands during their contract negotiations (more ALANA, anyone? GEO can get it), they seriously undercut the validity of their own arguments to better graduate students. I've consistently heard from uninvolved members of GEO that they are sick and tired of being part of a union more interested in a cleaner environment than a two-dollar raise for all graduate students. What's more, they claim that the Graduate Employee Organization is archaically run and impossible to get involved in, serious allegations indeed.

That said, any RA union must aggressively avoid such pratfalls. No contractual negotiations that call for puppies to be distributed on campus. Stick to the serious issues and an RA union could be a brilliant thing; watch an RA union strike if it isn't recognized by the University or if negotiations go poorly and UMass will see an anarchy unlike anything seen during the days of ZooMass. Any University administration, even one as arrogant as ours, would have to listen to RAs then; the consequences otherwise would be dire indeed.

It isn't what my alter-ego was pulling for, more television at the office, but instead about the recognition that RA's are doing considerably more for this University than is ever acknowledged and, at the bare minimum, giving them a seat at the bargaining table couldn't hurt anyone involved.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Union? I've been convinced

SAM WILKINSON

So get this. I'm an RA for the sake of the first few lines of this paragraph and last night, I was working in a Southwest Cluster Office. Nothing was going on thank God and a buddy of mine brought his television down to the office. We were watching the TV when my Resident Director came by to check on us. She was pissed that we were watching. We should have just been sitting there I guess. I called my RA friend up in Orchard Hill. He was working too and I could hear Bruce Willis screaming in the background. I asked him what he was doing. He was watching television with his Resident Director.

I'm not an RA. That was just a brutal lie. I barely respect the rules that RAs currently enforce; as far as I'm concerned, kids need the chance to grow up, not police one another. But RAs are a reality, regardless of how many times I was written up versus how many times I should have been (that's a two to one ratio, Brett-Brooks RAs) and regardless of how many nasty columns I've written decrying the poor behavior of certain Resident Assistants (one), and I'm still convinced that a recent push to unionize these essential employees, to give these employees a seat at the proverbial table, is a damned good thing.

Why?

Chris Fierro, a junior STPEC major who's working as an organizer.

He's an RA in Orchard Hill. That's like saying he's a soldier in Iowa, where there ain't much to do except finding things to do. But still, he sits through the same political science class I do and afterwards, he explained the local proposed sindacato to me. His job recently has been pounding the pavement, getting out on the mean streets of Amherst in an attempt to glean what's really going on. His report is interesting.

"The biggest issue isn't money, but the inconsistency," he says. There are RAs who barely program while others

"I'm still convinced that a recent push to unionize these essential employees, to give these employees a seat at the proverbial table, is a damned good thing."

ARTS & LIVING

...n Daily Collegian

...ics:

...hs

FROSH
by Megan Orusz

What made you want to do a comic strip?
I had seen quite a few student strips in the Collegian my freshman year. My friends and I agreed that a few of them lacked in their punch lines. I had some free time and figured that I'd take a crack at it.

Are there any other strips that inspired you?
I was a big fan of Garfield when I was younger – I suppose you can kind of see the Jim Davis influence in my comic characters. I'm also a big fan of Farside (anything that's tongue and cheek humor).

Do you have any future plans for the strip?
I hope to get enough of the strips together to publish a book at the end of senior year. I have about 25 strips in the collection so far.

Tell us a bit about yourself... Where are you from, what's your major, etc.?
I am a Fine Arts major with a minor in music performance in French Horn. I belong to the Tau Beta Sigma Sorority and I am a member of the Commonwealth college. I'm from Long Island New York and I am currently a sophomore.

Turn to FROSH, page 8

KAMPUS KIDS
by Adam Souliere

What made you want to do a comic strip?
My first week of school as a freshman (Sept 97), I went down to the Collegian to "get involved." I wanted to write for sports, but the sports editor was out of the office when I got there...the managing editor (Laura Stock at the time) asked me about some of my other interests, and I mentioned drawing. My first strip (2 guys taking a class at the football stadium, making fun of the huge size of gen-ed lectures) was in the paper a week later. It has worked out very well; the comic has allowed me to vent against any aspect of the school whenever I need to. Most of the feedback all along has been positive, although during my freshman year there was one incident when some people protested one of my strips, writing to the editor and demanding an apology. This taught me early on to never address anything even remotely political, so I've stuck to benign stuff like drinking and classes since then.

Are there any other strips that inspired you?
My personal favorite is Dilbert, it's just so cynical... I love how Scott Adams finds really creative ways to make fun of everyday office life. When I started with the Collegian in fall 1997, a great student strip called Leedee with 2 stick-figure guys was in the paper almost every day, which showed me that it's much more important to be funny than to draw like a pro.

Do you have any future plans for the strip?
I have a pilot on UPN that will debut next fall...! Seriously though, I made a website for the comic (kampuskids.8m.com), mostly just to preserve some of the older ones for all eternity. Other than that, I've been told that my comic is too narrowly focused on "the college experience" to be considered for syndication.

Turn to KAMPUS, page 8

HELL HATH NO FURY
by Pedro Gomes

What made you want to do a comic strip?
I've done some before, but because they dealt with STIs, they couldn't be published, even though they were educational. So one afternoon I was sitting in Shakespeare class and thought it would be really funny to put him in Hell. It's also a good way for me to poke fun at some of the ideals the Catholic Church has on both Heaven and Hell.

Are there any other strips that inspired you?
Zippy... just kidding. I would have to say Dilbert, Robotman and Non-Sequiter. Do you have any future plans for the strip? I want to eventually send them out to United Feature Syndicate and see what happens.

Tell us a bit about yourself: Where are you from, what's your major, etc.?
Well I'm a theater major from Pittsfield, MA. I like long walks on the beach and my turn-ons are accordion music and Iron Chef. I have a webpage (http://kgbeef.tripod.com/main.htm) where people can see some of

Turn to HELL, page 8

BY PB&J

MONKEY-BOX
by PB&J

What made you want to do a comic strip?
The comic medium and I go way back. I've been designing comic strips and books since the fourth grade, so Monkey-Box is just the latest muse in a long, fun tradition. During my second semester at UMass, I wrote and illustrated a comic for the Collegian by the name of Fiendish Foglios, which was well-received for its run of 24, but took entirely too much time to produce. Working with photo-captions and computer imagery instead has allowed for speed, flexibility, and prolificacy, meaning funny stuff in less time, all the time. People tell me how much they enjoy Monkey-Box and this motivates me to both work hard and have fun when cranking humor into the next week. Boosting the integrity of the genre through quality humor and original art is what it's all about.

Are there any other strips that inspired you?
But of course, Bloom County & Outland, Calvin and Hobbes, Robotman, The Boondocks, What's New, The Far Side, Non Sequitur and definitely the former UMass strip Tangelo Pie. Comic book works such as The Tick, Groo, Ralph Snart, Outlanders and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles were also highly influential and most definitely need to be acknowledged.

Do you have any future plans for the strip?
An elaborate plan in fact. Most of the intricate details were published in the February 28, 2001 issue of the Collegian, but I certainly don't mind repeating the basics. Monkey-Box is going to become a globally localized strip, networked and self-syndicated both online and in print. People will be able to contribute multimedia, humor and ideas to a forum of people serving as humor advocates and city liaisons. Essentially, the public will become the media.

Your strip is unique in its use of photographs – do you miss the ability to exaggerate reality through drawing?
Actually, I don't miss out on this feature at all. Photoshop is used to add content and/or bend the realities of certain pictures. The "drawing" is usually done in such a way that people won't instantly notice, so as to leave an impression that every

Turn to MONKEY, page 8

© 2001

www.monkey-box.net

ROBOTS AND SPACEMEN
by Jason Tocci

What made you want to do a comic strip?
A class on comics at UMass (which has since gotten the axe) rekindled my interest in comic books, which I have wanted to write and draw since I was just a sprout. Those suckers are pretty long, though, so I decided to try making some comic strips in college.

Do you have any future plans for the strip?
My web site, www.robots-spacemen.com, is long overdue for a redesign. A friend of mine is working on it, and I think it won't be ugly anymore when he's done. As for the content of the strip itself, yeah I have future plans, but they're secret. You want 'em, you gotta pry my notes outta my cold, dead fingers. Which will be tough, since I keep my notes online.

Tell us a bit about yourself: Where are you from, what's your major, etc.?
I'm from Newton, MA. I used to be a Computer Science major, but then I realized that I'd rather stab out my eye with a ballpoint pen than do something I dislike for the rest of my life. I didn't have a ballpoint pen handy, so I switched to a major in English. I also have a self-designed

Turn to ROBOT, page 8

BUTTERCUP FESTIVAL
by Elliott G. Garbauskas

What made you want to do a comic strip?
There's a longer story about how this strip came about, but the short answer is that I like playing around with absurd, jarring humor. It's a fun strip to make.

Are there any other strips that inspired you?
Humor-wise, I'm a fan of strips like Red Meat and Liberty Meadows. The one strip that most awes me, however, and which has a special place in my heart, is Calvin and Hobbes. I make no attempt to duplicate the beauty of the art, nor could I even if I wanted to, but it's a great testament to the legitimacy of the comic strip as a form of expression, and in that way it inspires me to develop my own consistent tone and style.

Do you have any future plans for the strip?
At the end of this semester I'm going to collect the two and a half semesters worth of strips into a book for anyone interested – there'll be flyers around campus. I'm graduating in May, but I might continue producing strips for the Collegian, and whatever other college papers will carry me. I'd love to polish up the art and attempt to turn Buttercup Festival into something more viable, but I don't kid myself about how wide an appeal the strip's humor has.

So is that little guy supposed to be the Grim Reaper?
No. Technically, he's just a really goth guy. But in a more practical sense he's a non-character, a stand-up I can use to deliver whatever joke I need him to. If I were to develop his character at all, it would begin to limit the sort of humor I could play around with.

Elliott G. Garbauskas isn't your real name, is it?
God, I hope not.

Design by Mike Kirsch

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian - Every Thursday!

COURTESY JON KUSNICK

L'Orfeo

Julia Steinbok plays Proserpina and Charles Mays plays Caronte in Monteverdi's opera L'Orfeo on Wednesday, May 2 in Sweeney Concert Hall in Sage Hall at Smith College.

FILM

UMASS – "Breaking the Bank" is an independent, documentary account of the April 2000 protests against the International Monetary Fund and World Bank in Washington D.C. with and informal discussion after each screening. April 17 in Herter Hall, room 227, and April 18 in the Campus Center, room 803, both at 7 p.m.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – "Christopher Wilmarth: living inside" presents a selection of sculptures, drawings, and prints by an artist best known for a sparely sensuous style that marries formal elements with mysterious reverie. On view from April 1 through May 18.

UMASS – "Patterns of Pleasure and Models of the Mind." Kate Teal uses paint, plastics and works on paper to focus on pleasure, sensuality of thought, memory, and communication. Hampden Gallery, April 2- April 26, with a gallery talk and closing reception on April 26, from 4 to 6 p.m.

UMASS – "Other: Breaking Out of the Box." This exhibit combines texts with advertisements from the 1950s and 60s, to reveal a society in which difference is feared. It is an investigation of cultural identity, conformity, and the challenge of celebration diversity. On display through April 24, with a gallery talk on April 24 at 7 p.m. In the Augusta Savage Gallery.

UMASS – "Natalie Alper: Recent Paintings." Alper is an abstract painter who uses thick loops and folds of paint, crisscrossed by lines made by removal rather than accretion, and uses both earthy and metallic pigments. University Gallery, April 1 through May 18.

UMASS – "Divergent Producer" is a BFA thesis exhibition by artist Michael V. LaRiccia, and "Portraits in Monotype and Relief" is a thesis exhibition by Benjamin B. Bertucci. Student Union Art Gallery, April 8 through 13.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Refugees." Two life sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck depicting refugees carrying a child and all their worldly possessions. Part of the Khan Institute's "Anatomy of Exile" project. Through May 28. For more information, call (413) 585-4292. Third floor, Neilson Library.

WILLIAMSTOWN – "Photography EXPOSED." Includes 45 examples of portraiture as part of the Williams College Museum of Art's 75 anniversary celebration. The exhibit will continue until September 3, 2001 The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

NORTHAMPTON – Deborah Casdin's watercolor works will be displayed in the Hart Gallery, located at 102 Main St. She explores a harmonious symphony of color in both abstract painting and in studied landscapes. The display will be ongoing until April 15.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – "HAIR," the tribal love rock musical of the 1960s, will be presented by the UMass Theatre Guild from April 11 through 14 at 8 p.m., with a 2 p.m. matinee on the 14 in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets are available by calling Tix Unlimited at 545-0412.

UMASS – "Stop Kiss," a play by Diana Son, focuses on two women who become friends, and then realize that they are in love, a realization that inspires an act of violence. April 5 through 7, and April 10 through 13, at 8 p.m.

UMASS – "Archipelago of Delight," a new musical with puppetry will run April 26 through the 28 and May 3 through the 5 at 8 p.m. in the Rand Theater.

UMASS – Bani Ray, an international performer, will present a demonstration of Odissi temple dancing from India. The dance form has developed from a form of worship. April 18, 7 p.m., Augusta Savage Gallery, admission is free.

UMASS – "Culture Clash: Coast to Coast" is a pastiche of Culture Clash's past shows, and new material. It blends poetry, dance, music, and visual arts to present an anthology of Latino culture by a trio of performers. April 19, Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

UMASS – "Bugaku: Japanese Court Dance" is a demonstration of the ancient art form performed by Arawana Hayashi and the performance group Jo Ha Kyu. April 19 at 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall, tickets may purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office.

UMASS – The Miami City Ballet, directed by Edward Villella, will perform excerpts from George Balanchine's ballet entitled Jewels. April 26 at 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall.

UMASS – "Alive with Dance" Is a student produced dance concert that will take place on April 27 and 28 at 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium.

AMHERST COLLEGE – "Desdemona" by Paula Vogel is a look at the lives of Shakespeare's female characters in Othello, and their struggle in a patriarchal society. With elements of shock and humor, Vogel examines issues of status, social class, and sexuality among women. April 12 through 14, 8 p.m., at the Experimental Theater. Admission is free, but reservations are recommended, call 542-2277.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "The Good Person of Setzuan" by Bertolt Brecht, adapted by Tony Kushner, is the story of three gods who come to earth to find one good person. They find Shen Te, a prostitute, who is given money to improve her life, but instead, it leads to her downfall. At the Rooke Theatre on April 19 through 21 at 8 p.m. and April 21 and 22 at 2 p.m., call (413) 538-2406 for reservations.

EASTHAMPTON – "Requiem for an Egg" is an original rock opera with an all-puppet cast, an original score and timely political themes. At the Flywheel Community Arts Space at 2 Holyoke St., on April 29 at 8 p.m.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The UM Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band will perform under guest conductor Fran L. Battisti at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall April 22, at 3 p.m.

UMASS – The 19 Annual New England Saxophone Symposium will be hosted by UM Professor of Saxophone Lynn Klock. The day-long event will include exhibits and recitals. To begin at 8:30 a.m.

UMASS – Those Crazy Kids Promotions and the Butterfield House Council are having two rooms full of hip hop, R&B, Soul/Funk, Jungle and Dancehall in Butterfield on April 13, from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m., admission is $5.

HOLYOKE – The Barnes & Noble bookstore in Holyoke will host a book fair with a music performance by the Shiraz Strings, students studying at UM, and will play a range of music from Mozart to Gershwin tunes. Partial proceeds will benefit the Fine Arts Center April 12, from 5– 9 p.m., with the special music performance at 7 p.m.

AMHERST – The Black Sheep Café will host their Song & Story Swap with guest performer Tom Juravich, a professor at the UMass labor center and a folksinger whose songs are about the struggles of working people. 7:30 p.m., April 13.

NORTHAMPTON – "Messiah" Handel's Messiah will be performed in its entirety by the Arcadia Players Baroque Orchestra and a chorus of soloists. At St. Mary's, 3 Elm St., on April 15 at 4 p.m. Call 584-8882 for tickets.

UMASS – Genevieve Rose and her group, the Genevieve Rose Quartet, will perform a free concert at the Bezanson Recital Hall on April 13 at 7:30 p.m. Rose is a Northampton-based acoustic and electric bassist who performs with a variety of jazz, big band, dixieland, vocal, and latin ensembles.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – The first annual W.A.M Festival (Women and Music) is the Pioneer Valley's only all women's music festival o the summer. It will be a day–long event on Mount Holyoke's South Hadley campus on April 28. Tickets are available at www.tickets.com or by calling 1-800-477-6859. The festival will take place rain or shine.

READINGS/LECTURES/ ACADEMIC EVENTS

SMITH COLLEGE – Poet Galway Kinnell, who has been a major figure for over three decades, and has won the Pulitzer Prize for poetry and the National Book Award will read from his work, presented by the Smith College Poetry Center. April 17, in Wright Hall Auditorium at 7: 30 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – Susan Sontag, novelist, essayist, critic and winner of the 2000 National Book Award will read from her work in progress and her novel In America on April 12 at 7:30 p.m. in the Gamble Auditorium.

Think you're not going to get pregnant just because you're using Birth control?

Neither did 1 out of every 10 college-age women.*

Depo-Provera is 99.7% effective.

Depo-Provera is not only one of the most effective forms of birth control available, it's also one of the most convenient because you only have to think about it 4 times a year. And because Depo-Provera is an injectable, there's nothing to store or carry around—only you and your health care professional have to know.

Make sure you're always as protected as possible against pregnancy. To find out more about Depo-Provera and when you can start using it, talk to your health care professional.

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Go to: www.depo-provera.com

Some women using Depo-Provera do experience side effects. The most common are irregular menstrual bleeding or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months and some may experience a slight gain in weight. You should not use Depo-Provera if you think you might be pregnant, if you have had unexplained periods, or if you have breast cancer, blood clots, liver disease, or a history of stroke. Use may be associated with a possible decrease in bone density. Depo-Provera doesn't protect against HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Talk to your health care professional to see if Depo-Provera is right for you

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Birth control you think about just 4 times a year.

*Hershey, SA. International Digest of Pregnancy: The United States, Fact Book Required. 1998;30:24-29,46.

See the next page for important product information.

© 2001 Pharmacia & Upjohn, a division of Pharmacia UX0009861 03 3/01

Sports and VH1

Applause for VH1

Tuesday night I was watching VH1. That's right, I said VH1. I'm a 21-year old male college student who can't decide if the best concert he's been to has been The Anger Management Tour, The Up in Smoke Tour, or the 2000 WBCN River Rave, and I watch VH1 regularly. I watch it for "Behind the Music" so I can learn how Snoop Dogg and Dr. Dre persevered through life in South Central to become multi-million dollar recording artists. Possibly the greatest weekly biography show, second only A&E's "Biography," (which made history cool), and light years ahead of "The E True Hollywood Story," "Behind the Music" has studied the trials and tribulations of Ozzy, Def Leppard, and the years 1999 and 2000, plus has given me insight to the extent to which Scott Stapp thinks he's the second coming of Christ, and has shown just how far MC Hammer and Vanilla Ice have fallen.

Do you want game shows? Well, VH1's got game shows; in fact, they gave "Survivor" host Jeff Probst his own show with the short-lived "Rock & Roll Jeopardy." Plus, VH1 started the "Save the Music" foundation, creating music programs in inner-city schools. However, Tuesday night VH1 was airing their annual "Diva" show. Why you ask? Well, normally I would be asking myself that same question. In the past they have shoved Mariah Carey, Celine Dion, Shania Twain, Whitney Houston, and Diana Ross on stage to raise money for the "Save the Music" foundation. The reason I watched "Divas" on this particular evening is because they finally got the queen of queens on stage to perform, Aretha Franklin.

I went to know why VH1 waited so long before they actually got a diva for "Divas." Now, I'm not taking anything away from Dion, Carey, and Twain (well maybe Dion), but they are not divas. They are pop... sometimes, but not divas. But Aretha, there is a diva. It was amazing to see that forty years after her first top ten hit she is still out there belting jazz, gospel, and blues. Her special guests included Nelly Furtado, Marc Anthony, a great blues quintet, Kid Rock (which was kind of an upset – I expected him to break out yelling, "I want Rsssssssssspect, Respect" but instead he just spelled his name, her name and Detroit) and Jill Scott. Jill Scott is amazing, and without a doubt she is the next Aretha Franklin. She sang "You Make Me Feel" and gave the song another breath of life. This will be shown over and over again all weekend on VH1, and I suggest that if you see it, watch it.

Speaking of Divas, this Saturday TNT will debut the spring season of the WUSA or the Professional Women's Soccer Team. Yeah, this will go over real well. Because we all know how big soccer is in the United States. It may be the most popular sport in the world, but how many people actually follow soccer in the U.S.? When you compare it to Major League Baseball, the National Football League and the National Hockey League, the fan base and the television market for soccer is just a small fraction of sports fans. Soccer still beats the XFL, in viewers and drunken brawls, but does Turner actually think this will catch on? He could be playing a great "new classic," but Instead he throws on soccer. And not just soccer – they are showing women's soccer.

I don't mean any offense to the professional women who play this sport or any sport, because they are great athletes. I wish I had half of the talent that they have, but the American viewing public just doesn't care, just look at the WNBA. They had a television following for like three months, and then the games couldn't be found. We know it exists because Rosie goes to the New York Liberty games, and the drafts are on ESPN2, but they get little to no network or basic cable coverage. I think they have their own direct TV channel and I'm pretty sure that NBC or ESPN2 plays their championship games, but that's it. Can you name two women basketball players, besides Rebecca Lobo and Sheryl Swoops? Can you name one other woman soccer player besides Mia Hamm? No, and neither can the rest of the country.

This has been tried before, back in 1994 when the World Cup came to the USA, people became entrenched in soccer. Like a "Simpsons" episode, where the town riots and forgets about soccer when they find it to be boring, American public basically forgot about MLS (Major League Soccer) after the first televised season. It's still out there and there are fans, but it doesn't get nearly as much publicity as it once did. I don't know what Turner think he can do differently to get people to watch; the ad campaign for their coverage tells us that they are super-heroes and that we are about to "experience soccer like never before." How exactly is this going to happen? How can you make soccer any more exciting to the American public?

The only way Joe Shmoe from Anytown, USA will watch the "new and improved" soccer coverage is if it was run like "Battledome" games, with lots of hitting, grunting, and half-naked ladies. They would want all the soccer players to wear their sports bras during the entire game. The commercials have Mia Hamm flying on a jet pack kicking the ball, sending it through the goalies hands, which in turn shoot off blood. That's one good way to get people to watch a show – let's promote violence, because it's been good for pro-wrestling and the first week of the XFL. Put much like the XFL, it may do well the first week, being a holiday weekend, but don't look for it to explode in the near future, to the point where people tune in every Saturday to watch a game.

What To Watch

Tonight NBC will be showing a night of regression, showing the first episodes of "Friends," "Will & Grace" and the two hour pilot/movie of "ER." Also on Sunday from 8-11 TLC will be having a mini-marathon for "Junkyard Wars," where an on-line pole has fans picking the best episodes.

Nicholas Pizzolato is a Collegian Columnist.

Vitamin C squeezes out more pulp pop

TREE
No Regrets No Remorse
Wonderdrug

"Poverty stricken but I'm not quitting, people call me a rock star but they don't know me I don't know who they are, I'm just a blue collar rock 'n roller, I dress like a thief I feel like a soldier."

Know what that is? That's a statement of reality taken from the a song called "Rock Star." Tree has been around for so long, become so notorious and legendary, that it's easy to forget that lead singer River still paints houses in Dorchester for a living.

This is the sort of brutal honesty that infects No Regrets No Remorse. Nothing is sugar coated; nothing is used in euphemism.

The pain of relationships gone bad screams from "Cold and Alone" ("A hopeless dream, yeah I know, but she had to let me go, cold and alone again") and "Blowtorch" ("Sick of using you just to ease my pain"). Trendy bands ("You don't even know you're a traitor, chalk up another fake motherfucker" from "2Faced"), mindless fans ("Celebrity worship must die, the stars belong in the sky" from "Rock Star"), and polluters ("Everyone will die while they're holding their breath, and we'll all swim in our own polluted death" from "A Lot To Fear") all feel the wrath of Tree's uncompromising eye and brutal attacks.

Everything isn't negative, however; the band is also honest about the good things in life. The most striking example of this is "Mexican Beer," a laid-back ode to life, New England, and a cold beverage on a Sunday afternoon. It brings a smile to this Yankee's face, that's for sure.

The vocals are only half the magic of this band; the hardcore/metal behind it is rock solid. Guitarist Ooze lays down the biggest riffs around, and the drumming doesn't screw around, but lays down heavy slamming beats. You can dance to it, but you'd have to move pretty fast.

Tree has done it again. Like they've done throughout their career, they've produced a huge slab of gritty, real rock that cuts right to the bone and hits every target. I'd wager that they don't have any regrets because they don't have need of them. (Rob Schulze)

OLD 97'S
Satellite Rides
Elektra

Can't miss talents? Poppy sellouts to a mainstream sound?

It's tough to define where, exactly, the Old 97's fit in the American musical spectrum. Wherever it is though, the band certainly has its work cut out for them.

There's no easy way to blend country music and power-pop-punk music. BR-549 was never very successful at doing it, instead reverting to an alternative country feel, clearly different than what was on the average country radio station, but not good enough to appear on pop radio. Old 97's attempt to carve out their niche with two and half minute pop songs. The band originally found a marked measure of success on the woefully under appreciated Clay Pigeons soundtrack, perhaps the most critically ignored soundtrack of the last ten years, with "Time Bomb." The song was a perfect blend of quick pop-punk-country, a most strange collaboration of sound.

They never capture that magic on their latest album, Satellite Rides. The album is nothing more than a collection of instantly forgettable singles lacking either a cohesive nature or an infectious one.

"Buick City Complex," the album's bluesiest cut, is a slow tale backed by a simple country guitar and lead singer Rhett Miller's distinctive voice. The band's instrumentation is complex – both six and 12 string guitars, accordions, lap steel, trumpets – the group looks to cull from no many musical genre's that it only ever seems to find the most base of each. That doesn't make for a good mix – the trumpets are too laid back, the accordions too buried, the lap steel is too subdued – and the album's just bland to listen to.

"Book of Poems" is as close as the Old 97's come to "Time Bomb" but it's too little, too late. This album lacks any of the things that Old 97's promised at various points in their career and that's unfortunate (Sam Wilkinson)

NULLSET
Smokewood EP
Grand Royal

Damn, this is good.

The first release of new material from Nullset since 1998 (when they were known as Gangsta Bitch Barbie), the Smokewood EP makes you realize that it was definitely worth the wait.

It may only be three songs, but that's all it takes to convince the listener of what they've got in their hands: Amazingly original instrumental work; complicated, involved lyrics with catchy choruses; very heavy grooves and explosive energy just rock out of every second of every track. They manage to be amazing, brutal, and fun at the same time, and that's new to me.

"Smokewood," the lead song, is the band's single currently making the radio rounds, and deservedly so. It's the most fun of the three, with a bouncing beat; lyrical references to Mike Tyson, Coors Light, and the Witness Protection Program; and that intangible something that makes a song stay in your head for hours after you first hear it.

"Suplex" is a remake of the song "Suplex Ninja" from the '98 indie release This Is Not A Test. The new version is essentially the same song with better sound quality, which is fine seeing as how the song was great to begin with and the sound quality was poor. It's a fast three-minute metal blast that wastes no time in kicking your ass – Boston style.

For my money, though, the best song on the EP is the middle tune, "This Ain't California."

"Take a closer look in that bag of tricks that you wanna call real, but little did you know that you are playing in my ball field Sugar… I guess I coulda warned ya, this ain't California, but it gets a little warmer if you let it" raps singer Ken Smith as the band lets forth with a bass-heavy attack behind him. It's a superb song that hits in so many ways – it's heavy, it's catchy, you can dance to it – that it really is impossible to isolate just what the best part it.

Nullset fans have waited three years for these three songs and, to be honest, the wait was worth it. The Smokewood EP is a triumphant welcome back. So… when does the full-length album come out again? (Rob Schulze)

Vitamin C
More
Elektra

Not getting your daily allowance of Vitamin C? Well one way to get more is through the new album More by Vitamin C (Laugh track). The actress and former member of Eve's Plumb, Vitamin C, is back with her sophomore solo album. And man, does it reek of awesomeness! Well, not really, but it's got a few catchy grooves within its PG sound.

Considering she is nearing age 30,

Turn to OTHERS, page 8

Depo-Provera® Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Birth control you think about just 4 times a year.

DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection
(medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension, USP)

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases.

What is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is a form of birth control that is given by an intramuscular injection (a shot) in the buttock or upper arm. DEPO-PROVERA is a sterile aqueous suspension of medroxyprogesterone acetate which is chemically similar to (but not the same as) the natural hormone progesterone which is produced by your ovaries during the second half of your menstrual cycle. DEPO-PROVERA acts by preventing your egg cells from ripening. If an egg is not released from the ovaries during your menstrual cycle it cannot become fertilized by sperm and result in pregnancy. DEPO-PROVERA also causes changes in the lining of your uterus that make it less likely for pregnancy to occur.

How effective is DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
The effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection depends on following the recommended dosage schedule exactly (see "How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?"). To make sure you are not pregnant when you first get DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection your first injection must be given ONLY during the first 5 days of a normal menstrual period. ONLY when the first 5 days after childbirth if not breast feeding and ... exclusively breast feeding. ONLY at the 6th week after childbirth if it is your first pregnancy. ... contraceptive when administered at 3 month (13 weeks) intervals. ... DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection is more effective than most of the other reversible methods of birth control available. This means that the average annual pregnancy rate is less than one for every 100 women who use DEPO-PROVERA. The effectiveness of most contraceptive methods depends in part on how reliable each woman uses the method. The effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA depends only on the patient returning every 3 months (13 weeks) for her next injection. Your health care provider will help you. compare DEPO-PROVERA with other contraceptive methods and give you the information you need in order to decide which contraceptive method is the right choice for you.

The following table shows the percent of women who got pregnant while using different kinds of contraceptive methods. It gives both the lowest expected rate of pregnancy (the rate expected in women who use each method exactly as it should be used) and the typical rate of pregnancy (which includes women who became pregnant because they forgot to get their birth control or because they did not follow the directions exactly).

Percent of Women Experiencing an Accidental Pregnancy in the First Year of Continuous Use

Method	Lowest Expected	Typical
DEPO-PROVERA	0.3	3
Implants (Norplant®)	0.04	0.1
Pill (all combinations)	0.1	3
Mini-pill	0.1	3
One-a-month vaginal ring (NuvaRing®)	0.1	3
Progestogen-only injectables (Depo-Provera®)	0.3	3
Combination injectables (Lunelle®)	0.05	0.1
Progestasert®	1.5	2
Lunelle®	0.05	0.1
Condom (without spermicide)	2	12
Diaphragm with spermicide	6	18
IUD (all)	0.6	0.8
Withdrawal	4	18
Periodic abstinence	1-9	20
Spermicide alone	3	21
Vaginal Sponge (with nulliparous childbirth)	6	18
(with parous childbirth)	9	28
Cervical cap (with nulliparous childbirth)	6	18
(with parous childbirth)	12	36
No contraception	85	85

Source: Trussell et al. Obstet Gynecol 1990;76:558-567.

Who should not use DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Not all women should use DEPO-PROVERA. You should not use DEPO-PROVERA if you have any of the following conditions:
• you think you might be pregnant
• if you have any vaginal bleeding without a known reason
• if you have had cancer of the breast
• if you have had a stroke
• if you have had blood clots (phlebitis) or a lung clot
• if you have problems with your liver, or liver tumor
• if you are allergic to DEPO-PROVERA (see "How supplied" for a list of its other components)

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
You will have a physical examination before your doctor prescribes DEPO-PROVERA. It is important that you tell your health care provider if you have any of the following:
• a history of breast cancer
• an abnormal mammogram (breast x-ray, fibrocystic breast disease breast nodules or lumps or bleeding from your nipples)
• kidney disease
• irregular or scanty menstrual periods
• high blood pressure
• heart or liver disease
• diabetes
• epilepsy (convulsions or seizures)
• diabetes or a family history of diabetes
• a history of depression

Tell your health care provider if you are nursing or plan to become pregnant soon after you stop using DEPO-PROVERA.

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against transmission of HIV (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases such as chlamydia, genital warts, gonorrhea, hepatitis B, and syphilis.

What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Because DEPO-PROVERA is a long-acting birth control method it takes some time after your last injection for its effect to wear off. Studies show the results from a large study done in the United States. Of women who become pregnant within 1 year after their last DEPO-PROVERA injection, it is expected that about half of those who become pregnant will do so in about 10 months after their last injection, about two-thirds of those who become pregnant will do so in about 12 months, about 83% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 15 months, and about 93% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 18 months after their last injection. The length of time you use DEPO-PROVERA has no effect on your ability to have a normal pregnancy after you stop using it.

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Changes in menstrual bleeding most frequently in women who use DEPO-PROVERA. for contraception is a change in their normal menstrual cycle. During the first year of using DEPO-PROVERA you might have one or more of the following changes: irregular or unpredictable bleeding or spotting, an increase or decrease in menstrual bleeding, or no bleeding at all. Unusually heavy or prolonged bleeding, however is not a side effect of DEPO-PROVERA, and if this happens, you should see your health care provider right away. With continued use of DEPO-PROVERA, menstrual bleeding usually decreases and may stop altogether. In clinical studies of DEPO-PROVERA, 57% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding or spotting after 1 year of use and 68% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding after 2 years of use. The reason that your periods stop is because DEPO-PROVERA causes a resting state in your ovaries. When your ovaries do not release an egg monthly, the regular monthly growth of the lining of your uterus does not occur and therefore the bleeding that comes with your normal menstruation does not take place. When you stop using DEPO-PROVERA your menstrual period will usually in time return to its normal cycle.

Bone Mineral Density
Use of DEPO-PROVERA may be associated with a decrease in the amount of mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. The rate of bone mineral loss is greatest in the early years of DEPO-PROVERA use but after that it begins to resemble the rate of loss of bone mineral from normal bone.

Weight Gain
Studies of women who have used different forms of contraception found that women who used DEPO-PROVERA for contraception had no increased overall risk of developing cancer of the breast, cervix, uterus, ovary, liver, or abdominal organs. However, women under 35 years of age whose first exposure to DEPO-PROVERA was within the previous 4 to 5 years may have a slightly increased risk of developing breast cancer similar to that seen with oral contraceptives. You should discuss this with your health care provider.

Effect on Fertility
Because DEPO-PROVERA is such an effective contraceptive method the risk of accidental pregnancy for women who get their shots regularly every 3 months (13 weeks) is very low. Studies show that DEPO-PROVERA does not cause birth defects, low birth weight and neonatal infant death or other health problems in infants conceived close to the time of injection such pregnancies are uncommon. If you think you may have become pregnant while using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception see your health care provider as soon as possible.

Allergic Reactions
Some women using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection have reported severe and potentially life-threatening allergic reactions known as anaphylaxis and anaphylactoid reactions. Symptoms include the sudden onset of hives or swelling and itching of the skin breathing difficulties and a drop in blood pressure.

• If you have had cancer of the breast
• if you have had a stroke
• if you have had blood clots (phlebitis) or a lung clot
• if you have problems with your liver, or liver tumor
• if you are allergic to DEPO-PROVERA (see "How supplied" for a list of its other components)

What other things should I consider before using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
You will have a physical examination before your doctor prescribes DEPO-PROVERA. It is important that you tell your health care provider if you have any of the following:
• a history of breast cancer
• an abnormal mammogram (breast x-ray, fibrocystic breast disease breast nodules or lumps or bleeding from your nipples)
• kidney disease
• irregular or scanty menstrual periods
• high blood pressure
• heart or liver disease
• diabetes
• epilepsy (convulsions or seizures)
• diabetes or a family history of diabetes
• a history of depression

Tell your health care provider if you are nursing or plan to become pregnant soon after you stop using DEPO-PROVERA.

This product is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against transmission of HIV (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases such as chlamydia, genital warts, gonorrhea, hepatitis B, and syphilis.

What if I want to become pregnant after using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Because DEPO-PROVERA is a long-acting birth control method it takes some time after your last injection for its effect to wear off. Studies show the results from a large study done in the United States. Of women who become pregnant within 1 year after their last DEPO-PROVERA injection, it is expected that about half of those who become pregnant will do so in about 10 months after their last injection, about two-thirds of those who become pregnant will do so in about 12 months, about 83% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 15 months, and about 93% of those who become pregnant will do so in about 18 months after their last injection. The length of time you use DEPO-PROVERA has no effect on your ability to have a normal pregnancy after you stop using it.

What are the risks of using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Changes in menstrual bleeding most frequently in women who use DEPO-PROVERA. for contraception is a change in their normal menstrual cycle. During the first year of using DEPO-PROVERA you might have one or more of the following changes: irregular or unpredictable bleeding or spotting, an increase or decrease in menstrual bleeding, or no bleeding at all. Unusually heavy or prolonged bleeding, however is not a side effect of DEPO-PROVERA, and if this happens, you should see your health care provider right away. With continued use of DEPO-PROVERA, menstrual bleeding usually decreases and may stop altogether. In clinical studies of DEPO-PROVERA, 57% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding or spotting after 1 year of use and 68% of the women studied reported no menstrual bleeding after 2 years of use. The reason that your periods stop is because DEPO-PROVERA causes a resting state in your ovaries. When your ovaries do not release an egg monthly, the regular monthly growth of the lining of your uterus does not occur and therefore the bleeding that comes with your normal menstruation does not take place. When you stop using DEPO-PROVERA your menstrual period will usually in time return to its normal cycle.

Bone Mineral Density
Use of DEPO-PROVERA may be associated with a decrease in the amount of mineral stored in your bones. This could increase your risk of developing bone fractures. The rate of bone mineral loss is greatest in the early years of DEPO-PROVERA use but after that it begins to resemble the rate of loss of bone mineral from normal bone.

Weight Gain
Studies of women who have used different forms of contraception found that women who used DEPO-PROVERA for contraception had no increased overall risk of developing cancer of the breast, cervix, uterus, ovary, liver, or abdominal organs. However, women under 35 years of age whose first exposure to DEPO-PROVERA was within the previous 4 to 5 years may have a slightly increased risk of developing breast cancer similar to that seen with oral contraceptives. You should discuss this with your health care provider.

Effect on Fertility
Because DEPO-PROVERA is such an effective contraceptive method the risk of accidental pregnancy for women who get their shots regularly every 3 months (13 weeks) is very low. Studies show that DEPO-PROVERA does not cause birth defects, low birth weight and neonatal infant death or other health problems in infants conceived close to the time of injection such pregnancies are uncommon. If you think you may have become pregnant while using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception see your health care provider as soon as possible.

Allergic Reactions
Some women using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection have reported severe and potentially life-threatening allergic reactions known as anaphylaxis and anaphylactoid reactions. Symptoms include the sudden onset of hives or swelling and itching of the skin breathing difficulties and a drop in blood pressure.

Other Risks
Women who use hormone-based contraceptives may have an increased risk of blood clots or stroke. Also, if a contraceptive method fails, there is a possibility that the fertilized egg will develop outside the uterus (ectopic pregnancy). While these events are rare, you should let your health care provider know if you have any problems listed in the next section.

What symptoms may signal problems while using DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Tell your health care provider immediately if any of these problems occur following an injection of DEPO-PROVERA:
• sharp chest pain, coughing up of blood, or sudden shortness of breath (indicating a possible clot in the lung)
• sudden severe headache or vomiting, dizziness or fainting, problems with your eyesight or speech, weakness, numbness, or arm or leg (indicating a possible stroke)
• severe pain or swelling in the calf, (indicating a possible clot in the leg)
• severe pain in the abdomen
• severe pain or tenderness in the lower abdominal area
• jaundice (yellow color of the skin or whites of the eyes)

What are the possible side effects of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Weight Gain
You may experience a weight gain while you are using DEPO-PROVERA. About two thirds of the women who used DEPO-PROVERA in one study reported a weight gain of about 5 pounds after one year of use. You may continue to gain weight after the first year. Women in one large study who used DEPO-PROVERA for 2 years gained an average total of 10 pounds over those 2 years, or approximately 4 pounds per year. Women who continued for 4 years gained an average total of 18 pounds over those 4 years, or approximately 33 pounds per year. Women who continued for 6 years gained an average total of 163 pounds over those 6 years, or approximately 27 pounds per year.
Other Side Effects
In clinical studies of over 1900 women who used DEPO-PROVERA for up to 7 years some women reported the following effects that may or may not have been related to their use of DEPO-PROVERA: irregular menstrual bleeding, amenorrhea, headache, nervousness, abdominal cramps, dizziness, weakness or fatigue, decreased sexual desire, leg cramps, nausea, vaginal discharge or irritation, breast swelling and tenderness, bloating, swelling of the hands or feet, backache, depression, acne, joint pain, pain in the breast, or excessive hair growth, hot flashes and joint pain. Other problems were reported by very few of the women. These include allergic reactions, hives, rash, itching, fainting, vaginal infections, urinary tract infections, breast infections, breast lumps, convulsions, any return to the baby sleep pattern, inflammatory disease, breast cancer or cervical cancer. If these or any other problems bother you, you should discuss them with your health care provider.
Should any precautions be followed during use of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
Missed Periods
During the time you are using DEPO-PROVERA for contraception you may see a pattern of your periods. For the first 3 injections, if you have been receiving your DEPO-PROVERA injections every 3 months (13 weeks) then you are probably not pregnant. However if you think that you may be pregnant see your health care provider.
Laboratory Tests
If you are scheduled for any laboratory tests tell your health care provider that you are using DEPO-PROVERA for birth control. Certain blood tests are affected by hormones such as DEPO-PROVERA.
Drug Interactions
Tegretol® (carbamazepine) is an anticancer drug that may significantly decrease the effectiveness of DEPO-PROVERA if the two drugs are given during the same time.
Nursing Mothers
Although DEPO-PROVERA can be passed to the nursing infant in the breast milk, no harmful effects have been found in these children. DEPO-PROVERA does not prevent the breast from producing milk, nor does it alter the quality of the milk. Small amounts of the drug pass into the breast milk but none can be detected in the baby's blood. For the first several days after birth you should avoid DEPO-PROVERA injection because the baby's liver is functioning at a low level.
How often do I get my shot of DEPO-PROVERA Contraceptive Injection?
The recommended dose of DEPO-PROVERA is 150 mg every 3 months (13 weeks) given in a single intramuscular injection in the buttock or upper arm. To make sure that you are not pregnant at the time of the first injection it is essential that the injection be given ONLY during the first 5 days of a normal menstrual period, ONLY when the first 5 days after childbirth if not breast feeding or ONLY at the 6th week after childbirth if you are not breast feeding or ONLY if you have exclusively breast-feeding. If you wait longer than 3 months (13 weeks) between injections or longer than 6 weeks after delivery your health care provider should determine that you are not pregnant before giving you your injection of DEPO-PROVERA.

Rx only CB-7-1

Pharmacia & Upjohn

Pharmacia & Upjohn Company
Kalamazoo, MI 49001 USA

IT'S YOUR BODY

If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.

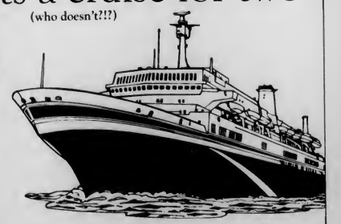
DANA BODY SHOP

968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

Who wants a cruise for two?
(who doesn't?!?)

In one of the issues of the Collegian each week there will be a clue: Uncover the item at which the clue is hinting, collect it, and hold on to it!

When the taste of UMass rolls around, bring all the items you have collected and you will receive the FINAL CLUE...



The first person to bring the last item back to the TASTE OF UMASS will win an AMAZING seven day cruise for two!

Coca-Cola •••• brought to you by •••• The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

COURTESY WARGA

The Magic Triangle continues...

The Magic Triangle Jazz Series concludes its 12th season on Thursday, April 12 with an 8 p.m. performance by the Yusef/Von Freeman Quintet, in Bowker Auditorium. Dr. Lateef will perform on Reeds and flute, and Mr. Freeman will play tenor saxophone.

■ kampus

continued from page 5

Are those two guys based on anyone in particular?

The guy with the baseball cap is kind of like me as a freshman, all wide-eyed and naïve. The dude with the shades knows everything, and is much more laid-back and cynical (like me now). I guess it's kind of a frosh/senior contrast. Their physical appearances aren't based on anyone in particular; I just tried to make their appearances exemplify those characteristics.

Your strip has been running longer than any other at this point, and in the meantime a lot of student strips have come and gone. Any opinions on the latest crop?

The latest crop is great, although a lot of strips fade in and out, where you don't see them for weeks and then they show up, so it's hard to say. I'm really proud to have had a strip running continuously for 8 semesters, which seems really rare. Personally, I like to read any student strip that makes fun of UMass in any way.

■ hell

continued from page 5

the stuff I have done including my comic strip about STIs.

Placing Shakespeare in Hell certainly is a weird idea for a strip. Are you a fan of the bard, or do you enjoy the idea of him burning in damnation?

I just thought having one of the greatest playwrights ever in Hell was pretty funny and decided to make a comic strip of it. I have been enjoying making them and always have ideas for what's going to happen next. And when you set it in Hell, you never know who's going to show up.

■ monkey

continued from page 5

picture is the genuine article. There have been a few exceptions to this, and it is by no means a rule. In fact some of the funniest strips made to date happen also to be the most blatantly doctored. Believe it or not, though, the vast majority of underwent no changes at all and were still able to get a good chortle-snort or two.

■ Frosh

continued from page 5

You seem to have an affinity for band jokes. Do you play an instrument in the UMass band?

I suppose it's because the band is such an easy target (you can ask Sam Wilkinson all about it). I have been the proud member of the band for the past two seasons playing mellophone (marching horn). I think the trick to producing a good comic is to go with what you know. I often look to my classes, events on campus, and the band as part of my inspiration.

■ robot

continued from page 5

degree program through BDIC, concentrating on "Fiction and Mythology." It helps me get into good electives, and it used to be the only thing keeping me sane as a CS major.

Are the characters based on anyone in particular?

If you are a girl and you think one of my characters is adorable, then he's based on me. Otherwise, no, but I think I put a little bit of autobiography in everything I write.

Any other projects on your table?

I'm drawing and co-writing another comic with some friends from high school online, Comics Ex Machina (www.comics-ex.com). I hope to land an internship at DC Comics this summer in New York City. If that doesn't pan out, I'll be looking into the possibility of being a staff cartoonist at a newspaper in Boston.

■ others

continued from page 7

it would be a hit out of place for Vitamin C's sound to be exceedingly teeny-bopperish, and luckily it isn't. In a few spots she actually goes beyond the usual Britney-style innuendo and flat out says it, "You touched me, and I touched back, a girl and a boy in a natural act," from the track "Sex Has Come Between Us." Or " I wanna go down, feel my heart pound."

The album's first single, "The Itch," stands out as the album's best song. The track, co-written by Billy Steinberg (who wrote Madonna's "Like a Virgin") finds Vitamin C in a provocative mood, dishing over a sinewy beat, as she conjures up a variety of come-ons. In general, there's more than enough of the eternal pop themes – love, sex, girls and boys – to keep the oh-so hard to please fans of this genre happy.

Musically, the album has a pleasant enough vibe to be considered acceptable. Even so, tracks like "Where's The Party At," and "I Know What Boys Want" sound overly manufactured, and seem to be forcing it too much in general. No doubt the usual cast of pop producers and writers tried desperately to get C another hit on the level of 1999's most obvious, most tear jerking, and most annoying pop hit, "Graduation." However, nothing on More stands out as a runaway radio hit, which in this genre means the album basically did not do its job.

There is no doubt that Vitamin C emits a positive vibe, and luckily seems to be lacking the snobbery of Britney and Christina. Her music is a bit more advanced than theirs (and really, it's all pretty weak), but the album lacks that one pop hit that will catapult her to their galaxy. (Kurt Polesky)

Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Phone #:
(413) 549-0145
Serving all of Your Rental Needs
Only 1/2 a mile from UMASS
"Drive It!"
New Puffton Village. Great Apartments, Minutes from Campus.

Johnson made AL dream come true

COURTESY BASEBALL HALL OF FAME

Ban Johnson played a major part in the formation of the American League in 1903 and was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1937 for his work.

This is part three of a five part series entitled "Magnates of the Game."

With Harry Wright's newfound National League in tact, America's love for baseball continued to grow exponentially. But the owners of NL squads wanted to maintain a monopoly on the game, and they often crushed any owners who tried to start up new leagues.

Of course, as we all know now, the American League would become just as powerful as their counterparts, but had it not been for one man, that might not have been so.

Byron Bancroft "Ban" Johnson was born on January 6, 1863 in Cincinnati to Eunice Fox and Albert B. Johnson. Of course, because of Wright, Johnson knew the beauty of baseball from a very young age.

MATT BRADY

As a young man, Johnson attended Marietta College and the University of Cincinnati Law School before turning to the media, where he quickly joined the staff of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Meanwhile, in the world of baseball, the National League held its grip on the entirety of Major League Baseball. Its only competition was the small Minor League circuits, including the so-called Beer and Whiskey League of the Midwest.

This was a league of brash, violent baseball, where uncouth men would not hesitate to slug it out with their opponents or the umpires. Beside third base, there stood a vat filled with beer. Any man who made it to third base was entitled to a dipper full.

Over the next several years, the league got more disorganized and changed its official name to the Western League. At the same time, Johnson had established himself as the sports editor at the Gazette...and had developed a strong liking for baseball. He quickly became a learned scholar of the game.

Seeking to bring order to the league, the owners of the Western League ball clubs asked Johnson to lead the organization in November of 1893. Over the next six years, he slowly cleaned up the way baseball was played and transformed it into the most successful league of the many minor leagues.

Johnson wanted to establish the Western League as a second Major League, and in the offseason after the 1899 campaign, he was given a grand opportunity. The NL had dropped its bottom four teams from the 12-team league.

This gave Johnson more talent, and more territory, to work with. Before the 1900 season, the Western League officially changed its name to the American League, but because of the so-called "national agreement," the league was forced to remain a minor league.

In 1901, Johnson tried unsuccessfully to get the NL to recognize his league as its equal. Over the next two years, the two leagues engaged in what was to be known as the "Great Baseball War," in which the AL tried to gain prominence and the NL tried to thwart its opponent.

Over that time, 87 National Leaguers left to join the AL, and the second league's credibility continued to rise. In 1902, the AL outdrew its opponents attendance-wise, and the National League admitted defeat. In January 1903, the two leagues held a "peace conference" which established the basic structure that would govern baseball for the next twenty years.

A three-man committee headed by Cincinnati owner Garry Herrmann, but it was truly Johnson who held the balance of power, during which time he came to be known as the "Czar of Baseball." During the period from 1903-1920, Johnson led the Major Leagues to heights it had not even dreamed of.

Over that period, baseball was the most popular sport in the nation, and it drew crowds accordingly. Legends like Ty Cobb, Walter Johnson, and Tris Speaker gained popularity that was far beyond the dreams of Alexander Joy Cartwright and Harry Wright.

But the "Black Sox Scandal" of 1919 rocked the baseball world, and the owners, seeking to get attendance back, admitted that they needed a new governing body. With the election of Kenesaw Mountain Landis to the position of commissioner, AL president Johnson saw his power slowly decline and he fell quickly from the limelight.

Regardless, he was the man who nearly single-handedly made the American League possible, and by the time of his death in 1931, it held the New York Yankees and thus the most popular league in all of baseball.

—Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist

Tragedy damages South Africa's 2010 WC hopes

In the world of soccer, we have seen some of the best and, sadly, some of the worst over the last two weeks that the world has had to offer. There have been goals aplenty, the kickoff of the sixth season of MLS and the crowning of a new champion in Scotland. But there was also something that is too familiar to the soccer community – death in the stands.

Forty-three spectators, two of whom were children, were killed and 130 more were injured yesterday afternoon in Johannesburg, South Africa while attending a game between Orlando Pirates and their Premier League rival Kaizer Chiefs at Ellis Park Stadium.

Trouble erupted inside the stadium when fans rushed toward the perimeter fencing that surrounded the pitch following an Orlando goal. The force of the crowd was enough to topple the fence and knock many fans to the ground. As the fans stampeded toward the field in the already overcrowded stadium, many spectators were either trampled on or crushed into the fencing that had not given way.

Stadium security and emergency officials provided treatment to all that they could in and around the stadium while rushing the more serious victims directly to local Johannesburg Hospital. Meanwhile, the television screen inside the stadium showed phone numbers for the hospital and the local mortuary.

Prior to the match, officials were forced to shut the stadium's gates despite the fact that thousands of fans still waiting outside to get in. Many of these fans forced their way into the stadium, causing the overcrowding.

This tragedy could be a severe blow to the South African bid for the 2010 World Cup. In the fall of 2000, the nation narrowly missed out on becoming the first African nation to host the world's premier sporting event, losing the rights to host the 2006 Cup to Germany. However, they were looked at as the frontrunners to win the vote for 2010. Yesterday's events could put a dent in those hopes.

In happier news, the Australian national team set two world records in a qualifying victory over American Samoa on Wednesday. The final score of 31-0 was nine better than the previous mark of 22-0, set by this same Aussie squad just two days earlier against Tonga.

Leading the way for the Socceroos on Wednesday was 22-year-old Archie Thompson. Thompson, who came into the match with just one international goal under his belt, scored an amazing 13 times in the lopsided match. That topped the previous mark of 10 set by both Sofus Nielsen of Denmark and Gottfried Fuchs of Germany.

The Samoan squad knew it was in trouble before the match even started when it was discovered that 95 percent of the original squad did not hold an American passport, a requirement for FIFA play. This meant that the tiny Pacific nation had to play with mostly 14 and 15-year-olds while the Aussies countered with a team full of players from some of Europe's top leagues.

The Samoans can take some solace in the fact that they held Australia scoreless for the first eight minutes of the match before Con Boutsianis scored the first of his three goals to start the onslaught. Con's first name is fitting as he recently admitted to being the getaway driver in an armed robbery. Rumors that the XFL is interested in signing him as a kicker in time for the playoffs could not be confirmed at press time.

JUSTIN PEARSON

In news from Europe, Celtic clinched its first Scottish Premier League Title since 1997 on Saturday with a 1-0 victory over last-place St. Mirren. A Tommy Johnson goal 38 minutes in secured three points for Celtic.

Winning the title this season is extra special to many Celtic fans as it breaks Rangers' three-year spell as Champions. The two Glasgow based clubs have one of the most bitter rivalries in professional sports and no other team has won a SPL title in the last 14 years.

Soccer has also returned to these shores with the kickoff of the sixth season of MLS. With the recent success of the U.S. men's national team in World Cup Qualifying – posting two wins in its first two matches – there was a buzz around the season openers. The New England Revolution slumped to a 2-1 defeat in its opener at Giants Stadium against the New York-New Jersey Metrostars. Colombian Adolfo Valencia scored the winner two minutes into second half injury time for the Metrostars.

In other action Columbus tied Chicago 1-1, Tampa defeated Dallas 4-2, Miami won 2-1 over Colorado, San Jose knocked off Los Angeles 3-2 and the defending MLSCup champion Kansas City Wizards fell 3-2 to D.C. United.

Justin Pearson is a Collegian Columnist.

■ hoops

continued from page 12

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Former UMass coach Jack Leaman, shown above in his sideline days, has his name attached to the defensive award that Kit Rhymer won.

Minutemen and the Atlantic 10 conference.

The team's two point guards were each recognized, as junior Shannon Crooks made off with the Derrick Claiborne Mr. Hustle Award and senior Jonathan DePina helped himself to the Rick Pitino Most Assists Award. Crooks led the team in assists (95) and steals (47), while DePina came up a single assist short of Crooks.

The Jim McCoy Most Improved Player Award, named for UMass' all-time leading scorer, was shared by sophomore Micah Brand and junior Ronell Blizzard. Brand's scoring average (8.4 ppg) was fourth-best on the team, while Brand and Blizzard ranked second and third on the squad in blocks with 33 and 27, respectively.

Senior Winston Smith and freshman Jameel Pugh each took home a share of the Alex Eldridge Coaches Appreciation Award, named for a guard from the late seventies who led the team in assists all four of his years in Amherst.

Two of the team's junior transfers made the spotlight when Jackie Rogers got the nod as the Rafer Giles Sixth Man and Eric Williams gathered the Lou Roe Rebounding Honor. Roe stands atop the UMass career rebounding list with 1,070 caroms controlled in 134 games with the Maroon and White.

Youth was also served at the banquet, as freshman Willie Jenkins nailed down the Skip Connors Academic Honor and fellow first-year player Dwayne Killings was named the John Murphy Inspirational winner. Murphy led the '74 – '75 team in points, rebounds and minutes.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The team's high scorer (Monty Mack this year) earns the Julius Erving Scoring Award. "Dr. J" played for the Maroon and White from 1969 to 1971 and averaged 26.3 ppg.

Thai Corner "Home Style Thai Food"
ไทยคอนเนอร์
Serving Lunch From 11:30-3:00
Monday- Saturday
Take-Out Available
• Curry Dishes
• Stir Fried
• Soups
• Salads
• Noodles
31 Boltwood Walk, Amherst MA 253-1639
located down the alley from Antonio's Pizza
Hours: Sun 5-9 Mon-Wed 11:30-9, Thurs-Sat 11:30-10

No more shower sandals
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
253-7879
Come check us out at
www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 4
So Spring Break is over and your classes resume.
The snow is melting and flowers will soon bloom.
The scavenger hunt is getting closer and closer.
Until the whole darn thing is about to blow over!
So be prepared and bring all your belongings,
But remember to also bring a red article of clothing!
Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "taste of Umass".
If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.
.... From your Friends at.... COLLEGIAN

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration - 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room
(43 Amity St. - downtown Amherst)
MERCYhouse It's a church!
www.knowmercy.org

At Zanna...
MIA

It's time for toes!
ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton
www.zanna.com

Visit Cuba
During Carnival!
July 19 - August 2, 2001

Since 1997, Cuba has seen a 172.1% increase in American exchange students. With UConn's new program, Music and Cultural Study in Cuba, you can experience Cuba's dynamic music and dance traditions first hand, while learning about its intriguing history and diverse culture.
This two-week program is open to all students, teachers who wish to earn continuing education units, and other individuals who would like to learn from and enjoy Cuban culture. Students can earn 3 academic credits; teachers can earn 9 CEUs. A UConn music professor will accompany the group for the entire trip.
▲ For more information call Pat Harkins at 860-486-5985 or visit us at continuingstudies.uconn.edu
▲ Call us for a brochure at 800-622-9908.
▲ Come to one of our open house sessions at the Bishop Center on the Storrs campus:
Tuesday, April 24, 7:00-9:00 p.m.
Monday, May 7, 7:00-9:00 p.m.
If you plan to attend or need directions, call 860-486-5985.
University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

Take over our lease - Large 2 bedroom available June 1 heat & water. Call 256-2194

Summer Sublet 2 bedroom Boulders Apartment $800 negotiable Call 253-7140

1 Bedroom North Pleasant St. Apt. Heat/hot water included. Available May 1. Call 256-4287

Take over our lease 2 bedroom apt. Starting June 1st Call 549-7053 for details.

Take over our lease We'll split the summer with you. 549-9653

Summer Sublet with fall option in Brandywine. Furniture included. 548-6991

2 Bedroom in Brandywine avail June 1st. Call 549-4003

Beautiful Apartment with best view in Boulders. Very spacious, private, clean. Great for four or two! Singles also welcome. Refurnished cabinets and bathroom & walk-in closets. Security Dep. Req. - Call Patrick or Peter 256-3045

Amherst Apartment Available June 1st for summer sublet with fall option. One bedroom in North East Terrace Condominium Complex. Single occupancy only. $675 a month. Call 256-4135

3 Bedroom 2 bath Puffton Apartment available June 1st w/option of renew. Good times. Call 549-7782

4 Bedroom on Main St. Lease starting June 1st. Call 253-5180

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Furnished Apt. in Boulders 2 bedroom, 1 bath, on bus route, kitchen fully equiped $820/month. Available June 15. Heat and hot water inc. 1yr lease. Call Stacey or Jeff 256-3731

30 Second Walk from Campus Looking for 2 Females to share a room in a house on Nutting Ave. Great deal! Call Sarah 549-6603

Amherst Center
1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos
3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass cernter, bus. $550, heat, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Female Wanted to share apt @ Brandywine ASAP 549-7279

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts.com or 549-0600.

Renovated, Puffton Apartment. Available 6-1. 3 bedroom, $1155. 549-7465

2 People Needed for 2 bedroom Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1 w/option of renewing lease. Furniture for sale also. Call 549-6307 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

1995 Saturn SL2 Auto, loaded. Excellent condition. $4000. 537-0517

95 Dodge Neon 4 dr. $4500 O.B.O 413-527-3665

EMPLOYMENT

Join Our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life
5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General Counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, waterskiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com or call 1(800) 544-5448

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT
Are you looking for employment for the summer? If you are tired of working where you don't gain the experience or skills you want or need, give us a call. We have FT, PT, Short Term, and Long Term positions available in the following areas:
Administrative Support
Date Entry
Front Office Support
Entry Level Management
Call CSS to set up an appointment now to register for summer.
Corporate Staffing Solutions
126 Northampton Street, Suite G
Easthampton, MA 01027
413-529-7100
www.cssit.com

Looking for Student Interested in doing gardening & yard work. 4-8 hrs a week. Flexible schedule. $10/hr, car needed. April thru September. 256-0865

Personal Care Assistant to work Tuesday early evening for retired teacher/songwriter with MS. $10/hr. Call 256-8784

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.wantnetwealth.com

EMPLOYMENT

ATTENTION UPCOMING GRADUATES
CSS has positions that allow you to get your foot in the door of some of the areas most prominent companies. We have FT, PT, Short Term, Long Term and Temp to Hire Positions in:
- Administrative Support
- Data Entry Operator
- Entry Level Management
- Front Office Support
- Customer Service Representative

CSS proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web site at: www.cssit.com
Corporate Staffing Solutions
126 Northampton Street, Suite G
Easthampton, MA 01027
413-529-7100

Like Working Outdoors? Want a great tan this summer? Paint for Collegiate Entrepreneurs!
Hiring full-time summer positions for Painters and Production Managers.
No experience necessary. Transportation and dependability a must. 35-40 hours/week Springfield Area.
Painter's: $8.25
Manager's: $10
Call Sam at 1-800-590-9516 (pager)

Counselors Wanted Co-ed Jewish overnight camp in Maine offers competitive salary plus room and board. All positions available! For more information, contact Ava or Meridith at 617-244-5124 or via email at info@kingswood.org

Lifeguards
Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

TOP BOYS SPORTS CAMP IN MAINE! PLAY & COACH SPORTS - HAVE FUN - MAKE $$ CAMP COBBOSSEE - Positions available in: ALL TEAM & INDIVIDUAL SPORTS, ALL WATER SPORTS, PLUS: Camping & hiking, Ropes & Rock Climbing, Ice Hockey, Roller Hockey, Arts & Crafts, Martial Arts. Top Salaries, Excellent Facilities, FREE ROOM, BOARD, LAUNDRY. Travel Allowance. www.campcobbossee.com ON LINE APPLICATION or call: (800) 473-6104

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office, get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

FOR SALE

Peavey Ecoustic 112 Amp Perfect condition. 2 channels: 5 band graphic EQ, FX loop send/return too much to list... $350/bo. Call Fish 546-3175

FOR SALE

Compaq Desktop System Celeron 600mhz, 11 GB, 64MbRAM, CD-ROM, ethernet, 15" color monitor, Windows ME, MS Office 3000 Deluxe, Printer available. Low price-negotiable. Bert 546-3991

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom House 2 bathroom, 8 minutes from UMass. Available June 1. Call RJ 253-6469

ROOM FOR RENT

One Female Looking for one male or female to share one bedroom with study. Puffton Apartments. June, July & August. Rent (VERY) negotiable. Call Megan 546-2602

ROOMMATE WANTED

Two Female Roommates looking for 1 or 2 other females roommates for apt in Brandywine. Call 546-2738

Looking for Roommate Female preferred, cooking skills a plus. Must be willing to win at beerpong. Contact Adam yo-st, Department 24

1 Bedroom in Sunderland Cliffside Apts. on bus route $310 a month all inclusive 546-3609

1 Bedroom Available 2 bedroom apt. Clean with carpet and dishwasher. M/F $300/mo. Available now. Call Gereth 665-8693

1 Bedroom Summer Sublet 4 females looking for another female roommate. Great house in nice quiet area of Amherst w/view of mountains, near bus route. Available June 1. Call Lara 256-2104

2 Females looking for 1 or 2 roommates to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brendywine starting Sept. 1. Call Laura 546-5525

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Experienced College Student looking for residents in need of fast, cheap yard cleanups. Call Mark 256-3133

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

2 Bedroom 1 1/2 bathrooms fully furnished (TV, stereo, satellite, B&G) Great location to compus. Front porch and beckyard, parking available , washer + dryer. Call Dave 549-5895

Newly Renovated Puffton! Avail. ASAP-August. Call Judy at 549-4017

2 Bedroom Apartment in Brandywine starting June 1st. Call for infor 549-6989

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

Summer Sublet 2 bedrooms Colonial Village $600 a month 256-8027

3 Bedroom Apt. in Townehouse. Fully furnished. Rent negotiable. Call 549-0454

Puffton Newly renovated 3 bedroom/2bath. Take over our lease partially furnished if needed fall option available 549-0432

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

SUMMER SUBLET

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighboors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woody!

1 Room in 2 Bedroom brandywine apt. $365/1 person, $265/2 people each/ month. Call 549-6104

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

TRAVEL

Visit China Free airfare, room and board. July 5th-August 24. Fee starting at $400. www.uschinaedu.org

Mexico/Caribbean or Central America $300 round trip plus tax. Eruope $179 one way plus tax. Other world wide destinations cheap. Book tickets on line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

WANTED

JEWISH EGG DONORS NEEDED
$10,000 (plus all expenses)
We have many infertile families in need of the help of compassionate women in order to realize their dream of having a child. We are seeking women who are attractive, intelligent, between the ages of 18-30, physically fit and meintening a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help a family and would like more informaiton pleese contact us.
1-800-264-8828 or 1-619-234-6649
Email: derlene@aperfectmatch.com
www.aperfectmatch.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 ESPN Plus
4 CBS 4 Boston
5 ABC 40 Springfield
6 PBS 57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Channel
8 UPN 20 Hartford
10 HSCN New Movie Channel
11 NBC 30 New Britain
13 Fox 61 Hartford
17 Fox 24 Hartford
18 NBC 22 Springfield
19 Entertainment Channel
20 UMASS Excellence Channel
21 WB 56 New Haven
22 ESPN2
24 ESPN
25 UNE TV (Student Channel)
26 Weather Channel
28 Classic Sports Channel
32 C-Span
33 CNN
34 CNN Headline News
35 Lifetime
36 USA
37 TBS
38 E!
40 BET
41 Nickelodeon
42 Discovery
43 Nesn
44 Cartoon Network
45 Nick at Nite
46 TV Land
47 Comedy Central
48 BET
49 Univision
50 Bloomberg Financial Network
51 College TV Network
52 MTV
53 MTV2
54 VH1
55 The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 12, 2001

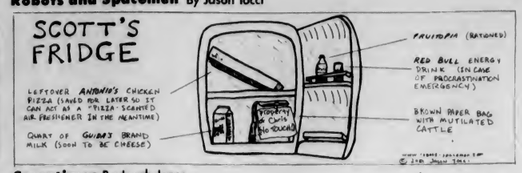
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Wadsworth Atheneum		Mystery! "Second Sight" (N) (In Stereo)		Face: Jesus in Art (Part 1 of 2)		Face: Jesus in Art (Part 2 of 2)
WFSB	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends (N)	Nanny (N)	Gilmore Girls "Paris Is Burning"		Charmed "Coyote Piper" (N)		N.ws (N)		Friends (N)	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	ER "Pilot" (In Stereo) (N)				News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo) (N)		Blind Date	Blind Date	Gilmore Girls "Paris Is Burning"		Charmed "Coyote Piper" (N)		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (N)	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	ER "Pilot" (In Stereo) (N)				News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons (N)	Frasier (N)	Seinfeld (N)	Friends (N)	★★ "High School High" (1996, Comedy) Jon Lovitz, Tia Leoni (In Stereo) (N)		News				Frasier (N)
WWLP	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Friends (N)	Will & Grace	ER "Pilot" (In Stereo) (N)				News (N)	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		This Old Hse.	Dra. on Call	Mystery! "Second Sight" (N) (N)		Grafters (In Stereo) (N)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
WGGB	40	News (N)	ABC News	Spin City (N)	Frasier (N)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WSBK	38	Judge Judy (N)	Judge Judy (N)	Frasier (N)	Frasier (N)	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (N)				Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Med Abt. You
WTBS	72	Roseanne (N)	Roseanne (N)	Major League Baseball Atlanta Braves at New York Mets. (Live)				★★★★ "Jaws" (1975, Horror) Roy Scheider. Time Approximate.
A&E	42	Night Court	Newsradio (N)	Law & Order "Wager" (N)		Biography: Sidona		"Hosato Nombowec: The Mutiny" (2001) Iain Griffiddi. (N)				Law & Order "Nurture" (N)
CNN	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N) (N)		Crossfire (N)	Wolf Blitzer	The Point (N)	Larry King Live (N)		CNN Tonight	Spin Room (N)	Sports	Moneyline
COM	32	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money	★★ "Better Off Dead" (1985, Comedy) John Cusack.				Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show (N)	Turn Ben.
DISC	43	Wild Discovery: "Brother Wolf"		Wild Discovery: Wolves		Egypt's City of the Dead		Dead Sea Scrolls		Ancient Puzzles		Justice Files
ESPN	45	Sportscenter (N)		Big League	Stanley Cup Playoffs Conference Quarterfinals Game 1 -- Teams to Be Announced. (Live) (N)						Baseball	Sportscenter (N)
LIFE	52	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Deadly Vows" (1994, Drama) Gerald McRaney, Josie Bissett. (N)		Golden Girls		Golden Girls
MTV	53	Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Band	TRL (In Stereo) (N)		Cribs		Fight for Your Rights		Celebrity Undr	Teen People
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold! (N)	Rugrats (N)	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	51	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Chrysalis" (N)		Crusade "The Long Road" (N)		"Alien Avengers" (1996, Science Fiction) George Wendt. (N)		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Trauma: Life in the ER		Impact Earth		Secrets of Forensic Science		Susan Smith: Nine Days		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Secrets of Forensic Science
TNT	44	ER "Last Call" (In Stereo) (N)		Preminder "Countdown" (N)		NBA Basketball: Philadelphia 76ers at Orlando Magic. (In Stereo Live) (N)				NBA		e. "Maximum Overdrive" (1986)
USA	35	Walker, Texas Ranger (N)		JAG "Yeah, Baby" (In Stereo) (N)		Nash Bridges "Swingers" (N)		★★★ "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom" (1984, Adventure) Harrison Ford. (N)		Martin (N)
HBO	60	(5:45) ★½ "Big Daddy" (1999)		★½ "Here on Earth" (2000, Romance) Chris Klein, PG-13 (N)		★★★ "American Beauty" (1999) Kevin Spacey. (In Stereo) (N) (N)				Reel Sex 26: Lessons
MAX	61	(5:00)	★★½ "About Focal" (1999) Bette Midler, PG (N)			★★ "Indiscreet" (1998, Suspense) Lake Perry. (In Stereo) (N) (N)		★★½ "Ghost in the Machine" (1993) Karen Allen. (N)		"When Pass"
SHOW	65	★★½ "The Out-of-Towners" (1999, Comedy) Steve Martin, PG-13				★★★ "Temptome" (1993, Western) Kurt Russell. (In Stereo) (N)				★★½ "Payback" (1999, Suspense) Mel Gibson. (In Stereo) (N)

The Masked Dropout By Robert Hewitt

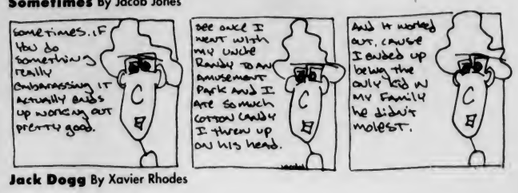
Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci



SCOTT'S FRIDGE
LEFTOVER ANTONIO'S CHICKEN PIZZA (SAVED FOR LATER SO IT CAN ACT AS A "PIZZA-SCENTED AIR FRESHENER IN THE MEANTIME)
CARTON OF GUDDY BRAND MILK (SOON TO BE CHEESE)
FRUITOPIA (RATIONS)
RED BULL ENERGY DRINK (IN CASE OF PROCRASTINATION EMERGENCIES)
BROWN PAPER BAG WITH MUTILATED CATTLE

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Sometimes By Jacob Jones



Sometimes, if you do something really embarrassing it actually builds up morale and gets pretty good.
One once I went with my uncle Randy to an amusement park and I ate so much cotton candy I threw up on his head.
And it worked out, cause I ended up being the only kid in my family he didn't molest.

Hell Hath No Fury By Pedro Gomes

BUB, CAN I ASK YOU A QUESTION?
SURE, GO AHEAD.
WHY AM I IN HELL?
IT'S RATHER SIMPLE. GOD HAD FIRST ROUND DRAFT PICKS AND HE TOOK HENRY HUDSON, SO SATAN PICKED YOU... WELCOME TO THE TEAM.

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes

#8
CLYDE BRYANTGANSE III
SON OF THE FAMED BRYANTGANSE FAMILY; SINGLE HEIR TO THE FORTUNE OF CLYDE HIS FATHER, 3RD GENERATION PEDIGREE TO CLYDE BRYANTGANSE, INVENTOR OF THE STAR-SHAPED URINAL CAKE.
Clyde Bryantganse III

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

A shadowy sliver of a human shadow lowers himself spider-like down a wall.
Silently, he slips quietly into a room brimming with priceless objects of art and beauty.
Some more beautiful than others.
You're three seconds late, Agent Fox
Trust me I'm worth the wait
YOUR CHARACTER HAS A FLING WITH A REDHEAD?!
I THOUGHT YOU MIGHT BE JEALOUS, SO I PUT TWO BLONDES IN THE NEXT CHAPTER

Quote of the Day

"I'm not black but there's a whole lot of times I wish I was white."

–Frank Zappa

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 53 LOW: 50	HIGH: 70 LOW: 41	HIGH: 62 LOW: 33

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Physical and mental activities have much to offer you today, and you will want to combine the two for the best results.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone close to you is likely to be quite edgy and irritable today – and it will be up to you to see that he or she stays in control.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You must be willing to take a personal interest in someone else's affairs today if you are going to help at all. You mustn't remain impartial!
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You must remain on top of things as they develop today. If it's more authority you're after, you must be willing ot prove that you can handle it.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Don't misuse your own popularity today. Give others the time of day – and the benefit of the doubt. A friend comes to you with advice.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – It may be up to you today to do those things that you thought were someone else's responsibility. You can do it all much better!
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – This is a good day for solving financial problems as best you can. Remember, you can bend the rules – but you mustn't break them.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – What is asked of you today may not be fair, but if you can rise to the occasion and so what is required, then you'll be ahead of the game.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – What seems a mistake at first may prove to be highly beneficial to you in the long run. It may take time, but you'll eventually be rewarded.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – An old-fashioned approach to a new and unexpected dilemma is likely to pay off with surprising speed. This may, indeed, be the way to go!
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Anxiety over your workload either at home or on the job will keep you from enjoying a hidden opportunity today – unless you lighten up!
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't get carried away with yourself today. A little subtlety, style and grace go a long way toward impressing others.

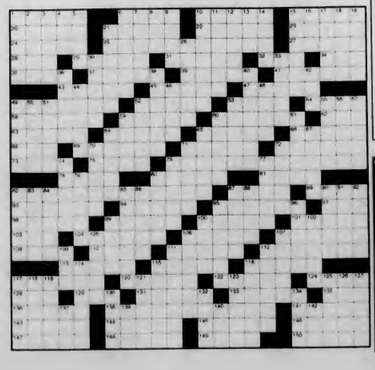
MONKEY-BOX BY PBSJ

WHEN JENNY FOUND OUT THAT SPIDERMAN WAS IN TOWN, SHE JUMPED OFF BUILDINGS HOPING TO BE SAVED AT THE LAST MINUTE.
© 2001
www.monkey-box.net

Solid Custom Tattoo
460 West St. Amherst, MA 259-0093
Route 116
tues-sat 1-9
sun apts only
A Tattoo is for life. Know your artist

ACROSS
1 Gemstone weight
6 Cover a package
10 Turkish dignitary
15 Round tops
20 Santa Fe brick
21 Stand up
22 Be of use to
23 Undermine, like authority
24 Cause of a lawsuit
25 Disney star
27 Rough
28 Maui souvenir
29 Despicable one
31 Fast
32 Mineral spring
34 Bike
36 Wanted
37 Houston pro
39 Army drc
41 Overacts
43 Does a fall chore
45 Lee's outbursts
47 Cheerful
49 In braids
53 Trees
53 Family rooms
54 Morris
58 Diva Farrell
59 Cruze
60 Lunch on a lawn
62 Church wall
63 Major muddle
64 Pines (for)
65 Reduce speed
66 Florida city
68 Cowardly person
69 Satisfy
71 Frontiersman Daniel
72 Nosy sneaker
73 Tenets
75 Lawyer: abbr.
76 Compassionate
78 Gangster
80 Singers Hall and — 81 Berlin single
82 Weather person
87 Custard dessert
89 Grime
93 Actress de Havilland
94 Ahead of schedule
95 Barkers
97 Fib
98 British titles
99 — over studies
100 Dreads
101 Long-distance charges
103 Bastille Day season
104 Grayish browns
106 Not spicy
107 Romeo's love
108 Fine kettle of fish
110 Diplomat's possession
111 Skylark maker
112 Auto parts
113 Gawker
115 African people
116 Blockade
117 Arsenic twin
120 Loser
122 Indiana cager
124 Swindle
126 Van Winkle of legend
129 — up to confess
131 City in Italy
133 Oster group
135 Fall flower
136 Gets close
138 Like easily spotted cases
141 Lasso
143 Pens
144 Spots
145 Director Kurosawa
146 "Lou Grant" lead
147 Piquant
148 Carrier
149 Baby goats
150 Unisex garment

DOWN
1 Summons
2 Pierre's farewell
3 Common nester
4 Junior Forbes
5 Kiss and —
6 Bracelets' places
7 Kitchen gadget
8 Inquire
9 Equal
10 Coddles
11 Steers clear of
12 Yemen neighbor
13 Towel pronoun
14 Pub potions
15 Run away
16 Hockey great Bobby
17 Get on a horse
18 Actor Murphy
19 Trickles
21 Entertained
26 Motorcycle maker
30 Like a bucket of sorg
33 Soft drink brand
36 Deep distress
38 Citrus fruit
40 Baggage keeper
42 Olive — of the comics
44 Dabbled
46 Singer Redding
48 "— of Green Gables"
49 Job at "GoodFellas"
50 Chemist Pauling
51 Warning
52 Bedding plant
53 Actress Keaton
55 Separate
56 Tumult
57 Prize
59 Castle protector
60 Pushes
61 "— the Barbarian"
64 Turn loose
65 Actress Lisa
67 Apple throwaways



Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Meatball grinder

Pineapple Curry Chicken Sandwich

Tomato Macaroni & Lentils (vegan)

DINNER

Honey Garlic Chicken Legs

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

BREAD AND SPREAD

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Shalini Marti
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	John Zowislak, Michele Meder

INSIDE: International Soccer Roundup

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, April 12, 2001 | 12

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass breaks Hearts at Lorden

Clark brothers, Chown excel in win

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Some say that brotherhood is one of the strongest forces in the universe. It appears that the Sacred Heart baseball team will not be questioning that anytime soon.

Brothers Gavin and Connell Clark each homered for the Massachusetts baseball team (8-11, 4-2 Atlantic 10) as it fought out a tough 8-6 win over the Pioneers (7-17, 3-6 Northeast) yesterday at Earl Lorden Field.

The elder Clark made a critical catch to end the top of the fourth inning and then promptly smashed a two-run home run over the centerfield fence to jumpstart the UMass offense.

Freshman Adam Stojanowski put the Minutemen ahead for good in the bottom of the seventh inning when he dropped an RBI single over the head of Pioneer second baseman Bill Eller to score Jeff Altieri.

"Stojanowski is a pretty good player," said head coach Mike Stone. "He can really swing the bat."

The Minutemen got off to a good start from the get go, as sophomore Sean Sarno walked to lead off the game and then took third base on a wild pitch by Sacred Heart righthander Toni Asta. After the younger Clark grounded out to first base, junior Mike Kulak walked and he and Sarno executed a double steal to put the Maroon and White up 1-0.

The Minutemen continued their strong hitting in the bottom of the second frame, when Gavin Clark led off the inning by reaching on an error. Next up was sophomore Tim Klett, who was in the game at designated hitter because senior captain Nick Gorneault injured his arm in batting practice. Klett made the pioneers pay for their defensive mistake and made his presence felt by smashing a monster home run over the scoreboard in left field to put UMass up 3-0.

But in the top of the third inning, the Maroon and White had its rhythm interrupted as Sacred Heart erupted for four runs on two hits, three walks and an error to chase starter Brian Hourigan from the game.

Senior Rich Ferrigi led off with a single to shortstop and was followed onto the base paths by Matt Lemanczyk and Brian Moir, who both drew walks. After a Shawn Stillwas strikeout, Brian Brackhorst reached on an error by Altieri that scored two runs. Jamie Schilkowski followed with an RBI single to right to tie the score at three. A Brian Rojee walk spelled the end of the line for Hourigan, but Anthony Gallo gave up two flyouts, one a sacrifice, to end the rally.

"It was kind of a struggle," Stone said. "Unfortunately for [Hourigan], he didn't have a good outing, cause he works harder than anybody on this team. He's got a great arm, he throws the hell out of the ball, but it's just not loose."

UMass got back in the groove in the bottom of the fourth, when Aaron Senez led off with a single to left to precede Gavin Clark's homer. Stojanowski followed with a single and advanced to second on Klett's fly out. Sophomore catcher Tom Ellerbrook then delivered an RBI single to score Stojanowski and put the home team ahead 6-4.

The Pioneers climbed closer in the top half of the sixth two singles and a double to bring them within one at 6-5. In the top of the seventh inning, Bruckhorst led off with a double to deep center field. After retiring Schilkowski, Gallo registered two balls against Rujee before Stone brought in freshman relief specialist Eric Chown.

"Fortunately, Eric Chown has given us some real good innings," Stone said. "He's tough to hit, he's got good movement – it's nice that he's only a freshman."

Chown gave up a single to Rojee that scored Brockhorst, but from then on shut down the Pioneers, allowing only two hits and one walk in his two and two-thirds innings of work to notch his first win of the season. Chown leads the Minutemen with a 0.75 ERA in 12 innings pitched.

"He can come out and shut people down," Gavin Clark said. "In the fall, he struck me out and I said, 'this kid's going to be good.' He's got some good stuff and he's going to have a big impact on our team."

In the bottom of the eighth, with two outs and the Minutemen ahead 7-6, the younger half of the Clark brothers came up and ripped a deep fly ball well over the left field wall to notch his second home run of the season.

"We're making the plays in the field and our hitting's coming through," Chown said. "It's all coming together. I think that if we keep it up, we're going to be in good shape for the rest of the season."

The Minutemen are in action again today as they take on the Northeastern Huskies at Lorden Field. The Huskies come in with a 6-15 overall record and a 2-6 mark in the America East conference. The meeting is the only scheduled contest between UMass and Northeastern this year, but it is possible that the two clubs will meet in the second round of the Beanpot tournament, held at the beginning of May. The Maroon and White defeated Northeastern in the Beanpot finals last year, 13-8.

The Huskies are led on offense by returning batsmen Hernan Guerrero and Michael Lomuscio. Guerrero is first on the team with four home runs, but has struggled average-wise this year, as he is only hitting at a .282 clip. Lomuscio is tied for the team lead with 15 runs, but is also struggling somewhat with the stick, as he is only hitting .275 to go with his lone home run and 11 RBI's.

On the mound, the Huskies are led by Brendan Ryan, whose 1-2 record belies his 3.96 ERA. Ryan is also productive as a hitter, and plays some of his off days in the outfield. He is leading the team's regulars with a .340 average in 15 games. Game time today is scheduled for 3 p.m.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Connell Clark, right, is congratulated by head coach Mike Stone. Clark hit his second home run of the year in yesterday's 8-6 win over Sacred Heart. The Minutemen are in action again today against Northeastern.

Men's hoop hands out annual awards

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team stopped tossing up shots over a month ago, but this past Sunday the squad was back together when something else started falling: honors.

The Minutemen celebrated their annual after-season banquet with an awards ceremony that honored 12 different athletes with awards named for some of the program's most revered former players.

Leading the accolade fast break was senior guard Monty Mack, who garnered the George "Trigger" Burke Most Valuable Player Award in addition to two other honors. Mack's 566 points this year (19.5 ppg) earned him the Julius Irving Scoring Award, while his team-leading 78 percent success rate at the charity stripe netted him the Jim Laughnane Free Throw Award. Laughnane led the '61 Minutemen with a .785 free throw percentage.

Mack finished his UMass career in second place on the school's all-time scoring list with 2,183 points.

Two more awards were ripped down by senior center Kitwana Rhymer, who added the Mark Donoghue Most Productive Player Award and Jack Leaman Defensive Award to his roundball resume. Leaman remains the winningest coach in UMass history with 217 career victories.

Rhymer finished the year as the team's second-leading scorer (9.9 ppg) and leading rebounder (7.3 rpg), while his 65 blocks paced both the

Turn to HOOPS page 9

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN AND COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Seniors Kitwana Rhymer (above) and Monty Mack (top right) earned a pair of awards apiece and Jonathan DePina (below right) grabbed an honor named after former player Rick Pitino at the men's basketball team's annual banquet.

Women defeat URI; A-10 tourney nears

By Ben Hall
Collegian Staff

Set between the concrete triangle of Boyden Gym, Bartlett Hall and the UMass police station, the Upper Boyden tennis courts can be a pretty depressing place. Match after match with a chilling late April breeze and a gray, sunless sky and you have the perfect setting for a mediocre match.

Coming off an impressive defeat of Fordham on Tuesday, the Massachusetts women's tennis team (16-6, 4-0 Atlantic 10) was barely able to handle the light blue ladies of the University of Rhode Island yesterday. In what has been dubbed by players and coaches alike as a "week of warm-up matches" before the Atlantic 10 championships, this close contest, 4-3 final, will surely provide a sobering perspective to the Maroon and White all-stars.

"We were lucky to get away with a win today," said assistant coach Jenn Gerlech. "Maybe it was just the weather. Yesterday was sunny and warm and we played great, but today we didn't."

Perhaps one might argue that point. However, Gerlech's second response is much more likely the culprit given that the team has been riding high on a six-match winning streak.

"I think the girls really underestimated Rhode Island after sweeping them in the doubles matches just beforehand."

The three doubles matches proved to be the highlight of the day. The pair of Francesca Mancini and Annie Hamilton won 8-2 as did Jafra Depontes and Lindsey Gillooly, while Helena Horak and Susan Hyams held strong with an 8-0 performance.

This success would not last long. The women's team then headed into the singles round where they failed to display the type of solid team effort that has helped them plow over even the fiercest of opponents this season. Freshman Caroline Larson fell to her opponent (6-0, 6-4), while Hamilton lost in two sets (6-2, 7-5). Mancini, a freshman from Milan, Italy, ended the last match of the day with a hard-fought loss (6-3, 7-6).

The Massachusetts players who helped secure the win were Depontes (7-5, 6-2), Horak (6-0, 6-1), and Gillooly (6-0, 6-0).

"Helena and Lindsey are really doing well," said Gerlech. "They're both on top of their game."

"I'm playing the best I've played all year," said Gillooly after her eighth win in a row.

"We're doing this pretty easily and feeling really relaxed."

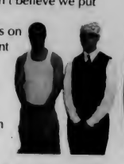
In regards to his overall sentiment on the women's performance yesterday, Gerlech said, "Hey, a win is a win and we'll take it any way we can."

With the success of the Minutewomen this season, it is likely, according to freshman Jaffra Depontes, that they will find themselves in first place heading into the A-10 championships to be held the weekend of April 20 in College Park, Maryland.

"If we do well in the A-10s then there's a good chance that we could make the NCAAs," said Depontes, who hails from Kaliua-Kona, Haw.

The Minutewomen will host Williams College today at the Upper Boyden Courts. The match is scheduled to begin at 3:00 p.m.

We can't believe we put these morons on the front page either. Read about them in Arts.



ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The No. 4 UMass lacrosse team faces Yale this weekend. Will the streak continue? Check out the preview in SPORTS.

SPORTS p. 7

Volume CVII Issue 116 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, April 13, 2001

TABORA GARCIA/COLLEGIAN

Aaah! Monster! Dot com!

Jeff Taylor, the C.E.O. and founder of monster.com, spoke in Herter Hall yesterday.

Marrett resigns from UMass Provost post

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Cora Bagley Marrett has announced her resignation from the position of Provost and senior Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs, effective May 27, according to the University of Massachusetts News Office.

The Campus Chronicle reported yesterday that Marrett had sent her letter of resignation to Chancellor Scott.

"Over the next 10 months, I will do what I can to prepare for an orderly transition in the Office of Provost... This action does not affect my appointment as Professor with tenure in the Department of Sociology and Professor of Afro-American Studies," Marrett was quoted as saying.

The Chronicle further reported that Marrett plans to conclude her currently ongoing searches for the positions of Vice Chancellor of Research, the Vice Chancellor of University Advancement and the Dean of the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics.

Marrett was hired as Provost on August 1, 1997 after a nation-wide search by Chancellor David K. Scott that began in October of 1996. A renowned sociologist, Marrett was the assistant director of the National Science Foundation from 1992 to 1996. She is also former director of the United Negro College Fund/Andrew Mellon Programs. Marrett taught at the University of Wisconsin at Madison in the sociology and the Afro-American studies departments prior to coming to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

> "She has always brought high standards of academic excellence to all that she does and her contributions in that regard will be missed by all of us. We wish her well in her future endeavors whether here at UMass or elsewhere."
> Chancellor David K. Scott

Marrett was a finalist for the Presidency of Iowa State University this past February, while UMass President William Bulger's office was searching for an interim Chancellor to replace the departing Scott. Several academic deans sent a letter to Bulger, urging him to appoint Marrett to the interim post.

Marrett lost the Presidency to former Maryland administrator Gregory L. Geoffrey. Bulger appointed Deputy Provost Marcellette Williams to the position of interim Chancellor, which takes effect this summer.

While Provost, Marrett garnered at least $750,000 in grant money, and urged her co-workers to do the same.

"I have at many times encouraged my colleagues to go out and

Turn to PROVOST, page 3

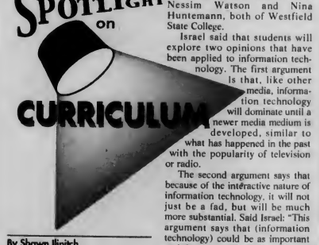
New class to explore the advance of technology



By Shawn Ilnitsch
Collegian Staff

Professor Bill Israel and six other professors are coming together to teach Journalism 397T, Information Technology in Social and Historical Perspective, this fall. The course, one of eighteen new courses, is part of the push by UMass to develop an Information Technology minor.

Israel, a professor in the Journalism department, said that the class will discuss what is going on socially with Information Technology and how it compare s with other eras when we have seen significant changes in technology.

"This class is an outgrowth of a long standing interest in technology," said Israel, who also teaches The Future of Online Journalism for the Journalism department.

Israel explains that this new course will have some overlap with the online journalism course. "There were some issues raised in my online journalism course that further stimulated interest in the influence that Information Technology has on society," Israel said.

Along with Israel, six other professors will be involved with the course, including: Norm Sims, Chairman of the Journalism Department; Earnest Allen, Associate Chairmen of the Afro-American Studies Department; Maribel Paredes, Associate Professor of Communications; Mark Schlesinger, Communications professor at UMass Boston, and Nessim Watson and Nina Huntemann, both of Westfield State College.

Israel said that students will explore two opinions that have been applied to information technology. The first argument is that, like other media, information technology will dominate until a newer media medium is developed, similar to what has happened in the past with the popularity of television or radio.

The second argument says that because of the intfractive nature of information technology, it will not just be a fad, but will be much more substantial. Said Israel: "This argument says that (information technology) could be as important and fundamental as the printing press."

Israel said that the new program came out of a conference last October to address the shortage of labor in technology related fields. "There is a need for IT skills in virtually every discipline."

This program allows students to gain information technology skills in different academic areas. "Students have widely differing needs and interests," Israel said. "We're trying to provide interest across the curriculum here to equip students with the tools necessary to succeed in life and in career."

There are no prerequisites for Journ 397T/ Information Technology in Social and Historical Perspective. It is open to students of all majors and will meet on Mondays and Wednesdays from 1:25-3:20 in a room to be announced. The class limit is currently set at 60 seats.

Refunds a possibility

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts may have some money coming to them. Many excess and refund checks have yet to be picked up according to the Bursar's Office.

"Its nearly the end of the semester, and we still have hundreds and hundreds of checks," Bursar Dan Maguffin said. "Either students forgot to pick them up or they didn't even know about them."

Maguffin explained that excess checks are issued whenever a student's financial aid package exceeds their bills.

"Financial aid is automatically applied to a student's account," Maguffin continued.

The amount of each check differs, but the average check could be "a couple of hundred dollars," according to Maguffin.

"During the beginning of a semester, the average is around a thousand dollars," Maguffin said. "It really depends on the package."

The Bursar's Office has seen a rise in excess checks over the years. In 1999, the Office processed 38,000 checks. According to some estimates, that number may be as high as 50,000.

If students don't pick up the checks, the Bursar's office will be forced to mail them. Problems with the mail, as well as non-updated addresses, pose a problem. The Bursar hopes that the implementation of PeopleSoft will make things easier and more efficient.

"There are so many possibilities with the PeopleSoft system," Maguffin said. "We can send out letters, emails, whatever we need to."

Until then, students will have to check on their Web Information Systems for Everyone (WISE) accounts.

"There's something you have to look for. There's a line that says 'excess check issued'," Maguffin said. He further explained that due to some late financial aid, some students might have more than one excess check. The Bursar's Office has come up with a way to clear up any confusion.

"There's something new we're doing, adding the date that the check is picked up," Maguffin said. Now students can be clear if they have another excess check or not.

"Lets say you picked up a check early in the semester, and got some late financial aid," Maguffin explained. "You'll see a line that says 'January 26 excess check issued, check picked up January 28, excess check issued February 16' and you know that you have another check."

TABORA GARCIA/COLLEGIAN

Sweet, Sweet Goodness

At Ben and Bill's in Northampton, heaven is chocolate covered strawberries!!

Campus Perspectives

If you could say anything to prospective students checking out UMass, what would it be?

By Katy LoConte
Photos by Tibora Girczyc-Blum

Sue Forte
Sociology
Junior

"The campus experience could be the best time of your life or the worst time. It's just what you make of it. Get involved, study hard and don't take things for face value."

Chris Serwacki
Biology
Senior

"My advice to incoming freshman would be to get involved with any student or group activity to help make their experience more worthwhile."

K. Reed
"Be careful in choosing your major. I had the problem of having to change it. It's not a frivolous decision and no one really sat down to talk to me about it."

S. Arek
Graduate Student
"We don't really get a good variety of food here. Not as well as Burger King and McDonald's. What we have now is good but it's not much for variety."

Marisa DeJesus
Communications
Junior

"Be prepared to wait in lines but it's not as big of a school as it seems most of the time."

Rob Beckworth
Economics
Sophomore

"Make sure you know what you want to do. Don't be overwhelmed by the size of the school and get involved. Take advantage of every semester you have. Every semester counts. Don't screw up."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as "Index" Sept. 8, 1890. It became the College Signal in 1901, the Massachusetts Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Massachusetts Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

PITCHING IN

A thorough look at the outreached hand of Northampton's community

By Laura Leonard
Collegian Correspondent

It's quite a transition from fighting fires to battling homelessness.

Northampton's Masonic Street fire station was pressed into service as an emergency cot shelter on November 1, 1999. The City Council's property committee at the time approved the building's new use when it was originally opened as a temporary reprieve for the homeless until April of 2000, not knowing just how resilient the effort would prove to be.

The Cot Program, as it is called, began five years ago in an effort to consolidate the homeless-prevention volunteer efforts of seven different churches.

Mary Leone, a member of the relief staff, showed where the fire crew used to live, showing how it was transformed into a warm and cozy apartment. A group of homeless men sat in the living room watching TV, talking to each other, and seemed well acquainted with Leone, who was kindly able to answer all of their questions.

In the crew room, food was being laid out on the long service table, where the volunteers smiled and laughed as they served.

From dinner until 9:30 pm various providers hold classes with information to assist the homeless. They offer, among other things, the Tri-City Mental Health and Homeless Services, ServiceNet and Transition to Work.

Sue Banks, the director of the Masonic Street shelter, was originally the head of the Grove Street shelter from 1998 to 2000. In 2000, she was appointed director of three projects, including the cot shelter, collectively known as the Hampshire County Stabilization Program.

"This year we have seen in increase in the number of young adults becoming homeless," she said. "We're working with the young adults who come to the shelter by offering transitional housing and support, as well as outreach services."

The shelter operates smoothly with the help of 400 volunteers and community support. It provided shelter to 200 individuals during a recent six-month season.

Volunteers from various organizations provide the food service to aid the homeless. A recent meal, for instance, was provided by an area food bank.

COURTESY LAURA LEONARD

The Northampton Masonic Street firehouse, a haven for the homeless.

Path renovation underway in Great Barrington

A bike and walk way development project is currently underway in the southwestern Massachusetts town of Great Barrington. The completed path will extend a section of a present walking path along the Housatonic River and has a completion date of the summer 2003.

The Berkshire town of Great Barrington, MA, is about five miles away from the Massachusetts and New York border. Decades of industrial waste and one burned-down old building were among the pollutants pulled out of its river since 1988 in a series of community environmental efforts.

Volunteers cleared away 288 tons of waste, according to the Great Barrington Riverwalk Website at www.gbriverwalk.org. Their success enabled the funding of the Great Barrington greenway called the River Walk, which is a wood and gravel pathway along the northern banks, totaling 2,200 feet.

"Riverwalk is used by tourists, students, and area residents," said Rachel Fletcher, founding director of the project, which is sponsored by the Great Barrington Land Conservancy. The project was the first of its kind in the area. Since then other area towns have taken on similar projects.

The proposed greenway, currently in its design stages, will attach to the existing Riverwalk Bridge street entrance. It will then run two miles further downstream through Memorial field on a hard surface layer of stone dust over gravel. In places where the route touches upon river wet-spots, wooden planks will be used for further support.

The extension will be eight feet wide according to an official at the Massachusetts Highway Commission, which allocates money for the state approved project. The Riverwalk is just one of over ninety projects being funded by a $60 million dollar grant for bicycle/pedestrian pathways in Massachusetts. Though some trees may be cleared for the trail, it will link area schools and the Barrington Fairgrounds to the Housatonic and follow an existing utility route alongside the river.

Once the design stages are a quarter of the way finished, developers will allow community input into the new design. Hearings on the project will be announced in local media outlets around this time. For more information about the Housatonic greenway contact Rachel Fletcher at (413) 528-3391.

- Gyasi McClarence

■ provost

continued from page 1

get some funding," Marrett said in February. "There are resources out there, I expect they'll be able to do it. Whatever we undertake, we should undertake because we are going to do it and do it extremely well."

Marrett aided in planning the Commonwealth College, the honors program approved by the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education and funded by the state legislature.

This academic year, Marrett has been working on several issues, including the retention of both students and faculty.

The Faculty Senate yesterday passed a resolution thanking Marrett and congratulating her on "her perspective completion" of her term as Provost.

"She has held high academic standards," Secretary Ernest May read from the motion. "She has been an effective advocate of the public educational institution."

Chancellor Scott, addressing yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting, commented on Marrett's resignation.

"I had the pleasure of working with Cora Marrett in other capacities long before I selected her as provost," he continued. "She has always brought high standards of academic excellence to all that she does and her contributions in that regard will be missed by all of us. We wish her well in her future endeavors whether here at UMass or elsewhere."

Marrett's resignation marks yet another high-level administration vacancy. Old Dominion University's Provost Dr. Jo Anne Gora filled former UMass-Boston Chancellor Sherry Penney's vacancy earlier this week. UMass-Dartmouth's Chancellor Peter Cressy resigned in 1999.

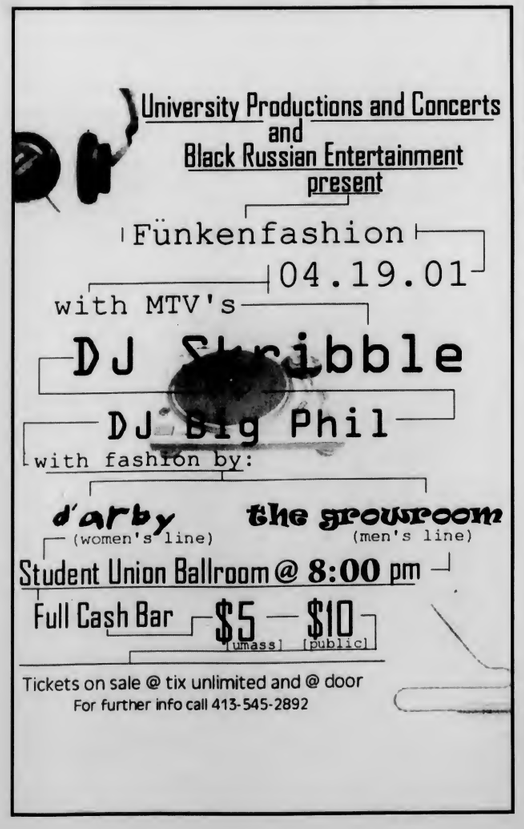
"This is a time of major transition within the University, and as such, it is to be expected there will be significant changes within the administration," Scott said.

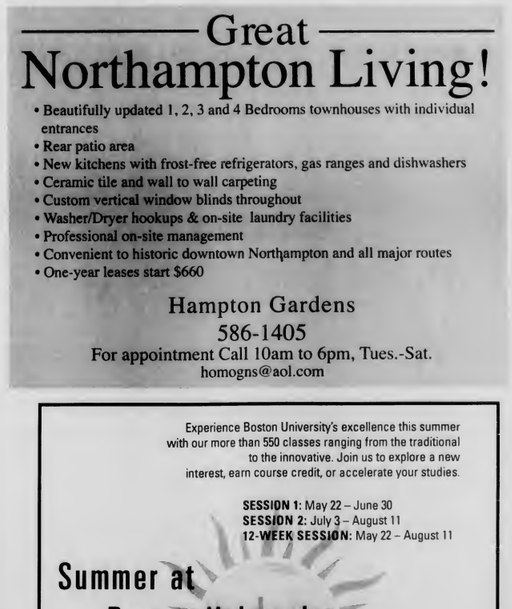
"Provost Marrett has been an excellent academic leader who has made the University of Massachusetts experience a positive one for our students." President Bulger said.

Marrett has declined to comment further on her resignation.

write for the collegian write for the collegian write for the collegian write for the collegian

www.dailycollegian.com





Great
Northampton Living!

- Beautifully updated 1, 2, 3 and 4 Bedrooms townhouses with individual entrances
- Rear patio area
- New kitchens with frost-free refrigerators, gas ranges and dishwashers
- Ceramic tile and wall to wall carpeting
- Custom vertical window blinds throughout
- Washer/Dryer hookups & on-site laundry facilities
- Professional on-site management
- Convenient to historic downtown Northampton and all major routes
- One-year leases start $660

Hampton Gardens
586-1405
For appointment Call 10am to 6pm, Tues.-Sat.
homogns@aol.com

Experience Boston University's excellence this summer with our more than 550 classes ranging from the traditional to the innovative. Join us to explore a new interest, earn course credit, or accelerate your studies.

SESSION 1: May 22 – June 30
SESSION 2: July 3 – August 11
12-WEEK SESSION: May 22 – August 11

Summer at Boston University

617/353-6000
summer@bu.edu
www.bu.edu/summer

BOSTON UNIVERSITY SUMMER TERM

BOSTON UNIVERSITY is BOSTON'S UNIVERSITY

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Laubinger and Sheehan

Hope for the SGA

While it doesn't quite compare to the first 100 days of the American Presidency, the transition into power for SGA President John Sheehan and Trustee Jon Laubinger is certainly an important one – not only for those involved with student government, but for every enrolled individual attending the University of Massachusetts.

Although the two have made firm promises about changing a dismal SGA climate, and have shown a genuine enthusiasm to stand behind their claims, it will be a long battle to initiate the change that the current system so desperately needs.

"[Students] are going to see a new SGA," said Sheehan this week, in an interview with the Collegian. "It's going to take help on all ends, but we're going to do our damndest to give [the Collegian] good news to print."

That Sheehan realizes how important it is to draw from all aspects of the SGA is already a step in the right direction – in theory, at least.

How he will go about garnering that support, though, while attempting to piece together an organization that remains at odds is something that remains to be seen.

If Sheehan and Laubinger succeed in silencing the in-fighting and convince the Senate to put their efforts into something more worthy – namely, actual work – than the issues they bring to the table are legitimate and deserving of attention from all areas of the SGA. Sheehan is pushing for changes in Parking Services (an issue many, many students will have an active interest in), ALANA enrollment (another prominent topic on campus) and laundry services in the dorms. Laubinger concurs on all points, and also intends to focus on on the alteration of the University Meal Plan and a change in the Housing Appeals Board.

And, of course, hovering above those issues, is the one thing they agree on the most: working towards an SGA that can put aside past differences and work towards accomplishing the jobs it was elected to do.

"All I can do is ask for student support," said Sheehan. "This is about keeping the faith and making the student voice heard and all I can do is ask for the chance."

This is what is important. That they be given the chance to make good on the platform that they were elected on. Not the fighting, or name-calling, or ridiculous posing. If you must criticize, give it a legitimate context; discuss the job they do, not the performance you have in mind. We're all students, all affected by the same campus issues, and to create divisions based on party or position accomplishes nothing. Even as John and Jon were being sworn in, shades of the old, of the things they promise to dissolve, were evident. The same old, tired debates that haunted – and ultimately dissolved – the Senate last year.

This needs to stop.

And Laubinger, for his part, is intent on delivering.

"We are John and Jon, we don't have egos, we are still students, we still know what we work for. We are going to operate."

We at the Collegian hope that they do.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

LIFE IN HELL
©2001 BY MATT GROENING
OH, SWAMI! I WANT TO ENROLL IN YOUR "IT'S A MIRACLE" COURSE!
CERTAINLY. I'LL NEED YOUR $25 INITIATION FEE.
$37.50 FOR YOUR HANDCRAFTED MEDITATION PILLOW.
$19.95 FOR YOUR IRON HOLINESS MEDALLION.
$39.95 FOR YOUR STYLISH TURBAN.
$21.95 FOR YOUR BLESSED TEMPLE BELL.
$79.95 FOR YOUR UNIQUE SECRET MANTRA.
$29.95 FOR YOUR BOOK OF JOYFUL CHANTS.
$17.50 FOR YOUR 2001-MANDALAS KALEIDOSCOPE.
$14.50 FOR YOUR DEVOTIONAL NOSE FLUTE.
$29.95 FOR YOUR CHROMIUM PRAYER BALLS.
$19.95 FOR YOUR EASY-FIT DIAPER-STYLE DHOTI.
I ONLY HAVE $4.27 LEFT.
YOUR FINAL PROCESSING FEE IS $4.27.
THAT'S AN AWFULLY CONVENIENT COINCIDENCE, DON'T YOU THINK?
IT'S A MIRACLE!

Tom's drinking song on a Thursday night

Living with a foreign culture here at UMass

NATTY YAGUDIN

The strangest thing about my time as a foreigner in China was that I never physically left UMass. Happy and unaware of my ensuing culture shock, I prepared to move into Thatcher dorm on the first day of the fall of 1989.

Planning to study abroad in Mexico, I looked forward to spending a semester in the only dorm on campus that offered conversational classes in Spanish. I expected to practice Spanish and have Hispanic neighbors. Also, with Thatcher hosting over five different language programs, I was 'all about' diversity and being in a diverse dorm.

I climbed up the main staircase to the fourth floor, opened the hallway door and stopped dead in my tracks in front of the RA room, which marked the very center of the carpeted, silent hallway. Puzzled, I looked to the sides: do I go right or left to reach my room?

On the fourth floor in Thatcher, choosing a left over a right turn would be to choose between two different worlds. In what I learned was the Spanish and Chinese Language Floor, most of Spanish speaking program students were on the right side. My room was on the left.

I dyed beyond the second door after the stair entrance, it was a bit too much to the left, I decided. But it was left enough to make me worried.

Funky smells entered my nostrils. Someone was cooking Asian food, and it smelled horrible. Strange, unidentifiable letters in a column stared at me from the announcement board. I soon found out that Tom, one of my neighbors, likes to blast a particular Chinese song when he drinks. I secretly cursed every time the bizarre music spilled to my room on Thursday nights. I hadn't even thought the Chinese had drinking songs.

On the fourth floor in Thatcher, choosing a left over a right turn would be to choose between two different worlds. In what I learned was the Spanish and Chinese Language Floor, most of Spanish speaking program students were on the right side. My room was on the left.

Where am I?' I thought. 'Why the hell haven't they placed the Italian students with us?'

In the ensuing months, I learned more about China and Asia than I had ever wanted to before. From Yan, an engineering student tortured by schoolwork, I ended up learning more about what life is like for some Asian-Americans whose parents push them so hard to succeed.

Alva, a fellow neighbor who actually studies Japanese, confirmed my suspicion that Japanese food is indeed very different from my own, and is sometimes too strange for my taste (ever heard of beer-smelling hard candy?).

Other Asian students recounted to me tidbits of wisdom about their respective countries, but even more importantly, about life in America for them. I never realized how hard it must be to live as a Vietnamese in the US, knowing that the country you live in destroyed the country you're from just over twenty years ago. I also never thought that racism against Asians also comes from Asians themselves, and that the relationships between Asians of different countries are amazingly complex, although Western eyes group them all together.

Although I did get to practice Spanish, my immediate neighbors ended up looking radically different than what I had expected them to be. And in the end, it wasn't necessarily all that bad.

I remember how I wanted to experience 'diversity' at Thatcher, as long as that diversity was comfortable enough for me. I learned that diversity is actually more about being awkward, like trying to pronounce a new word in a language you don't know.

Programs like Thatcher are grossly under-funded and overlooked in the university's curriculum. What could is an anthropology class with a 'diversity' requirement if it consists of Americans talking to Americans about Nepal? One of the most memorable experiences I will take with me from UMass is my time in Thatcher. Ironically, I never got any diversity credit for it.

Sometimes I felt I had to be a sort of Caribbean ambassador, blasting out Salsa music above Tom's Chinese drinking song. But that never did me any good. Eventually, I had to listen to his music. Maybe the song wasn't that bad, after all. Finally, a few days ago, I stepped to his room and asked for the name of the song. It had come to be such a part of my Thatcher existence, that I decided to download it from Napster as a memory. He wrote it down on a piece of paper for me. Squinting, I looked over, and downloaded.

Natty Yagudin is a Collegian columnist.

Ed/Op is always accepting column submissions from students! Finished products, questions, or comments can be emailed to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com and Ed/Op Batphone can be reached at 577-3835 ask for Rob Schulze or Matt Despres! Make yourself HEARD!

Visiting lacks laughs

By Jarel Barr
Collegian Staff

Just Visiting
Directed by Jean-Marie Poire
Starring Jean Reno, Christian Clavier and Christina Applegate
Playing at CineMark Theatres

People who saw the French comedy Les Visiteurs (the highest grossing film of all time in its native land) several years ago loved it for its freshness and quirky humor. As the French would say, it had that little je ne sais quoi.

Now, stars Jean Reno, Christian Clavier and director Jean-Marie Poire bring an Americanized, English language version called Just Visiting to the theatres. Moviegoers will loathe its flat jokes and malcontent. As the French would say, C'est la Merde.

Simple formula: take the original stars, noble knight Reno and peasant sidekick Clavier. Add original director and screenwriter, Poire. Change location from France to Chicago. Add eye candy like Christina Applegate, Tara Reid and Bridgette Wilson. Voila. You have one of the absolute worst movies ever made.

Granted, that is a bold statement. To call anything the worst movie ever, full well knowing I have seen such screen gems as Battlefield Earth, Spiders, and Crocodile, is quite the statement. But it's the utter discontent that the mega media conglomerate has for making money over all else that defeats me. Someone actually thought they could translate a movie that made a lot of money somewhere else, and have it make a lot of money here. Well, why don't they try taking a best selling English book, throw it through Babblefish, and see how it works. Qu'est-ce que étaient vous pensant.

The movie begins with a voice-over narration telling a tale of an evil knights plot to destroy the happiness of the to-be-wed couple of Count Thibault of Malfete (Reno) and English Princess Julia Malfete (Applegate).

Unfortunately for the King and Queen to be, a jealous knight and evil witch have drugged Thibault's drink, causing him to see things a bit differently. After an unfortunate incident, Thibault convinces a bumbling wizard (Malcolm McDowell) to send him back a few days in time to right the mistakes he made. But instead, Thibault and André (Clavier) are whisked back to the future by the wizard in a reverse of A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, dropping the duo in modern day Chicago. There they meet Thibault's descendant Julia (Applegate again) and her gold-digging boyfriend, Hunter (Matt Ross).

As it turns out, Julia is selling Thibault's estate, and shockingly doesn't believe his story of he being her great, great, great, great, great, grandfather from the 12th century, rather believing he is the missing descendant that she just inherited the fortune from. How convenient. Julia takes Thibault and Andre in as they attempt to adjust to life in the 21st century. It is here that the story splits, chronicling two plot developments: how, under the influence of the heroic knight, Julia finds the strength to defy her dominating, treacherous boyfriend; and how the peasant servant Andre makes the intellectual breakthrough that enables him to conceive of himself as a man, not a servant.

Neither is very convincing, and the archaic attempt at toilet humor only slightly dresses up the malcontent of the storyline.

Applegate is too flat, with her movements and lines leaving you wanting more... of anyone else. Ross's character is too unlikable, even for a movie like this. His evil, cheating husband type is so stereotypical of American movies that it seems out of place in this fish-out-of-water French remake. As for Clavier, one of the great screen comedians of Europe (and a co-author of both this screenplay and the original), he doesn't register with any particular force. He's a shaggy, smelly, ill-defined presence, and his mannerism, while funny, grows old quickly. Clavier is supposed to be the lightning rod of the visual slapstick humor, but rather deflects it through trite, telegraphed joke scenes. Tara Reid's introduction as the love interest for the retched peasant played by Clavier brings the total believability quotient of Just Visiting to a hair below Jurassic Park 2. Only Reno, magnificent behind that rumbly baritone voice, truly knightly and majestic, stands out in the film. But he and his belittlement of Clavier is not enough to save the film.

The pale tones of the colors, the utterly useless effects thrown together with overmatched talent, and name recognition marketing doomed this movie from the start. The $40 million dollar budget is unseen, and the direction is inconsequential. You can almost feel the studio rushing through the picture and the inability of anyone to deliver the poorly written jokes to the audience.

I won't say the movie won't appeal to anyone. Of the 4 people in the movie theatre during my screening, one did laugh repeatedly. I think she misplaced her ball of yarn for 86 minutes, which might have played a slight factor, but I digress. The movie may appeal to any fan of A Kid in King Arthur's Court, starring former Rookie of the Year hurler Thomas Ian Nicholas, and the unforgettable Cosby kid Keisha Knight Pulliam star vehicle, A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court. But if you don't fall into that category, I would avoid Just Visiting all together.

COURTESY OF HOLLYWOOD PICTURES

Christina Applegate stars in the ill-fated French import Just Visiting.

COURTESY OF TOM SEGALEWITZ

Semisonic rocked an enthusiastic crowd this past Wednesday at Skybox.

Sonic boom hits the Skybox

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

SEMISONIC with PETE YORN
Skybox
April 11

Wednesday night at the Skybox, Semisonic and Pete Yorn played to a small but faithful group of college fans that ate up every second. Yorn and Semisonic are both the epitome of college bands, relying heavily on smashing drums, masterful guitar play, background piano and songs that touch the college soul.

Pete Yorn was surprisingly good. Normally when a virtually unknown artist opens for a known band the results can be negative, because their music is overlooked by the fact that the audience aren't aware of their music. Yorn was very aware of this fact at one point saying, "Do any of you know who we are?" If the audience didn't know who they were before, by the end of the forty-five minute set people were going to the merchandise table buying the first album musicforthemorningafter. His songs are full of heartfelt lyrics and fantastic music that caused the crowd, who didn't know Yorn from a hole in the wall, to start tapping their feet and bobbing their heads. Toward the end of his set, there were believers that Yorn represented the next step in college music. Although all the songs were rock and roll based, all were stylistically different. At some points his sound reminded me of a young Bruce Springsteen, strumming the guitar and crooning with a raspy yet melodic voice (in fact, to open the last song, Yorn sang the first line of "Dancing in the Dark"). Implementing pianos and harmonicas softened the sound, rounding out the rock and roll espringae. If given the chance, I can envision Pete Yorn succeeding in today's music scene that is saturated with rap, rock and pop.

At about 9:45, Semisonic took the stage as a break from their latest tour. Playing the previous night at the Paradise and recently in New Jersey, performing at the Skybox seemed to be honoring their college fans for being patient in awaiting the new album, and celebrate the fans they did. Opening up with "Singing in my Sleep" off of their last album, the platinum selling Feeling Strangely Fine, the faithful following of Semisonic fans were putty in their hands. The next three songs were off the new album All About Chemistry, and they all had a different sound.

In "Chemistry" we hear the same pop happiness that made "Closing Time" such a big hit. Both "Never You Mind" and "She's Got my Number" implement electronic synthesizers, but "She's Got my Number" reflects the influence of seventies guitar and organ. The song that I would expect to do well on the charts would be "Get A Grip," because it not only has catchy lyrics but also the music is fast and rockin'. Although the new album hasn't been out that long and the new single "Chemistry" hasn't gotten great radio play, the crowd was into the band and received them well. It was evident that the band appreciated the small intimate crowd taking the opportunity to set the mood for "Act Naturally." Dan Wilson took about three minutes to set up the song, which I think was more of an attempt to get in touch with the crowd than anything else. The last song before the encore was "Closing Time", which got the audience pumped for another twenty minutes of Semisonic.

When they reappeared for the encore, they played "All Worked Out" and "In Another Life" from previous albums, making the night worth it for the true Semisonic fans. Due to the overwhelming request from more than one member of the audience for the song "FNT," Semisonic obliged their fans and then quickly left the stage.

Semisonic, despite the fame the have received in recent years, are a college band. They may have moved to bigger venues and world tours, but they play best in front of college students at a college venue. Although the Skybox was nowhere near the capacity limit, it caught the vibe and energy of the band nicely. The small area and small crowd allowed the band to get personal and at some points really rocked. Toward the end of the show Wilson looked genuinely happy with the turnout of the real fans, and it was obvious that the genuine fans were really happy with Semisonic.

Blood Knot livens theater

By Melody Zagami
Collegian Staff

BLOOD KNOT
Amherst College
April 7

An audience was brought back to the past Saturday night when Athol Fugard's Blood Knot played at Amherst College's Experimental Theater. Blood Knot is the story of two brothers during apartheid. Both are ethnically black, but one, Morris, could pass for white. The other brother, Zachariah, longs to meet a girl. Morris finds him a penpal who they discover is white. The men become scared when the plans a visit and anticipate the trouble they could be in if she finds out Zaccharaih is a black man. They then try to devise a way for Morris to pretend he is Zachariah and appear white.

Athol Fugard, a native South African, is one of the foremost writers on race during this period of history. He played the role of Morris when the play was first brought to the stage and has said that it is, "The first play in which he discovered his voice."

The Amherst College production did not fail to make his "voice" heard. With a cast of only two, Blood Knot was a passionate and convincing presentation enough to carry the whole performance, which lasted almost two hours. Amherst's Jonathan Mosley was an energetic and memorable Zachariah Peterson.

Zachariah is the "blacker" of the two brothers. He labors long hours, he is illiterate, and less privileged. He is a man with a zest for life, completely living in the present. He is a contrast to his brother in many ways. While Morris frets over the future and saving money, Zachariah longs to go out, have fun and find a girl.

Morris, the more privileged brother, has had more opportunity. He has gone away and come back to South Africa with an education. He has been able to experience more than Zachariah ever will because he has lighter skin.

That both actors put their entire heart and soul into this performance, there is no question. Acting with only a scarce set and dim lighting, their relationship is the most important element on stage.

Mosley's Zachariah is energetic and enjoyable to watch. Zachariah is an embodiment of the human spirit. He is downtrodden, he is treated unfairly but he is in love with life. Rob O' Hare's portrayal of Morris is heartfelt and, at times, apologetic. Unfortunately his South African dialect sounds more Middle Eastern, but I'm sure you'd be hard pressed to find someone in the five-college area who can do a dead-on South African accent. And if anything, this seeming flaw reminds the audience that this story of brotherly conflict is universal.

Zachariah decides that if the lady penpal, Ethel, is to visit then Morris should dress up in a suit, act like a gentleman and pretend he is white. Zachariah goes and buys a suit and all the accessories for him.

The difference between brothers truly comes through as Morris practices his role as a white man. He transforms in what I thought was the most memorable scene, as he becomes a white man and treats Zachariah as the white man treats him. As he circles around the stage in his suit and expensive boots O'Hare changes his very posture. He stands up straighter, walks with authority and his very facial expressions show a different man. It is clear that here they are not brothers, they are two men, one white and one black.

In the end it turns out that Ethel is marrying someone else and she has no need for a penpal anymore. But what we are left with is not the sense of a lost romance. What we realize is that while blood may be thick, it is not untainted by the ideas of wealth, money, and privilege and that brotherhood does not always mean equality.

Toohey's unique style wins over Iron Horse

By David Piper
Collegian Staff

MEGHAN TOOHEY
Iron Horse
April 6

My feet were tired after a half hour of standing in front of the club, my ears felt worn out after a long set of lackluster music from the opening band, and although I didn't want to admit it, somehow the Iron Horse's usually comfortable atmosphere had me squirming in my chair. Nevertheless, when Boston-based singer-songwriter Meghan Toohey took the stage, all tousled hair and indie rock chic, the night began looking up.

Though Toohey has made a name for herself playing solo acoustic shows, a powerful trio of fellow musicians backed her on Friday night. The stage, and the rest of the room along with it, seemed to lighten up once the band members exchanged a few smiles and nods. By the second song, "Seed", their deft dynamic changes were leaving ample space for Toohey to stretch out and showcase her singing. Her low, sultry whisper in the verses gave way to some impressive belting in the choruses.

But it is not just Toohey's voice that impresses. Her songwriting too possesses a sense of urgency, power, and presence all her own. Lyrically, Toohey evokes a murky emotional landscape where images of rainy days, forgotten objects, and sleepless nights all meet and take form. She is not all mystery and subtlety though, and in her more forthright writing she is just as comfortable with indignant finger-pointing angst as she is with sunny, soaring pop hooks. Perhaps Toohey's greatest strength is her ability to not just negotiate through the dangerous divides and categories constructed by popular music, but to walk by and ignore them with a refreshing sense of disregard. On one hand she is a folk singer-songwriter who is familiar with finger-picked guitars and friendly stage banter. On the other, she is a rocker not afraid of dark, cavernous clubs or distorted crash & burn guitar effects.

Midway in her set, the band played the night's only cover, a playful version of Prince's "Kiss." But it the group quickly moved back to more familiar artistic ground, and for the next number they played a song new to their repertoire titled "Tattoo". The somber mood set by a muddled drum loop and Toohey's delicate guitar work provided a nice contrast in the set. At the end of the show, the small but enthusiastic crowd applauded and prompted Toohey to ask, "Should we do one more?" The resulting "Even the Rain" was a soft, poignant, and brave encore that turned into one of the more magical moments of the night.

At one point in the evening Toohey, talking about one of her colleague's trademark leather outfits, said, "I almost wore my Melissa Ferrick pants, but then I said 'No Meghan, you're just gonna have to be yourself tonight.'" I, for one, am happy she decided to strike out on her own. The music, and her pants, both suited her well.

Read Collegian ARTS

'Diarrhea' gives UMass the runs

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

If stupidity has no bounds, then the creators of a student online television series are reaching for the stars.

Since MTV's Jackass became immensely popular, trying to copy it has become a national phenomenon. Jackass is a series created by a man who calls himself Johnny Knoxville. It is produced by award winning director Spike Jonez and displays Knoxville and company participating in manic stunts. Some of the episodes have found people lighting each other on fire, getting in fistfights, and even vomiting profusely. MTV highly discourages any attempt to recreate the show, and has told viewers never to send the company their tapes of home stunts, but nonetheless, some people have ignored their warned warning.

As if UMass doesn't have enough extra-curricular activities for students to participate in, it was only a matter of time before some students decided to take their curiosity in Jackass to the next level. Two students at Dickinson residence hall in Orchard Hill have combined wits to come up with what they think is the ultimate form of extreme art. They call it "brace yourself for this: "Diarrhea."

"I've been stupid all my life," said Danny "Mayhem" co-creator of "Diarrhea." Danny is one half of the executive producing team. The other man calls him self "Macho" Joe Camacho. The two spend much of their time creating videos of extreme comedy and uploading it to the Internet. This is accomplished by Danny's training in his computer science studies. He videotapes the events, and after about one day's editing, they are put online at his home page at http://diarrhea@danny1.net.

"We got the idea that this would be fun to do," Danny said. "When I'm bored at night, I sit around with my friends and try to think of the stupidest things we could."

Besides its obvious fecal reference, the creators say the name for the show came from the 1993 film Dumb and Dumber. "The funniest scene of all time in the funniest movie ever," explained Danny, "is the diarrhea scene in Dumb and Dumber." He said that when people hear the name of the show they are automatically outraged and disgusted. Originally the show was going to be titled, "Jack-UMass," but they thought that was not shocking enough.

Being stupid has led to such dangerous ideas as carboarding, an event that looks like water-skiing on snow, with snowboards being pulled by a car. It was filmed during the enormous blizzard that closed the campus for two days in March. Another one of the duo's proudest moments was called 'party pukers.' This is when they tricked people at a party into thinking that a man was vomiting on a dorm room floor. The room quickly cleared out.

RYAN BENHARRIS/COLLEGIAN
These guys call themselves 'Diarrhea.' You can read the article to find out why.

Much like Jackass, "Diarrhea" obviously works off of the responses that surrounding people have to their stunts. The group tries to tape their unknowing public as part of the joke. They tend to receive mixed reactions. "A lot of people are shocked by it," said Camacho. "But a lot of times people just laugh."

Some people are not so quick to find the idea funny. "This is America at its worst," said a UMass student who wished to remain anonymous, but facetiously added that if the creators of the show were allowed to go by aliases, you can call him "Wilkes Booth."

America at it worst may be a strong statement, but the stunts created on "Diarrhea" are obviously not condoned or sanctioned by any public officials or officers. Cara Grubert, a resident assistant in the Webster/Dickinson cluster explained why the University is definitely against the stunts. "It's dangerous and involves dangerous activities that the University could potentially be liable for," she said.

The creators of the show understand the danger in their doings, and realize that it is not sanctioned, but claim that is the glory of "Diarrhea." "The more bold you are, the funnier you'll be," Camacho stated.

They also claimed than the show is not only about fun and grossing people out, and if you really look for it, you will find deep importance in what they're doing. "I think if you look at 'party pukers,' it has an inner meaning," said Camacho. "You'll find that it has social commentary on teenage drinking."

Regardless of the critics, the creators of the show say their behavior will not only continue, but become progressively more outrageous. "We plan on setting out a full assault on the campus, fully equipped with protests in front of the DC's," Danny said. When asked what they would be protesting, Danny would not comment, but replied, "If that guy with the car can pull it off, so can we." The two were alluding to Frank Melberg, a University sophomore whose car was towed after he parked in an illegal space while using a fraudulent sticker. They also mentioned "playing musical chairs with laxatives," and "having a swimming race across the campus pond with flags for the United States on one side, and Britain on the other."

If "Diarrhea," is to be anything more than an immensely idiotic and dangerous idea cast in the blink of an eye, (much like Danny's first venture, the UMass Adult Film Club, which was a failed attempt to created a registered student organization with the sole purposes of watching pornographic films) then it will certainly be to the surprise of all of it's critics. "We're learning," said Danny. "I think we just do our best to make things funny."

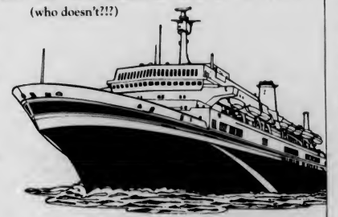
Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 5

So you think you have an artisitic edge.
Know you can prove it with a Coke pledge.
An eight line poem you can write.
Using letters, Coca-Cola, your talent will take flight.

Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "taste of Umass". If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.

Coca-Cola •••• From your Friends at••••• COLLEGIAN

Who wants a cruise for two?
(who doesn't?!!?)



In one of the issues of the Collegian each week there will be a clue: Uncover the item at which the clue is hinting, collect it, and hold on to it!
When the taste of UMass rolls around, bring all the items you have collected and you will receive the FINAL CLUE...

The first person to bring the last item back to the TASTE OF UMASS will win an AMAZING five day cruise for two!

Coca-Cola •••• brought to you by •••• The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

MEDICAL MD & VETERINARY DEGREE PROGRAMS
Making World-Class Physicians & Veterinarians Today, For Tomorrow's World

- Programs to meet the needs of high school and college graduates.
- More than a half a century old well-recognized and established European medical and veterinary universities
- Programs recognized by National Committee on Medical Education and Accreditation and US Department of Education.
- 100% financial aid is available. The US government provides subsidized loans to qualified students in our programs.
- Approved by New York Medical Education Board for clinical training in the state of New York (A state with a high number of residency positions.)
- Medical and veterinary clerkships/training in the USA.
- Smaller class size with traditional European tutorial style education.
- Program offers opportunity to earn dual degrees - MD PhD., MD MBA, MD MSHA, MD MPHA, ets.
- Much safer campus environment, compared to many campuses in the USA, allowing to retain and strengthen cultural identities.
- English language curriculum matches to major American medical and veterinary schools.
- An excellent opportunity for hands-on participation for extensive training and experience.
- Alumni holding very good positions all over the USA.

When it comes to medical & veterinary education, our programs set standards for excellence. With cooperation from European universities, Hope Medical Institute brings you a unique, unmatched opportunity at your doorstep.

APPLY NOW!
The fall semester begins on October 1, 2001.
For more detailed information, please contact us at:
HOPE MEDICAL INSTITUTE
753 Thimble Shoals Blvd., Bldg. 2B, Newport News, VA 23606-3575
PHONE: (757) 873-3333 • FAX: (757) 873-6661
www.hopemedicalinstitute.org

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

McMurphy's
Uptown Tavern
The Mighty Ross Tones
Every Sunday Night
No Cover
Positive ID Required
37 North Pleasant St.

Mill Valley ESTATES
Now... The lifestyle you've been waiting for... Luxury two and three bedroom apartment in Amherst

420 Riverglade Drive, Amherst
Just off Rt. 9, Take West St. (Rt. 116S) to East Hadley Rd. Take First Left onto Riverglade Drive.

We Offer
- Heat & Hot Water included in your rent
- Wall-to-Wall Carpet
- Washer/Dryer Hookups
- Air conditioning
- Fully Applianced Kitchen dishwashers, disposals
- Intercom Security System
- Professional On Site Management
- 24 Hour Maintenance

Equal Housing Opportunity

At Zanna...
MIA

It's time for toes!
ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton
www.zanna.com

New School University
Robert J. Milano Graduate School of Management and Urban Policy
It's a Step...
Master of Science degrees and certificates in:
- Health Services Management and Policy
- Human Resources Management
- Nonprofit Management
- Organizational Change Management
- Urban Policy Analysis and Management

Ph.D. degree:
- Public & Urban Policy

The Next Step.
call for more information. 212-229-5462
72 Fifth Avenue New York, N.Y. 10011 025
www.newschool.edu/milano

Check out the A-10 men's tennis results in Monday's Collegian

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Seismic Lax-tivity

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Sophomore Kevin Merchant and the No. 4 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team haven't let anyone push them from the win column.

MINUTEMAN UMass LACROSSE
No. 4 UMASS (8-0, 4-0 ECAC)
vs.
YALE (4-5. 1-3 Ivy League)

UMass attack has defenses shaking

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Rumor has it there's been some seismic activity in the Amherst area – but there's no reason to fret. If, in the next few days, your dinnerware starts falling from the cabinets, it just means that the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is back at Richard F. Garber field.

This year the Minutemen have been breaking ground, and their newly garnered No. 4 ranking in the USILA/STX Coaches Poll is an affirmation of that.

UMass began the season in the No. 19 spot and carried a No. 5 ranking into last Saturday's victory over the University of Maryland-Baltimore County. Its 16-10 handling of the Retrievers coupled with No. 3 Virginia's 7-5 loss to No. 18 North Carolina was the most probable reason for the push.

The last time UMass got to the nation's fourth spot was back in 1981. No Minuteman team has ever gotten any higher.

But the Maroon and White won't be giving any thought to that when New England rival Yale comes to visit the Pioneer Valley this Saturday at 1 p.m.

"If this year in lacrosse is any indication, you guys should have learned by now that you can be beaten by anyone on our schedule and that includes Yale," coach Greg Cannella told his Minutemen after their scouting report meeting Tuesday.

"It's a scary game for us," he said. "We have to be ready."

UMass (8-0, 4-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) heads into Saturday's game as one of the two remaining undefeated Division I teams this year (the only team in the Top 20 without a loss). Quinnipiac (11-0) is the other.

Yale strides into the afternoon match with a 4-5 overall record and a 1-3 mark in the Ivy League. The Bulldogs last played on Wednesday and drilled Albany 16-5 for their first win in five games.

MEN'S LACROSSE PREVIEW
WMUA 91.1 FM
UMASS VS. YALE
SATURDAY
PREGAME, 12:30 P.M.
PLAY-BY-PLAY: MATT [illegible]
COLOR-REGAN [illegible]

Three of those four losses, however, were sour pills.

In Yale's 13-11 loss to No. 12 Cornell on March 24, the Big Red jumped out to a 10-1 lead on Yale midway through the second quarter.

The Bulldogs scored seven straight times in the third to cut the lead to two goals, but the nine-goal deficit proved too tough in the end.

"They're a streaky team," Cannella said. "They're a team that scores in bunches."

After a 13-4 loss to top-ranked Princeton on March 31, Yale took an 11-4 lead into halftime the next week against Brown and ended up losing 15-14 in quadruple overtime. Last week, the Bulldogs dropped yet another close one, this time to No. 15 Duke, 10-8.

"Regardless of its record, Yale is a very good team," Cannella said. "They're very deliberate in what they do on offense. They're probably going to play us pretty soft on defense and pack it in and rely on their goaltender."

Yale's netminder, 6-foot-2 sophomore Eric Wenzel, has made 67 saves this season and has let 53 goals between the pipes en route to his current 10.43 goals against average. He'll face a tough task this weekend trying to stop the nation's top ranked offense.

UMass has outscored its opponents by an 8.63 margin so far this season. Last week against UMBC, junior Don Little led the Minuteman attack with five goals and his classmate Marc Morley added four. The balanced Maroon and White attack has fielded eight different hat tricks thus far.

Junior attackman Brian Hunt leads the Bulldog offense with 23 goals and 24 assists. Cannella called Hunt "one of the best attackman [he'll] see all year."

Junior midfielder Marko Lujic and sophomore attackman Mike Scaglione follow with 24 points apiece.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Junior Don Little fires his patented blast from the perimeter. He was 5-for-5 with that shot last weekend in Baltimore against UMBC to help UMass to its 16-10 ECAC victory.

Minutmen settling in to steady groove

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

In a year of ups and downs, three-game series have come to define the shape and character of the Massachusetts baseball team, either slowing it down or providing much-needed boosts to its morale.

This weekend is perhaps the biggest series so far, as Atlantic 10 rival St. Bonaventure (11-10, 3-3 A-10) rolls into Earl Lorden Field for a trio of games that will play a vital role in determining how soon the Minutemen (8-11, 4-1 A-10) can reach the .500 mark and begin looking ahead – to their own fortunes in the conference and, perhaps most importantly, eventual post-season play.

For the here and now, though, head coach Mike Stone has his team focused and playing better than it has all season.

The offense, intermittent at best through the first two weeks, has begun to mature and settle in at the plate, while on the mound Stone has had the luxury of dipping deep into his rotation to pull out freshman – nameh Eric Chown and Anthony Gallo – who can come in and get the job done. Winners of seven of its last 10 games, UMass will need a gritty combination of the aforementioned to gain the important conference ground.

Senior centerfielder Nick Gomuealt has embodied the spirit of the veteran team leader all year, batting a team leading .415 with 18 runs scored and another 13 batted in. As nagging injuries have relegated Gomuealt to both the DH and bench in recent games, junior Mike Kulak has stepped in admirably and contributed to the offense.

Right-fielder Gavin Clark has also been exceptional of late, coming up with clutch performances at the plate and strong defensive plays in the field.

On Wednesday against Sacred Heart, the senior hit a two-run homerun that proved to be the difference, as UMass went on to take the game 8-6. First baseman Jeff Alnieri, who leads UMass with 22 RBI's, has been an enormous defensive presence so far, and appears at or near the top of almost all offensive categories. The remainder of the infielders, including leadoff hitter Sean Sarno and third baseman Aaron Senez, have utilized their individual skills well, making smart decisions in the box to give UMass prime scoring opportunities.

Likely candidates to take the mound this weekend are junior Jesse Santos and senior Craig Szado. Santos has performed better than his 1-5 record indicates, while Szado has been hit hard and early in the games he's started, never comfortably settling in with any substantial lead.

The first game of Friday's doubleheader is scheduled for noon, with the cap coming on Saturday. First pitch is scheduled for noon.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Jeff Alnieri (44) and Matt Boulanger (6) watch fellow sophomore Sean Sarno make the tag.

Women's lax returns home

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

After opening the season with seven of its first nine games on the road, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team returns to Amherst this weekend for a pair of important Atlantic 10 contests. Last weekend the Minutewomen (2-7, 1-1 A-10) split a pair of games in Philadelphia, defeating St. Joseph's 14-8 before falling 11-7 to Temple.

UMass opens up on Friday afternoon when it takes on conference leader Duquesne (10-1, 2-0 A-10).

The Dukes come into Friday's game in the midst of a 10-game winning streak with hopes to make it 11 when they head up to Totman Field.

The Minutewomen sit just one game behind Duquesne in the A-10 standings and a win would do wonders for the Maroon and White's playoff hopes.

In order to knock off the Dukes, UMass will need to tighten up its defense. Duquesne has scored 10 or more goals in nine of its 11 matches this season and sports the A-10's second leading scorer, senior midfielder Meghan Hungate.

Hungate has already tallied 31 goals and eight assists this season to lead the Duquesne attack, but is by no means the Dukes' lone gun. Five of the top 10 scorers in the A-10 wear Duquense's red and blue, so the entire UMass defense will need to be on its toes come Friday.

However, the Minutewomen do have a few things going for them that could spell defeat for the visitors.

Both history and senior midfielder Rachel Ingraffea are on UMass' side.

The Minutewomen have won each of the last two encounters with Duquense, scoring a combined 20 goals in the two matches. Last season the Maroon and White cruised to an 11-1 victory in Pittsburgh behind a pair of goals from Ingraffea. The last time these two teams met in Amherst was two years ago with UMass coming out on top of that contest 9-5.

Ingraffea plays a similar role in the UMass attack to that of Hungate for the Dukes up front. She leads the Minutewomen in goals (18) and points (18) this season and is also just one of four players to start in all nine games this season for the Maroon and White. Last weekend in Philadelphia Ingraffea registered hat tricks, her third and fourth of the season, in each of the Minutewomen's matches.

Aiding Ingraffea in attack will be fellow senior Fay Naber as well as sophomore Iada Emery and freshman Angela McMahon. The triumvirate scored nine goals and added four assists for UMass over the weekend.

In order to score, these Minutewomen will need to beat Duquense goalie P.J. Harrison. Harrison enters the match with a 9-1 record and a 7.3 goals against average, both of which lead the conference's statistical charts.

After a day off on Saturday, UMass will return to action on Sunday when it battles the Bonnies of St. Bonaventure. In just their second year of existence, the Bonnies will look to put up more of a fight against UMass this year than they did in 2000. Last season the Minutewomen cruised to a 19-2 victory.

However, this season has already seen grand improvement over last year for the Bonnies, as they picked up the program's first ever victory back on March 8, a 14-4 triumph over Siena in Bermuda. Overall, the team from Olean, N.Y. has a record of 4-5 but is still looking for its first ever A-10 victory.

The Bonnies are led by a pair of midfielders, sophomore Emily Lilvea and freshman Laura Spaulding. The duo has combined for 41 goals and 46 points so far for St. Bonaventure. At the back, sophomore Katy Jensen has stood tall in the SBU goal, compiling a 3-5 record and tallying 121 saves in those eight games.

UMass will need to win at least one of two this weekend if it is to stand any chance of qualifying for the playoffs, which would earn them the right to defend its A-10 title. A pair of victories would almost guarantee the Minutewomen that right.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

Take over our lease - Large 2 bedroom available June 1. heat & water. Call 256-2194

Summer Sublet 2 bedroom Boulders Apartment $800 negotiable Call 253-7140

1 Bedroom North Pleasant St. Apt. Heat/hot water included. Available May 1. Call 256-4287

Take over our lease 2 bedroom apt. Starting June 1st. Call 549-7053 for details.

Take over our lease We'll split the summer with you. 549-9653

Summer Sublet with fall option in Brandywine. Furniture included. 548-6991

2 Bedroom in Brandywine avail June 1st. Call 549-4003

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Apartment Available June 1st for summer sublet with fall option. One bedroom in North East Terrace Condominium Complex. Single occupancy only. $675 a month. Call 256-4135

Beautiful Apartment with best view in Boulders. Very spacious, private, clean. Great for four or two! Singles also welcome. Refurnished cabinets and bathroom & walk-in closets. Security Dep. Req. - Call Patrick or Peter 256-3045

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass cernter, bus. $550, hear, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Summer Sublet fall option. 1 bedroom on bus route. Call 665-6799

Furnished Apt. in Boulders. 2 bedroom, 1 bath, on bus route, kitchen fully equiped. $820/month. Available June 15. Heat and hot water inc. 1yr lease. Call Stacey or Jeff 256-3731

30 Second Walk from Campus Looking for 2 Females to share a room in a house on Nutting Ave. Great deal! Call Sarah 549-6603

Renovated, Puffton Apartment. Available 6-1. 3 bedroom, $1155. 549-7465

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Female Wanted to share apt @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts.com or 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

1995 Saturn SL2 Auto, loaded. Excellent condition. $4000. 537-0517

95 Dodge Neon 4 dr. $4500 O.B.O 413-527-3665

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS Cool jobs, free housing in Boston. Join our international team at 1-888-COUNCIL or nhelander@councilexchanges.org

SUMMER HELP Cape Cod, Boston or Providence. Choose your location! Driver/Delivery. Top Pay/Flexible Hours. Cape Cod Ice Company 800-660-9112

EMPLOYMENT

Like Working Outdoors? Want a great tan this summer? Paint for Collegiate Entrepreneurs! Hiring full-time summer positions for Painters and Production Managers. No experience necessary. Transportation and dependability a must. 35-40 hours/week Springfield Area. Painter's: $8.25 Manager's: $10 Call Sam at 1-800-590-9516 (pager)

Looking for Student Interested in doing gardening & yard work. 4-8 hrs a week. Flexible schedule. $10/hr, car needed. April thru September. 256-0865

Personal Care Assistant to work Tuesday early eveining for retired teacher/songwriter with MS. $10/hr. Call 256-8784

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.wantnetwealth.com

Lifeguards Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Attention International Company needs help Part-time, Full-time. 1-800-723-2896

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

FOR SALE

Peavey Ecoustic 112 Amp Perfect condition. 2 channels. 5 band graphic EQ. FX loop send/return too much to list... $350/bo. Call Fish 546-3175

MISCELLANEOUS

Are you in a long-distance relationship? Feel better at www.sblake.com

ROOM FOR RENT

One Female Looking for one male or female to share one bedroom with study. Puffton Apartments. June, July & August. Rent (VERY) negotiable. Call Megan 546-2602

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. for summer sublet. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Two Female Roommates looking for 1 or 2 other females roommates for apt in Brandywine. Call 546-2738

Looking for Roommate Female preferred, cooking skills a plus. Must be willing to win at beerpong. Contact Adam yo-st, Department 24

1 Bedroom Summer Sublet 4 females looking for another female roommate. Great house in nice quiet area of Amherst w/view of mountains, near bus route. Available June 1. Call Lara 256-2104

1 Bedroom in Sunderland Cliffside Apts. on bus route $310 a month all inclusive 546-3609

1 Bedroom Available 2 bedroom apt. Clean with carpet and dishwasher. M/F $300/mo. Available now. Call Gareth 665-8693

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

2 Bedroom 1 1/2 bathrooms fully furnished (TV, stereo, satellite, BBQ) Great location to compus. Front porch and backyard, parking available , washer + dryer. Call Dave 549-5893

Newly Renovated Puffton! Avail. ASAP-August. Call Judy at 549-4017

2 Bedroom Apartment in Brandywine starting June 1st. Call for infor 549-6989

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

3 Bedroom Apt. in Townehouse. Fully furnished. Rent negotiable. Call 549-0454

Summer Sublet 2 bedrooms Colonial Village $600 a month 256-8027

Puffton Newly renovated 3 bedroom/2bath. Take over our lease partially furnished if needed fall option available 549-0432

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

SUMMER SUBLET

Morning Wood? Every morning with wood next to Cowls Lumber! House for summer sublet. 4 bedrooms, big yard, no neighboors. Call 549-5182 ask for Woody!

Starting June 1st. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

1 Room in 2 Bedroom brandywine apt. $365/1 person, $265/2 people each/ month. Call 549-6104

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

WANTED

JEWISH EGG DONORS NEEDED

$10,000 (plus all expenses)

We have many infertile families in need of the help of compassionate women in order to realize their dream of having a child. We are seeking women who are attractive, intelligent, between the ages of 18-30, physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help a family and would like more informaiton please contact us. 1-800-264-8828 or 1-619-234-6649 Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYIS PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CW-3 Boston
4 - CBS Boston
5 - ABC-40 Springfield
6 - UPN-22 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - CW-56 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC-10 New Britain
11 - Fox-61 Hartford
12 - UPN-24 Hartford
13 - NBC-30 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - HSCN 2 (Academic Channel)
16 - WB-20 New Haven
17 - PBS
18 - UNE-1
19 - UNE-1V (Academic Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Cable In Classl
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - ESPN
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - E!
30 - Nick
31 - Discovery
32 - Showtime
33 - Cinemax Movies
34 - Sneak at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Bloomberg Financial Network
37 - College TV Network
38 - MTV
39 - MTV2
40 - VH1
41 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING C - Campus APRIL 13, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH (2)	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal Rewind		Rockies By Rail (In Stereo) ⓒ		Nova "Survivor MO" ⓒ
WFSB (3)	3	News ⓒ	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitive "Fresh and Blood" ⓒ		Nash Bridges "Kill Joy" (N) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WBZ (4)	4	News ⓒ	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Fugitive "Fresh and Blood" ⓒ		Nash Bridges "Kill Joy" (N) ⓒ		News ⓒ	Late Show ⓒ
WCVB (5)	5	News ⓒ	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⓒ	Making the Band (N) ⓒ		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 ⓒ		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WLVI (6)		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends ⓒ	Nanny ⓒ	Sabrina-Witch	Sabrina-Witch	Popular "Un-ine Trouble" ⓒ		News ⓒ		Friends ⓒ	Sudden Susan
WHDH (7)	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Providence "Big Night" ⓒ		Deteline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "We the People" ⓒ		Blind Date	Blind Date	Sabrina-Witch	Sabrina-Witch	Popular "Un-ine Trouble" ⓒ		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) ⓒ	Hollywood	Providence "Big Night" ⓒ		Deteline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC (8)	11	Simpsons ⓒ	Fresnel ⓒ	Seinfeld ⓒ	Friends ⓒ	Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)		Lone Gunmen (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		News		Friends ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ
WWLP (9)	22	News ⓒ	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⓒ	Providence "Big Night" ⓒ		Deteline (N) (In Stereo) ⓒ		Law & Order: Special Victims		News ⓒ	Tonight Show
WGBY (10)	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⓒ		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Stew We're In "Time Goes By		Vicar of Dibley "Manor Born		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⓒ
WGGB (11)	28	News ⓒ	ABC News	Spin City ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Making the Band (N) ⓒ		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		20/20 ⓒ		News ⓒ	Nightline ⓒ
WSBK (38)		Judge Judy ⓒ	Judge Judy ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Frasier ⓒ	Perkers ⓒ	Hughleys ⓒ	Gery & Mike ⓒ	Gary & Mike ⓒ	Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Med Abt. You
WTBS (72)		Roseanne ⓒ	Roseanne ⓒ	Fresh Prince	Major League Baseball	Philadelphia Phillies at Atlanta Braves. (Live)					★★ "The Pact" (1994, Comedy)	Dana Lasky:
A&E (65)		Night Court	Newsradio ⓒ	Law & Order "Passion" ⓒ		Biography: Randy Travis		Behind Closed Doors (N) ⓒ		Poirot ⓒ		Law & Order ⓒ
CNN (51)	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N) ⓒ		Crossfire ⓒ	Wolf Blitzer	The Point ⓒ	Larry King Live ⓒ		CNN Tonight	Spin Room ⓒ	Sports	Moneyline
COM (53)	26	Saturday Night Live ⓒ		Daily Show ⓒ	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Saturday Night Live
DISC (52)		Wild Discovery "Magic Wings"		Wild Discovery: Beavers		World's Largest Mall ⓒ		Body Story "Body Snatchers"		Women's Soccer		Sportscenter ⓒ
ESPN (49)		Sportscenter ⓒ		Stanley Cup Playoffs' Conference Quarterfinals Game 2 – Teams to Be Announced. (Live) ⓒ						Baseball Tonight (N) ⓒ		Division "Faces in the Crowd"
LIFE (24)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★½ "Dead Ahead" (1996, Suspense) Peter Onorati ⓒ				Fight for Your Rights
MTV (30)		Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Band	Making-Video	Teen People's 25 Hottest		True Life "I'm a Cheerleader"		Tom Green	Cribs	All in Family	All in Family
NICK (46)		Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold! ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Rugrats ⓒ	Oddparents	Inveder Zim	Rocket Power	3's Company	3's Company	Invisible Men "Legends" ⓒ
SCIFI (66)		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "Points of Departure"		Invisible Man "Legends" (N) ⓒ		Farscape "Different Destination"		Outer Limits "The Vessel" ⓒ		Real Untouchables
TLC (72)	28	Trauma: Life in the ER		Doomsday Asteroid		Real Untouchables		Real Untouchables				Real Untouchables
TNT (48)		ER "Ghosts" (In Stereo) ⓒ		Pretender "PTB" (In Stereo) ⓒ		★★★ "Cliffhanger" (1993, Adventure) Sylvester Stallone.				★★★ "Cliffhanger" (1993, Adventure) Sylvester Stallone.
USA (62)		Walker, Texas Ranger ⓒ		JAG "Goodbyes" (In Stereo) ⓒ		Nash Bridges "Warplay" ⓒ		★★★½ "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" (1989, Adventure) Harrison Ford ⓒ				formclub.com
HBO (35)		★★½ "Ghostbusters II" (1989, Comedy) Bill Murray, "PG" ⓒ				"The Pact" (1999, Drama) Greg Evigan, "R" ⓒ		Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band (In Stereo)					Dennis Miller
MAX (37)		(5:00)		★★½ "Lie With Mikey" (1993) Michael J. Fox ⓒ		★★½ "Black and White" (1999) Scott Caan, "R" ⓒ		Atomic Tab.		★½ "Black Sheep" (1996) Chris Farley, "PG-13"		Passion Cove
SHOW (55)		4:00)		★★★ "Cry Baby" (1990) Johnny Depp, "PG-13" ⓒ		★★★ "Risky Business" (1983) Tom Cruise "R" ⓒ		Extras: Spider		Stargate SG-1	Stargate SG-1 (In Stereo) ⓒ		Red Shoe Diar

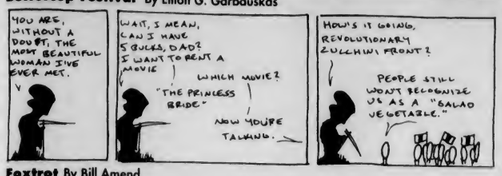
Hell Hath No Fury By Pedro Gomes

THAT WAS AN EXCELLENT TRICK, AND NOW YOU'RE PRETENDING TO BE A PIRATE.
OH NO BILL, I'M REALLY SATAN. PLEASED TO MEET YOU. BY THE WAY, CALL ME LUKE.
OH, SORRY. I DIDN'T MEAN..
DON'T WORRY BILL. JUDAS DOES IT TO ME ALL THE TIME. WHAT A JOKER!

Sometimes By Jacob Jones

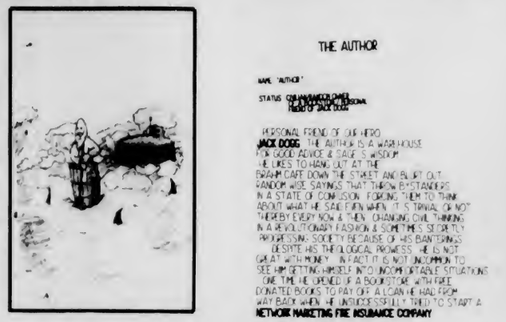
Sometimes my mom will say "Jesus! Jacob you really need to go take a shower. My god you stink!"
I usually say "huh? What are you talking about? Thousands of people go without taking showers all the time!!
then usually a dead bird falls out of my hair.

Buttercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas



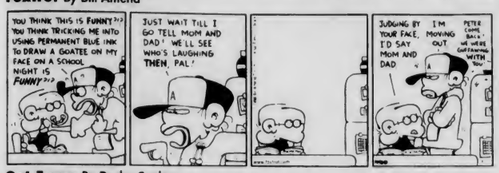
YOU ARE, WITHOUT A DOUBT, THE MOST BEAUTIFUL WOMAN I'VE EVER MET.
WAIT, I MEAN, CAN I HAVE 5 BUCKS, DAD? I WANT TO RENT A MOVIE
WHICH MOVIE? "THE PRINCESS BRIDE."
NOW YOU'RE TALKING.
HOW'S IT GOING, REVOLUTIONARY ZUCCHINI FRONT?
PEOPLE STILL WON'T RECOGNIZE US AS A "SALAD VEGETABLE."

Jack Dogg By Xavier Rhodes



THE AUTHOR
NAME: "AUTHOR"
STATUS: OBLIVIOUS
PERSONAL FRIEND OF JOE HERO
JACK DOGG - THE AUTHOR IS A WARHOUSE FOR GOOD ADVICE & DRUG & ALCOHOL ABUSE. HE LIKES TO HANG OUT AT THE BRAHM CAFE DOWN THE STREET AND BLAST OUT RANDOM WISE SAYINGS THAT THROW BYSTANDERS IN A STATE OF CONFUSION, FORCING THEM TO THINK ABOUT WHAT HE SAID EVEN WHEN IT IS TRIVIAL OR NOT THERE BY EVERY NOW & THEN, CHANGING CIVIL THINKING IN A REVOLUTIONARY FASHION & SOMETIMES SECRETLY PLOTTING AGAINST SOCIETY BECAUSE OF HIS BANTERINGS DESPITE HIS THEOLOGICAL PROWESS HE IS NOT GREAT WITH MONEY IN FACT IT IS NOT UNCOMMON TO SEE HIM GETTING HIMSELF INTO UNCOMFORTABLE SITUATIONS ONE TIME HE OPENED A BOOK STORE WITH FREE DONATED BOOKS TO PAY OFF A LOAN HE HAD FROM WAY BACK WHEN HE UNSUCCESSFULLY TRIED TO START A NETWORK MARKETING FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



YOU THINK THIS IS FUNNY?! YOU THINK TRICKING ME INTO USING PERMANENT BLUE INK TO DRAW A GOATEE ON MY FACE ON A SCHOOL NIGHT IS FUNNY?!
JUST WAIT TILL I GO TELL MOM AND DAD! WE'LL SEE WHO'S LAUGHING THEN, PAL!
JUDGING BY YOUR FACE, MOVING I'D SAY MOM AND DAD
PETER GOT GROUNDED FOR A WEEK!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

I REQUEST A TIME OUT FOR MEDICAL ATTENTION!
THE AIR'S TOO THIN ON THIS PLANET! KIRK NEEDS AN OXYGEN SUPPLEMENT
YOU MAY PROCEED, DOCTOR
JIM, THIS DOESN'T HAVE TO BE A FIGHT TO THE FINISH! THIS HYPO CONTAINS A NEURAL BLOCK - IT'LL KNOCK YOU OUT AND SIMULATE DEATH!
GOOD THINKING, BONES! GOD
#@&$

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

YOU GUYS WANT TO HEAR A JOKE?
THIS ISN'T ONE OF YOUR "KNOCK KNOCK, AREN'T YOU GLAD I DIDN'T SAY SKETCHY JOKES" IS IT?
THOSE AREN'T FUNNY
NO, NO, THIS IS A GOOD ONE. OK, AN ENGLISH BULLDOG, A GERMAN SHEPHERD, AND A FRENCH POODLE ARE WALKING DOWN THE STREET...
BUCKY, BUCKY, BUCKY
BUCKY, THIS JOKE IS LIKE... TOTALLY OFFENSIVE TO POODLES!

Quote of the Day

"Why can't we not be sober?
I just want to start this over."

–Tool, "Sober"

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 62 LOW: 35	HIGH: 61 LOW: 31	HIGH: 58 LOW: 33

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You have a message to deliver today, and it is best for you to do it directly, yourself, rather than finding a go-between.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You'll be more responsive to those closest to you today. Where in the past you may have made demands, today you'll be willing to satisfy them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll get good vibes today from someone who will have a great deal to offer you in the days and weeks to come.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A chance encounter can turn into a major new opportunity today – but you must be willing to put a little more on the line than usual.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Avoid doing anything that could be considered a bit too trendy today. Stick to those things that time has proven effective in any situations.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Don't make the mistake of giving orders today; you'll find that others will resist to the bitter end. Try being more gentle and aggressive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Once you know the facts, you're not likely to make that same mistake again. Today, you can be on your way to an exciting new conquest.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – That which seems least important as the day begins is likely to prove pivotal when all is said and done. Timing in the essence today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You can have a much better time today than you had hoped, if only because someone who recently arrived on the scene is sure to be on your side.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You mustn't make the mistake of thinking that breaking the rules will put you ahead of the game. Shortcuts can set you back a long way.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – It may be more difficult than usual today to please someone who is nevertheless on your side. Listen with an open mind to all criticism.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Share your thoughts with someone who can provide you with a little more direction and motivation today.

MONKEY-BOX BY PB&J

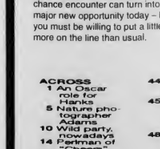
ONCE A NOBLE PROFESSION, THE NEWSCASTING BUSINESS HAS BEEN RUINED BY ANCHORMAN JIMMY CHUNGA AND HIS UNIQUE ANGLE OF TELLING THE TRUTH.

© 2001 www.monkey-box.net

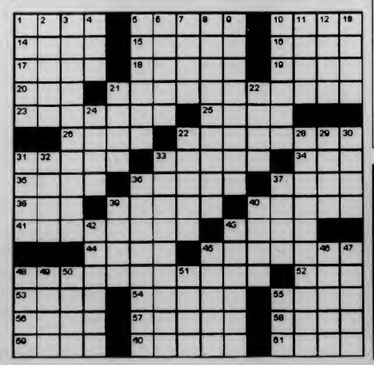
ACROSS
1 An Oscar role for Hanks
5 Nature photographer Adams
10 Wild party, nowadays
14 Partner of "Cheers"
15 Bay of Naples isle
16 Cast forth
17 The triple of a triple play
18 Baseball great Buck
19 Ice-fishing need
20 Famous Brute
21 Animal eaten at muscle beach
23 Some votes
25 Haunted-house sound
26 Camp beds
27 Deli stock
31 Bishop's headdress
33 They stop the wine from flowing
34 Zsa Zsa's sister
35 Where to find two peas?
36 Musical whales
37 Sphere
38 Once-eighty from NNE
39 Ancient Greek physician
40 Lucky!
41 Treaties
43 Done, in Dijon
44 "And pretty maids all in ___"
45 "The story you're about to see is true" program
48 Attorney for the Environmental Protection Agency?
52 Actor Gulager
53 Pro ___ (proportionate)
54 "___ Cities"
55 Opposite of a goldbricker
56 Bagnold or Blyton
57 Olin and Horne
58 Old Dodge
59 Flat-topped elevation
60 E.C. Bentley sleuth
61 Chicken ___ chow ___

DOWN
1 Stable fellow
2 "Star Trek" lieutenant
3 City without any yards?
4 Faux pas (blunder)
5 They get squirreled away
6 Some baby holders
7 Gush forth
8 "Happy Days" co-star
9 Original name of the "Peanuts" comic strip
10 Place a picture on another part of the wall
11 Out of control
12 Abhorrent
13 Summers on the Seine
21 Angler's gear
22 Ventana's land
24 Conrad's "___ Jim"
27 Portends
28 Entry on former Speaker Gingrich's tax return?
29 Actress Gardner and namesakes
30 Quite a tale
31 Nether feminine nor neut
32 ___ facto
33 Popular thirst quencher
36 Former Cover Girl supermodel
37 Request for a deejay
39 "It's My Party" singer
40 Untrustworthy one
42 Where the Vikings is
43 Most detached
45 Big name in rock history
46 Nicholas Gage book
47 Holy shroud city
48 Utah city
49 Western novelist Grey
50 Big name in elevators
51 Drop off
55 Actor DeLuise

PREVIOUS PUZZLE ANSWER



© 2001 Universal Press Syndicate www.uexpress.com



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Tavern Batter Fish

Thai Seitan (vegan) (B, H, W)

Harvest Burger (vegan) (F)

Macaroni & Cheese (vegetarian) (H)

Golden Burger (vegan) (W)

DINNER

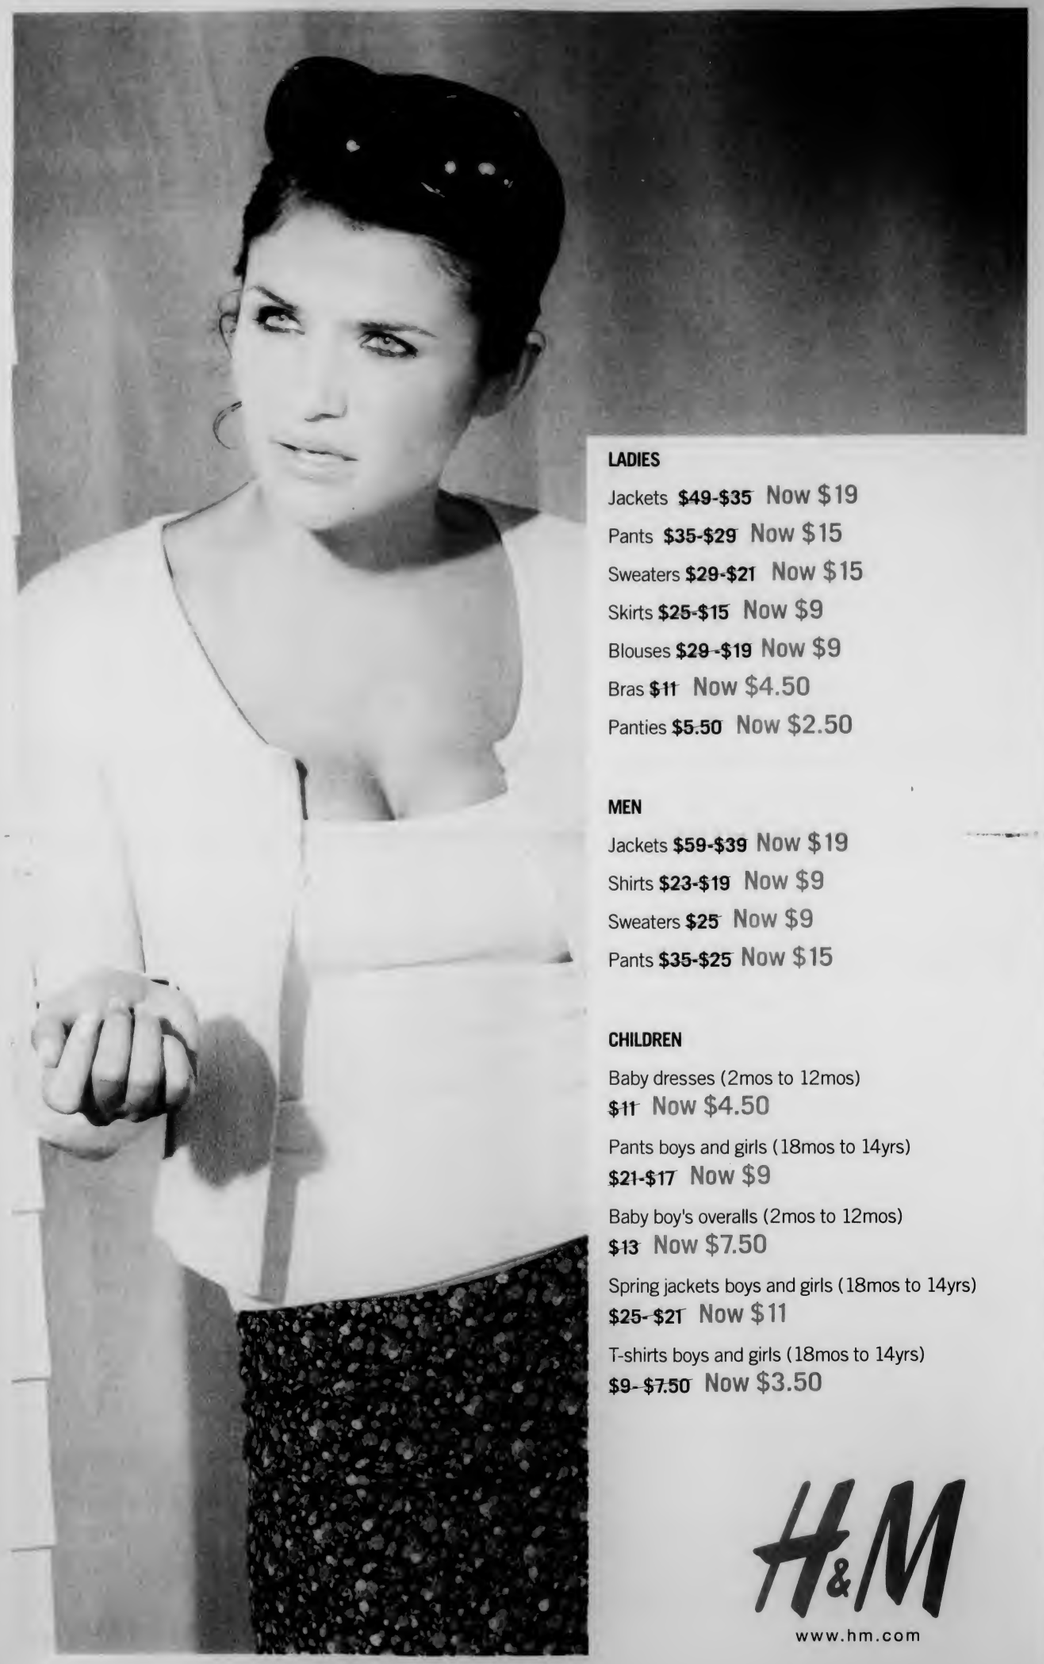
Flounder

Plain Flounder(P)

Native American Stew (vegan) (B, F, W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Rob Schulze
Photo Technician	Tiborca Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Matt Despres
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Augusto Landauro



LADIES

Jackets ~~$49-$35~~ Now $19

Pants ~~$35-$29~~ Now $15

Sweaters ~~$29-$21~~ Now $15

Skirts ~~$25-$15~~ Now $9

Blouses ~~$29-$19~~ Now $9

Bras ~~$11~~ Now $4.50

Panties ~~$5.50~~ Now $2.50

MEN

Jackets ~~$59-$39~~ Now $19

Shirts ~~$23-$19~~ Now $9

Sweaters ~~$25~~ Now $9

Pants ~~$35-$25~~ Now $15

CHILDREN

Baby dresses (2mos to 12mos)
~~$11~~ Now $4.50

Pants boys and girls (18mos to 14yrs)
~~$21-$17~~ Now $9

Baby boy's overalls (2mos to 12mos)
~~$13~~ Now $7.50

Spring jackets boys and girls (18mos to 14yrs)
~~$25-$21~~ Now $11

T-shirts boys and girls (18mos to 14yrs)
~~$9-$7.50~~ Now $3.50

H&M

www.hm.com

Stop Kiss made a stop at the Curtain Theater last week. Check out our review of the time-altering play.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Men's lacrosse tamed the Yale Bulldogs on Saturday to remain undefeated. The Minutemen are currently ranked fourth in the country.

SPORTS p. 11

Volume CVII Issue 117 www.dailycollegian.com Tuesday, April 17, 2001

COURTESY UMASS NEWS DEPT.

Kelsey Grammer, star of the popular TV comedy "Frasier," will speak at the undergraduate commencement on Sunday May 27.

Grammer to keynote graduation

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Kelsey Grammer, the star of NBC's "Frasier," will deliver the main address at the 131st undergraduate commencement at the University of Massachusetts on Sunday, May 27.

Grammer, a three-time Emmy award-winning actor currently stars in the series that holds the record for most consecutive wins for Best Comedy Series with five. It set the record from 1994 to 1998.

Graduating seniors have mixed results about anticipation of the actor's arrival.

Russell Rakouskas, a senior Theater major, said, "I think it's pretty interesting that they have an actor. It's beneficial for some theater majors to hear from an experienced actor."

Rakouskas said he hopes that Grammer focuses on speaking to the entire audience rather than just the students in his particular field.

"I hope he doesn't talk specially about making it in the business because it's a huge class," he said. "I hope he speaks generally about being optimistic about your goals in life. I'm just going to graduation to be there anyway. I really don't care what he says."

Phillip Kushner, another senior Theater major, said, "I guess it's alright. I'm not a huge fan of his. I think there are a few different people who I'd have liked to have seen, but he's okay."

Grammer is one of eight individuals set to receive honorary degrees from the University. He will be joined by Ali A. Al-Shamlan, the director general of Kuwait Foundation for the Advancement of Sciences, Judith I. Gill, chancellor of the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education, Marian I. Heard, President and Chief Executive Officer of the United Way of Massachusetts Bay, Stephen R. Levy, general partner of Levy Venture Partners, Terrence Murray, chairman and chief executive officer of FleetBoston Financial Corporation, Florence Schorske Wald, founding board member of Hospice Inc., and Harris Wofford, former head of the Corporation for National Service and previous U.S. Senator from Pennsylvania.

Grammer began his career performing Shakespeare at the Old Globe Theater in San Diego. He then moved on to Broadway, and eventually to television. His character, Frasier Crane, was created for the series "Cheers," and then used as the lead in the spin-off show for which Grammer has become famous.

Another high point of Grammer's career is his reoccurring role in "The Simpsons" as the voice of the evil Sideshow Bob.

Grammer also appeared in several films. He starred in the comedy Down Periscope, and was the voice of Stinky Pete in the award winning Toy Story 2. Most recently, he starred in the film 15 Minutes with Robert De Niro.

All three of Grammer's Emmys were for best lead actor in a comedy series for "Frasier," he was never nominated for of his other series. He also won the 2000 Golden Globe Award for outstanding actor in a comedy series, and in 1998 shared the screen actor's guild award for best ensemble cast in a comedy series with the rest of the "Frasier" acting team.

Grammer has been an outspoken political spectator in the past, and he speaking out about what he believes in. During the 1998 U.S. ordered bombing of Iraq, Grammer lashed out in his memoirs on his webpage at www.kelseylive.com.

"We are in the middle of bombing Iraq," he wrote. "I am also sick at heart for the death of any civilian in that country and for the anguish and suffering its people have to endure."

The Commencement Ceremony will be held at 10 a.m. in the Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The University expects approximately 4,000 undergraduates to obtain a bachelors degree.

Author Nelson talks about deer, computers

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Acclaimed author, anthropologist and environmentalist Richard Nelson came to the University of Massachusetts last week. Nelson spoke to three UMass classes during his visit and gave a lecture in downtown Amherst entitled "Allegiance to the American land."

Nelson, a self-proclaimed nature writer, has written many books including The Island Within, which won 1991's John Burroughs Medal for outstanding natural history writing. His latest book, Heart and Blood: Living with Deer in America delves into his intimate, personal relationship with deer.

The Collegian sat down with Nelson to talk about his career, his writing and his life among the Koyukon natives of Alaska. He touched on his love of hunting, environmental activism and the fate of the planet.

The Collegian: I think it's always interesting for college students to see what kind of experiences somebody who's famous or prominent took from university. You went to the University of Wisconsin. You were a biology major turned anthropology major. Do you want to talk about that?

Richard Nelson: When I was in high school, I didn't even want to go to college. It never occurred to me to go to college. I just did it because of parental pressure. At the beginning, I had always been fascinated with nature, so I thought I'd be a biology major. And I switched to anthropology because I was finding it much more interesting as a way into learning about nature. Until I was a senior, I didn't think I would go to graduate school.

I have to say it's the best thing I ever did – going to the University. I'm really a big believer in it. Because I went to the University, all these incredible opportunities fell into my lap.

Collegian: If you were to pick the person who was most influential for you, would it be the professor who first gave you the opportunity to go to Alaska?

RN: The key for me for getting opportunities as a University student was getting to know my professors personally, getting a personal relationship with people. Then when it came time to go out and do their research projects, they naturally just came to me to see if I was available. And, of course, I was.

This one professor, my anthropology professor during my sophomore year, said, "Do you want to go to Alaska?" And I said, "Oh man, I don't want to go some place cold like that." But I said "yeah, of course" and that really got me started. I then became his graduate student and he was also the person who gave me this chance to go live with Eskimo people. That happened when I was senior. Then, I took one year of graduate school and went off and lived for a year with Eskimos. It was also that same person who gave me the opportunity to publish my first book, which was called Hunters of the Northern Ice.

Collegian: You say you grew up loving nature. Were your parents influential in that? Was it just where you lived? Or is it just something you came into?

RN: It was just one of those weird things. I grew up in the suburbs of Madison, Wis. I didn't have anybody around me anywhere that was interested in nature. It just happened. I guess it's in the genes. Every since I was a little tiny kid, I was fascinated with nature.

Collegian: Would you consider yourself a nature writer?

RN: Definitely. That was another accident. Becoming a writer. Going to college was an accident. Going to Alaska was an accident. Becoming a writer was an accident just because I was studying anthropology. When I did research for anthropology, when you're finished with your research, you have to write something. So, I didn't take the writing really seriously.

The first book I wrote, I would write hand written on legal size pages. I would write 30 pages a day. Now, sometimes I'm lucky to write 30 lines a day. So, I wasn't careful about the writing in the beginning. I was just trying to get it down. And then as time went by, I got more interested in the writing. I started to think, "If I try to say that better, if I try to say that more evocatively, more lyrically, it will mean more to the person who reads it."

I became more interested in writing, so I started reading nature writers, starting with Leopold and John Muir and these old guys. I wanted to write in a way that not only passed information along to people, but also passed a feeling along. I thought this was beautiful and interesting and exciting to me. I wanted to write so people could get that sense of beauty and of people who are alive, rather than just a tradition or a culture.

Collegian: Since you weren't bred to become a writer, since you didn't go to school to become a writer, do you remember the response you got to your first book? What was that like?

RN: Two things. As a young writer, and I've seen this so many times now, especially with people writing their first book – you're so

Turn to INTERVIEW page 3

'How sweet is selflessness'

By Tanya Mannes
Collegian Staff

It was a classic faux pas.

The sophisticated lady had invited her country-born cousin for a dinner party at her house in the Hamptons. The tables were laid crisply: the silver polished, the linen starched, slices of lemon floating in the finger bowls.

That is, until the cousin picked up her finger bowl and drank from it. The bluebloods around the table could barely restrain gasps of horror. But before they could say anything, someone came to the cousin's rescue in an unlikely way. With great presence of mind, the hostess picked up her own finger bowl and drank from it, sparing her guest certain embarrassment.

Last Saturday at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel, Professor Omid Safi opened his lecture "Of Rumi and Related Matters: Love and Beautiful Manners in the Sufi Path to God" with an anecdote similar to the one mentioned above.

Back in the 1960s, a single woman of Safi's acquaintance was traveling through Afghanistan in search of spiritual enlightenment. Her hippie clothing, youth and bold manner made her a strange figure in the male-dominated world of Eastern mysticism. One day, her quest for wisdom led her to the door of a famous Sufi teacher. Ushered into his spartan reception room, the young woman became aware that she was the object of everyone's gaze.

Seated on the floor in rigid portions were tens of white-clad Sufi men. All of them turned their heads to look at this ragged foreigner. They seemed baffled when the teacher, from the far corner of the room, honored the woman with a seat next to him. She was handed a cup of tea.

Unnerved by the tense atmosphere, the young woman's hands shook uncontrollably, and as a result, she spilled her tea all over the lush Persian carpet. The men started. But the Sufi master, not rattled, tossed the contents of his cup onto the rug as well.

With this story, Safi introduced the Persian word adab, meaning something like "beautiful behavior," as one of the tenets of the Sufi tradition. He discussed why Sufism, a mystical orientation inside Sunni Islam, places such importance on "sensitivity to the well-being of another soul."

Sufism aims toward a closer connection to God and higher knowledge achieved through individual reflection and communal ceremonies, in which trance is widely used. The tradition of Sufism developed gradually in the first centuries of Islam, and records first refer to it around 800 A.D. The core of Sufism is to leave the ordinary life in order to lessen the distance between man and God, thereby moving closer to truth and knowledge. The love of God is supposed to shape a Sufi's behavior toward his fellow humans, which should reflect adab.

Unlike the codified rules of etiquette that, for example, teach one to use a finger bowl, Safi said, "You don't consult the adab book on how to do things." The idea of adab is "intimately connected with one's nature," and more allied with the behavior of the host who protects a guest from an embarrassing situation, than with the rules of polite society.

The importance of the gesture made by that Sufi teacher lay in his perception that the woman came with an open heart to learn, according to Safi. Therefore, it was essential that she be able to "stay open" to receive the teacher's instruction. Had she been rebuked for her accident, she might, out of shame, have lost the inclination to pursue Sufism. Thus, the teacher's action helped protect the woman's spiritual self, and at the same time showed his mastery of the spirit of adab.

Safi told several stories about the thirteenth century mystic poet Rumi to illustrate the principle of adab. A few lines from Rumi's poem "How Sweet is Selflessness," translated from the original Persian, make the case for having beautiful manners: "No matter where you are/ No matter what the circumstance of your life/ be it like sugar/ be it like poison/ How sweet is selflessness."

Safi listed three kinds of adab, and their relationship to the creation story told in the Koran. He paraphrased the legend like this: God tells the angels that he is going to create humans. The angels cannot understand why he will give life to creatures that will shed blood and cause trouble on the Earth, and they tell God these objections. All the same, God gives life to the human race, and he teaches them the names of all the things on Earth. Then he places them before an audience of all the angels, in order to recite the names. The angels bow, except for Satan, who maintains that he is better than these lowly men.

Safi ironically called the first kind of adab "the beautiful manners of Satan." Safi pointed out that Satan's vanity was the defining moment for him in the creation story. A human who sees another human and says, "I'm better," displays this kind of adab, according to the professor.

The epithet for the second kind of adab can be misleading. "the beautiful manners of angels." This alludes to the doubt the angels expressed about the ability of humans to bring glory to God. A person with this kind of manners is a pessimist about human nature, expressing anxiety over the worst thing someone can do. To illustrate, Safi mentioned a time he was walking down the street with his sister. Coming toward them was a college-age man, and the first thought in Safi's mind ("as an overprotective older brother") was that the man might attempt to touch his sister.

He switched places with her so that he was nearer to the stranger. As he did so, he caught the eye of his Sufi teacher, who happened to be going in the same direction. "You have the manners of angels," the teacher said with a knowing smile. This was not a compliment.

What a Sufi should strive to have, said Safi, is something called "divine manners" – that is, a willingness to "actively work to bring out what's beautiful" in another being. For the Sufi who is enraptured with the love of God, all of existence is extraordinarily beautiful. On his website "Sufism, Sufis, Sufi Orders," University of Georgia Professor Alan Godlas writes: "While some Sufis such as Rumi become utterly consumed by love's fire, for most who wish to love God, their love is merely a wavering flame, ever in danger of diminishing."

Omid Safi is Assistant Professor of Islamic Studies in the Department of Philosophy and Religion at Colgate University. Professor Safi's foremost line of research, according to his website, is Islamic Mysticism (Persian and Arabic Sufism) particularly in the pre-modern period from the eleventh to thirteenth centuries.

The presentation was sponsored by Noor, an Amherst College organization, as part of a series on Islamic spirituality.

CATHERINE TURNER/COLLEGIAN

Manic Monday
Matt Bielecki a.k.a. DJ Fatty (middle), host of WMUA's "Other People's Noise" (Mondays 6:30-9) chats with co-host DJ Suds (left) and guest Natalie Pothier.

International Briefs

Compiled by Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Americas

Colombia- Another incident in the 37-year-old civil war has caused the death of at least 25 people in the Northwest region of the country. Left-wing rebels and right-wing paramilitaries have clashed and raided the village of Cuacana, using guns and explosives to blow up buildings, including gas stations. According to the BBC, the war is turning toward its bloodiest phase yet, with both sides attacking civilians.

Human rights activists have entered into the Antioquia Province where the latest deaths have taken place, but are also active in the south-western portion of the country investigating a massacre that occurred there in February where 40 people were killed.

The slayings of civilians are part of the on-going dispute between the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), the government and the paramilitaries, including the United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia (AUC). All three groups want control over land and politics, and both the FARC and the AUC are suspected of being funded by the cocaine trade.

Peru- The votes have been counted and the next president of Peru will be Alejandro Toledo. Mr. Toledo beat former president Alan Garcia and Congresswoman Lourdes Flores in the race to oust current president Alberto Fujimori.

Toledo gained international attention from his drive to throw Mr. Fujimori out of office. Garcia tried to steer his campaign away from his former administration but Peruvian election analysts believe that the voters did remember his corruption while in office and his exile in Paris. Ms. Lourdes, a moderate conservative, may have had a scandal-free professional life, but her close ties to her family and certain racist remarks they made hurt her in the polls.

Toledo, on the other hand, was praised for his connection to the Indigenous peoples of Peru, calling himself part Indian and promising to work for Indian rights in the country.

Asia-Pacific

Philippines- Former president Joseph Estrada gave himself up after an arrest warrant went out for him last week. Now he has been released on bail. He paid $600 out of his own pocket to be released from a prison in Manila.

The former president is charged with perjury, corruption and graft after allegedly skimming over $2.5 million off of tobacco taxes and then lying about his personal wealth. Upon an attempt to try and prove that he is still president and therefore immune to prosecution, the Supreme Court rejected his claim.

Estrada was kicked out of office in January after protests and the beginning of an impeachment trial. He is also charged with economic plunder as well as a smaller charge for a dishonest land deal. Mr. Estrada was president for just over two years.

Vietnam- As many as 61 students and teachers suffered from attacks of vomiting, convulsions and stomach pains after a chemical attack on their school in Dak Lak.

Since 1998, more than 600 people have been affected by chemical attacks on schools. Earlier last week officials reported arresting seven teenagers who admitted to spraying schools with chemicals and powders. However, now officials believe that the real culprits are still at large. In all cases the schools had to be shut down for several days for clean up.

Inter-faith relations discussed

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Staff

Eugene Pogany is not a theologian or a historian. His recently published work, In My Brother's Image, nominated for a National Jewish Book Award, is what Pogany describes as a "personal and family memoir," an account of his father and uncle's experiences during the Holocaust. Pogany discussed his book in a lecture entitled "A Lot to Think About: Jewish/Christian Relations, Family Relationships, the Holocaust," on Friday, April 13 in the Hillel House at UMass.

Pogany's father and brother, identical twins, were born in Hungary to Jewish parents who became devout Catholics. During his experiences in the concentration camps, Pogany's father renounced Christianity and returned to the Jewish faith, while his brother, who had become a priest, spent the war in a monastery in Italy, protected by friends who kept his secret.

The experience of the war and the Holocaust kept the brothers apart geographically and spiritually, believing that the other had betrayed God and family, notably their mother, who walked into the gas chambers at Auschwitz clutching a crucifix. In the camps, Pogany's father suffered what he called "a death blow to his life as a Christian." frustrated by the apparent total silence of the Christian community in response to the Holocaust, and in his eyes his brother had dismissed Jewish suffering. Pogany noted that when his father and uncle did see one another, they were able to get along very well, as long as both sidestepped the issue of the war.

Pogany spoke of the "curious and confusing tensions" of growing up in a household of Holocaust survivors. His father seldom spoke of the Holocaust. This relentless silence crept into Pogany's relationship with his father, and led to he himself developing a sense of shame and estrangement due to lack of communication. When his father did begin to talk about his experiences, it led to what Pogany called "a collective healing," in which his father was finally able to "fill in the gaps of life in Europe." One particularly notable memory was that of a Passover seder he attended while in Bergen Belsen, in which he "rediscovered who he was," profoundly moved by the dedication of the people who donated their bread and coffee rations to the seder, in spite of the fact that they were starving. Although his father lacked a traditional Jewish education, he assumed the duty of saying Kaddish (the Jewish prayer in honor of the dead) for his mother in synagogue.

Pogany admits that there is in fact no true closure in "what remains finished between Catholics and Jews" in regard to the Holocaust. When Pogany sent a draft of his manuscript to author Cynthia Ozick, her response was,

"Your prose conjures many thoughts and feelings, but reconciliation is not one of them." However, when Pope John Paul II offered prayers at the Western Wall and Yad Vashem (Israel's Holocaust memorial) in March 2000, the relationship, to a certain degree, was softened.

Pogany has performed readings of his book for a variety of groups, both Christian and Jewish. Pogany said that he believed that members of the Christian community could be "sensitized the history without feeling accused." It is his hope that with the help of his book, both Christians and Jews will "through unassimilable historical anguish turn towards one another and begin healing the gap between the two communities."

The Third World future of feminsim

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Staff

On Monday, April 16, Kum Kum Bhavanani, Visiting Professor of Women's Studies at Smith College, and Senior Editor of the Meridians, an interdisciplinary journal of scholarship on feminism, race and transnationalism, presented her lecture entitled "The Future of Feminist Scholarship: A Glimpse of the Third World," a work in progress, sponsored by the Project on Women and Social Change, an interdisciplinary faculty research group located at Smith.

Bhavanani urged her audience to "rethink the ideas we consider to be central to feminist scholarship." She described feminist academic thought as being at a "crossroads," at a time when those at the forefront of the discipline should begin to reconsider what the issues should be.

What Bhavanani characterized as "First World Feminism," that which comes from industrialized nations such as the United States, has historically been seen as "truly understanding women's oppression, and having a white focus," therefore paying less attention to women in underdeveloped countries or the Third World. She pointed out that women are entering the ranks of the poor throughout the world, doing two-thirds of the world's work, earning ten percent of the money, and owning one percent of the property. Bhavanani called for a feminist scholarship that would consider culture as a viable basis for academic research, taking into account "lived experiences," recognizing the essential roles women play in both public and private domains.

For her own research, Bhavanani is planning to undertake a project examining four organizations initiated by and for women which she considers to be at the "foreground of promoting women's agency." The first of these organizations is SEWA, Self Employed Women's Association, a two-hundred and twenty thousand member organizations begun by a group of 24 women seeking to unionize in order to be allowed to sell their goods in the local marketplace, and now includes banks, maternal insurance and literacy programs directed at expanding the self sufficiency of women's businesses.

Bhavanani also plans to include the Women's Group of Zapuck, a Brazilian group of women rubber tapers, many of which were involved in protesting the destruction of Brazilian rainforests by bulldozers, marching at the front of the mob accompanied by their children. Another group to be studied is Women in Black, a group which has been active in Israel, London, Italy and Yugoslavia, and is most widely known for the silent weekly peace vigils conducted for five years in protest of the Israeli/Palestinian conflict. Finally, Bhavanani will focus on Dastan, a group of women in Senegal which formed in January 1996 and by 1999 had been successful in making feminist mutilation illegal in the country. In her formal research, Bhavanani plans to concentrate on the social influences at work in these communities, the source of effective leadership, the conflicts faced by these women as they organize, as well as to examine each group as an "example of successful feminism in areas not associated with feminism at the forefront." The ultimate result will perhaps be an answer to the question of what feminism is, and how the First and Third Worlds may learn from one another.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independents from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilnitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

University Productions and Concerts
and
Black Russian Entertainment
present

Funkenfashion
04.19.01
with MTV's
DJ Skribble
+
DJ Big Phil
with fashion by:
d'arby (women's line)
the growroom (men's line)
Student Union Ballroom @ 8:00 pm
Full Cash Bar $5 [umass] $10 [public]
Tickets on sale @ tix unlimited and @ door
For further info call 413-545-2892

new balance
Haigis Hoopla
Don't Miss Your Shot!
the action happens
April 28th & 29th
Mail your team entry by April 16th or drop it off by
April 20th.
Stop by Curry Hicks, Room #5
to pick up a registration brochure.
Call 545-5689 for more information. Or visit us at http://haigishoopla.zminutemen.com
presented by UMASS Sport Management Program

■ interview

continued from page 1

sensitive about review. I remember the first book, Hunters of the Northern Ice, there was a nice review written by an anthropologist and he said one critical thing and that's all I could think about.

I remember when I got the first copy in the mail, and I opened the package and saw it, I thought this was going to be most thrilling moment of my life. It really just didn't do anything for me. I thought, "Oh yeah, I wrote that book." And I discovered that the thrill of writing for me was not so much in having the result, but was in the process itself.

That book got reviewed in The New York Times Book Review and it didn't mean a thing to me. I didn't know what The New York Times Book Review was. Then after that, it took a long time to get another book reviewed. When the last book, Heart and Blood, the book about deer, got reviewed in there, then I knew what it meant. It was a big thrill. With time and experience, you just take the reviews. You know everyone's not going to like what you do and it just doesn't bother you anymore.

Collegian: You said that the process of writing was the most satisfying part for you. Do you think that, for nature writers, journal writing is integral to that process?

RN: For me, if you go out and have an experience, and it's a great one, that's fine. But, if you then go home and write about it, it expands the experience. It lets you re-live it. Oftentimes, your mind carries that experience into places you never would have imagined. It makes it bigger and it enriches it. That's part of the pleasure of keeping a journal. Another part is then you have a record, and you can look back and re-live those experiences anytime in the future. And the third thing, that's really important, is that it's practice. People treat writing as an instinct, and it's not. If you want to be a good writer, you have to practice just like if you were an athlete.

Collegian: Do you own a computer?

RN: I do. The Island Within was written by hand, with a pencil. But now I write with a computer. And the reason I love to write with a computer is because it's such a great eraser. For me, the most important tool for writing is the eraser, because so much of it has to be redone and thrown out.

Collegian: Do you see any conflict between technology and the things you write about like nature?

RN: It's very weird. I live way out on the wild edge in a tiny little town in Alaska. And much of my time is spent outside of that little town. I travel out on my boat to very very wild places and it seems weird to come back and write about it with a computer. I still have a love/hate relationship with a computer and I'm always playing in my mind with the idea of getting rid of it and just writing with a pencil. I don't know if I'll ever settle that argument. I might still, someday, throw that computer away.

I'm very excited, though, about the emergence of the electronic book because of the possibility of bringing down our use of paper for books and newspapers. My nature writer friends say, "You've got to be kidding me, there's nothing like the feel of a book." And I say, "Well, there's nothing like the feel of a forest." If electronic media allow us to live more gently in our environment, then I'm 100 percent for it.

Collegian: Do you have email? Do you surf the Net?

RN: I have a love/hate relationship with email too. I keep thinking I'll disconnect. There's a lot of contradictions about being a nature writer. I'm a very social person, and I love people. My computer and my email allow me to keep in touch with people and I really love that.

Here's the biggest contradiction: I'm a fanatical outdoors person; I'm way at the extreme of fanatical outdoors people. So, I go and I spend this time outdoors, and then, what do I do? I go sit inside at a desk, looking at a computer, writing. That's a big struggle for me. I have really changed my whole relationship to writing because I felt it was taking me away from the outdoors. I do less writing. I'm writing shorter things, because it takes me away from what I love most. I could live without writing, but I could never live without the outdoors.

Collegian: At one point in The Island Within, you look at your son Ethan and you're kind of jealous because you think your childhood has passed. Do you feel like a kid now?

RN: Totally. The thing about Ethan was I envied him being able to grow up there. And I love that place so much that I wish I could have spent my whole life there. Maybe then I wouldn't appreciate it as much.

I feel like I'm a permanent child. Writing has a lot to do with that. Writers, I think, are people who never get tired of learning. They're always out there trying to find a new experience, a new learning and to write about that. Anthropologists are like that. Being an anthropologist, I got to go into other cultures where I was childlike. I knew so little that people had to start teaching me what they would teach a child. The last part of being a child is to stay in a permanent condition of excitement about the discovery of the world and that's what nature writing is about. I cling to that – moving through the world in a childlike way. I have no desire to grow up.

Collegian: Ethan's now a BMW mechanic. Is that unnerving in any way?

RN: It's a funny thing. You take a kid who grew up in a tiny town in Alaska and was dragged off into the wilderness a lot: he turns around and lives in a pretty big city and he's a BMW mechanic. You take somebody like me who grew up in the suburbs and I end up being this wilderness fanatic. I think we tend to move toward opposites for some reason. I think Ethan, as he grows older now, realizes what an unusual and special childhood he had. He's always been a guy who loves technology. Since he was a little kid, he's always loved cars and technology. So, I'm really excited for him. I'm really happy for him.

Collegian: You're a hunter and you love to hunt. You're also an animal lover. How do you reconcile those two?

RN: I think people who don't hunt have a really hard time comprehending that you can be an animal lover and a hunter. I don't think it's unusual that hunters are that way. In fact, I'm constantly meeting people who hunt deer and who love deer. That's an incredibly hard thing to explain.

For me, the ultimate expression for my love of deer is that kind of consummation of being made out of deer. I spend much of the year following around deer, looking at deer, admiring them, loving them, learning about them. Then, a part of the year, I hunt them. I work with deer. I take them apart. I make meat out of them. I eat them. I become made from them.

What I want ultimately is for my body to be buried on the island where I hunt. To go back and become plants that are eaten by deer, so that closes the circle. Eventually, deer are made out of me. It is the most intimate relationship I can imagine having with an animal. It's an extension of my intense, obsessive love for deer. That's the only way I can explain it.

Collegian: In The Island Within, you never mention where the island is or its exact location. Do you ever feel like you found paradise?

RN: It's my paradise absolutely. It's my ultimate paradise in the world – this one island off the coast of Alaska. Most people couldn't live there. It rains 300 days of the year there. It's a tough, tough place. A lot of people find it depressing. The reason I love it is because it's wild. I'll go any place if it's wild.

I want to say something about why I fictionalized the name of it and I don't reveal where it is. I have a real problem with outdoor magazines that say, "Ten undiscovered Trails." Well yeah, until, you just revealed it to 50,000 people in the October issue. I think people ought to have the privilege of discovering a place for themselves. By not talking about where that island is, number one, I hope it helps not to bring crowds there. Number two, I discovered that place by accident, and had the privilege of exploring it without ever reading a word about it. I would like to preserve that. I would like for the next person who comes there to have that same privilege.

Collegian: Do you believe in God?

RN: Great question. I have no idea what God is. For me, God is the universe and the universe is God. I'm very, very influenced by the traditions of the Koyukon Indians, who I lived with, who see that sacredness, that God in everything. I think in growing up a Christian kid, going to Sunday school, everybody said, "God made everything and God is a part of everything." So, I don't see a contradiction there. I think that's the same belief. The way I believe about the earth and the universe and plants and animals being sacred is the way I was taught. I'm taking literally what the reverend said on Sunday morning.

Collegian: Do you find something spiritual about nature? Is spiritual different from God?

RN: I don't separate the spiritual, the sacred and God. For me, they're all the same thing. I can walk out here on the UMass campus and stand under a tree. Touching a tree, for me, is touching the sacred and the spiritual in the world as much as being out in the wildest, remotest place doing the same thing.

I think we as a culture have become blind and we really need a way to open our eyes to the beauty of the wild world that's all around us. And that is what we are. How can you look at the sky and not realize that you're in the midst of the embrace of a huge universe and that you're tiny and insignificant? I think we all need that experience of feeling small in order to understand what we really are.

Collegian: Do you think the planet is dying?

RN: I'm terribly afraid of the magnitude of the dying on the Earth today. So one species can thrive, so many other are disappearing. It causes an enormous sadness in me, but I never let that sadness take me over. I never let these stories about pollution, about loss of biodiversity and ecological tragedy, dominate my life. I live in hope. For me, being a conservation activist and seeing that there are mountains around my home with forests on them because of what conservation activists have done, that's my source of hope.

Collegian: Do you ever get the impulse to stand up and shout at people and say "look around you."

RN: That's what my writing is all about. Maybe, that's what keeps me from standing up and shouting. As a writer, I get to shout in my voice and hope it will resonate for some people. The thing that's a really big thrill for me is when somebody says you expressed in that book what I really believe. Then you want to say, "Oh, God, thanks for that. I'm not crazy after all."

Collegian: Talk about your latest book.

RN: I spent three years traveling all over the United States from the West Coast to the East Coast, from Texas to Wisconsin, from New York state to California, learning about deer in America today. The main thing about deer is that they are so abundant. They were once almost extinct in America and, today, they're so abundant, they're driving people crazy. I found this really interesting how this wild animal made its way, not just into the suburbs, but, in some areas, right into the urban heart of major cities. I went around learning everything about deer – about their biology, about how they're impacting wildlife preserves, the controversies about hunting. Being a writer, you get to pick the subject you're most interested in and go and dive into it. So, I did that and spent four years writing the book about it. It was my chance to carry out my obsession to a logical extreme I guess.

Collegian: So what's the verdict on the deer?

RN: I think deer were put here almost to force us to start learning about our relationship to the natural world. Here's this animal that we love. It's so beautiful. It's like the icon for all the beauty and vulnerability of the wild nature, yet it's starting to drive people crazy. The reason it is is because we've declared ourselves outside the natural world. Now, so many people think "I love deer, they're so beautiful, it would be horrible to kill one." What we're finding now that we don't kill deer very often, we're having a biological explosion on our hands. And it's forcing us to realize, you can't call yourself outside the natural system. The deer are telling us you're not outside it.

***

Nelson was brought to the University through a collaborative effort between the UMass English Department and the Hitchcock Center. English professor Judith Davidov, and the Center's Executive Director, Tom Ahern, first got the idea to bring an author to the area in conjunction with the Introduction to American Studies course which Davidov teaches weekly at the Hitchcock Center. Nelson's trip was funded in part by the University and in part by an outside grant.

The Hitchcock Center is located on South Pleasant St. in Amherst. Its mission, according to its website, is to "foster a greater awareness and understanding of our natural world and to develop environmentally literate citizens." The center offers natural history programs to people of all ages, as well as several nature trails through the surrounding forests.

For more information on the Hitchcock Center, please visit its web page at http://www.hitchcock-center.org.

Remembering

Holocaust Memorial Week at UMass will commence on Tuesday, April 17 at 7:00 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge with a lecture by Judaic and Near Eastern Studies Professor Aviva Ben-Ur entitled, "Through Sephardic Eyes: The "Other" Jewish Holocaust." Ben-Ur, an American Jewish Historian who recently joined the UMass faculty, specializes in Ladino and Sephardic Studies.

In her talk, Ben-Ur will examine the experiences of Sephardic Jews (Jews from Spain, Portugal, North Africa and the Middle East) in the Holocaust, such as the Nazi perception of Sephardim as racially superior to Ashkenazi Jews, their Eastern European counterparts, Holocaust poetry written in Ladino, a Judeo-Spanish language, as well as the reaction of the American Sephardic community to the Holocaust, and the utilization of Spanish citizenship to escape Europe.

The lecture will feature slides, as well as a brief musical clip, and a showing of the film "Triumph of the Spirit." Other events for Holocaust Memorial Week include a lecture by UMass Near Eastern and Judaic Studies Professor James E. Young, entitled "After-Images of the Holocaust in Contemporary Art and Architecture," on Wednesday, April 18 at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall, and a Holocaust Memorial Service on Thursday, April 19 at 7:00 p.m. on the Campus Pond Lawn.

–Chanel Dubofsky

University of Massachusetts Boston
Travel to Learn this Summer!
These programs provide a dynamic learning experience—a lively blend of classroom and field activities resulting in a true appreciation of the host country.
Field School in Prehistoric Archaeology in Belize
Haiti Today: Culture and Politics
Ireland Today: Politics and Society
Spanish Language and Culture in Mexico
Vietnam Today: Culture, History and Politics
For more information, contact
University of Massachusetts Boston
Division of Corporate, Continuing, and Distance Education
100 Morrissey Blvd.
Boston, MA 02125-3393
call us 617.287.7913
visit us www.conted.umb.edu
UMASS BOSTON

Great Northampton Living!
• Beautifully updated 1, 2, 3 and 4 Bedrooms townhouses with individual entrances
• Rear patio area
• New kitchens with frost-free refrigerators, gas ranges and dishwashers
• Ceramic tile and wall to wall carpeting
• Custom vertical window blinds throughout
• Washer/Dryer hookups & on-site laundry facilities
• Professional on-site management
• Convenient to historic downtown Northampton and all major routes
• One-year leases start $660
Hampton Gardens
586-1405
For appointment Call 10am to 6pm, Tues.-Sat.
homogns@aol.com

How many years does it take a cigarette butt to decompose?

Do YOUR part this Earth Day
For more information on what you can do or for help quitting call:
Tobacco Free Network of Hampshire County
413-586-3786
Smoker's Quit Line
1-800-try-to-stop or 1-800-879-8678
or Visit our website at www.trytostop.org

Experience Boston University's excellence this summer with our more than 550 classes ranging from the traditional to the innovative. Join us to explore a new interest, earn course credit, or accelerate your studies.
SESSION 1: May 22 – June 30
SESSION 2: July 3 – August 11
12-WEEK SESSION: May 22 – August 11
Summer at Boston University
617/353-6000
summer@bu.edu
www.bu.edu/summer
BOSTON UNIVERSITY SUMMER TERM
BOSTON UNIVERSITY is BOSTON'S UNIVERSITY

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Cincinnati Violence
Should open race forum

All it took was a spark to ignite the proverbial fire. The shooting death of Cincinnati's Timothy Thomas, a 19-year-old black man who was unarmed at the time of his death, was the fifteenth such shooting by Cincinnati police since 1995.

Such violence is sure to touch off the kind of rioting that Cincinnati saw in the past week. Curfews, rubber bullets and pained rhetoric are sure to follow. But where do the residents of that recovering midwestern city go from here?

Investigations by both the state and the Federal government have commenced; that's a start. The curfew imposed by Mayor Charles Luken seemed to calm things. Injuries are healing, albeit slowly.

But what this city needs, like all cities, is time.

Time to let the wounds of this unbelievable tragedy heal, because they won't heal over night and they won't heal with the words of politicians and pundits, all of whom attempt to explain how something like Thomas' death could have happened. No amount of soothing words or timely explanations will ever justify or sooth a family that lost one of their own, especially when he posed, apparently, no threat.

Time to let individuals wounds heal, especially those Kentuckian Christine Jones, who was injured by riot control bullets fired by Cincinnati police in an attempt to control a protest. She was there to protest peacefully – she certainly wasn't looting and burning – but she, like others around her, got caught up in the crossfire.

Time to let new policies take effect, including policies that may switch involved police officers to different precincts, as well as time to analyze what it was that happened over the past week. What led to the death of the apparently innocent Thomas? Why did police officers fire on protestors who were seemingly themselves innocent? Why did a city riot so suddenly and what can be done to prevent such a further outbreak of racial violence?

Time to let this Ohio city of 300,000 learn from these riots, to rebuild, to recover. Perhaps the most important thing for this city to attempt to do is reestablish its own ways and means. Nothing makes a problem easier to address than some form of normalcy to build from.

What happened in Cincinnati isn't an isolated event; whether right-wing politicians and media pundits want to admit it, there are still very serious racial tensions in the United States (see David Horowitz's visit to campus two weeks ago). An outbreak of violence in a small Midwestern city may pull back the cover on some of those tensions, but to assume that the event was isolated is quite dangerous. Instead, the Cincinnati race riot should be a good jump-off point for a very serious dialog on racial issues in America.

That sort of dialog should be led by the kind of people that Cincinnati has introduced us to: police officers who have been crucified by the media, community leaders afraid of those same officers and those who don't take an active role – community members just trying to live their lives.

Sparks can ignite fires of hatred – they certainly did last night – but such a spark can also be the impetus for serious learning. Fires needn't only burn bright when there is pain; they can be just as productive when put to other uses.

Blood: does a body good

Today, I'm giving blood. It will be my sixth time donating. That's right – my sixth. I've been donating blood since my junior year in high school, and it is something that I take a great deal of pride and satisfaction in.

Let me elaborate. Giving blood is something that I've always wanted to do and always planned to do. My father did it. My grandfather did it. They've got the pins that show how many GALLONS that they've donated. So maybe it's partly out of tradition that I do it. It's more than that though.

When I was in seventh grade, my grandfather had open-heart surgery. When I visited him in the hospital one of the things that impressed me the most was the way that the blood of another person was used as needed to keep my grandfather healthy. No questions asked, other than "What's your blood type?" It seemed so easy, so matter-of-fact. A thought struck my thirteen year-old mind, though: what if there was no more blood? All of a sudden I realized how important and beautiful the gift of blood really is. Donating blood is something I've held in high regard since.

Years rolled by, and I found myself in the hospital again. I was a junior in high school. My grandfather was in again, and this time it was cancer-related. As the doctors pushed unit after unit of blood and platelets into Pepere, the thought again dawned on me: these donations were keeping dear old Pepere alive.

Pepere didn't make it; he passed away a year ago in October. The cancer had weakened his body too much. The times between that first transfusion and the second one, though, are ones that mean a lot to me. In those last four or five years, he was there every time someone needed him. He sponsored me when I made my Confirmation. I'll always remember the trip that I made with my dad and Pepere to the Southwick Country Club, where I golfed 18 holes for the first time and got upset at the chipmunks chattering in the trees while I addressed the ball. Basically, I did all of the normal things that one would expect a kid to do with their grandfather. It doesn't matter how many gallons of blood I give, those last five years that Pepere was around mean more than any amount I could ever donate.

Sappy, huh? Deal with it. Not all of my columns can be filled with wise-ass retorts and sarcasm, and this is a serious issue to me. Blood transfusions mean too much to too many people for me to just whip out the cracks like normal. Without them, even things that seem relatively minor now like a basic surgery would become hazardous to your health. Loved ones would not be around for us as long as they are now, and we would be without many of the most important people in our lives a lot earlier.

"A thought struck my thirteen year-old mind, though: what if there was no more blood? All of a sudden I realized how important and beautiful the gift of blood really is."

So whom would you be without? Who would not have been there for you at your high school graduation, or your move-in day freshman year at college? Did your mother need a transfusion at birth, like mine did? Did your uncle need blood after a car accident? Heck, I obviously wouldn't even be here without blood donations, since my own mother didn't make it out of her infancy without one.

Blood banks are there for everyone; they don't discriminate. That security is provided by all of us who do donate, and as long as the donations continue to come in, that security will be there. When I donated blood in the fall at a campus center drive, it came up in conversation with the nurses that all that the American Red Cross sets as a goal at any blood drive here at UMass is 50 pints of blood. On a campus of over 25,000 young, vibrant, healthy students, all they can get is forty-something pints of blood at a given drive. That is completely pathetic if you ask me. Rough calculations would show that 0.2 percent of the campus is donating blood at each one of these drives. Can't we bump it up to one measly percent, anyway? Come on, guys, come on!

We're the ones that the blood bank needs. We're young, healthy and active, and 95 percent of us will never even miss the pint of blood that we donate. Honestly, I don't understand the reasoning that a lot of students have. People at this school are for all sorts of causes. They're willing to save the whales, free Tibet, and stop Alaskan drilling (sorry MassPIRG). Yet they can't find an hour a couple of times a year to give blood. I don't get it. It's such an easy thing to do, and means so much to so many, right here in our own day-to-day lives.

I've heard a lot of students say that they don't want to donate because they are afraid of or have a dislike for needles. I can't understand that one either. I would figure that our multiply pierced, multiply tattooed campus would be anything but afraid of needles. Granted, I realize that there is a short period of time after each tattoo is received where the Red Cross will not let you donate blood as an extra sanitary precaution. But it is something like six weeks, and after that everything is fine. That leaves plenty of time each year to donate.

For what it's worth, I'll be donating today sometime after 5:30 p.m. in the Webster classroom. The drive runs from 2 p.m. to 8 p.m. Maybe I'll see some of you there. If you haven't tried it before, give it a shot. All you have to be is 110 pounds and in basic good health. Trust me, you'll feel good about yourself afterwards.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian Columnist.

THE SOAP IS BURNING MY EYES!
MEN'S TOILETS WHICH WAY IS ON?
HERE WE SEE UMASS' CONTINUING EFFORT TO IMPROVE THE RELATIVE APPEARANCE OF THE REST OF CAMPUS.
CAMPUS TOURS 2001
CANADA

Ed/Op is always accepting column submissions from students. Columns, questions or comments can be emailed to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com, and the Batphone is always waiting at 577-3835. Ask for Rob or Matt.

Of Easter, taxes and threatening educators:
What Americans are afraid of this week

Okay, let me first apologize for being absent in last Monday's edition of the Daily Collegian. Ever since I dropped down to being a bi-weekly columnist instead of a weekly columnist, I've had a hell of a time remembering which week is which. That being the case, I thought last week was this week and this week was last week and, well, I'm off a bit.

Conveniently, because my column is running this week instead of last, it happens to coincide nicely with the tax that everybody has to have their tax forms filled out.

Also conveniently, the day that everybody has to [illegible] their tax forms filled out coincides nicely with [illegible]

All of these all-too-perfect conveniences mesh [illegible] just a little too well... it can only mean one thing and when you think of it, let me know.

Anyway, on the subject of taxes and Easter, I was chatting online last night with my friend Brett Mauser, whom I'm sure some of you remember from his days writing here at the Collegian, and I came to the realization that people are way too sensitive nowadays.

If you don't understand how that ties in with taxes and Easter, turn to page 46 of your tax form, and look under line F, clause 17.3, area 51. It's all there in fine print.

Anyway, for those of you for whom that transition was painfully clear, I'll move on. Apparently, in a news story reported originally by the Los Angeles Times at the end of March, a teacher at Paloma Valley High School in Menifee, Calif., told her students that she'd get a gun and shoot them if they continued to talk in class.

Unlike what would then occur if this same incident happened when I was a kid, the students then stopped talking.

Now, I don't want to sound like some war-hardened gray beard, calling everybody "whippersnapper" and claiming that they're all "knee high to a grasshopper" or whatever, but people are way too damn sensitive these days.

Apparently, after the teacher, whose name is Barbara Brown, if anyone's interested in sending her sensitively concerned mail, made this horribly frightening comment that everybody idiotically believed, she came back with a portable CD player so that the students could listen to music while they finished an exam.

That bitch.

Because of the life-altering incident, superintendent Robert Erikson suspended Brown pending further investigations, telling the L.A. Times: "Our number one priority is still safety."

How noble. What, exactly, are they going to investigate? If this lady had a history of shooting children, one would hope that she wouldn't have gotten a job at Paloma Valley High anyway.

So then, what? After the background check finds that she's (gasp!) been a teacher for the previous 10 years or so, what will they investigate? Will they look in her desk drawer to see if she keeps a double-barreled shotgun in there?

Truth is, things have changed. Brett and I used to watch G.I. Joe cartoons on Saturday mornings (not together. I didn't meet Brett until college, at which point G.I. Joe came in very low on the priority list come Saturday morning), wherein entire legions of people would line up 20 feet away from one another and empty Gatling guns at each other. Nobody cared, and Brett and I grew up without killing anyone or being afraid of our teachers.

Now what's considered violent on television is the Mighty Morphin Power Rangers (I'm not sure what variation of that program is currently on – forgive my lack of timeliness on pop culture), and they come further away from hitting each other than professional wrestlers.

So people had a stink about the Power Rangers. Yeah, they're bad news, that's for sure. The people on Melrose Place (or whatever Aaron Spelling fill-in-the-blank evening soap happens to be popular now) sleep around and dabble with cocaine, but we're concerned about teenagers in stupid-looking costumes pretending to pummel creatures that look like they should be leading the cheers at minor league baseball games?

I can't even comprehend the mayhem that would ensue if the Blue Ranger jokingly threatened to shoot one of the big plush guys. Now that would be a real catastrophe. We're talking the cover of Newsweek.

Now, the real question for everyone is: how does Brett Mauser have anything to do with this? Well, when chatting with him, he mentioned that he heard that some kids got suspended from school after pointing finger pistols at classmates at recess, yelling "bang, bang."

I did an Internet news search for that story, but couldn't come up with anything. I did, however, find the truly terrifying story of Mrs. Brown, who makes Satan seem like the Pillsbury Doughboy.

Does it bother anybody that Americans are afraid of their own shadow?

Seth Koenig is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Arts Editor • David Toupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Pussycats frolic in cultural satire

By Michael Dolano
Collegian Staff

JOSIE AND THE PUSSYCATS
Directed by Harry Elfont and Deborah Kaplan with Rachel Leigh Cook, Rosario Dawson, and Tara Reid
Playing at Cinemark Theaters

If someone had told me last week that the film that most forcefully subverts the United States' current hyper-commercial consumer agenda would be Josie and the Pussycats, I would have to invoke a favorite saying of the Collegian managing editor's beloved writer Breeze D'J Pancake:

"Bullshit!"

Certainly, a decades-old cartoon/comic strip resurrected in film form for the sole purpose of cashing in on the boy/girl group trend would recoil from social commentary like Carson Daly from a punk CD. The trailers would have you believe the movie is simply another ADD editing room orgy cut from the MTV cloth or a soundtrack-selling vehicle/after school special like Save the Last Dance.

But you'd be wrong. Has Sui Jhally taught you people nothing? Ads lie, and while the ads for Josie are a magnet for the teen film crowd, that group is in for a lot more than they bargained for. The people pulling the strings on this project offer a sharp social critique that revels in the fact that it is being delivered to the masses in the trendiest of all Trojan horses: the teen flick.

Josie wants to sink its fangs into the heart of glossy commercialized trend-driven culture. But you have to give it some breathing room, as this isn't a documentary and we do have to dispense with the usual cliches. The film opens with a lame boy band parody that was trumped some time ago by the underappreciated 2ge+her series. The central conflict focuses on an evil record company duo (Alan Cumming and Parker Posey, loving every minute) trying to brainwash kids through subliminal messages in music, an idea recently done much funnier on "The Simpsons."

So there is some crap to wade through before getting to the good stuff, but it's there. And before we talk about it, I guess we should talk about the acting. The film doesn't really require extended discussions of the performances, so here is the Cliff Notes edition. Rachel Leigh Cook (Josie) is such a hottie I'll let her step on my soul and frolic around in a Black Flag T-shirt. Also note her convincing heel turn after personalized subliminal messages rev her into full bitch mode. Rosario Dawson (Valerie) radiates with brainy girl power, and it will be a trip to see her do some serious work, since even here she seems more than game. Tara Reid (Melody)'s ditzy girl schtick runs dry really fast, but her amiable charm keeps her just above grating.

Josie and the Pussycats' true strength is in its hilarious indictment of product placement. Ray Ban, Revlon, Pizza Hut, Starbucks, McDonalds, Kodak, they're all there all the time. On cars, walls, TV screens, scaffolding, the exact same places they are in real life, except in this movie you actually become aware that the world is one big advertisement. The genius in every movie theater that snuggly laughs and points "product placement!" in other films would be exhausted here. It's in every scene, practically.

And that's the point, to draw you in to the hyperbole and make you realize that the hilariously overblown advertising in the film is not far at all from everyday life. It's a nice model for anyone curious as to why people didn't want sponsors on T stops in Boston.

The ridiculous persistence of advertising is the film's strong suit, addressing the trends that the advertising produces causes the film to stumble slightly. The boy band parody is dead and buried, and "The Simpsons" got the jump on the subliminal messages.

COURTESY VIACOM

Tara Reid, Rachel Leigh Cook and Roasario Dawson pur through the delicious Josie and the Pussycats.

Nonetheless, the ephemeral nature of society is proudly exalted and summarily roasted by an exceptionally sharp and current script.

As Phil Anselmo would say, "The trend is dead." But of course, the trend isn't dead, as people will flock to this under the pretense that it's another finely crafted teen film in the sturdy stock of Boys & Girls or Head Over Heels. But once the film has you in its web, it spits venom. Josie and the Pussycats, for all its flaws, is a blissful middle finger to every tattooed, A&F hat-adorning, pierced, Linkin Park T-shirt sporting member of the audience. Hard-nosed moviegoers will clench their teeth through the cheese tot which there is plenty) and wonder how such a sinfully subversive message found its way onto American movie screens.

Stop Kiss politically provactive, enthralling

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

STOP KISS
Curtain Theatre
April 5-7 and 10-13

A moment hangs suspended before us for the entirety of Stop Kiss. It is a moment of two successive events: one, the ultimate act of love, and the other, a violent act of devastating consequences.

The UMass Theater Department and New World Theater worked in conjunction to produce Diana Son's examination of intolerance and its consequences. More than that, though, this is a unique love story. Unique because, in many ways, it only becomes a love story until its very last seconds.

Fresh from the Midwest and a job as a teacher at a Quaker school, Sara moves to New York City. Callie, a seasoned New Yorker who knows Sara as a friend of a friend, agrees to show the newcomer the ropes of the city.

Despite their differences, the women hit it off immediately, and become inseparable friends. As Callie edges slowly out of her social circles, Sara finds her niche as a schoolteacher in the Bronx. Instead of bringing Midwestern naivete, as might be expected, she brings easy and unflagging optimism to a hard city.

Their lives soon become intertwined. Callie now celebrates Sara's schoolroom victories, though only a short while ago she might have cynically dismissed them. And Sara, recognizing that her new friend is unsatisfied with her job as a traffic reporter, presses her to find happiness elsewhere. They share stories of their respective pasts, and relationship problems. Callie's ex-boyfriend took off to be with her sister. Sara wanted out of the contented monotony of her hometown life, including her boyfriend.

Sara's direction, confidence, and her willingness to start anew inspire Callie. It is the unexpected arrival of an outsider, a fresh and unjaded perspective, that forces Callie into introspection. Her tough façade drops. Sara, once totally dependent on her city friend, now becomes the rock on which their relationship is built.

But there is an uneasiness to their friendship which belies the underlying yet undeniable attraction to each other. And more than that, they have fallen in love. With the expression of this love, their first kiss, they attract the attention of a homophobic man who verbally assaults and then physically attacks them.

Callie is slightly injured. Sara is rendered comatose, and when she awakes, she is incapable of speech or independent action.

Son writes in alternating scenes of present and future action. In the first scene, Callie and Sara meet. In the next scene, Callie is garbed in a hospital gown and being questioned by a police detective. The oscillating scene structure continues for the whole of the play. The present scenes work up to one event: the kiss, which is perhaps the most innocent, but most powerful expression of love. The future scenes work back from one event: the act of violence.

These flashes into the future force us to scrutinize the present. We know that an act of violence is hanging over the future of these two women. We know that this action is provoked by a kiss. We wait in anticipation of these two events, examining how and why these things have happened.

The actors thrive under this pressure from the audience. They alternate from the emotionally wrenching future scenes to the normalcy of the present with grace. The set and lighting also blend these two worlds remarkably well for the restrained space at the Curtain Theater. Elements of the violent act creep into Callie's static apartment set, which is mainly hinted at by set pieces, but fully realized nonetheless. The hospital bed and the wall on which Sara's head was bashed take on ominous presence, as they become more and more apparent.

Beth Cartier plays a sweet Sara, but tough when she needs to be, without

Turn to STOP KISS page 7

COURTESY JON CRISPIN

Beth Cartier as Sara, Bonita Oliver as Callie, and Russ Rakouskas as George.

Wading through the tide of awful metal

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

GANDALF
Rock Hell
Earache

CATHEDRAL
Endtyme
Earache

TAD MOROSE
Undead
Century Media

ONWARD
Evermoving
Century Media

SAVATAGE
Poets and Madmen
Century Media

THE FORSAKEN
Manifest of Hate
Century Media

Sometimes you just want to tell the record companies "Enough! Enough metal! Please, I beg of you!" But they just don't listen, probably because they're deaf from listening to too many Iced Earth demos. Since those bastards are so callous to the voice of the people, it falls once again to us, the little people, to sift through all the low-priority metal that accumulates over the months.

Metal probably doesn't get any more low-priority than Gandalf. For one thing, they're a Finn band named after a character from Lord of the Rings, and for another their label describes them as "an unholy union of AC/DC and At The Gates." Now, I know what you're saying – 'Man, oh, man – can't get enough of that Finland death rock scene! Tell me more!' Fair enough, then.

The sad truth is that Rock Hell, in parts, actually does sound like AC/DC crossed with At The Gates, and it works. "L8X Queen" and "Nightderanger" are really good, fun, and unbelievably extreme songs. It's a really nice change of pace to hear death metal vocals singing about something other then mass murder and the stabbing of infants for a change. The other sad truth, however, is that when Gandalf play down to their name with songs like "Morning Son" and "Castle of the Stars," it's just generic dragonslayer metal. I'd recommend getting "L8X Queen" off Napster, and then forgetting that Gandalf ever existed.

Cathedral are an entirely different story. Hailed upon their debut as the modern successors to the gloom throne of Black Sabbath, they then lost part of their fandom and gained another when they started smoking lots of weed and combining psychedelia and happieness with their molasses-slow and crushing dirges. Endtyme is the pinnacle of this approach, as the old-school doom and acid imagery mesh like never before.

Since I don't get high, I feel a little unqualified to review this CD, but here's my opinion: it's OK. It's unquestionably put together quite well – everything sounds good, the arrangements and beats never miss, and the vocals are quite clear and understandable. The problem, for me, is that the songs are all so slow and crushing, only punctuated occasionally by weird instrumental breaks, that I get bored after just a few tracks. Maybe that problem goes away after a few hits of something or other. I'll leave that to the chemically-altered of you to decide. Still, no one can say that "Whores to Oblivion" isn't a cool song name.

The new Tad Morose album, Undead, really really bites. There's just something about Swedes that won't allow them to let go of the metal past. Seriously – this Iron Maiden/Dio/Blind Guardian sound was old when I was still in middle school. Still, bands like Tad Morose just will not let it go, and trash like this keeps being pumped out at an absolutely amazing rate.

Here's what you'll find should you ever have the misfortune to listen to Undead: endless boring uninventive harmony guitar solos (I can only hope that, in the live show, they are done with the guitarists back-to-back in front of a smoke machine). Inputs inhaled-helium high-pitched vocals with soaaaaring soweh and that I'm-so-sincere-and-sensitive quality that makes one want to kill, and double bass drum beats that seem to have been directly lifted from old Saxon releases. You will also find such glory metal gems as "No Tears in the Rain," "No Wings to Burn," and "No Talent in this Band."

OK, I made that last one up.

For Evermoving, the debut of Onward, reread the previous three paragraphs with these changes: Wyoming instead of Sweden and "The Watchful Enchantress" instead of "No Tears in the Rain." That'll save me the trouble of restating all the reasons why this, too, sucks balls.

Savatage needs a little more work to denounce. For one thing, they've been around for ever and a day, and have even achieved some notable success and popularity in metal circles. Under the name of Trans-Siberian Orchestra they achieved mainstream success with guitar-and-orchestra Christmas songs such as the ubiquitous "Christmas Eve, Sarajevo." In some places, it's a really big deal when they put out a new album.

The problem with Savatage is that they are just soooo dated. Like Onward and Tad Morose, they can't escape the archaic wawa guitar and cliche vocals. In fact, really just about everything in Poets and Madmen is cliche. Had someone given me this album and told me that it was a parody of the Savatage/glory metal sound, I would honestly have believed it.

The inability to change with the times is fine when your sound is still relevant and fun. Just check out Stiff Upper Lip, AC/DC's most recent album, which is exactly the same as their first and just as enjoyable. Unfortunately, the 1987 glory-metal sound (which I was never fond of in the first place) has not held up quite so well. Someone really needs to tell all these bands to retire.

The Forsaken, a new Swedish death/thrash band, are leaps and bounds better then their competition in this particular review. While Manifest of Hate is still fairly unoriginal, borrowing extensively from the At The Gates, Arch Enemy, and even Burn My Eyes-era Machine Head, they're at least ripping off a contemporary sound.

There are even some things that set The Forsaken apart – the drumming is at times utterly unbelievable, the songs are typically in the five-minute range (that's epic for a modern day thrash band), and vocalist Anders Sjoholm stays with the intense scream throughout, never weakening to the spoken word or the clean vocal dabbling that has become so common. Still, the sense that you've heard most of this before keeps Manifest of Hate decidedly average.

The moral? Lots and lots of metal sucks. (Hey, don't bitch – I'm the one who had to listen to all 6 of these crapbombs.) Be careful and avoid all these titles. Cautiously proceed away from the Savatage rack and down the aisle to the In Flames section... very carefully now... whew! See, everything's going to be OK after all.

Live Springsteen double album a must

By Rob Schultze
Collegian Staff

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN AND THE E STREET BAND
Live in New York City
Columbia

Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band's reunion tour that began in the summer of '99 was an orgy of joy and rock 'n roll that captured the nation for a few short months. Bruce's mammoth stands in the nation's grandest arenas – 15 shows at the Meadowlands in New Jersey, five in Boston, six in Philadelphia, 10 in New York – destroyed records and marked the return of a superstar who had faded from the public eye in the previous decade in full glory. It can truly be said to have been one of the greatest rock experiences in modern times.

Live in New York, recorded at the final nights of the tour, is a two-CD document of just why those shows were so magical.

The first disk of the album shows a band going at breakneck speed to simply get as much rock 'n roll out of their system as possible. Things start off with "My Love Will Not Let You Down" from the box set Tracks, featuring Max Weinberg setting an accelerated beat while the Boss keeps up as best he can, belting out the lyrics from the bottom of his gut, and a listener just can't help but feel that Bruce's love really won't let them down. After a slower, brooding "Prove It All Night" and the peppy "Two Hearts," Bruce does the first of many reinventings of his songs with a new version of "Atlantic City." Originally composed as a lament of hard times with only accoustic guitar, harmonica and vocals, the tune is rebuilt from the ground up with the whole band utilized to give it a feel of hopefulness that was totally absent from the original.

Unfortunately, this reworking of old songs fails miserably on "The River." Stretched to literally over double its original length, slowed down to the speed of molasses and almost unrecognizable under the layers of accordion and organ, this classic tune is utterly ruined.

"Youngstown" follows, and more than makes up for the disappointment of "The River." "Smokestacks reaching like the arms of God into a beautiful sky of soot and clay" growls Bruce with the most intensity of any song on the album before Nils Lofgren simply detonates with an amazing guitar solo. Unrivaled in passion and scope, "Youngstown" is easily the best song on the album. The band then races through textbook versions of high-impact rock tunes "Murder Incorporated," "Badlands," "Out in the Street" and the unlisted track "Born to Run" to close out the first disc with sweat and bravado.

The second CD is markedly different from the first, more introspective and less hellbent on rocking. "Tenth Avenue Freeze-Out" is ruined by the band introductions that were fun five, but simply take too long on a recording (particularly when Bruce repeatedly makes the point that he enjoys sex with his wife, backup singer Patty Scialfa.) Slow, heartfelt versions of "Land of Hope and Dreams," the controversial "American Skin (41 Shots)," and "Lost in the Flood" keep it low-key but intense. "American Skin" (Prompted by a police shooting in New York of an unarmed black man – 41 shots were fired) is especially spellbinding, as Bruce literally instructs the crowd to be quiet and listen. "Born in the USA" is ruined during an acoustic performance with Bruce yelling the lyrics tunelessly, and "Jungleland" is truly majestic in all its epic, piano-heavy glory. "Rainroad" is the only really rocking song on the second CD, and then the whole album concludes with "If I Should Fall Behind," sweet and sincere. "I will wait for you... if I fall behind, wait for me" sings every vocal member of the band in a show of unity and the familial power of rock.

What can I say? Live in New York, despite its few experimental failures, is a deserving document of a great rock 'n roll band. The truly magical moments – "Youngstown," "American Skin" – are supplemented by two CDs worth of solid material. It isn't as good as being there, but it's damned close.

Bridget Jones wins with excellent cast

By Nicholas Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

BRIDGET JONES'S DIARY
Directed by Sharon Maguire with Renee Zelwegger, Colin Firth and Hugh Grant
Playing at Cinemark, Hadley

Bridget Jones's Diary is the story of a woman who decides that she needs to change her life. She is a true person, with all of the vices that we suffer as people today. Possibly the reason why the character and the book were so popular in England, and eventually in the States as well, is the fact that her thoughts aren't censored, and the audience is fully aware of that.

At age 33 Bridget Jones is sick of being a singleton. And worse – a singleton that is always being set up by her mother. At her parent's New Year's party her mother introduces her to Mark Darcy (Colin Firth) in the hopes that they will click and begin a relationship. They don't. Instead, a while later, Bridget hears Mark make some cruel comments about her person and her habits. It's at this point that Bridget decides enough is enough. While she is in her room that night, watching Fraiser, eating chocolates, smoking cigarettes and drinking vodka she comes up with an idea that will help her put her life in order. By writing a diary she will not only analyze her life but also keep track of her loss of weight, how she cuts back on alcohol and cigarettes and most importantly her progress (n not being brought in by temptation and fantasies of her perfect man, who happens to be represented by her boss, Daniel Cleaver (Hugh Grant).

The film is told from the view of Bridget, and only Bridget. The audience doesn't take the form of the omniscient follower; instead, we are a piece of paper in her diary. She speaks directly toward us making sure we know about how she feels. At some points, the film utilizes the technique of showing a scene that takes place in her head, and then shows the actual scene. But this, unfortunately, ends halfway through the film. For the next hour and fifteen minutes, we don't see these "Ally McBeal" scenes, though the film is still funny with her dry witty British humor. The writing in this film is remarkable, full of British humor that

Turn to BRIDGET, page 7

IDEAL MOVERS & STORAGE
Come be a part of a team dedicated to providing excellent service to the Pioneer Valley and beyond.
•Excellent Starting Pay •Fun Environment
•Raises based on Performance •Potential to earn over $4,000 during summer
•Get Paid to get in Shape •Potential for Tips
•Learn usefull skills •Flexible Hours
Call 584-4746
IDEAL MOVERS & STORAGE 584-4746 "Our Service Will Move You"

Commuter Students!
On behalf of the Commuter Area Government, you are entitled to materials or a workshop FOR FREE!
Be one of the first 75 commuter students to stop by The Craft Center in the Student Union and tell them you are a commuter student and you will receive up to $10 worth of free materials or a free instructional workshop.
Between now and April 22
Don't Miss Out!!!
Craft Center Hours: TUE,WED,THUR 11-5/ FRI 11-6/ SAT & SUN 1-6

Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 6
Spring break was a killer,
In Cancun you had it made,
But now back home, you need some help,
So pick up a bottle of Powerade
Bring your bottle with your other clues to the Taste of UMASS,
And you will be on that free getaway cruise FAST!
Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "Taste of Umass". If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.
•••• From your Friends at•••• COLLEGIAN

Unplanned Pregnancy?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
413-584-0441
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten years Adoption Experience
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
to Main Street Northampton, MA 01060
adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
* See what you eat!
* See what you drink!
* See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS — See You There — DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

Peer Health Education
What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and
❒ A. Contracting an STI.
❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.
Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits
Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, a 2-semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.
Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

Coming Soon!
Hosted by: UMASS FOOD SERVICES
TASTE OF UMASS
FOOD EXHIBITION 2001
Bigger and better than ever!
Thursday
April 19, 2001
4:30 pm to 7:00 pm
MULLINS CENTER
Restaurants
Vendors
Prizes
Entertainment
Sponsored by: Coca-Cola, Thurston Foods Inc.
Great Food, Great Fun!
Hosted by Auxillary Services
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

■ bridget

continued from page 6

Americans found appealing in films like Notting Hill and Four Weddings and a Funeral. They make references to pop culture ("What do you think of El Nino?" "I think the whole latin music scene is dying.") and use the notions of British stereotypes made famous in films like National Lampoon's European Vacation when depicting them fighting with each other.

The cast is fantastic as well. The producers received a lot of criticism from the fans of the novel for casting Zelwegger, but she proves that she can be more than the soft complexion and cutsy smile for which she is known. She pulls off an English accent very well and is able to hit the lines that need the biting wit that makes English comedies so funny. The supporting cast is also fantastic, and not just Firth and Grant. Bridget has a small group of friends that she confides in – friends that represent the extremes that Bridget falls in between of. One friend is a neurotic and is afraid of the oncoming future of life as a singleton. The other is a single newspaper columnist who is full of anger and hostility toward men and the thought of being together. Bridget falls in the middle, fearful of the future and also feeling anger toward men. Like the group of friends from "Sex and the City," they support and try to help Bridget through her life.

Firth and Grant are terrific in the film as well. Firth is a stuffy lawyer who continues to bump into Bridget at different social events. Unfortunately, it gets a little too old and his humor can be lost in the monotonous tone of his voice. Hugh Grant once again shows why American audiences like to see him in comedies. Although in this role he is not the quirky loner like in Hill and Four Weddings, his sense of timing mixed with his tone makes his an outstanding performance.

The film overall is enjoyable. The director makes an excellent choice in mixing Bridget's life with music that speaks for the female sense of endurance. The film flows nicely and never drags. It's funny, and the audience will enjoy how realistically her life is shown – a must see date film, or for anyone who just feels like seeing a comedy.

An afternoon walk in the Park
UMass' George Parks will direct the University Concert Band in an afternoon concert for the whole family on Sunday, April 29 at 2 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

■ stop kiss

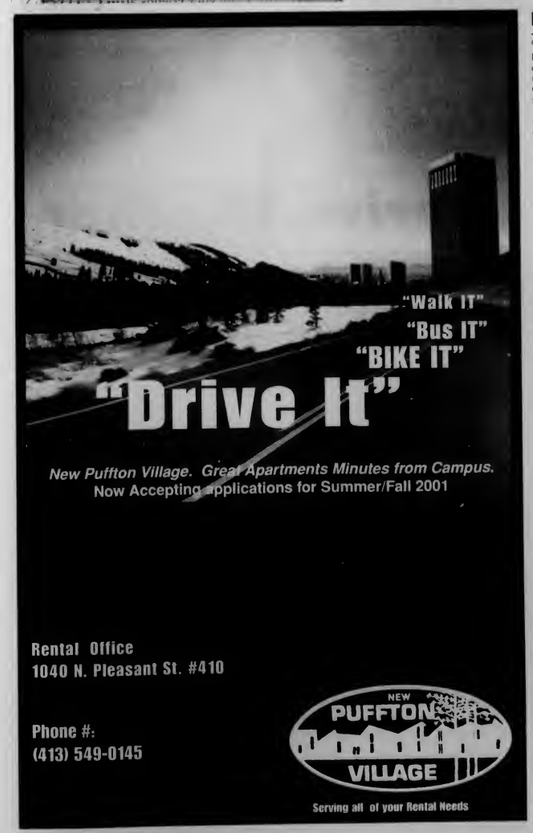
continued from page 5

bringing these traits into conflict with each other. She begins unsure, but we, through the eyes of Callie and by way of Cartier's characterization, understand that she must be cherished.

It is Bonita Oliver, who plays Callie, that goes through the most change. From savvy city girl to a more tender woman, Oliver is a joy to watch. Her scenes with Russ Rakouskas as George, Callie's friend and sometimes lover, show just how much Callie has cut off herself from her former life to be with Sara. Moreover, the scenes between the two are ripe with their history and (now-waning) sexual tension. Rakouskas is compassionate, but also urbane and charmingly cynical.

Oliver is afflicted with all the signs the signs that she is falling in love and sucks the audience in with her to experience this too. Her transformation from a disaffected woman who is hesitant about taking care of a cat to a woman who has found her purpose in taking care of an incapacitated Sara is extraordinary.

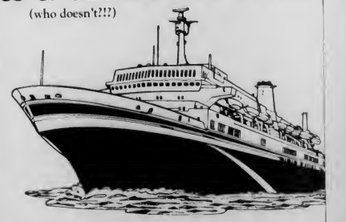
The show ends on a hopeful note one of love. But the destructive image remains. The consequences of a kiss prove to be irreparable because of intolerance. This production balanced Sons wonderful love story with its powerful message in adroit equilibrium.



New Puffton Village. Great Apartments Minutes from Campus.
Now Accepting Applications for Summer/Fall 2001
Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Phone #:
(413) 549-0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving all of your Rental Needs

Unplanned Pregnancy?
CALL ALTERNATIVES
586-3000 Northampton
774-6810 Greenfield
• Information
• Options Counseling
• Support
All services free & confidential
28 Federal St., Greenfield
1 Round House Plaza, Northampton
Free Pregnancy Tests

Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 7
Here comes Spring and show your pride.
Break out those shirts with UMASS on the side,
You root for the Minutemen;
So here's your chance
To prove that UMASS-
of course, is the best!
Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "Taste of Umass". If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.
•••• From your Friends at•••• COLLEGIAN

Who wants a cruise for two?
(who doesn't?!!?)
In one of the issues of the Collegian each week there will be a clue: Uncover the item at which the clue is hinting, collect it, and hold on to it!
When the taste of UMass rolls around, bring all the items you have collected and you will receive the FINAL CLUE...


The first person to bring the last item back to the TASTE OF UMASS will win an AMAZING five day cruise for two!
Coca-Cola •••• brought to you by •••• The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Undefeated crusade continues

Kunkel's six goals lead Minutemen to ninth win

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

It is an artifact that is more coveted than the Holy Grail, more legendary than the Ark of the Covenant and more powerful than Excalibur. It is known only as the Great Key of Garber.

It is thought to have the titanic power of quieting the guns of the Massachusetts attack – a power that Yale thought It possessed, as the

Minutemen scored only two goals in the first quarter. But when the smoke cleared, the Bulldogs shared the fate of the eight other treasure hunters before them. The power slipped through their fingers and like the others, the Eli's were left with severe burns, as the UMass attack caught fire and lit up the visitors for a 14-7 non conference win at Richard F. Garber.

UMass	14
Yale	7

After an uncharacteristic two-goal performance in the first quarter the Bulldogs (4-6, 1-3 Ivy League) had UMass (9-0, 4-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) right where they wanted it. Entering the locker rooms at halftime however, the visiting Ivy Leaguers must have been wondering "who let the guns out?" after the Minutemen unloaded five rounds into Yale's lifeline.

"It was good win for us," coach Greg Cannella said. "I was pretty nervous coming into this game. Yale is a very dangerous team both on offense and defense and I thought they played very well. But at stretches we really dominated the game and that was really the difference."

Kevin Leveille waited only 40 seconds to score the first goal of the second frame. The sophomore fired a blast from the point that hit a defenseman en route, but he gathered the loose ball and fought through two Bulldogs to give UMass a 3-1 lead.

Dan Paccione scored less than a minute later when he took a feed from Keith Gabrielli, spun off one check and beat the goalie five-hole from the top of the crease.

The contest held at 4-1 for the next ten minutes until the Maroon and White decided to go on another scoring binge. John Madigan scored on a short side laser from the right wing with less than four minutes remaining, while Rich Kunkel shelved two of his six goals within the following 60 seconds.

Senior captain Chris Gabrielli played goalkeeper on the perimeter as he and the rest of the UMass defense would not let any Bulldogs near the net, let alone score for the remainder of the second period.

"Big Nasty" Matt McFarland did an exceptional job in shutting down the nation's leading scorer in Brian Hunt. Hunt managed only two goals in garbage time, as McFarland, a junior All-America candidate, shut him down when it mattered most.

"Matt McFarland did a good job on [Hunt] all day," Cannella said. "We knew [Hunt] would get his – and he did – the plays he scored on were unbelievable. But Matty is a top-notch defenseman and we thought he played him very well."

With a 7-1 lead at the half the Minutemen maintained control for the remainder of the game.

UMass scored seven of the next ten goals to put the game well out of reach. Yale managed to notch three markers in scrub time to make it a seven goal deficit, but the only purpose it served was delaying the inevitable, as the Minutemen remained undefeated.

Kunkel finished the contest with a career-high six goals, while fellow senior Keith Gabrielli added three helpers. Five other Minutemen had multiple point games including seniors Jeremy Guski, Madigan and Alex Racioppi.

For the second straight week, the Minutemen put together a complete effort against a very decent squad. When Yale was down the Maroon and White continued to lay down the boom with the usual offensive explosion and tenacious defense from McFarland, Chris Gabrielli and Tom Fallon.

Yale failed where all the others had perished, because for the ninth straight game the Minutemen put up 10 goals or more.

So the great key to halting the UMass onslaught still escapes the grasp of the enemy. Undefeated the Minutemen remain, with the Bulldogs left in their wake. But a Crimson clad warrior (Harvard) waits in the wings to challenge for the great prize of solving the unbeaten Minutemen.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Jeremy Guski notched two assists in the third quarter of Saturday's 14-7 victory over Ivy League foe Yale.

Easter banquet is series clincher

Boulanger single seals Minuteman comeback

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

It was the longest day.

More than three hours, 35 hits and 30 runs after the first pitch was thrown, the Massachusetts baseball team capped a remarkable comeback against St. Bonaventure on Saturday, bouncing back from two seven-run deficits to beat the Bonnies 17-13,

UMass	17
St. Bona.	13

and take the Atlantic 10 series 2-1.

Sophomore shortstop Matt Boulanger played hero for the day, collecting a two-run single in the sixth that put UMass (10-12, 6-3 A-10) up 12-11, the only lead it would need as freshman pitcher Eric Chown entered midway through the fifth to pitch 3 1/3 innings of strong relief to secure the win.

For Boulanger, the at-bat proved to be not only a moment that reflected the game as a whole, but also the philosophy head coach Mike Stone has been preaching to his team all season.

"It was a big at-bat, and I just wanted to get something on the ball," Boulanger said. "It's really big, being an A-10 series. Like coach said, 'there's no run deficit we can't beat,' and that's what we keep in mind every time. You can come back in any game, and that's what today showed us."

Senior right fielder Gavin Clark echoed those thoughts.

"I knew our team was going to hit," said Clark, whose own contributions included a giant three-run homer in the bottom of the seventh.

"Our team has this integrity where we can just come back. I've never seen it in all the years I've been here...it shows a lot of poise for a team that I'm happy to be on."

After dropping into a 7-0 hole after only 1 1/2 innings of play, the Minutemen began turning things around in the bottom of the second, scoring four runs off of Bonnies starter Saul Solveson.

Clark led off the inning with a hard triple to center, and scored on the next play as junior Mike Kulak delivered a triple to center of his own, scoring Clark to give UMass its first run of the game. Kulak would later score on a wild pitch.

With no outs, catcher Tom Ellerbrook was walked, and Boulanger reached on error by the second baseman, setting up left-fielder Connell Clark, whose ground out to second scored Ellerbrook. Senior Nick Gorneault knocked in the final run of the inning, grounding out to third to score Clark and pull UMass within three.

The teams traded runs in the fourth, as the Bonnies tacked on an additional four in the top of the inning to again gain the seven run advantage. But the Minutemen again began chipping away at that lead, scoring three in the bottom of the frame, including a Jeff Altieri double off the right field fence that scored

Turn to BASEBALL page 9

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior Craig Szado dueled it out with St. Bonaventure's Kyle Johnson in UMass' 3-2 loss to the Bonnies.

Bonnie pitcher takes opener in hurling duel

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Since its season-opening trip to Oklahoma to face Oral Roberts, the Massachusetts baseball team has played about .500 baseball. The Minutemen held true to that form on Friday as they split a doubleheader with conference foe Saint Bonaventure.

St. Bona.	3
UMass	2
UMass	8
St. Bona.	4

The Minutemen dropped a tight game in the opener 3-2 before rallying in the second game to pull out an 8-4 victory.

In the first game, the Bonnies got two runs in the top of the first and one in the top of the second. That was more than enough for hurler Kyle Johnson, who allowed only two runs in his seven innings of work.

Saint Bonaventure started things off in the first when senior Tim Burris rapped a one out single to center field. Following a Mark Evers strikeout, cleanup hitter Jonathan Myler slammed a two run homerun to right-center off UMass starter Craig Szado to give the Bonnies the 2-0 lead.

The senior southpaw saw trouble strike again in the top of the second inning when Dan Dennison led off with a single to left center. After consecutive flyouts to Gavin Clark in right field, Dennison stole second to get into scoring position. Second baseman Mike Sedor provided the clutch two-out RBI single through the left side to put the visitors up 3-0.

From then on, Szado settled in and it was a duel between the two pitchers, with Szado and Johnson racking up goose egg after goose egg for their opponents.

UMass got its first scoring chance in the fifth inning, when third baseman Aaron Senez drew a one out walk. After Johnson struck out Clark swinging, junior Mike Kulak delivered a single to right-center. That was all the Maroon and White could muster, though, as Matt Boulanger grounded into a fielder's choice to end the inning.

The Minutemen finally got to Johnson in the bottom of the sixth, as sophomore backstop Tom Ellerbrook led off the inning by clobbering a solo homer to right field. But Johnson held strong and retired the next three hitters in order to keep the score at 3-1.

In the last of the seventh, with its back to the wall, the Maroon and White mustered one last effort. Sophomore Jeff Altieri started the inning off with a stand up double to left field. Colin Barden pinch ran for the first baseman, and scored soon after as Senez turned in a clutch single to right field. Clark followed by

Turn to DOUBLEHEADER, page 9

■ baseball

continued from page 8

Boulanger and freshman Adam Stojanowski. Altieri would account for the inning's third run when third baseman Aaron Senez knocked a double to left-center, scoring the first baseman and again cutting the UMass deficit to four.

The turnaround wouldn't be complete until the sixth, however, when the Minutemen used nine batters and five hits to finally take hold of a game that had seemed lost only one inning before.

"It was a huge comeback, a tremendous effort staying positive and not giving up," Stone said. "They just kept fighting at the plate and putting the ball into play [Skirkanich] got us far enough into the game so that we could bring in [Chown] and shut then down. It was great."

The pivotal inning began when senior Nick Gorneault laced a double to center, taking third on an Altieri single to left in the following at-bat. Gorneault was driven home moments later, off the bat of Senez, who singled to short. After Kulak reached on an error, catcher Tom Ellerbrook produced a huge single to right, scoring Senez and Altieri to bring UMass within one. With two outs and two on, the stage was set for Boulanger, who sent his game winning single to right, bringing home Kulak and Ellerbrook to put the Minutemen up 12-11.

UMass remained superb after the sixth, thanks in part to Chown, who has displayed a remarkable level of confidence in pressure situations.

"He looked great," Stone said. "He throws a little bit harder than the other guys. He's got movement. He's got command. He has a good presence and has shown he can pitch in tight situations. It was great to see."

The Minutemen were able to sustain the offense as well, tacking on another five runs in the final two frames to put the game away.

With two outs and two on in the bottom of the seventh, Gavin Clark sent his sixth homerun of the season over the right field fence, scoring Stojanowski and Senez. The Minutemen would top off the scoring in the eighth, when an Altieri sacrifice fly to right sent home the seventeenth and final run of the afternoon.

Chown picked up the victory for UMass, allowing two runs on three hits in 3 1/3 innings of work to improve to 2-0 on the season. By picking up important conference ground, and inching even closer to the .500 mark, Stone sees a team growing more comfortable and confident in itself everyday.

"I told them after it was 7-0 that 'Hey, we've got to look at this like it's 0-0 and keep chipping away. We've done that many times before. I have to stay positive in order for them to be positive, and if I give up they're going to give up. I stayed positive, and there's a good reason why I should; they've been able to come back and get it done."

The Minutemen are back in action this afternoon, as the University of Connecticut travels to Earl Lorden field. Game time is scheduled for 3 p.m.

■ doubleheader

continued from page 8

sacrificing Senez to second, and Kulak grounded out to Johnson to advance him to third. Suphomore Tim Klett pinch hit for Boulanger and grounded out to end the game.

"I think [our lack of hitting] was more attributed to the fact that [Johnson] did a great job rather than us being inconsistent," head coach Mike Stone said. "He mixed it up really well, and used his fastball really well. You definitely have to have more than six hits with aluminum bats to win ball games."

The second game had fairer results for the home squad, as it downed the Bonnies, 8-4. Altieri had three RBI and Connell Clark hit a two-run homerun in support of junior Jesse Santos, who allowed seven hits and struck out four in his six innings of work.

The Minutemen showed that the bats were back to normal right from the start of game two. Sean Sarno led off the game with a single to center, and two batters later Nick Gorneault too had an infield single. But aside from those two hits, suphomore righty Kevin Niemczura struck out the side for Saint Bonaventure.

The Bonnies drew first blood in the top of the third inning. Ninth hitter Mike Tegeler rapped a two-out double to deep right field and leadoff man Jim Wolf immediately followed by scoring him on a single to put the visitors up 1-0.

The Minutemen responded with an attack of their own in the bottom half of the inning. Sarno and the younger Clark walked to start off the inning, and Gorneault followed them onto the basepaths after being hit by a Niemczura offering. With the bases loaded and nobody out, Altieri slapped a two-run single over the third baseman's head to put the Maroon and White up 2-1. Gorneault advanced to second on the play, but was picked off soon after.

With Altieri on first and one gone, Senez reached on a force out that retired Altieri at second. Senior Gavin Clark then smashed a two out double to deep right to score Senez and put the home squad up 3-0.

"I guess we just settled in and realized that we needed to score some runs," said Altieri of his team's improved offense in the second game.

UMass continued its barrage in the fifth inning as Connell Clark and Gorneault started the inning with back to back infield singles to shortstop. After Altieri grounded into a fielder's choice that retired Clark at third base, Senez slapped an 0-2 offering for a double to score Gorneault. After Gavin Clark was intentionally walked to load the bases, Kulak grounded to shortstop, but hustled down the line to beat the double play relay throw, and Altieri scored to put the lead at 5-1.

The sixth brought more good fortune to the Maroon and White offense, as Connell Clark hit his line drive two-run homer to right-center that scored Sarno, who had walked earlier. After Gorneault popped out to second, Altieri hit a towering flyball to deep right field that got caught in the wind and carried over the fence for his fourth longball of the year, sending the Minutemen into the final frame with a comfortable 8-1 lead.

That's when things got interesting.

Mike Rapacioli led things off by hitting a double to left-center. Dennison followed him by lofting a high flyball to left field. With Connell Clark parked under it, Dennison watched it fall into his glove and began to walk toward the dugout. Just then, the ball fell to the ground, and Dennison found himself the benefactor of some rotten Minuteman luck.

"[Clark] had a hole in his glove and the ball went right through," Stone said.

Eric Wilson then made the error hurt by hitting a single through the middle to score Rapacioli and cut the deficit to six. Stone was not taking any chances, and pulled Santos in favor of freshman Eric Chown.

Mike Sedor then sacrificed the runners over for the Bonnies, and Tegeler then hit a routine grounder to Sarno, who crossed himself up on the play and all runners were safe, with Dennison scoring. But from then on, Chown allowed only a sacrifice fly, and the Minutemen prevailed by the score of 8-4.

"That was a couple well played ballgames up until the last inning there – we really made it interesting," Stone said. "I don't think we've had a 1-2-3 last inning all year even though we've won the ball games. [Santos] did a pretty good job of pitching in the second game."

The split put the Minutemen at 9-12 overall and 5-3 in A-10 play before the series finale against Saint Bonaventure.

To find out what happened in that game, see the related story.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Tom Ellerbrook's single to right in the sixth inning brought UMass to within one of the Bonnies in the series finale.

Minutewomen earn split

Inconsistency plagues women's lax

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

On a long weekend when many UMass students went home, the majority of the campus was far from hustling.

However, this lack of activity did not stop the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team from staying in Amherst and breathing some life into an otherwise dead

UMass	10
St. Bona.	4
Duquesne	12
UMass	9

University – by competing on Totman Field against Atlantic 10 leader Duquesne on Friday and A-10 cellar dweller St. Bonaventure on Saturday.

As could be expected, the Minutewomen fell just short against the Dukes, 12-9, using an early second half rally to make the game close, and clobbered the Bonnies the next day by a score of 10-4.

With the pair of contests now under its belt, the Maroon and White stands at 3-8 (2-2 A-10) with only four regular season games to play.

"We need to come out and play a full 60 minutes," coach Phil Barnes said, who considered the weekend a mixed bag for his squad. "If we become consistent, then we can really play at a high level."

Against St. Bonaventure, the Minutewomen jumped out to a 10-1 lead, but then almost let the Bonnies get back in the game by coasting through the final 15 minutes.

Just under four minutes into the game, Fay Naber took a pass from leading Minutewomen scorer Rachel Ingraffea, and whipped it past the St. Bonaventure goaltender. Denise Brey extended the lead to two only 15 seconds later, but then UMass went on the kind of 15-minute scoring lapse that drives Barnes crazy.

"Offensively we are playing better," the second year coach said. "We are scoring in spurts, which is great, but we need to have these spurts and then keep on producing throughout the half."

When the Maroon and White extended its advantage again with just over 10 minutes remaining in the half, it was Kelli Kurtz doing the damage, blasting a shot into the opposing net.

This kick-started another patented Massachusetts run, as two Ingraffea tallies and a Kara DePaula score made it 6-0 at the break. It was just another great half of play for Ingraffea, who has adjusted well to her role as the go-to offensive player, and who went on to pick up her sixth hat trick of the year as well as her 24th goal of the season in the second half.

"It keeps me on my toes and pushes me to work harder [knowing that opposing defenses are keyed to stop me]," Ingraffea said.

The second frame started much the same way as the first 30 minutes for the Maroon and White, as Angela McMahon, Ingraffea and Leslie Pollock all notched goals within the first four minutes of the half.

With 21:43 left in the game, Kurtz tallied her second goal by taking a nice feed from DePaula to boost her team's lead into double digits.

At that point, all that remained to be seen was if Minutewomen goalie Jen Nardi could keep the shutout going, but that ended with just over 19 minutes remaining when Katie Murphy finally put one home for the Bonnies.

Over the final seven minutes, Lauren Spaulding scored a pair of goals and Emily Tilton netted one of her own to make the score much more respectable for the Bonnies when the final buzzer sounded.

"We need to take this win and take it to the next level," Barnes said. "With every win there is a confidence boost and this was good timing. We will go from here."

A day earlier against Duquesne, UMass had to deal with a much tougher team, and found itself down 7-1 at the half. The Maroon and White would not surrender that quickly though, and ran off one of its best spurts of the year.

Just 17 seconds after halftime, a streaking Ingraffea took a pass from McMahon and drilled the ball into the upper left hand corner of the net to start everything off. The rally continued at the 27:20 mark, when Naber put home one of her two tallies on the day off a free position shot, and brought her team within four.

Thirty seconds later, Ingraffea beat the Duquesne goalie again, and then, it only took another 57 seconds before Kurtz scored off a DePaula pass to suddenly close the gap to two.

From the 27:20 mark to the 20:14 mark, the Minutewomen totaled three goals, and with just over 20 minutes left, Kurtz put home a perfect pass from Nabor to make the scoreboard read 7-6, Dukes.

"Offensively we are real good," Ingraffea said. "When we're on, we are on, and when we play together, we play so well."

UMass could not keep up its inspired play, however, and Duquesne went on to outscore the Maroon and White by a count of 5-3 over the last 14 minutes of the contest.

For the Dukes, speed-ster Katie Harner led the team with five goals, including the eventual game-winner with just under nine minutes remaining, while leading scorer Meghan Hungate picked up a hat trick of her own.

Lauren Mincher and Kristen Harner also contributed to the cause, adding two scores apiece to the Duquesne total.

The Minutewomen were, once again, led by Ingraffea, who totaled three goals on the day. Kurtz and Naber scored two each, and Pollock and Tori Kain rounded out the scoring with a single tally apiece. Kain's goal, the first of her career, came with only nine seconds left, and cut the Duke lead to three.

On April 19, the Maroon and White season continues when Albany comes to Totman Field for a 4 p.m. showdown.

START

Collegian Sports: we're a-maze-ing

Finish

Atlantis
Behind Antonio's Pizza in Amherst
NO COVER $2 COVER AFTER 11 PM
TUES: Karaoke Night
THURS: Hip Hop and R & B w/ DJ Sammy Needles
FRI: Growroom presents "House on the Rochs" w/ DJs Hush & Salty
SAT: Hip-Hop and Reggae with DJ Trendz
"Ladies Night" – Ladies get in FREE
SUN: Open Mic – Open Turntable

All The Ingredients for...
SPRING BARBEQUE'S
(EXCEPT BEER)
SUPER STOP & SHOP

HAIR CUTS NOW WITH KATE
$20
(Weds. & Sat.)
ERIC SCOT
EXPERIENCE THE ART of HAIR FOR LESS.
79 SOUTH PLEASANT STREET AMHERST 413.256.3440

STILL TIME TO ENTER:
Swim Meet (M/W) - A.S.A.P.
Weekend Flag Football (M/W/C) - A.S.A.P.
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C) - 4/24
Quickball (M/W/C) - 4/24
World Cup Soccer (M/W) - 4/24
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: http://www.umass.edu/umim

Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 8
There was a father who made pizza
and JOHN was his name-o
JOHN, JOHN, JOHN, and Father was his title.
There was a father who made pizza
and he wanted to save his cup.
SAVE, SAVE, SAVE, his cup for the scavenger hunt.
There was a father who made pizza
and he wanted you to win the cruise
CRUISE, CRUISE, CRUISE, he wanted you to win!
Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "Taste of Umass".
If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.
.... From your Friends at.... COLLEGIAN

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

Take over our lease - Large 2 bedroom available June 1. heat & water. Call 256-2194

Summer Sublet 2 bedroom Boulders Apartment $800 negotiable Call 253-7140

Summer Sublet June-Aug. 2 bedroom near Mike's Billiards on Rt. 9. 253-6731

Two Bedrooms third floor Brandywine Apartments furnished with balacony June 1st to August 31st 549-4110

Take over our lease 2 bedroom apt. Starting June 1st. Call 549-7053 for details.

Summer Sublet with fall option in Brandywine. Furniture included. 548-6991

2 Bedroom in Brandywine avail June 1st. Call 549-4003

Beautiful Apartment with best view in Boulders. Very spacious, private, clean. Great for four or two! Singles also welcome. Refurnished cabinets and bathroom & walk-in closets. Security Dep. Req. - Call Patrick or Peter 256-3045

Female Wanted to share apt. @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take over my lease. 1 bedroom in Puffton! Call 617-899-6606. Starting June 1.

Two Bedroom Apt available June 3rd for sublet. Inexpensive only $600/month. Huge rooms-can easily accomadate four people. Call 253-6311

Sleep in my Bed! $875 2 bedroom Brandywine available June 1 option for fall. 549-4888

2 Bedroom Apt. starting June 1st. Great location w/living room/bedroom furniture for sale. In excellent condition/cheap. Call 549-0453 ASAP

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass cernter, bus. $550, hear, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Amherst Center
1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos
3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts.com or 549-0600.

Renovated, Puffton Apartment. Available 6-1. 3 bedroom, $1155. 549-7465

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1995 Saturn SL2 Auto, loaded. Excellent condition. $4000. 537-0517

95 Dodge Neon 4 dr. $4500 O.B.O 413-527-3665

CHILDCARE

Get paid to have fun this summer taking care of 2 boys in Shutesbury. $8 per hr. 30hrs per week. Transportation, references required. 259-1118

EMPLOYMENT

Attention International Company needs help part-time - full-time. 1-800-723-2896

EXCITING SALES OPPORTUNITY
Professional organization needs success-driven individuals for sales careers. All leads provided, flexible hours. Average 1st yr earnings of $65K, generous commissions & bonuses! A fun and exciting work environment. Send resume to: 228 Main Street, #423, Williamstown, MA 01267, an EOE

Make enough money to take the summer off. Have you had experience driving trucks. No special license required. Make $125-$155 per day for approximately 14 days in June and 12 days in Aug. One or both sessions available. Call 1-888-949-5089

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA
The Resort at Glacier
St. Mary Lodge
Be a part of the team! Limited number of positions left!
For more informaiton call:
1-800-368-3689
Apply Online Today @
www.glacierparkjobs.com

Experienced Staff Needed: day and night shifts available for wait staff and bar staff. Night shifts available for door personel. Immediate openings. Must be here for the summer. Apply at Amherst Brewing Co.

Last Chance Legal Assistants. April 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Fall, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

TEENAGE BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Be at Teen Tour Leader this summer. Trips in USA, Canada, Europe. We need a 4-week time commitment - end of June through July, salary plus expenses paid. Student Hostelling Program, P.O. Box 419, CONWAY, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, bicycletrips.com

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Counselors Wanted Coed Jewish overnight camp in Maine offers competitive salary plus room and board. All positions available! For more information, contact Ava or Meridith at 617-244-5124 or via email at info@kingswood.org

Like Working Outdoors? Want a great tan this summer? Paint for Collegiate Entrepreneurs!
Hiring full-time summer positions for Painters and Production Managers.
No experience necessary. Transportation and dependability a must. 35-40 hours/week
Springfield Area.
Painter's: $8.25
Manager's: $10
Call Sam at
1-800-590-9516 (pager)

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

TOP BOYS SPORTS CAMP IN MAINE! PLAY & COACH SPORTS - HAVE FUN - MAKE $$ CAMP COBBOSSEE - Positions available in: ALL TEAM & INDIVIDUAL SPORTS, ALL WATER SPORTS, PLUS: Camping & hiking, Ropes & Rock Climbing, Ice Hockey, Roller Hockey, Arts & Crafts, Martial Arts. Top Salaries, Excellent Facilities, FREE ROOM, BOARD, LAUNDRY. Travel Allowance. www.campcobbossee.com ON LINE APPLICATION or call: (800) 473-6104

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.wantnetwealth.com

Lifeguards
Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

ROOM FOR RENT

2 Females looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

Summer Sublet/Fall Option 2 bdrm available in 4 bdrm house. Leverett call 548-4999

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. for summer sublet. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

Summer Sublet Needed! 2bdrm apartment in Boulders. Some furniture available. $785/mo. Call 256-8012

ROOMMATE WANTED

Summer Sublet w/ lease option. 2bdr apartment in Brandywine. Available June 1. Call 548-6819

1 Bedroom Available in 3bdr Puffton. Move in after finals. Cheap Cheap Rent! Call 549-8517

Two fun girls looking to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine. Call Kathyleen 546-5948 or Laura 546-5525

Looking for 1 or 2 people, male or female to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting June 1st. Email: paStricia@hotmail.com

Two Female Roommates looking for 1 or 2 other females roommates for apt in Brandywine. Call 546-2738

1 Bedroom Summer Sublet 4 females looking for another female roommate. Great house in nice quiet area of Amherst w/view of mountains, near bus route. Available June 1. Call Lara 256-2104

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

One bedroom in 5 bedroom furnished house in Sunderland. June 1 with fall option. Call Mike B 665-7639. $200.month

Summer Sublet w/ lease option in Puffton Apartments. Room 2 to 3 people. Call 549-4706

2 Bedroom Apartment in Brandywine starting June 1st. Call for info 549-6989

SUMMER SUBLET

Summer Sublet Puffton 3 bed. 2 bath heat/water inc. available June 1. Incentive offered. Call 549-5177

2 Bedroom 1 1/2 bathrooms fully furnished (TV, stereo, satellite, BBQ) Great location to compus. Front porch and backyard, parking available , washer + dryer. Call Dave 549-5893

Newly Renovated Puffton! Avail. ASAP-August. Call Judy at 549-4017

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

Summer Sublet 2 bedrooms Colonial Village $600 a month 256-8027

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

TRAVEL

FLY 4STANDBY...FLY 4 CHEAP! Europe $169 o/w (+tx) Lon, Fra, Mad, Ams, Par, & more 4STANDBY.COM or 800-326-2009

Your Ad Could Be Right Here!!!
Advertise Today!!
The Collegian Classifieds
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bottom Board
6 - CBS (3 Hartford)
7 - CBS 4 Boston
8 - ABC (40 Springfield)
9 - PBS 57 Springfield
10 - HSCN Movie Channel
11 - UPN 20 Hartford
12 - HSCN New Movie Channel
13 - NBC 30 New Haven
14 - Fox 61 Hartford
15 - PBS 24 Hartford
16 - NBC 22 Springfield
17 - International Channel
18 - UMATV (Academic Channel)
19 - WB 59 New Haven
20 - ESPN
21 - ESPN2
22 - TVE TV (Student Channel)
23 - Weather Channel
24 - Classic Sports Channel
25 - C-Span
26 - CNN
27 - CNN Headline News
28 - Lifetime
29 - USA
30 - TBS
31 - TNT
32 - A&E
33 - Discovery
34 - Nickelodeon
35 - Cartoon Network
36 - Nick at Nite
37 - TV Land
38 - Comedy Central
39 - BET
40 - Univision
41 - Bloomberg Financial Network
42 - College TV Network
43 - MTV
44 - VH1
45 - The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 17, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Nova "Cracking the Code of Life" (N) (In Stereo)				Frontline (In Stereo)		Wedsworth Atheneum
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Dog Days"	News	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Dog Days"	News	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	About Joan	NYPD Blue "Love Hurts" (N)	News	News	Nightline
WLVI		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Bully the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Disharmony" (In Stereo)		Deseline (N) (In Stereo)	News	Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fighting Fitz	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)	TBA	Deseline (N) (In Stereo)	News	News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Blind Date	Blind Date	Bully the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Disharmony" (In Stereo)		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT	9	10 News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Fighting Fitz	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)	TBA	Deseline (N) (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel "Shorties in Love"		News		Friends	Fresier
WWLP	22	11 News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Fighting Fitz	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)	TBA	Deseline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Cracking the Code of Life" (N) (In Stereo)				Frontline (In Stereo)		Cherlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	29 News	ABC News	Spin City	Fresier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	About Joan	NYPD Blue "Love Hurts" (N)	News	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Frasier	Fresier	Chsins of Love (N)		All Sous "Pilot" (N)		Est. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Mad Abt. You
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		NBA Basketball: San Antonio Spurs at Portland Trail Blazers (Live)					Inside NBA
A&E	41	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Jurisdiction"		Biography: Jeffrey Dahmer		City Confidential		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Remand"
CNN	25	23 Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Spin Room	Sports	Moneyline
COM	53	30 Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"How to Be a Player" (1997, Comedy) Bill Bellamy				Battlebots	Battlebots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	42	Why Dogs Smile and Chimpanzees Cry				Prosecutors-Justice		New Detectives "Cold-blooded"		FBI Files "Dishonored"		Justice Files
ESPN	51	Sportscenter		Stanley Cup Playoffs		Conference Quarterfinals Game 4 – Teams to Be Announced (Live)				Baseball Tonight (N)		Sportscenter
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"A House of Secrets and Lies" (1992, Drama) Corina Bellecca				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Direct Effect	Real World Reunion II (In Stereo)			True Life "I'm a Cheerleader"		Real World	Real World	Real World	Sex Club Preview (In Stereo)	TRL All-Star
NICK	55	Pinky & Brain	Catdog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Dlff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	63	Hercules: Legendary Jnys.		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Crusade "The Well of Forever"		"Wishmaster" (1997, Horror)		Tammy Lauren. (In Stereo)		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	29	Human Canvas		Eye Spy: Red Handed		Treuma: Life in the ER		Melamnly Werd		Operation		Treuma: Life in the ER
TNT	20	ER "No Brain, No Gain"		Pretender "Wake-Up"		"Wildcats" (1986, Comedy) Goldie Hawn, James Keech				"Running Mates" (2000, Comedy-Drama) Tom Selleck		"Passion and Prejudice" (2001)
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Rules of Engagement"		Nash Bridges "Firestorm"		"Passion and Prejudice" (2001, Suspense) Frances Fisher				"Passion and Prejudice" (2001)
HBO	59	(5:15) "Video" (1988) PG		"Corazon Dundee II" (1986, Comedy) Paul Hogan. PG-13		"Romeo Must Die" (2000, Action) Jet Li (In Stereo) R				"Romeo Must Die" (2000, Action) Jet Li (In Stereo) R		Sopranos "He Is Risen"
MAX	52	(4:35)		"Screamers" (1995) Peter Weller. R		"Letters From a Killer" (1998, Drama) Patrick Swayze. R				"Wall Street" (1987, Drama) Michael Douglas. R		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)	Queer as Folk
SHOW	53	"Gremlins" (1984, Fantasy) Zach Galligan (In Stereo) PG				"Untamed Heart" (1993, Drama) Christian Slater. PG-13

The Masked Dropout By Robert Hewitt

HEY ROACH, LOOK WHAT I FOUND BETWEEN THE COUCH CUSHIONS!
A MAGIC LAMP!?
POOF
YOUR WISH IS MY COMMAND, MR. DROPOUT.
WHAT WILL MD WISH FOR?
PEACE? JUSTICE? BOOBIES?
TUNE IN NEXT TIME AND FIND OUT!!

The Masked Dropout By Robert Hewitt

MAGIC LAMP PART II
YOUR EVERY WISH IS MY COMMAND, MR. DROPOUT.
WHAT WILL IT BE?
WELL FOR STARTERS...
CAN YOU TAKE YOUR TOP OFF?
POOF
IT WAS WORTH A TRY!
OINK!!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCK, YOU DON'T OPEN JUICE BOXES. YOU JUST LIKE THE STRAW. DO YOU WANT ME TO TEACH YOU HOW TO DO IT?
OH, RIGHT. YOU TEACH ME SOMETHING? THAT'LL BE THE UM. THE UM
"DAY."
DAY.

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?
CHANGING THE BULB IN MY READING LAMP.
THE ONE THAT WAS IN THERE WAS TOO BRIGHT.
IT MADE IT HARD TO STUDY?
IT INTRUDED ON MY DREAMS
IF I'M STUCK READING A BOOK THAT PUTS ME TO SLEEP, I WANT IT TO BE QUALITY SLEEP.
IS THIS WHY PAIGE KEEPS THAT PILLOW ON HER DESK?

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

HEY, SCOTT! I HEARD YOU WENT ON A DATE WITH MY ROOMMATE!
GWEN! I DIDN'T KNOW ERIN WAS YOUR ROOMMATE.
WELL, MAYBE IF YOU HADN'T SPENT THE WHOLE NIGHT TALKING ABOUT YOURSELF...
GAH!! YOU'RE RIGHT! I CAN'T BELIEVE HOW STUPID I AM!
YOU REALLY DID? I WAS ONLY KIDDING, SCOTT! SHE SAID SHE HAD A GOOD TIME!
BUT YOU SHOULDVE GIVEN HER A PROPER KISS! GOOD NIGHT INSTEAD OF SMILING AT HER FOR THIRTY SECONDS.
GAH!
YOU-- REALLY? I SHOULD BE A PHONE PSYCHIC!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, YOUR FREAKY GLOW-IN-THE-DARK EYES ARE KEEPING ME AWAKE. CAN'T YOU TRY TO SLEEP?
YOU KNOW WHAT THEY SAY. ASK ME WHAT YOUR CAT CAN DO FOR YOU. ASK-OK, HAND? WHO IS THIS "THEY" YOU'RE ALWAYS TALKING ABOUT?
OHHH, COME ON, ROB! IT'S THE A.S.P.C.A.!

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Quote of the Day

"Everybody knows... you only live a day, but it's brilliant anyway."
–Elliott Smith

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 45 LOW: 28	HIGH: 46 LOW: 27	HIGH: 51 LOW: 32

Horoscopes

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care that you're not seeing things through rose-colored glasses today. A little more realism will serve you well in all things right now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Use your imagination at every turn today, and you'll marvel at the results you get. Don't let yourself be limited by the word no.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You'll warm up to someone new relatively quickly – considering that it may seem, at first, as though you both have nothing in common.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A new place – and some new people – will attract you in some unusual ways today. Experiment with your own feelings and consider options.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – It's entirely up to you whom to trust today, but those closest to you only have your best interest at heart. Don't turn away from your loved ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – No, your plans haven't been completely ruined, but it may take you some doing before you can feel as though you're really back on track.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Self-discipline is the key today. Focus on things you know you can do – and do well. Haste is dangerous, but you mustn't be too leisurely.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – The promises you make today may not mean as much if you are unwilling to back them up with immediate action. Don't hesitate, delay or back down.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may have been neglecting a particular family member for too long; he or she will let you know that more attention must be paid today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You'll be at best working on your own today, but you may not be able to avoid the company of others at certain moments. Be gracious!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Don't prolong your preparations today; get to the action as soon as you can and you'll enjoy the maximum possible rewards.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – It may take a great deal of unexpected courage today to do even the most seemingly ordinary things. Certain obstacles will prove forbidding.

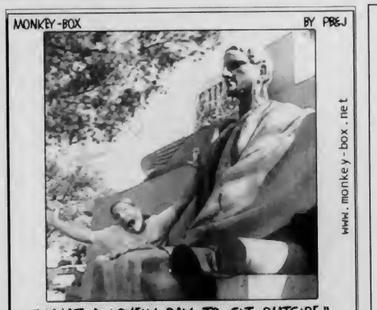
WE DELIVER DELI
Boar's Head Brand
Starting every day at 11:00AM
549-7122
CLAUDIA'S CAFE
In Amherst Carriage Shops
OCMP accepted

ACROSS
1 Wire punctuation
5 Persian Gulf figures
10 Mr. Cannon
14 Sea mist
15 Shore of Washington
16 Actress Skye
17 Comic King
18 Oktomobile model
19 Channel
20 Start of a question
23 Slow traveler
24 Fall guys
28 Café con ___ (coffee with milk)
32 Easy to drive on
33 Some stickers
36 Place for a flock
38 "Have you set yet?"
39 "Evil Woman" artists
40 More of the question
42 Writer's block?
43 Sunshine State city
45 Lorre's detective
46 Hardy girl
47 Olympic skater Baiul
48 Ponder, as evidence
51 Some dog-show entrants
53 Game-show host Pratton
57 End of the question
61 ___ the fly
64 Explosives ingredient
66 Zodiac animal
68 Best-selling cookie
67 Oil-well firefighter Red
68 Christiania today
69 Hot streak
70 Peddles
71 Strung item

DOWN
1 Former Iranian rulers
2 It may connect a limb to a branch
3 Conductor Seiji
4 Eyebrow darkeners
5 First of all
6 Madden
7 From the top
8 Roseanne and Douglas
9 Photo opportunities
10 Was successful
11 Thee, updated
12 Mandela's org.
13 Spiker's banter
21 Flamenco cheer
22 "Enough!" in Mexico
26 Completely lose it
28 James and Kett
27 Backyard units
29 Intel product
30 Soccer star Mia
31 Macaroni shape
34 Office writings
34 Similar
35 Shoreline
37 Dole (out)
40 Calif. footballer
41 Former French leaders?
44 Bull session participant?
46 Movie menace
48 Gund and Rupp, e.g.
50 Mad dog's warning
52 Sarcastic
54 Pretense
56 Sicilia or Capri
56 Ecclesiastical council
58 List shortening abbr.
59 Sign of secrecy
60 Shown one's humanity
61 Snagged
62 Blood-pressure raiser
63 Shepherd's setting

PREVIOUS PUZZLE ANSWER

© 2001 Universal Press Syndicate
www.unipress.com



"WHAT A LOVELY DAY TO SIT OUTSIDE," THE GIANT THOUGHT, IGNORING THE SPLINTERING FEMURS AND SCREAMS.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Broccoli-Rice Casserole (vegetarian) (B, F, W)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan) (B, H, W)

Falafel Pocket Sandwich with Falafel Sauce (vegan)

Fiesta Rice and Cheese (vegetarian) (H)

DINNER

Chicken Breast with Rice Stuffing (B, W)

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Tofu Fajita (vegan) (B, H, W)

Roast Pork (F)

Beef Fajita (H)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Mark Holloway, Laina Erde
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Jess Grant
Production Staff	John Dicker, Riki Akid

FORTUNE
100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR FORTUNE
2000

FORTUNE
100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR
1999

History has a way of repeating itself. Pretty cool, huh?

For three years in a row, we've been named one of the 100 Best Companies To Work For. With real opportunities for leadership and advancement, perhaps you'll want to join us as we go for four.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

©2001 Ernst & Young LLP

David Spade has a mullet that would make Wesley Willis proud. Read about it in Arts

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Senior Gavin Clark provided more than enough offense with a grand slam in the baseball team's 11-3 win over UConn yesterday.

ARTS p. 6

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 118 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, April 18, 2001

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Exchanging Bodily Fluids

Students are offered ice cream outside the Student Union in exchange for a blood donation. Mmmmmm.

Committee seeks student to address convocation

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Speech! Students of the University of Massachusetts who are interested in addressing new students at the 2001 Convocation this fall can enter their applications to the New Students Convocation Committee through Friday April 27, 2001.

"The speech should welcome the new students with enthusiasm and inspiration," the UMass Alumni Association said in a press release. "Speeches should also include words of wisdom and advice about being a member of the UMass community."

Students interested in delivering the speech at Convocation must submit their entry to Jennifer Arsenault, Assistant Director for Alumni Communications. The applications should be dropped off at Memorial Hall and must contain contact information including a summer address and phone number.

Convocation is one of the many events that new students at the University take part in at the beginning of their college career. The event takes place after most students have gone through their summer orientation and before they start classes. This year's convocation will be held on Sunday, Sept. 2, 2001.

Each year, the new students are greeted by several prominent figures representing the university. These persons range from the Student Government Association (SGA) President, to the University Chancellor. Besides the student speaker, a faculty member also presents an oration.

Kim McLaughlin, a sophomore Communication and Theater major, spoke at last year's convocation. "It's a huge thing because it's only offered once a year. Out of 24,000 students, only one gets to give the speech," McLaughlin said. "It's a huge honor."

McLaughlin said that writing the speech was a last minute decision. She didn't really plan on doing it, and actually didn't even have time to write the speech before she brought it to the committee. A few weeks after she finished writing it, she was invited to read it in front of a panel of judges. She later found out that the committee had narrowed the amount of entered speeches to three final contestants.

"I read it in front of the committee and then went home for the summer," McLaughlin said. "About two weeks later I got a call from them congratulating me."

McLaughlin's speech was about pointers she wished someone had told her of before she came to the UMass. "Thing's like wearing flip-

Turn to SPEAKER page 3

Eltringham to vacate post

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Tonight's Student Government Association Senate meeting will be one of surprise as Speaker of the Senate Jim Eltringham has requested to step down from his position.

At last night's Administrative Affairs committee meeting, a unanimous recommendation was given to create a motion that would allow Eltringham to step down as Speaker. In stepping down, the motion will call for Eltringham to fill one of the vacant Commuter Area Senate seats for the remainder of the Senate's term.

"I've been trying to figure out what I can really do to make a lasting impression because people forget who you are after a few years," Eltringham said. "I've felt that this past year there has been a false unimportant era of what the Senate's job is. I feel what I have to offer lies no longer within my position as Speaker, and this will give me a second chance to be a senator once again."

SGA President John Sheehan was shocked after learning of Eltringham's decision to step down yesterday evening.

"This totally caught me by surprise," Sheehan said. "No one informed me, but I'm going to sit down with Jim [Eltringham] and talk about it. If this is what he feels is best, I fully support his decision, but I really was looking forward to getting to work with him this semester."

Sheehan continued to explain that he felt that this will be a shock to many Senate members as well as students on campus.

"I still can't believe it, Jim [Eltringham] has been a figure in the Senate ever since I came here and I can't begin to say what people will be thinking," Sheehan said.

Eltringham however, explained that, as a senator, he would be able to aid new students having viewed the positions of the Senate from both sides of the spectrum.

"This decision was not one that I have taken lightly and I don't think people appreciate the Senate as much as they should," Eltringham said. "I feel that having been apart of the Senate, and being on the other side as well I will be able to let people know what the Senate is really about."

Eltringham further explained that this was not a decision that he made lightly.

Members of the Administrative Affairs committee questioned Eltringham about how Associate Speaker Mike McCarthy will fill the position of Speaker for the remainder of the semester.

"There is no doubt in my mind that Mike can handle the job, if I didn't think he could handle it I would never have stepped down," Eltringham said.

Aside from the to be announced motion to move Eltringham from Speaker to Senate member, the Senate will be facing motions tabled at last Wednesday's Senate meeting as well.

One motion up for discussion involves the English as a Second Language (ESL) program. A motion will be presented asking for three year contracts to be given to two of four professors whose contracts were not renewed due to budget cuts. The motion, which was presented last week, provoked controversy over the continuing decline of Asian Latino African and Native American's (ALANA) student enrollment at the University of Massachusetts.

Tonight's SGA Senate meeting will be held in the Campus Center at 7 p.m.

Young to lecture on Holocaust

University of Massachusetts professor James Young, a leading authority on Holocaust memorialization, will speak on Wednesday, April 18 at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall as part of Holocaust Memorial Week at UMass.

James Young

Young, Chairman of the Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies and a faculty member in the English Department, has entitled his lecture and slide presentation, "After-Images of the Holocaust in Contemporary Art and Architecture." The speech will explore the relationship of post-Holocaust generation artists to the events of which they have no memory, as well as German attempts to memorialize the atrocity that took place in its name.

Young is an important international voice on the subject of Holocaust remembrance. He has lectured extensively throughout Europe, Israel and the United States and is the author of Writing and Rewriting the Holocaust. The Texture of Memory, and At Memory's Edge. Young is also the only foreigner named by the German government to the five-member commission that will choose the design for the national Holocaust memorial in Germany, currently under construction in Berlin.

Holocaust Memorial Week will conclude on Thursday, April 19 with a Memorial Service at 7:00 p.m. on the Campus Pond Lawn. The rain or cold location will be in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union. The Office of Jewish Affairs, the Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, the Jewish Student Union, and UMass Hillel sponsor the three-event project, which also included a lecture by UMass Professor Aviva Ben-Ur on Tuesday night.

– Chanel Dubofsky

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

There's music in the air...

As long as there is sunshine there will be music played around town.

UMass ready for emergencies

By Erik Haon
Collegian Staff

The Emergency Medical Technician Unit at the University of Massachusetts offers students a chance to give back to their community as well as learn some valuable life-saving techniques.

The organization, which was originally established in 1933 as a volunteer fire department, is both organized and run by undergraduates, graduates, and continuing education students. It works a variety of on-campus events, including performances at the Fine Arts Center, football games, and Haigis Hoopla, but has one main supporter, as Tom Valle, one of the approximately 40 EMTs, explained.

"Our biggest supporter is the Mullins Center," he said. "We work everything from the basketball games to the Home Show."

It is at these events that UMass EMS works in conjunction with the UMass Police Department, as a way of giving the UMPD some necessary assistance. The UMass EMS website (www.umass.edu/ems), clarified just how this is accomplished.

"[We] are dispatched to [patients] by event staff or the UMass Police Department...we are in radio contact with UMPD and the fire inspector on duty."

For larger events UMass EMS makes available a primary first aid room as well as a triage room for patients awaiting the next available transportation to a hospital. A hired local ambulance company or the Amherst Fire Department usually provides this transportation.

The fact that UMass EMS, which is a Registered Student Organization, does not have its own ambulance transportation to hospitals speaks to the fact that it relies on limited funding.

"[A] big bump we're hitting is the vehicle," said Valle. "It can cost $35,000 to $40,000."

The unit, which receives no income from billing because it provides its services free of charge, relies primarily on donations from the Environmental Health and Safety Department and University Health Services. EH&S provides vehicles to transport equipment and radios. UHS donates all disposable medical supplies, such as gloves and bandages, and disposes of EMS' biohazardous materials.

Funding comes from the Student Government Association, the annual Spring Concert (from which pay for eight to 10 EMTs), an occasional fundraiser, and profits from the classes that EMS offers.

These classes, which are open annually to the public and are available as scheduled events for campus departments and organizations, are made available to offer people experience in techniques that could save lives. For those who wish to take their training to another level, EMS makes available a state-certified program.

"A State Certified EMT instructor works closely with members of our unit to train future EMTs for both work at the University and in the real world," said EMS on its website.

It is through this program that EMS hopes to increase its staff of EMTs. When asked if EMS has a goal for a number of staff members, Valle responded that there is always a demand for more help.

"[We need] just as many [people] as we can get," Valle said. "Other campuses this size usually have about 60 people."

The program is offered every semester, as well as over the summer, and involves 150 hours of dedication. This time is split between lecture and actual hands-on experience. A $100 non-refundable deposit is required upon joining and a $450 charge, which includes materials such as books, is assessed once the class starts. This price does not include the charge for the state exam, which runs between $75 and $80, according to Valle.

After passing both the course and the exam and being hired by EMS through EH&S, one is also given the opportunity to earn academic credit, be trained in fire safety, and learn how to properly use a fire extinguisher. Fire safety is essential to members of EMS, as one of the requirements of the unit is to perform building fire safety inspections prior to campus events.

This responsibility, though extremely important, is only a part of the influence that EMS would like to have on campus, however.

"In the future we want to start a first response system, where we answer 911 calls," Valle said. "If there's a medical emergency on campus, we would respond."

Currently, UMass relies on the Amherst Fire Department to provide its emergency medical services for non-event situations. The burden on the AFD is heavy, however, as it serves four or five towns, according to Valle. This cuts down response time for UMass students who need emergency assistance, especially during the weekends, when the AFD is busiest. While the AFD's ambulance would still be necessary for transportation to hospitals, EMS would provide students with a way

Turn to EMS page 3

Cultural Events Calendar

ACTIVISM

WASHINGTON – Save the date: "Emergency Action for Women's Lives" will take place on Sunday, April 22. Reproductive rights supporters from across the country will converge in Upper Senate Park in Washington, D.C., targeting the Senate to prevent the packing of the Supreme Court with anti-abortion rights justices. This event will kick off a four-year campaign by the National Organization for Women (NOW) and more than 100 organizational and congressional sponsors, and will cap two weeks of state lobbying events during the Senate's spring recess. A rally will take place at 11 a.m., followed by a "Step Off" at 2 p.m. Contact Kristen at Kshaver2286@aol.com for more information.

COURTESY OF WORLD WIDE WEB

Four years after the president of her fan club gunned her down in a Corpus Christi hotel room, scores of fans still flock to the Texas town to visit her home, the boutique that sells her clothing line, and her grave. In Lourdes Portillo's new documentary, "Corpus: A Home Movie for Selena," they share the spotlight with her. Portillo paints an affectionate portrait of the slain Tejano star and her somewhat troubling legacy. The film will be shown at 7:30 p.m. in Herter 231 on Thursday, April 19.

SOCIAL

UMASS – The ninth annual "Take Our Daughters to Work Day" will be celebrated at UMass Amherst on Thursday, April 26, 2001. The idea for this day was conceived by the Ms. Foundation for the purpose of building confidence and self-esteem in young girls (the target age group is nine to 15). Employees and students are invited to bring a daughter, granddaughter, niece, or other children to the event. The event is FREE and does not require advance registration. For more information, go to the Equal Opportunity & Diversity Website (www.umass.edu/eod) or call the Office at 545-3464.

NORTHAMPTON – A "Gala Latin Night" to benefit the International Language Institute of Massachusetts will take place in the Inn at Northampton on Friday, April 27 at 8 p.m. The Grand Ballroom will be transformed into a Latin paradise when Yoshi Kogo, of Yoshi Productions, will present the live Latin sounds of Ray Gonzalez and his 11-piece jazz band Orquesta Versatil. This is the kick-off night for a series of multicultural local events. Advance tickets are $25 per person, and $45 per couple. To purchase tickets, contact Sue Arthen at (413) 586-7569.

UMASS – There will be a Holocaust Memorial Service on Thursday, April 19 on the Campus Pond Lawn at 7:00 p.m. Rain or cold location is the Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union. Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, Hillel House, and the Jewish Student Union.

UMASS – "Boxes and Walls: The Oppression Experiment," an interactive museum, will take place on April 23-26 in the Campus Center Room 174-176. Tours of seven to nine will leave every half hour and last approximately one hour. Hours of operation are Monday 4-6 p.m.; Tuesday 4-7 p.m.; Wednesday 4-8 p.m.; and Thursday 4-9 p.m. For information contact rafull@external.umass.edu or call 549-1710.

FILM/VIDEO SCREENINGS

NORTHAMPTON – "MadCat Women's International Film Festival." Avant-garde, experimental and independent films by women directors will be shown at 7 p.m. in Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium on Saturday, April 21 and Sunday, April 22.

UMASS – A multicultural film festival, "Border Crossing: Cinema and Video at Century's Turn," will be held on dates from Feb. 16 to May 10. The series highlights the fluidity and permanence of artistic, technical, geographic, cultural, political and personal borders and includes film and video screenings and panel presentations. For more information, call Film Studies at 545-3659.

LECTURE/DISCUSSION

UMASS – "15 Years of the Lesbian Calendar." This event features a multimedia history of the Pioneer Valley's lesbian community through photos and oral histories. The presentation will take place at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center (room TBA) on Thursday, April 19.

UMASS – James Allan, a graduate student in Communications at UMass Amherst will present a lecture entitled, "And Baby Makes Three…Gay Men, Straight Women and the Parental Imperative in Film and Television" on Thursday, April 26 at 12:30 p.m. in the Campus Center room 904-08.

NORTHAMPTON – "Media, Gender and Culture," a panel discussion moderated by author Mary Pipher and including panelists Jean Kilbourne, Ann Arnett Ferguson and Michael Kimmel, will take place on Friday, April 20 from 10:00 a.m. to noon at John M. Greene Hall, Smith College. For more information call (413) 584-8500.

UMASS – Cast members from MTV's 'The Real World' will hold a conversation on sex, being queer and life behind the camera on Thursday, April 26 at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. This event is sponsored by the Stonewall Center, and will feature a performance by the Not Ready for Bedtime Players. Tickets are $3 for UMass students, and $5 for non-students.

PERFORMANCE

UMASS – "Lockdown," a multidimensional music, art and lecture event that will explore the economic ramifications of the U.S. prison system, will take place from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Saturday, April 28, in the Bluewall Cafeteria. Fast coast hip-hop acts Masterminds, Akrobatik and Mic Head will headline, joined on the program by locals DJ Astrosphere and DJ Adam. Asatar Bair, a graduate student in the UMass Economics department, will speak on the prison system in relation to issues of justice for poor and minority citizens. For more information, call 546-5146. The event is free.

NORTHAMPTON – "Sol/Soul Celebration of Diversity," featuring open mic, world music (including Afro-Brazilian drumming), and acappella groups the Smithereens and the Do-Wop Shop, will take place on Friday, April 20 at 8 p.m. in Field House at Smith College. Indian and Middle Eastern appetizers and hot chai will be served. Proceeds from the $2 admission will benefit a Smith student's volunteer relief efforts in India. For more information, call (413) 585-6739.

UMASS – "Nuyorican Stories" will be performed with sidesplitting humor by the members of Culture Clash, who blend poetry, dance, music and visual arts. The show will be performed at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on Thursday, April 19. For tickets, which range from 5 to 10 dollars, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.

UMASS – "Bugaku: Japanese Court Dance" will be performed by Arawana Hyashi and the Jo Ha Kyu ensemble on Thursday, April 19, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. This program in the spring finale of the Asian Dance and Music Program Series.

UMASS – "I Remember Mapa," a conical one-man show starring Alec Mapa, will be performed one night only at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on May 10. Based on his true-life experiences, the piece chronicles Mapa's colorful adventures through rise, fall and rebirth as a gay Filipino American actor in the entertainment industry. For tickets, which range from $5 to $10, call the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.

SOUTH HADLEY – The Mount Holyoke College Concert Choir will present its Spring Concert in the Abbey Memorial Chapel on April 22 at 2:00 p.m.

UMASS – The poetry-in-performance series "Words She Spoke" presents spoken word with Staceyann Chin and Melinda Corazon Foley at 6:30 p.m. on April 24 at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library.

SOUTH HADLEY – The first annual W.A.M. (Women and Music) festival, featuring Catie Curtis, Melissa Ferrick, Erica Wheeler, and Alix Olson, among others, will take place on Saturday, April 28 at Mount Holyoke College, beginning at 11 a.m. The event will include vendors as well as arts and crafts. Tickets are available at B-Side Records in Northampton, For the Record in Amherst, and all Strawberries stores.

EXHIBITIONS

NORTHAMPTON – Ongoing exhibition "The Strongest of Bonds: William Allan Neilson, Internationalism and Exiles at Smith College" will run through June 30 in the third floor of Neilson Library at Smith College.

NORTHAMPTON – "The Refugees," two life-sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck, can be viewed through May 28 in the third floor of Neilson Library at Smith College.

AMHERST – "Of Many Colors: Portraits of Multiracial Families," an award winning photo text exhibit will be at the Keefe Campus Center Auditorium through April 21. The event is sponsored by Students of Mixed Heritage at Amherst College.

This calendar, which previews local events of interest to under-represented groups on campus and in the community, runs on Wednesdays. Submit notices of events to Tanya Mannes, Diversity Editor, and Chanel Dubofsky, Assistant Diversity Editor. Standard entry forms are available in the Collegian office.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargania Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Coming Tomorrow!
Hosted by:
UMASS FOOD SERVICES
TASTE OF UMASS
FOOD EXHIBITION 2001
Bigger and better than ever!
Thursday
April 19, 2001
4:30 pm to 7:00 pm
MULLINS CENTER
Restaurants
Vendors
Prizes
Entertainment
Sponsored by:
Coca-Cola
Great Food, Great Fun!
Hosted by Auxillary Services
www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

Silver Fimo Beads Leather Silkpainting Copper Tie-dye
Screenprinting Brass Photo marbling Stained Glass
AND MORE
STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER
WE OFFER: FREE MEMBERSHIP AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL UMASS STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF. MEMBERS FRO MTHE FOUR COLLEGES MUST PAY A SMALL FEE, $15/SEMESTER OR $25 FOR THE YEAR.
AS A MEMEBER OF THE STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER YOU CAN USE THE FACILITIES ANY TIME DURING OUR DROP IN HOURS
MONDAY CLOSED
TUESDAY - THURSDAY 11:00 - 5:00
FRIDAY 11:00 - 6:00
SATURDAY - SUNDAY 1:00 - 6:00
WE OFFER: SMALL EVENING WORKSHOPS THROUGHOUT THE SEMESTER, THESES WORKSOPS ALLOW FOR INDIVIDUAL ATTENTION AS YOU LEARN NEW SKILLS AND TECHNIQUES.
PHONE 545-2096
www.umass.edu/rso/craftctr
THE CRAFT CENTER IS LOCATED INTHE BASEMENT OF THE STUDENT UNION
BEGINNERS WELCOME

■ speaker

continued from page 1

flops in the shower," she said.

McLaughlin said that students considering writing a speech should keep it very personal, and not to get too professional. "Remember that you're addressing a group of incoming freshman, so make it really personalized," she explained. "It doesn't have to be fancy or anything. People like to hear personal experiences so it's the best way to get them to listen to you."

Her biggest tip for prospective authors was to stand in the shoes of the incoming freshman and act as the audience while writing the speech. "Think of what would get your attention," she said.

For further information on entering a speech, the Alumni Communication office can be contacted at 545-2517.

Police Log

Annoying Behavior
April 10
There was an individual causing a disturbance outside of the Parking Services Trailer Complex.
April 11
There were four tires slashed on a vehicle in lot 44.
There was offensive graffiti found in the bathroom in John Adams Dormitory.
Larceny
April 10
A delivery driver reported that both cash and food had been stolen from him in Moore Dormitory.
April 11
Two rings and a watch valued at over $500 were stolen from Kennedy Dormitory.
April 13
A purse was reported stolen from Franklin Dining Commons.
Four hubcaps were stolen from a vehicle in lot 12 on Forestry Way.
April 16
A wallet was stolen from Totman Physical Education Building.
There was a wallet that was stolen from Butterfield Dormitory and the credit cards were used illegally.
Suspicious Person Activity
April 10
There was a report of a suspicious person outside of Brooks Dormitory.
There was a report of a suspicious person outside of the Alumni Stadium.
There was suspicious activity near the Student Credit Union.
April 11
There was suspicious activity on Clark Hill Road.
There was a report of a suspicious person in the Student Union.
April 13
There was a report of suspicious activity or a suspicious person in lot 32.
April 14
There was suspicious person activity at Nelson House on East Pleasant St.
Vandalism
April 11
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 52.
There was offensive graffiti was directed at an individual in John Adams Dormitory.
April 12
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 11 North of Alumni Stadium.
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 33 South of Massachusetts Ave.
April 13
The lounge on the fifth floor of Washington Dormitory was trashed and damage was done to the furniture.
Offensive graffiti was carved into a resident's door in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 44 off of Sylvan Road.
There was damage done to a vehicle in lot 22 on University Drive.
April 14
A window was found smashed in the Continuing Education Building.
Two vehicles were found with their tires slashed in lot 52 near the University Apartments parking area.

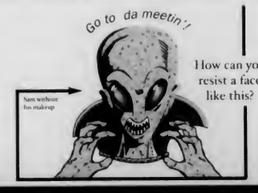
■ ems

continued from page 1

to get immediate attention.

The first response system would be a major step towards continuing the growth of UMass EMS.

"We hope to continue our growth in the years to come by qualified EMTs who are already members of the campus community, and by covering more and more events around campus," EMS said. "We also hope to continue educating students and faculty about the importance of safety throughout the campus and community."



Human waste leads to more parking problems

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Police Department arrested two students in lot 33 following an investigation of a suspicious vehicle.

Nineteen-year-old Einmet Williams of Rosendale, New York, was arrested for possession of alcohol on Monday and 19-year-old Joseph Crispino of Staten Island was arrested for both possession of liquor and possession of a class D substance.

"There were four occupants in the vehicle," Jim Lyons the spokesman for UMPD explained. "Two of them were found to be in possession of alcohol and one of them was found to have a small bag of a substance that resembled marijuana.

An individual called the police to report that someone had left what appeared to be human waste on his vehicle outside of Field Dormitory in a no parking zone. The individual believed that he knew who left the material on his car; however, he refused to supply the police with a name. Officers asked the individual to remove his vehicle from the no parking zone.

A fight reported to have occurred outside of Coolidge Dormitory on Wednesday. According to Lyons, a physical altercation occurred between the two parties that had a previous altercation at a party the weekend before. The two saw each other again and proceeded to fight. Both refused medical or police assistance.

Police received a call from an individual concerned for the safety of five or six high school students that were walking along a ledge outside of the Campus Center. The individuals left before the police arrived.

A couple walking their dog noticed a damaged vehicle in lot 15. Upon further investigation police discovered that three vehicles in the lot were damaged all of them with smashed passenger side windows. In two of the three vehicles the cd player was stolen and in the third was an attempted theft of a cd player that failed.

A resident in Emerson Dormitory reported that other residents in the low-rise were throwing bottles out of the windows of the building. Police responded to the scene to find that a baseball had been thrown into a window in the building and the students were pushing the broken glass out onto the pavement.

There was a bonfire that was spotted north of the Observatory Building on Friday. An officer patrolling the area spotted a small fire in the woods with no one near it. The fire was put out 5 to ten minutes.

A patrolling officer spotted a male and female in lot 33 on Sunday night having a violent verbal argument. The officer asked the two to return to their dormitory rooms and stopped the fight.

Police received a call from an angry student in Crabtree Dormitory complaining that his roommate was difficult to deal with. He complained that the roommate had a variety of unusual habits and nuances to his personality that made his behavior annoying. Police informed the student that he should call housing services to address the difficulty.

ALL STAFF MEETING TONIGHT at SEVEN P.M.
Be there or you're fired.

New Puffton Village. Great Apartments Minutes from Campus.
Now Accepting applications for Summer/Fall 2001
Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Phone #:
(413) 549-0145
NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving all of your Rental Needs

University Productions and Concerts
and
Black Russian Entertainment
present
Fünkenfashion
04.19.01
with MTV's
DJ Skribble
DJ Big Phil
with fashion by:
d'arby (women's line)
the growroom (men's line)
Student Union Ballroom @ 8:00 pm
Full Cash Bar
$5 [umass] $10 [public]
Tickets on sale @ tix unlimited and @ door
For further info call 413-545-2892

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

New Provost:
Big shoes to fill

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst is the oldest established campus of the finest public higher education in the Commonwealth. We must bear this in mind as the current administration situation plays itself out before our eyes. With impending budget cuts, increased student agitation and faculty retention on the decline, the administration is losing two of its top officials. We have long known that Chancellor David K. Scott is leaving during the summer; Provost and senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Cora B. Marrett will now join him.

She too is leaving the halls of Whitmore. This is very unfortunate. Marrett, by all accounts, was a tireless advocate for the academic interests for the students of this University. As projected planning with reduced spending was implemented on the campus, it was Cora Marrett who defended the primary reason for this University: Education.

While more budget cuts hit the campus, it was the endless efforts of the Provost and her staff, combined with the support of the faculty that protected academic affairs from the worst of the cuts.

As Provost, she has never failed in her mission, to continue to increase the educational experience of the students at the University of Massachusetts. It was her efforts that shaped, for better or worse, the Commonwealth College through its infancy.

After all, education is why we are here. Now, we may not make it to every class, and we may not pass every test, but we all recognize the fact is we are not simply here for a four to six year keg stand on our parents- or more frequently on our own- monies. In the ever changing world in which we live, it has become harder and harder to 'make it' in society without a degree from an institution of higher learning.

It is because of people like Cora Marrett, people who give themselves selflessly to the protection of educational values, that our University educations are worth something in the future. The Chancellor is often regarded as the head of the campus; basically it is name that everyone associates with the good and especially the bad on campus. But it is ultimately the Provost who looks after the quality of our education. It is on the basis of the Provost's reputation and hard work that a degree from the University of Massachusetts means something.

We can only hope that the senior administration of the University ensure that Marrett's successor is as capable and as dedicated as she was in the role of Provost. We, the students, need not only a hardworking individual, but somebody who knows the business of running a large public University, and ensuring that all majors, be they history, English, biochemistry, or food science are able to pursue their degrees with the utmost support of the Provost and their staff.

This University encompasses everything from liberal arts majors, to hard sciences, to practical applications of agriculture and building materials. We need someone who will look out for all students. We need somebody that will ensure that every student has a chance to meet and exceed their expectations. We will miss Provost Marrett, and hope that her successor can fill her shoes. It will not be a small task.

Unsigned editorials represent the opinion of the majority of the Collegian editorial board.

How close is too close?
The complex student-teacher relationship

EMILY VACANTI

Teacher-student relations. How close is too close? The reason that I ask is because I am seeing a certain situation more and more. For some reason, students are dating teachers. I am not saying that every teacher has dated a student or that every student has dated a teacher. What I am saying is that it seems to be becoming more and more popular, and less and less taboo.

Some teachers are doing this openly while more and more students seem to be boasting about it.

About a week ago, I was walking around before my class started and saw a scene that I am quite used to seeing: a teacher and student were having an intimate conversation. They were very close to each other; closer than what I am used to seeing. Close enough to arouse curiosity in me; I decided to walk by very slowly. Their conversation went something like this: Teacher – "I am very fond of you and would like a relationship with you, but I do not know about our future together." Student – "I want a relationship with you too, and would like to consider marriage." T – "I do not know how marriage would work, but I do want to try a relationship with you." The conversation proceeded in this manner. The thing that struck me most was not the content of the conversation, but the openness. These two were not being subtle about their relationship. Their faces were close together, but they were speaking loudly enough for passerby to easily hear. As intimate as their conversation looked, it also seemed to be open to the public.

This is what I have a problem with. If teachers choose to date students, they should do so subtly. You cannot stop this from happening because it is a free country and the vast majority of college students are of legal age, but there are many ways to discourage it, and threatening to fire a teacher for this kind of activity seems a bit harsh. I can understand why both teachers and students choose to do so, but it should not be so condoned.

For those of you that question why teachers would do this, consider this situation: you are a forty-five year old professor (male or female). You are still physically attractive in a way, but women (or men, respectively) are not lining up outside you door (either your office or home). Then an attractive, young co-ed starts showing interest in you.

She/he's full of life, smart, nice, physically appealing, and interested in you. The right thing to do is to continue your teacher-student relationship and to not bring anything physical into it. But some teachers will take the road less traveled and start an actual relationship with the student.

For those of you that question why students would do this, consider this situation: you are an undergraduate who is smart, may or may not be physically attractive, and you are mature for your age. You notice a professor who catches your attention significantly. He/she is smart, an excellent professor, can relate to students, and physically attractive. This professor can also carry a good conversation and can challenge you mentally. Being an undergraduate, you know that you should not even consider dating a professor, especially not your own. The question that is still in your mind, even though you know how taboo this is, is: Will I find an undergrad that is as mature, intelligent, and mentally challenging as this professor? These two situations are examples of situations that I have actually been privilege to hear about. I know students that have both considered, as well as actually dated, professors. From what I have seen, the level of maturity and intelligence of a professor is what gets to many undergrads. It is either very hard, or in some cases impossible, to find an undergrad that can mentally stimulate another undergrad as well as many teachers can.

Everyone has been touched, in one way or another, by a professor. I have had five professors touch me in a way that has changed me forever. Two of them are females and two of them (one female, one male) are also department heads. Just because they have touched me both mentally and emotionally, that does not mean that either of us let the relationship go beyond professional.

Professor Petroff is one of the very few reasons why I am still in school. She has a way of helping you through a variety of situations. The amazing thing about her is that even though she is a friend to many, many students, she keeps everything extremely professional. She is beautiful, smart, full of life, she loves to teach, she is understanding, and helpful. She is also the most professional female professor that I have encountered on this campus, which also makes her the most respectable female professor that I have met.

Doctor Felton is another amazing teacher. In her class, she related to students through many different non-physical means. Her class is "Classical Mythology" and she does a great job teaching it. She also is open to student suggestions and is willing to help each of them as much as possible, as all professors should be.

Professor Faulkner is...different. There is really no way to describe him. You need to actually experience him. He described himself as "zany." As "zany" as he is, he is an excellent professor. Many of my peers from his 324 class agreed that he is one of the best professors around.

Professor Faulkner has a method of teaching that gets students interested. I was actually upset when I overslept and missed his class.

Professor Fisher, who is also the head of the Sociology Department, parallels with no one. I say this because at one point I was dropped from a class the day after add/drop ended. I needed the three credits, yet it was too late to pick up another class and there was no way that I was going back to the class that I had been dropped from. I told Fisher my situation and he offered me a three credit Independent Study. In addition to this, he always helps his students out with a variety of different situations, including poor teacher-student relations, not being able to get into classes, and getting into the major. He is one of the few exemplary professors on this campus.

Sheriff Garvey. I have only had him this semester, but I can tell what a great teacher he is. He keeps the class interested, as well as entertained, and is willing to say things that other teachers never would say in fear that a student might be offended. He is strict, but also understanding.

If these five professors can maintain good relations with students without letting the relations get personal, then any professor can. The fact that professors even consider less than professional relations with students is ridiculous. But it does go both ways. Being friends with a professor and visiting him/her during office hours is one thing. Dating them is quite another. This should not be tolerated. Not only because it is taboo, but also because it is, in itself, wrong.

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian Columnist.

Questions for young and restless

I'm often accused of being a conservative, particularly in the cramped intellectual confines of Amherst. I confess, I am not always comfortable with the term, but just as I settle into it, you remind me of why I'd like to save either the term or myself from disgrace. Recently you invited David Horowitz to campus to speak on the issue of reparations for slavery and race in general.

Horowtiz asks provocative question that challenge the status quo; questions we ought to be open to and that ought to be openly debated at any self-respecting university.

And you did a wonderful job in bringing out the predictable anti-intellectual criticism from the campus left. But given your own actions, it's hard to believe that you really wanted to provoke a debate. Indeed, it looks like you simply wanted to ignite unreflective controversy, a goal that's not so laudable. Being good conservatives, I can only assume that you want to be held responsible for the choices you make.

In the first place, you yourselves were responsible for putting up flyers – in other student groups names – condemning Horowitz and threatening campus disturbances. And you're so proud of the fact, that you came out boasting about it. If you're going to be Machiavellian, at least have the forbearance to keep quiet.

More importantly, you undermined your own cause. if you're really interested in a respectful hearing for Horowitz's views, and think they're serious enough to be taken seriously, why add fuel to the fire? Why deliberately act in ways that will cause unreasoned heat rather than reasoned discussion? In fact, actions like yours are what lead to all the extra security that Horowtiz "requires," which made the event itself a great disappointment. In the name of openness you ran a closed even, not letting in any students who came late. Never before has a public event here had such requirements. On top of which, you didn't give notice of this fact beforehand.

You never told students that if they couldn't come promptly at noon, then they might as well not bother. Prior notice, so that people who want to conform to the rules have a chance to do so, is key if you're then going to hold them accountable. It's akin to the rule of law, which you're supposed to favor. Then again, judging by your bullying manners to students who honestly wanted to get in but who had no idea that they needed to be there right on time, orderly rules weren't what you were interested in.

Being good conservatives you've surely heard Lord Acton's dictum: "power corrupts." Now you've demonstrated it.

Yes, I know. Horowitz's security requires it. Maybe, then, you shouldn't go around posting threatening signs, so Horowitz could talk about his ideas without the security, which brings us to the talk itself.

Preapproved questions? Sounds a bit like the Stalinist left you're criticizing and pretty shabby for an intellectual discussion. Did you borrow their rules of debate? If those are Horowitz's rules, why bring him in the name of an intellectual debate? We already know that anti-intellectualism runs rampant on the campus left. Now you demonstrate that it exists just as powerfully on the right. But then, I should remember, you're the group that brought Ollie North – a liar on par with President Clinton – last year and trumpeted him as a hero.

This is the man who brought us the Iran-Contra scandal, which, to my astonishment, many of you young Republicans defend, even though the president you putatively admire, Reagan, condemns North's action in no uncertain terms.

Perhaps you don't remember what North did. If we are to believe Reagan (and unlike North's supporters, I do), North led a cabal against president and Congress.

Perhaps your failure to condemn North comes from a failure to understand the Constitution. The Constitution, as designed by James Madison, is a profoundly conservative document, due to its institutional logic: the separation of powers and checks and balances. The logic is that policy will be deliberative, but that no single party (or man) will simply push its agenda through.

Along comes Lt. Colonel Oliver North and decides that he, not Congress or the president, best understands and represents our national interest. North sells American missiles to Iran – whom Reagan labeled a terrorist nation – all bought with taxpayer dollars, mind you, explicitly against U.S. law. The money from the sell was then channeled to a Swiss bank account, after, of course, a few middlemen skimmed a couple million dollars off the top (did I mention those were taxpayer dollars?).

North then channeled the money to the Contras, again explicitly against U.S. law. Apparently, if the Constitution gets in the way, then it's dispensable. That's tantamount to treason. If someone on the left acted in such a fashion, you'd call for his head (and rightly so). The trouble with principle (you remember that old-fashioned conservative value?) is that it applies to both left and right.

Odd that you wanted to impeach President Clinton for perjury (he surely perjured himself) and yet you celebrated North for... treason? Conservatism must always be judged by what principles it seeks to conserve – that is the essence of conservatism. I'm having trouble figuring out just what, if anything, you stand for. John Stuart Mill, that great nineteenth-century liberal, called conservatives the stupid party. Your actions make Mill's quip sting.

George Thomas is a UMass graduate student.

GEORGE THOMAS

Vote for your favorite Spring Break photo!

Visit the Collegian table in the Campus Center concourse and let your pennies and spare change do the talking!

All proceeds go to charity, and the winning photo lands on the front page!

A picture is worth a thousand words... or every ounce of change you own. Pay up!

Liberals vs. Conservatives

SAM WILKINSON

There's a deep quicksand that's consuming this nation and the wrong people are getting sucked in. Nobody sees it coming and they get stuck in it. And the squawking monkeys above the sand? They just keep on making noise. Some story first.

When I left my hometown, I left behind some people who always tended to believe that the world should be more conservative than it is. Regardless of what the issue, these choice individuals really, truly, deeply and religiously believed that a world more conservative than we currently live in would be a better place for all involved.

Then I came to the University of Massachusetts, and I met people who truly believe that the world should be more liberal than it is. Regardless of what the issue, these choice individuals really, truly, deeply and religiously believe that a world more liberal than we currently live in would be a better place for all involved.

Which leaves me in a quandary: who's right?

If I listen to the people at home, or the people who write from a more conservative perspective (like the good people at www.frontpagemag.com) or go upstairs to the Republican Club, I can get hours and hours and hours of conservative rhetoric. The world is too politically correct. There are too many gay people. The media's too liberal. Welfare's ridiculous. It goes on and on.

And if I listen to these few choice people at UMass, or the people who write from a more liberal perspective (MIM Notes anyone?) or if I go upstairs to a Communications Department class, I can get hours and hours and hours of liberal rhetoric. The world isn't politically correct enough. There aren't enough gay people. The media's too conservative. Welfare's perfect. It goes on and on.

So who's right?

On a limb when I say this, I'm willing to guess that neither side is. Break down the specific ridiculous examples that I gave and there's just no way that either side is right.

Political correctness is stupid. It's a constraint on the free speech that we as individuals supposedly have.

Conservatives are against it because now they have to display a most base level of common sense; no more blanket accusations that all blacks are welfare mothers. It's difficult for them because they're used to being able to spout off whatever ignorant thing they want to say.

Then again, their opposition, the liberals, don't want them to be able to say whatever they want. The fact that liberals support this idea that we need to protect individuals from certain forms of speech, that's just ridiculous. It makes me sick to my stomach because somebody's got to be a defender of our freedoms and now the very people I thought did such things are turning on me.

As for the numbers of gay people argument; please.

The conservatives hate the gays because they're different. It's too much for them that there would be people in the world who aren't exactly like them, so they pound on their bibles and spout their moralities about how the gay lifestyle is wrong. As if there is a gay lifestyle. And the liberals? Freedom for all, acceptance for all, jail anybody who doesn't like gays. It's positively ridiculous. Everybody in the world isn't going to embrace them or love them and it can't be legislated otherwise.

There's a cold hard reality in this world that nothing's going to be universally popular and that includes peoples and lifestyles.

And then there's the media, which is too conservative. Too liberal. Too conservative. Too liberal. Too conseberal.

Something. It's definitely something and nobody's ever going to win. There will never be enough minurities on the television and there will always be too few. There will never be accurate news coverage as long as the news coverage doesn't judge in the same way that the viewers (and their specific beliefs) would.

Welfare's perfect. It's a failure. It's everything and nothing and the total and more. Maybe the poor people should get money from the government – maybe they should have to step up in the world.

It goes around and around like this, people arguing with one another who are so entrenched in their beliefs that it doesn't matter what the other side is going to say because there's no middle ground. There's only a deep canyon between people that prevents anybody from reaching any sort of consensus.

So everybody's going to keep fighting. The people at home and the people at UMass will never see eye to eye and they'll continually condescend to one another at an aggressive pace. Meanwhile, the people who actually need the help, the people who are stuck somewhere in the middle, they're not getting what they need. That's the problem with these stupid debates – everybody's egos are too large to come to an agreement that might just work. And so the stupid people keep on making their noise and nobody's getting anywhere.

Squawk.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Maya Gill

Living with Party Boy

I live in a duplex near campus, but closer to the high school. I live in the upstairs apartment with two other people; in the downstairs apartment there lives my sexy boyfriend and two of his friends from home, one who actually attends school, the other one who is not allowed to attend this University because of certain academic reasons. This non-student resident of my particular dwelling, let's call him "Party Boy," has a job in town so he's not altogether completely unproductive, but the majority of his time is spent watching TV and drinking. Oh, and being noisy.

For the past seven and a half months, I have endured this pain that I must now share with the Collegian audience. Party Boy has got to be one of the worst roommates in the history of college.

Now I'm not talking about the general complaints, like he doesn't wash his dishes or take out the trash, because I do believe he completes these tasks. Because I don't share the same apartment as him I don't know exactly how often he washes the dishes or what have you, but for what I've seen he's pretty responsible. However, he is loud, and that's almost worse than leaving dishes in the sink.

He is so loud that there are many nights that I, along with my two other roommates, seriously contemplate calling the friendly Amherst Police Department to come and remind him that screaming at the top of his lungs, wrestling, and playing Cyprus Hill at like eight million decimals at two in the morning, isn't cool.

On Sunday night, I was extremely tired after spending the weekend with my mother, who was visiting from Minnesota. My sexy boyfriend and I went to bed upstairs in my room at about midnight. My other roommate was already in bed and my third roommate wasn't home from Easter yet. Sexy boyfriend and I had been sleeping soundly until two o'clock.

We were then abruptly awakened by honking, stomping, yelling and activities that sounded like firecrackers going off. And then came the best part, when Party Boy and his roommate (who share the room directly below mine) came into their room and Party Boy yelled – at the top of his lungs, mind you – "OH I FORGOT WE HAVE TO BE QUIET!!!!" And then started laughing like a hyena. For the next almost two hours I could hear him singing, stumbling, and peeing out of his window.

This is pretty normal behavior. On the night he turned 21, I was up until five in the morning listening to him yell and holler, wrestle with his roommate, puke outside, bang and crash and turn up the stereo. When I woke up the next morning, there were broken kitchen chairs in our driveway and Party Boy's mattress on the front porch. Incidents like this occur on a regular basis, with different levels of severity, and on any night of the week, including Mondays.

Now, you might be wondering why I stand to put up with all of this obnoxious drunken foolery. Well, for one thing, I don't really have a choice, do I? I suppose I could have moved or I could stay somewhere else. I think of that as defeat. I am stronger than that. The other reason is because of the delicate situation between Party Boy, my boyfriend and myself. Party Boy and sexy boyfriend have known each other forever and I don't want to be seen as the nagging girlfriend. Party Boy already thinks that I'm the spawn of Satan or something because I like to sleep through the night and I'm going out with his friend.

CATHERINE TURNER

But I've tried to talk to him sensibly. I've tried to be nice to this kid ever since I met him and we've lived in the house. I haven't done anything to provoke this kind of purposefully rambunctious behavior, and yet he continues to disrespect me and my roommates, and my boyfriend for that matter, by refusing to adhere to social norms and being extremely noisy and annoying at all hours of the night and morning. I understand that college kids like to get drunk on the weekends, and that's cool. He has a right to party. But on school nights, that's just plain rude and uncool.

We're talking about general consideration for other people here. I've asked him to keep it down. And he's said that he would. But then he drinks way too much and forgets that there are other people around him and gets loud and destructive.

I mean, he's so loud that the windows shake. This habitual drunkenness is making not only my life, but the lives of my roommates, unbearable.

I don't know why he acts this way. I really don't. He knows that he's acting like a complete bastard, yet he continues this ruckus. I think he drinks because he's mad at himself and at the world. He's mad that he got kicked out of school, he's jealous of the people around him and their successes, and he's lonely because he has no other friends in Amherst besides his roommates. He depends on his friends from home, but they can't be here all the time. His life is depressing. No wonder he's acting out. In a way I feel bad for him. But then I try to sleep through the night and I can hear everything he says through our incredibly thin walls, and I don't feel bad at all. I feel angry. I want to wring his neck.

The sad part of this entire piece is that it's not going to change anything.

Party Boy probably won't even see it, because he doesn't go on campus and has no reason to read the Collegian. And if he does see it, then he'll probably be mad and be even more loud and destructive than before. I've probably sealed my own fate here. But I felt that I had to write about it because I'm sure that I'm not the only one who faces this problem.

I'm sure that there are plenty of people out there with unruly roommates and housemates. I feel bad for anyone even close to a frat house.

Consider this an open letter to all the rambunctious roommates out there, and a plea to stop and think about who your actions affect.

Dear Party Boy: Ever since we moved into the same house, my life has been a living hell because of you. I am so tired, I can't do work in my own house and on top of that I have to clean up after you and your drunken antics. I cleaned up about 100 beer cans and bottles from our yard, and I know that I'm not the one who put them there. Please stop being so loud and obnoxious at all hours. Please start to consider the people you live with. I have been nothing but considerate of you. I'm not going to put up with this anymore. I don't want to start a war in the house, but if you wake me up at two in the morning again, I'm going to call the police. And I will call the police every time you're loud until you learn that you just can't do that.

Sincerely, Catherine.

Catherine Turner is a Collegian staff member.

Letters to the Editor
Another view on the RA union

To the Editor:

I read with great interest the two editorials regarding the new RAs union that you published on April 12, and I commend you for devoting so much space to the issue. I feel, however, that both writers overlooked some key points that I should like address.

First, I believe that, as an RA, Mr. Schulze's opinions carry some weight, and I shall not attempt to challenge his first-hand assessment of the working conditions for himself and his coworkers. He has, nevertheless, seriously misunderstood the core issue of the debate, namely that just because he feels that he and his fellow RAs are getting a good deal now doesn't mean that they should pass up the opportunity to exercise some control over their work place for the future.

As it currently stands, that deal, however good it may be, exists only at the University's discretion. There is no reason why they couldn't take the extra $50 a week away from him, or stick him with a roommate, or require him to wear a silly uniform on duty, or to purchase a pager or cell phone, or any other damn thing the administration pleases, because, as an RA and an employee with no union support, Mr. Schulze will have no say in the matter. His choices will be to take it or leave it. If Mr. Schulze finds these options satisfactory then he is blessed indeed, for an abundance of employment opportunities awaits him after college. (Though he might want to practice smiling and asking "you want fries with that?")

Mr. Wilkinson, on the other hand, made some good points in his somewhat uneven editorial in support of the RAs union, in particular his argument on the point I made above, and his comments that the exact job requirements for TAs may be entirely arbitrary.

Nonetheless, I must take issue with his gross misunderstandings about the history and goals of unions in general, and about the activities of GEO in particular.

He writes that GEO is "a waste of space... a group that cares more for its personal goals than the good its constituents," or that it is "arrogant in its avoidance of the key issues facing graduate students," largely on the basis of our commitment to issues like student diversity and social justice.

Determining exactly what the key issues are facing GEO is not as cut and dried Mr. Wilkinson may think, and is a matter of some debate among those of us who are its members - this is why we have membership meetings and votes. But, let us accept for the moment Mr. Wilkinson's judgment that all that matters are "more money, more health insurance and more bargaining power," and that while GEO should fight to win these things for our members, we are actually wasting our time on irrelevancies. Even on those terms, Mr. Wilkinson is completely wrong.

In fact, the GEO contract negotiating team is trying to increase our bargaining power by including instructors in Continuing Education in our union – those instructors currently work for half the pay and none of the benefits – we are pushing for money for member health care, particularly expanding the dental plan, and for optical care as well – and finally we are, in fact, asking for an increase in our stipend to bring us to parity with grad student employees at other campuses in the UMass system, who make about twice as much as we do. This to say nothing of efforts to win extra money for professional development (it costs money to go to conferences, meet other people in the field, and look for work), expanded child care (because its hard to write your thesis while looking after a two year old), payment of our stipends on a timely basis, protection of student intellectual property rights, and waivers for all university fees. I agree with Mr. Wilkinson that a union should make a priority of doing these things - that is why we are doing them. And since we ARE doing them, I'm at a loss to understand his complaints. Perhaps we should hire a PR firm...

Furthermore, I find his comparison of ALANA funding to puppy distribution a bit confusing, and perhaps also a bit confused. I am, I admit, really an unfrocked literature major faking his way through the history of science, yet Mr. Wilkinson's assertion that - "Never was there a call for more 'diversity' in a mine and a fifty cent raise. There were continued calls for more money, more health insurance, more bargaining power; they were never attached to ideas of social justice," strikes me as egregiously wrong.

I consulted, therefore, with Professor Kevin Boyle, an expert in American labor history in the 19th and 20th centuries, and he assured me that in fact social justice has been a key concern of organized labor from the beginning, and that mining in particular was one of the first occupations to integrate. The UAW, GEO's parent union, has been especially noteworthy for its commitment to social justice in representing its members. (See, for example, The UAW and the Heyday of American Liberalism by Kevin Boyle.) Labor organizers have known for decades that, if unions do not fight racism and sexism, the owners and managers will attempt to use the disenfranchised as a source of cheap alternative labor, thus driving down wages for all workers. (This is the other impetus behind our drive to unionize Continuing Education.)

Aside from this historical error, I believe that there is one final point to be made about jobs and justice, particularly as they apply at a university: education is the single greatest determining factor for financial prosperity in our society, both for individuals and for their descendants. The purpose of a publicly funded university is to offer the benefits of its education to all members of society. Not everyone wants it, of course, and not everyone is qualified to receive it, as well, but nevertheless I contend that we all benefit when a college degree is not limited to a self-perpetuating elite. Therefore, while fighting racism and sexism and other prejudices is important in any workplace, it is all the more crucial here, because the stakes are higher. I agree with the many other members of GEO that we should make a priority of fighting to preserve that opportunity for everyone, including those who lack the pale skin of myself, Mr. Schulze, and even Mr. Wilkinson.

Michael S. Dow
History Department

LIFE IN HELL
©1993 BY MATT GROENING
SO HOW WAS SCHOOL TODAY?
LOOK, MAN, MY CLASSROOM IS PACKED TO THE GILLS WITH CONFUSED, NEGLECTED KIDS.
BECAUSE OF BUDGET CUTBACKS, THE SCHOOL LIBRARY IS CLOSED, WHICH NOBODY NOTICES BECAUSE NOBODY READS.
THE SCHOOL BUILDING IS FALLING APART, WE'VE GOT NO ART SUPPLIES, THERE'S A CHALK SHORTAGE, AND THE ONE OUTDATED COMPUTER IS BROKEN.
THE TEACHERS ARE STRESSED OUT BECAUSE OF THE LONG HOURS, THE OVERCROWDING AND THE LATEST PAY CUTS.
THE KIDS ALTERNATE BETWEEN CATATONIC BOREDOM AND STUPEFACTION, WAITING FOR THE BELL TO RING.
WE HAVE NO SENSE OF LOGIC, NO HISTORICAL AWARENESS, NO ANALYTICAL SKILLS, NO COMMAND OF LANGUAGE, AND THE ATTENTION SPAN OF A GNAT.
SO I'M THINKING OF DROPPING OUT.
BUT WITHOUT A GOOD EDUCATION, YOUR LIFE WILL GO NOWHERE.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING

Arts Editor •
David Goupes
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Potatoes come to your rescue

Solutions to fix up your hole in the wall

THIS WEEK'S HANGING UP: WALL COVERINGS

The perfect solution to anyone's decorating dilemma. Allow me to demonstrate:

Scenario #1: Brad and Chuck are two sophomores here at UMass. They're your typical college inhabitants – mesmerized by Tony Hawk Pro Skater for PlayStation 2, fondly attached to their busted couch, huge fans of chicken fingers and Heineken, irresistible to women. Yet their walls are plagued with boredom and some mysterious yellow coloring, with the exception of this season's Major League schedule. How can they make their college pad look better without spending more than one Red Sox timeout on it? Impossible, you say? You just wait.

Scenario #2: Mary and Katie are two sophomores here at UMass. They're your typical college chicks – they consider Friends to be more important than anything – even their boyfriends, at least one of their 3 meals each day consists of a smoothie from Bananarama and you can bet they would challenge you to a game of Flip Cup upon meeting you. Just one problem – last weekend a huge hole cryptically appeared in their kitchen wall. It may have had something to do with the tangle that occurred over keg lines in their bathroom at their roommate's birthday party. Regardless, they need to cover it – and cover it with style. How you ask? Listen up.

by maggie lyons

One sure-fire chic way to cover your walls is with a huge bohemian tapestry tacked up at the corners. But, lo and behold, like most students here, you already have one wall sporting this trick. So now what? I'll save you the creative headache and give you one of my ideas.

Potato Sack Jack: This is not the name of the man who runs the farmers market in Hadley – sorry, we don't know his name. Run out to the local craft store and pick up a nice piece of burlap, which is often used to hook rugs with. Don't worry – that's too ambitious for me too. It is sold by the yard, so have an idea of how big you will want yours to be. The charming part about this project is its size – you want about two to three feet wide and roughly six feet long. It should be – for reference – about the size of your refrigerator. After you have purchased your course threads – whip out a can of paint and a brush and paint a simple border around the edges. This will make the rough edges appear cleaner without hemming them. Here comes the potato part. I'm sure you've made potato prints at some point in your childhood. Cut a good sized white potato in half, then use (carefully!) a small knife to etch out a stencil shape...heart, flower, star – you get it. You want the positive of the shape – so really what you are doing is cutting around a shape, not cutting a hole in the potato. Dip the stamp in paint and randomly print a pattern onto the burlap. Now just hang the piece onto your wall about 12 inches from the footboards. Use pins to display postcards, pictures, magazine pages, important information, etc. Bada Bing – a chic and simple cover-up for any wall boo boo there is. Total time: about one hour - just in time for the Red Sox to get into the game. (Sorry to disappoint you – I'm a Yankees fan.)

Maggie Lyons is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY JOE KUSHNICK

Practice makes perfect...

UMass Chamber Choir members prepare for their upcoming concert "Myth, Magic, and Pith," on Sunday, April 29 at 4p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Joe Dirt is slow witted

Spade abounds in low humor

Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

JOE DIRT
Directed by Dennie Gordon
With David Spade, Dennis Miller and Kid Rock
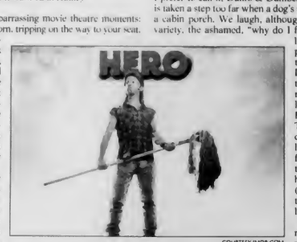
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

Some of the most embarrassing movie theatre moments: spilling soda, spilling popcorn, tripping on the way to your seat, losing your ticket somewhere between the box office and usher podium, having a pager or cell phone go off during the movie, getting kicked out of a movie in progress, seeing Joe Dirt. Yes, these are all humiliating happenstances that can occur at the local cineplex, but at least you have control over the latter example.



COURTESY IMDB.COM

David Spade IS Joe Dirt.

"Just Shoot Me" star David Spade, who appears rather lost in current comedies without the late Chris Farley, the Costello to Spade's Abbott, here is trailer-trash rocker Joe Dirt. (Or, as he pronounces it, "Dir-tay," trying to add some sense of class to the movie.)

Dirt is on a search to find his parents, who mistakenly abandoned him at The Grand Canyon when he was eight years old. Since that time, he has been criss-crossing the country to find his long-lost folks. It's not until he is on the famous Zander Kelly Radio Show (played by fellow SNL alum, Dennis Miller) that Dirt's twisted story unfolds. He soon becomes a national icon, gracing magazine covers and news panels.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

"Behold the glory that is my mullet."

But the audience never really gets what the big deal is all about. When the film begins, Dirt is a loser, plain and simple, and his status does not change by the end either. We're taken on a two-hour adventure in which the situations that he encounters does not help in making us like him any more than we did when the movie began. Early on, Dirt discovers what he thinks is a meteor, so he totes it around in a Radio Flyer and carries on elaborate conversations with the big rock. Befriending an inanimate object may have been a scenario that worked for Tom Hanks in Cast Away, but here it is just plain stupid. Instead of laughing WITH Dirt when he discovers the meteor is actually a frozen chunk of astronaut poop, we end up laughing AT him.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Joe Dirt prepares an important part of his nutritious breakfast.

The screenwriters opt for more idiocy later on when they invoke a comedy gimmick as old as the food in Dirt's hair. Dirt displays his true moronic mentality when he makes a bet that he can stick his entire head in the mouth of an alligator without being injured. "He knows better than to tangle with Sir Joseph Dirt!" says he, as the reptile chomps down on his head, swinging his body to and fro, with spectators joyfully looking on and smiling. "Chew, damn you, chew!" I wanted to stand up and shout.

The parallels to a Farrelly Brothers movie don't stop there. Recall, if you can, the scene from Dumb & Dumber where Jeff Daniels' tongue gets stuck to the ski lift. In Joe Dirt, or as I prefer to call it, Dumb & Dumbest, that amusing anecdote is taken a step too far when a dog's testicles become frozen to a cabin porch. We laugh, although it's the uncomfortable variety, the ashamed, "why do I find this funny?" type of laugh. It's all for a good purpose, however, since the removal of the Doberman's gonads from the ice-covered deck results in Dirt finding the love of his miserable life, Brandy (Brittany Daniel). The moral of the story, of course, is that really good-looking women can fall for disgustingly unattractive men as long as they have a great personality (when we all know that this never happens in real life.)

Like many other movies nowadays, the mathematical equation of good actors plus a promising director does not always equal cinema success. Joe Dirt does not have GOOD actors, but rather likeable actors, which is the only thing that makes the movie somewhat watchable. Spade's meager performance is neither here nor there; his whiny, self-aggrandizing demeanor never changes from film to film, but many people like the 5-foot 5-inch actor anyways. And while co-star Dennis Miller is the poster-boy for atrocious movies (i.e. Bordello of Blood), he has a fan following from his stand-up days and his current stint on "Dennis Miller: Live."

Other cast members are Christopher Walken, who has a sharp sense for dry humor, and the feature-film debut of rapper Kid Rock. It's hard to tell whether he is really talented at playing a backwoods hick, or if he naturally is one.

Also making their big-screen debut is director Dennie Gordon, who until now worked behind the camera on some of the most well-known TV dramas of the past decade ("The Practice," "Dawson's Creek," "Chicago Hope"). Gordon, however, has no ability to properly hone a comedy like this one. With a script by Spade himself, and produced by Adam Sandler's company Happy Madison, Joe Dirt cannot rise to the occasion of what we expect from such an ensemble of Hollywood heavyweights.

Joe Dirt is not only the character's name, but also a way to describe the movie as a whole; a lowdown, slow-witted and soiled movie that leaves no impression, and will hopefully disappear just as quickly as it came.

Guild's HAIR has a strong start

Loses steam despite talented cast

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

HAIR
Student Union Ballroom
April 11-14

HAIR bills itself as the American tribal love rock musical. It is the quintessential theatrical piece about the 1960s, about protesting the war in Vietnam, and especially, about the subculture of the hippies. The University of Massachusetts Theatre Guild's recent production of HAIR understood that the charm of the musical lies in its unique ability to connect to its audience.

There isn't much of a plot in this musical. Most of the characters are loosely sketched, and the internal conflict is kept to a minimum. Someone looking for a thematic structure would be hard pressed to find one.

Most of the show is singing, dancing, and erratic dialogue. It goes off on sometimes inane/ sometimes insightful tangents about drugs, sex, race relations, gender reversals, peace, the war, and of course, hair.

The closest thing to a plot is the story of Claude. He is the most sober-minded of this particular group of youths. He refuses to burn his draft card, and is the only one who thinks about his future in terms of the larger society. He is the misfit in his crowd, who finds it difficult to completely drop out. For reasons that are never clearly articulated, Claude decides that instead of protesting the war by refusing to go, he will go to the induction center. He is drafted, and later killed in Vietnam.

The show doesn't get this serious, though, until the second act. The first act is taken up by the tangents, the various interests of hippie subculture. This is where the Guild excels. The mood is light, and the cast stretches their ranks into the audience, handing out flowers, inviting us to the Be-In, including us in their celebrations of life and love.

The cast makes themselves entirely believable as authentic hippies, despite, or maybe because of, the inevitability of 60s cliche.

Rob O'Brien as Berger introduces us to the Tribe (the ensemble) and sets the mood for the show. O'Brien is unpredictable, sometime verging on crazy, and makes us believe in the freedom of being a hippie. Berger is as schizophrenic as the show itself, and O'Brien fleshes him out wonderfully.

Adrianne Rende, as Sheila, has all the charisma to pull of the energetic, politically-minded protest leader. But, she has none of the vocal ability, which makes it difficult for us to believe why anyone would follow her to Washington.

Woof, played by Gordon Bedford, is the paradigm of love for the Tribe. He loves everyone and everything (especially Mick Jagger), even going so far as to make friends with a twig. Bedford plays him with a perfect joyful innocence.

Some of the minor characters are just as delightful. Sean White as the gender-bending Margaret Mead/Tribe member is charming and hilarious. Laura Ann Wright as Chrissy is sweetly innocent and heartwarming in her love for a man she's met only once, and has the vocal capability to match.

As the figurehead for any semblance of plot, Luke Durocher played an appropriately indecisive, if somewhat bland, Claude.

Each of the characters alternates their turn in the spotlight, but they return to the ensemble again. The Tribe must act as its own character, forming a united whole, as the values the group puts forth are for humanity, life, and love. However, the Tribe never melds together in this production. The main problem is in the size of the ensemble, which makes the stage seem chaotic and cluttered, and never really allows the cast a chance to develop the necessary intimacy.

A polished production of HAIR should look spontaneous. But, by the second act, this production looked more muddled than spontaneous. The Tribe's numbers were jumbled and messy. The vocal strength dwindled as the ensemble and Claude's story took precedence. And, without the dynamics of cast members like Bedford and O'Brien, the show lost its steam. Claude's death, the message of peace, and, in particular, the finale of "The Flesh Failures" (or, Let the Sunshine In) proves ineffectual. Instead of inspiring, it is flat.

Perhaps part of the problem is the set. The HAIR set should establish the mood and reflect the messages of the show. Instead, this set was hard and black, and seemed to swallow the light mood of the cast.

The lighting too was often dark, and dragged down the joyousness that should be present for most of the show.

Despite the loss of focus in the second act, the show made a solid enough foundation to carry its charm to the end. The cast was talented enough, and the connection to the audience strong enough, to keep the spirit of HAIR.

COURTESY JOE KUSHICK

... perfect.

Members of the UMass Chamber Choir will be performing in a Music Department fundraiser at Barnes and Noble in Holyoke on Thursday, April 26 from 5p.m. to 9p.m.

Bowing to the Boss

It just doesn't make sense for me to be so madly in love with the music of Mr. Bruce Springsteen.

Rock was never my music, for one thing. In my childhood my mom listened to Irish folk music on Sundays and 'lite pop' in the car, while my father gradually drifted from the southern rock of his young adulthood to Garth Brooks and Vince Gill. In high school I was a pissed-off metalhead, and in my mind metal and rock were very distinct indeed. Metal was the only pure form of musical self-expression, while rock was crap. It was quite simple, really.

Something happened, however, in that summer between my graduation at Memorial Hall in Plymouth and my arrival at UMass in September.

I actually remember it quite well. I was sitting in my living room reading Newsweek and I was struck by the urge to pop in a CD. None of my music would do, however; my father worked nights, and as it was the middle of the day he was sound asleep directly upstairs, and I knew from experience that something like Fear Factory would get him out of bed, and that was literally the last thing I wanted. The consequences were just too great.

So I went looking for something in my parents' CD rack that would be acceptable background noise, and I came across a copy of Springsteen's Greatest Hits. "Eh," I thought. It'll do.

A week later I had my own copy.

I just couldn't believe that music this good existed. The lyrics were the best I had ever heard; next to the grunting simplicity of most metal it seemed as genius and poetic as Shakespeare. The songs were diverse in subject and sound, but they touched on every emotion that I had ever felt. "The River" was (and is) the saddest song I have ever heard, and tells the story of much of my family. "Badlands" was a radical scream without the screaming, a manifesto of rebellion against the small town that I so desperately wanted to escape. "Born in the USA," the song I remembered from when I was 6 as a patriotic piece of fluff, actually a musical extension of the sobs that my Vietnam vet uncle would let out when he was drunk on Christmas.

Then there were the love songs. "Born to Run." "Thunder Road." "Dancing in the Dark." "Brilliant Disguise." "Human Touch." "Secret Garden." No metal band would dare to express feelings or complexity like this; it would be a sign of weakness unforgivable in the genre. I was sick of hiding, and Bruce made it OK to let go. Love, longing, mistrust, desperation, resignation, happiness, and the simple fact that men and women belong together, one way or another – all these things came from that one collection.

Of course, Bruce Springsteen's Greatest Hits is just the tip of the iceberg. While I still find the scope of the double-album The River daunting and only partially successful, there are enough gems in it to justify a purchase. The stark, austere minimalism of Nebraska – recorded alone in a bedroom, every noise on the album comes from either Bruce's voice, acoustic guitar, or harmonica – is almost the antimetal, but does more to explore the desolation and contradictions of lower-class rural life than any amount of screaming ever could. Tunnel of Love, from late in Bruce's career when he's already an established bazillionaire, focuses more on the personal, rock-as-diary approach, with introspective sadness of a man who's just gone through a divorce and broken up his band, and isn't sure what the hell is going on. Of course, there's the legendary Born to Run, the record that exploded the Boss on an unsuspecting nation. In the liner notes to Greatest Hits, Bruce described Born to Run as "A 24-year-old kid almin' at 'the greatest rock 'n roll record ever.'" And what can I say? It's damned close.

For my money, though, Bruce's greatest achievement is not Born to Run, but 1978's Darkness on the Edge of Town. The pinnacle of Bruce's early songwriting and the E Street Band's peak as a guitar-based band before they switched emphasis to keyboards, the album is like nothing else you will ever hear. The facts of small town living – love, family, desperation, work and escape, above all escape – are rendered into rock music with such accuracy that it's alternately a stake in the heart and a reaffirming glow to one that has lived it. From "Adam Raised a Cain," about a father-son relationship built on tension, to "Something in the Night," where the narrator is searching for something he can't name but can't stop longing for, it is like Bruce was writing my autobiography two years before I was born – that's how intensely personal yet universal Darkness on the Edge of Town is. The jewel of the album, however, is neither of those songs, or even "Badlands," but a short album cut called "The Promised Land." "Sometimes I feel so weak I just want to explode," Bruce wails, but, in the end, "I ain't a boy, no, I'm a man, and I believe in a promised land."

There really has never been an artist like Bruce Springsteen; I doubt there will ever be one again. His life and mine could not possible be any more different, and yet his entire body of work seems geared towards me personally. If you were to listen yourself, you'd probably feel the same way. He simply transcends.

Enough to make a metalhead bow down to the great power of rock 'n roll.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

Loss of music pioneer

Ramone remembered

Singer Joey Ramone died Sunday at the age of 49. Ramone's death was confirmed Sunday by Arturo Vega, the Ramone's longtime artistic director. The cause of death was lymphatic cancer. Ramone will be put on the ever-growing list of under-appreciated artists that have passed away this decade. Ramone's force will be felt on the music industry until it dissolves.

It is safe to say that if Joey Ramone did not choose music for his life passion music would wear a different face today. The Ramones provided an alternative to the disco, yuppie, and rock opera that was present in the 70's. The Ramones presented a stripped down version of rock that contained no solos, no spandex, no make-up, and certainly no substance. They weren't there out to change the world, they were out there to show rock in its purest form and then sniff some glue.

The Ramones bulls out attitude and blistering licks might not have gained them material wealth, but it allowed them to create a new subculture. Once "punk rock" exploded, bands like the Sex Pistols and the Clash received much of the media attention; but both were schooled by the Ramones' tour of England.

There has always been an on going debate about to who started "punk rock." Was it the Clash? Was it the Sex Pistols? Was It The Stooges? Was it The N.Y. Dolls? Was it John Denver? From a historical standpoint the dates point to the Ramones. Who knows maybe your dad lived in a garage, shot heroin, and created the first punk rock chord progression. The world may never know.

Rooted in Queens N.Y. the Ramones formed in 1974. All of the group's members adopted the last name "Ramone" and dressed in torn blue jeans and leather jackets, in homage to the '50s greaser rockers. The group played their first concert on March 30, 1974, at New York's Performance Studio. By the end of the summer, the Ramones earned a residency at CBGB's. For the next year, they played regularly at the nightclub. At the end of 1975, the Ramones secured a recording contract with Sire, making them the first New York punk band to sign a contract.

Early in 1976, the Ramones recorded their debut album. Ramones was released in the spring and gained some critical attention. On July 4, the band made their debut appearance in Britain, where their records were becoming a big influence on a new generation of bands. Throughout 1976, the Ramones toured constantly, planting seeds in the minds of children and accidentally creating a new scene.

The Ramones did a lot of things: they changed rock, they gave outcasts their own powerful clique, they gave the jocks someone to make fun of, they pissed off millions of parents, they let the world know that "rock-star" doesn't mean "god," but most importantly they slit the wrists of disco and buried it with four chords. Joey Ramone will be missed dearly. He left gash on rock history – he made it bleed and showed the kids a new color. With his death that gash has stopped bleeding, but it has left a scar.

Tim Letteney is a Collegian Staff Member

A face is worth a thousand words.

Joanna Abbott and Mark Ison perform in Monteverdi's "L'Orfeo" Wednesday, May 2 in Sweeney Concert Hall at Smith College

CollegianArts:
On the job 24 hours a day.

Coca Cola and Daily Collegian
Clue # 9
So you need some stuff to make you move,
But you're sick of that Red Bull groove.
Don't fret or worrry your little head off,
Because KMX is the best new stuff.
It's great to drink, a nice can to save",
Maybe in warm waters, soon you'll bathe.
Remember to keep tract of ALL items and bring them to the "Taste of Umass". If you are the lucky winner you get a Cruise for 2.
Coca-Cola .... From your Friends at .... The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Visit Cuba
During Carnival!
July 19 - August 2, 2001

Since 1997, Cuba has seen a 172.1% increase in American exchange students. With UConn's new program, Music and Cultural Study in Cuba, you can experience Cuba's dynamic music and dance traditions first hand, while learning about its intriguing history and diverse culture.

This two-week program is open to all students, teachers who wish to earn continuing education units, and other individuals who would like to learn from and enjoy Cuban culture. Students can earn 3 academic credits; teachers can earn 9 CEUs. A UConn music professor will accompany the group for the entire trip.

▲ For more information call Pat Harkins at 860-486-5985 or visit us at continuingstudies.uconn.edu

▲ Call us for a brochure at 800-622-9908.

▲ Come to one of our open house sessions at the Bishop Center on the Storrs campus:
Tuesday, April 24, 7:00-9:00 p.m.
Monday, May 7, 7:00-9:00 p.m.
If you plan to attend or need directions, call 860-486-5985.

University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies

new balance
Haigis Hoopla
Don't Miss Your Shot!
the action happens
April 28th & 29th
Mail your team entry by April 16th or drop it off by April 20th by 5pm.
Stop by Curry Hicks, Room #5 to pick up a registration brochure or the Campos Center Concourse to register.
Call 545-5689 for more information. Or visit us at http://haigishoopla.zminutemen.com
presented by UMASS Sport Management Program

Questions that need serious attention get it

Lot answers to some of sports most asked questions, leave it up to David Rose and Eric Soderstrom to find you the most interesting answers. Here are some of sports biggest questions over the last two weeks and some of their "Well duuuhh, duh" responses.

*****

Does the Red Sox taking three out of four from the hated Yankees convince you that things might be different for in Beantown in 2001?

David Rose: No. OK, granted three out of four is a great start against the Yankees this season, but there are two things to remember first: there are still 15 more games against the Yankees this season and plenty of chances for the World Champions to redeem themselves and second, this is for Red Sox fans who were letting me hear about how all of the bad luck will change for the Red Sox after 18 games, it is still April 18. It is a great start, but with 147 games left the Red Sox still have a long was and we all know how true the season of fall has been for the Sox in the past.

Eric Soderstrom: It was just too early for all of this Yankees-Red Sox in April. C'mon now. Sure, it was fun for all the fans at Fenway, but the New York faithful won't shut up until our cursed Red Stockings are the last ones standing in October (And then they'll keep chanting "Twenty-Six, Twenty-Six). Do I think things will be different this year? "I hope so." And that's what every Red Sox fan is thinking. It's way too early to tell. There's just under 150 games left. Talk to me in August.

*****

Is Pedro Martinez the best pitcher of the last 20 years?

David: Difficult question with Roger Clemens and Greg Maddux on the list as well. If you ask me if he is the best pitcher of the last decade, then I would have a hard time giving it to him over Maddux. But I cannot say that he is the best pitcher of the last 20 years. I would have to say Clemens just slightly over Maddux because he has five Cy Young awards and is just 38 wins short of 300 for his career. Although for the time and state of the game of baseball with homers flying at torrential rates, we are looking at history with Martinez in Boston.

Eric: Pedro? Line. Give it to him. If the Bo Sox go to Oktoberfest you know it's going to be Martinez in Game Seven. As far as history goes, Maddux comes in a close second with his four pitching trophies. Clemens is a leader, straight up. I don't even want to talk about him. I know that's Mr. Stubborn from Boston talking, but I don't care.

*****

Will the Lakers repeat as NBA Champions?

David: As long as Shaq doesn't karate kick Kobe, I like their chances. They are playing their best at the right point of the season. If the standings stay the way they are at this moment, they catch a break with Phoenix in round one and either Portland or Sacramento in round two. If they get by them, they get to the only team I think that can beat them – San Antonio. Shaq and Duncan will cancel out, but the match-up problem for the Lakers is the small forward spot as the match-up of Derek Anderson and Rick Fox is a clear advantage for the Spurs. But again, this Phil Jackson in the playoffs and Jordan gets it done. Oh wait; did I say Jordan was coaching this team?

Eric: I don't want to say it, but they will. Shaq is unstoppable. It's like me posting up a three-year-old on his new Fisher-Price hoop. Yeah. Portland is nasty, but they're veteran legs are too slow for the Kobe and the pre-schoolers. As far as San Antonio, well, I just can't see anyone conquering Shaq (and Mr. Jackson) four times. Iverson and Co. are definitely coming out of the east. And maybe, just maybe... if The Answer can keep his shooting percentage above 50 percent, they'll take It. But Mt. Mutumbo just isn't that scary anymore. He's not getting the ball enough. (Note: If the Celtics got the eighth seed, I would have answered differently.)

*****

Did Tiger Woods complete a Grand Slam?

David: If we are going by the technical term of a Grand Slam, he didn't. But he has done something that has never been done before. He has won four straight majors and has done it with a combine total of 65 under par. It might not be a Grand Slam, but it'd a slam-dunk.

Eric: It's not that hard to fire a 64. But It sucks tryling to regroup and play the second hole. Let's just put it this way. Right now, Mr. Woods can sit down with one arm around the Wannamaker Trophy (in his green jacket), sipping a few pints of Guinness from the Claret Jug, while pondering his next U.S. Open. Grand Slam? Oh yes. He won the Open at Pebble, the British at the Old Course (St. Andrew's), the PGA legs are too slow for the Kobe and at Valhalla and of course, he mastered Augusta, again. And he's not done. While everyone is pondering this feat, Elderick just might be taking his seventh straight at the Atlanta Athletic Club in August. No one would be surprised. If you don't have Tiger on your fantasy golf roster... well then, I don't know what to say.

*****

What is the dumbest injury by a professional athlete in memory?

David: Two words – Gus Frerotte. He scores a touchdown against the Giants and celebrates by slamming himself head first into the wall at RFK Stadium in Washington. The cost of the celebration: not priceless, but the rest of the season with a neck injury. To me the dumbest sports injury I have seen.

Eric: You just can't beat the Gus-Butt. But what about Vince Coleman in 1985 breaking his leg before the playoffs by getting his leg stuck in the unraveling tarp? Oh yeah... you can't forget about Bart "hitting a Homer" in that new Butterfinger commercial. Or what about Chubbs' hand getting run over by that truck?

*****

Best and Worst Sports Uniforms of all time?

David: Best – Bobby Valentine coming back into the dugout with fake glasses and a fake mustache after being thrown out of a game in 1999. Worst – The Pittsburgh Pirates in the 1970's. The mustard yellow jerseys with the hats that look like a triple layer cake.

Eric: Best – The Boston Celtics' Green and White. It's Eternal. Worst – The 2001 Padres' Army Uniforms. I understand the cause, but it's still way too Cash Money for the MLB.

*****

What is your favorite sports movie?

David: He Got Game. I am still impressed that Denzel Washington got five points off of Ray Allen in that one-on-one game at the end.

Eric: Happy Gilmore. hands down. Doing the Bull Dance, feeling the flow...working it, working it.

David: But he got beat up by Bob Barker, that's atrocious.

Eric: True, but his putter is a hockey stick.

*****

What is your favorite fairy tale or Disney movie?

David: "Fat Albert," no doubt about it. Wait... that isn't a fairy tale, damn!

Eric: "Peter Pan" with an eagle on the 18th of Augusta to squeak it out over "Robin Hood." I want to be a kid forever. It's that simple. The Lost Boys are definitely the toughest gang ever and nothing tops fairy dust. Robin Hood is key, though. Leave it up to Disney to make an animated fox (Maid Marian) look hot.

David: yeah, but my boy Albert would eat all the Lost Boys and have room left over for Robin Hood. Hook and the Pirates triple layer cake hats.

David Rose and Eric Soderstrom are Collegian columnists.

■ baseball

continued from page 12

outs.

"My ankle feels good, so I was ready to go run," Sarno said. My job is to get on base and run and I did that."

In the top of the sixth, UConn again chiseled away at the lead. With two outs, shortstop Brian Tisbert drew a walk from Loonie. Joe Kagerer was up next, and he too reached base, gaining a free pass when Loonie hit him with an inside fastball. Tisbert then stole third, and the throw by sophomore catcher Tom Ellerbrook got by Junior Aaron Senez to cut the UMass lead to 4-2.

The score stayed that way until the bottom of the seventh, when the UMass bats took it to the Husky hurler. Connell Clark led off the inning by smashing a 1-1 pitch to left center for his second double of the game. After Gorneault grounded out to third, A-10 Player of the Week Jeff Altieri hit a hard grounder to third that was misplayed by third baseman Dan Trubia and reached on an error.

The Minuteman base warriors continued their assault on the basepaths as Clark again stole third and Altieri moved up to second.

"When Connell gets on, he's like another leadoff man," Stone said. "We're always looking to run and we stole third a lot today."

UConn reliever Chris DeBrisco the issued Aaron Senez an intentional pass to load the bases for the elder Clark. After taking a ball, Clark lined the next pitch he saw deep the other way to clear the left field fence for his team leading seventh home run of the campaign to break the game open and give the Maroon and White an 8-2 lead.

"The last couple of weeks, Gavin's really started to play and help the team out," Stone said. "That's really made a big difference for him personally too. I think his main focus is helping the ball club out and you're going to see some personal success when that happens."

Eric Chown came on in relief of Loonie in the top of the eighth, and was greeted when junior Cy Hess led off the inning after reaching on an error by Jeff Altieri on a ball that took a bad hop. After Soteropoulos flew out to left, Tisbert drew a walk. Senior Ryan Treat then lined a hard single to center to move Tisbert to second and score Hess.

But Ellerbrook and Chown doused the flames of comeback right then and there. Ellerbrook gunned down Tisbert as he tried to steal third base and Chown caught freshman Russ D'Argento looking at strike three to end the inning.

In the bottom of the eighth, UConn brought in reliever Jonas Swyer to try and silence the UMass bats. But Sarno again provided the spark by drawing a one-out walk.

"[Sarno] has done a great job being the leadoff man and he's a scrapper," Stone said. "You can always count on him to play hard. He really loves baseball and those kind of guys are the guys you like to lead things off and making things happen."

Connell Clark followed Sarno by getting hit by a pitch for the second time in the game. After Gorneault flew out to left on the first pitch he saw, Altieri continued his RBI production by roping a single to centerfield to score Sarno and garner his team-leading 29th RBI of the season with Clark advancing to second on the play. He then promptly swiped third base for the third time on the afternoon and Altieri advanced to second. Aaron Senez then pushed across the game's final tallies by getting an RBI infield single and advancing to second when Truhia threw the ball away. Altieri scored on the play.

Chown then came in and retired the side on three ground balls to preserve the win.

"It was a big game all around – defense offense and pitching."

"I think we're still a ways away from that turning point as to what kind of a season we're going to have, but we seem to be playing better," Stone added. "It's all pitching and defense and then you get a chance to drive the ball a little bit and make things happen offensively. We've still got a ways to go."

The Minutemen are in action today as the face cross-state rival Northeastern at 3 p.m. at Lorden Field.

Women's tennis drops heartbreaker to Williams; streak stymied at seven

By Ben Holl
Collegian Staff

Before the Williams women's tennis team packed their bags and headed back to their cozy nook in the far corner of Massachusetts, it paused for a moment, gathered together and uniformly cheered, "Thank you UMass!"

What most of the opposing squad might not have realized at that instance was that it did indeed have something to be very thankful for – a hard-fought 4-3 win against one the country's most threatening collegiate tennis teams.

At 8:00 p.m., when the match finally concluded, the UMass campus sat quietly under a dark sky. Players shivered as they walked home and coach Judy Dixon was left alone on the court with the responsibility of explaining what had just happened. Why her girls had blitzed when matched against a small NESCAC school.

"This is actually an O.K. loss for me today," she said in a convinced tone. "Even though we lost we did a lot of things well. The past two matches have put a lot of pressure on us and that's exactly what we need going into the A-10's. I feel that we're very well prepared for next week."

In doubles competition the Minutewomen won two out of three matches. The tandem of Jaffra Depontes and Lindsey Gillooly defeated their opponents (9-8) while Helena Horak and Susan Hyams triumphed (8-4). The single loss of the day fell upon freshman Francesca Mancini and her partner junior Annie Hamilton. Up until yesterday the pair of Mancini and Hamilton had tallied an impressive 7-0 winning streak in the No. 1 doubles position.

"I was very impressed with Jaffra and Lindsey's doubles play," Dixon said. "They came back to win after being down six match points."

The Maroon and White sorely missed that same persistence in the following round of singles action. Williams offered their hosts a surprising display of talent by capturing four out of the six matches. Defeated UMass players include Hamilton (7-3, 6-3), Depontes (6-4, 6-4) and Gillooly (6-2, 6-1). Susan Hyams lost her match (2-6, 6-2, 7-6) in what turned out to be a late evening marathon of exciting tennis.

The loss ends a seven-match winning streak for Hyams that has earned her a great deal of praise from fellow players and coaches alike.

Minutes after the match ended, Dixon expressed her surprise over the outcome, "I really thought Susan was going to pull it off," she said. "But her opponent put forth a huge effort. She put the pressure on Susan throughout the match by coming up to the net for returns."

The two UMass victories against the Purple Cows of Williamstown were provided by Horak (6-4, 6-4) who is a junior from Westlake, Calif., and by freshman standout Mancini (6-0, 6-1). The win came easily for Mancini whose "misplaced" opponent offered little challenge.

"I played really well today," Mancini said. "The No. 1 for Williams had some good shots and hit a lot of difficult ground strokes. But she can't move very well and that made the win pretty easy for me."

Dixon said that she was shocked by the line-up that Williams offered describing it as "clearly stacked" (comparable to walking a menacing batter in baseball). "I don't think that was right," she said.

On Monday the Minutewomen enjoyed a 4-3 victory against Seton Hall, which should help dampen the effect of yesterday's loss. Horak played well in her singles match. She rebounded from a 4-1 deficit in the third set to beat her opponent.

Dixon described the win as a great asset to her team's ongoing attempt to have an invitation to play in the East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC) next year.

"This was our first win against Seton Hall," she said with pride. "That team represents a fully funded tennis program with eight full scholarships. That's something that we don't have so it means a lot to know that we can compete at that level."

*****

Such success has not gone unnoticed by the rest of the tennis community. This past week junior Gillooly was named Atlantic 10 Women's Tennis Performer of the Week. Gillooly's strong play and team leadership has benefited her squad throughout the spring season. She boasts an impressive singles record of 10-5 and has won eight of her last nine matches. Lindsey's doubles record currently stands at 9-6. Being recognized as one of the league's most valuable players is not new to Gillooly. She won the same award on March 27.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Lindsey Gillooly was named A-10 Performer of the Week for the second time this year.

Don't forget the Mandatory All-Staff Meeting at 7pm tonight.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
U-SAVE
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
OOPS!
• Cars - Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUVs
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(On bus route)

Henna Arts & Supplies
10% off with this coupon!
413-256-3756

STUDENT TRAVEL
EUROPE ON SALE!!!
London.....$385
Rome.....$418
Paris.....$388
Frankfurt.....$313
Rio de Janeiro....$651
Prague.....$458
San Jose.....$509
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

LIVE
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
MUSIC
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

Massachusetts School of Law
AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS 600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Paul Hutchen has been an integral part to the lacrosse team's 9-0 start to the season. He and the rest of the Minutemen take on Harvard this afternoon.

No. 4 men's lax to battle Harvard

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

The schedule is a bit different today.

For the first time this season, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's journey to the playing surface will exceed 10 minutes. Its bus ride to Harvard this morning will last about two hours.

"It's going be tough going down there [today], coming off the bus and playing," coach Greg Cannella said.

But it's unlikely that the Crimson see Cannella's words as an attempt to ruse its concentration. The bus the Minutemen pile onto won't be old and yellow with a protruding red octagon. The seats will be comfortably cushioned.

So no one can blame any bad UMass offering to those circumstances.

There are really no outside influences the Minutemen could possibly attribute to a sub-par performance.

Because, as the Maroon and White found out two weeks ago in Baltimore against UMBC, the UMass fans will be deafening in the theatre of war wherever their team takes the stage.

The only force that has a chance to stop the No. 4 Minutemen calls itself Harvard. And that's where Cannella and crew have directed their focus.

"We had two good days of practice," Cannella said. "We'll just go down there and play. They have some very talented players and I think it's going to be a battle."

Today's game is the 32nd meeting all-time between the two squads. UMass (9-0, 4-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) clutches a 22-9 edge in the series and has beaten the Crimson to-4, 1-3 Ivy League) in the last two meetings.

Last year, the Minutemen upset the visiting No. 13 Crimson 10-9 at Richard F. Garber Field.

Down 7-6 at the half, UMass came out of the locker room and took control early in the third quarter as present seniors Alex Racioppi and Keith Gabrielli each scored to give UMass the 8-7 advantage.

Harvard matched those two tallies late in the period to regain the lead at 9-8 but graduated UMass attackman Mike Ianowicz found the net a few minutes later to tie the score before the start of the fourth quarter.

Ianowicz's net tinder off a pass from midfielder Chris Gabrielli at the 14:34 mark gave UMass the victory. Senior Chris Campolettano and the Minuteman defense stood strong for the rest of the period to seal the outcome.

Cannella expects a similar fight this afternoon.

"Harvard is going to play Harvard lacrosse – they'll come ready to play," Cannella said.

"They're probably going to pack their defense in a little bit and rely on their goalie which they've done in the past with great success. And they're going to chip away on the offensive end and get some great opportunities to score."

MEN'S LACROSSE
UMASS VS. HARVARD
2:30 PREGAME
3:00 FACEOFF
MATT BRADY- PLAY-
MATTHEW P. SACCO-
PREVIEW

The UMass skipper anticipates the Crimson to block the middle on its side of the ball, which will force the terrorizing Maroon and White lining squad to take the majority of its shots from the perimeter – ones it hopes its netminder, Jake McKenna, will stop. On offense, he believes Harvard will try to push UMass' short sticks deep into the zone and then forge an assault.

"They have some very dangerous offensive players and they have an outstanding young goaltender," Cannella said. "So if [McKenna] plays well – and we [have trouble shooting] – then he'll keep them in the game."

Senior Roger Buttles and sophomore Matt Primm lead Harvard into a fight against a UMass defense that has yet to be budged by an opponent. Ranked second in the nation in man-down defense, it has killed off 48 of 54 extra man opportunities through nine games.

Senior Rick Kunkel heads a potent Minuteman offense that outscored opponents by an 8-44 goal margin this season, a statistic which is tops in the nation.

Saturday in UMass' 14-7 win over Yale, Kunkel tied a career-high with six goals, tallying at least once in each of the four quarters.

"He shot really well," Cannella said. "People were getting the ball to Richie and he finished. That's what he's done his whole career.

I'm real happy for him to step up in that situation and do so well."

Every next game is equally important for the Maroon and White. Today at 3 p.m., the Minutemen will attempt to grab its tenth straight victory, a feat unmatched by UMass since 1981 when they also began the season 10-0. But Cannella and his roadies are only focusing on the present. They're not yet satisfied.

Boston at its finest on Patriot's Day

Monday, April 16, 2001 was a very special day in the city of Boston. Not only was it Patriots Day and Marathon Day, but it was the fourth and final round of the Red Sox-Yankees series over at Fenway Park. It was a sports lovers dream and this columnist was there for it all.

The history of the Red Sox Patriots Day game is quite colorful. In the beginning, it was scheduled to begin at 11:05 a.m. so that the game would end around the time that the runners would be making their way through Kenmore Square.

This would give the fans exiting Fenway a chance to take in the spectacle that is the Boston Marathon. Today however, runners are much faster than they were back then and the winners have usually already reached Boylston Street by the time the final out has been made.

Having grown up in the Boston area and been an avid Red Sox fan and season ticket holder my entire life, Patriots Day has always held a very special place in my heart. There is an indescribable aura that hangs around the entire city on this day, which is meant to honor the commencement of the American Revolution. However, Monday far surpassed any and all Patriots Day's of the past for me personally.

Firstly, this was my first time back in Massachusetts for this state holiday since 1998 after journeying to our nation's capital for my first two years of college. But more importantly it was my first Red Sox Patriots Day game since that same year and the first time that I had ever attended the marathon. That's right, I have live just outside the city for 21 years and Monday was my first marathon.

For those of you who do not know me I spend most of my time away from the Collegian working Crowd Control for the Red Sox. This job leaves me co-workers and I responsible for the safety of the more than 30,000 patrons who come through the turnstiles every night. However, the job does have its perks, notably the fact that I get paid to watch baseball. This is a fact that often gets overlooked when the New York Yankees come to town.

The Red Sox-Yankees rivalry is a rivalry that goes deeper than almost any other in professional sports. There is a true hatred that exists between the teams and their fans, a fact that I have learned all too well in my three years of employment at "Friendly" Fenway. While the first three games of the series were a never-ending string on incidents and ejections, Monday was rather quiet.

At first I could not explain this point, was it the Sox comfortable lead, the brilliant pitching of Frank Castillo or just the early game time? But then it suddenly hit me. Patriots Day is a Massachusetts holiday and a Massachusetts holiday only, all those New York fans who had flocked to Fenway were now back in the Empire State doing whatever it was that they did.

While the action in the stands may not have been on par with that of a Friday night tilt between the Sox and their arch-nemesis, the product on the field was just as sensational. From the moment that center fielder Darren Lewis, a surprise starter in front of Carl Everett, dropped a triple into right-center field to lead of the bottom of the first until the newly svelte Rod Beck struck out Yankee catcher Jorge Posada to end the game, these two teams put on a clinic in how to play good baseball.

Over on the marathon course, somewhere between Hopkinton and Boston, South Korea's Bong-Ju Lee was putting on a clinic of his own in the 105th installment of the Boston Marathon. The South Korean ended Kenya's 10 year string of winners and became the first Korean in 51 years to take home the top spot and the $80,000 prize that comes with it. However, the Kenyans did not go home empty handed as Catherine Ndereba won the women's race with a time of 2:23.53, just 14 minutes behind Lee.

However, the Boston Marathon is not simply a story of elite runners. More than 20,000 men and women were officially registered to run, with many more joining the race on their own. The true stories of the marathon come from these people. In the world's only sporting event in which yeomen like you and I can be in the same field as the best the world has to offer, it is the yeomen who steal the show. They run with a flair and panache that is hard to match in any sport. They endure this grueling 26.2 mile journey not because they have to, but because they want to.

Following the Sox 4-1 victory over the Yanks, two friends and I headed down to Boylston Street to catch the pack as they made their way towards the finish line. The looks on their faces as they made the final turn onto Boylston near the Hynes Convention Center spoke volumes. These runners had been through hell and back since leaving Hopkinton around noon and now the end was finally in sight.

The crowd roared in an attempt to will the runners on for the last tenth of a mile, it was the least we could do. These men and women put themselves through the ultimate test of will and endurance and were about to succeed. There was no prize money waiting for them at the finish line just a slew of fans cheering them on as they made their final descent toward glory.

Justin Pearson is a Collegian columnist.

■ softball

continued from page 12

the way in Monday's second game. Rooney, game one's hero, and Wheeler smacked three hits each. Rooney smacked her first homer of the year, a three run job in the sixth inning, and knocked in four-RBI in the game.

Bakken and Robustelli continued their solid play as well. Bakken went two-for-two at the plate, while Robustelli smacked a double and scored three runs.

Jeffries was solid on the mound, going the distance while striking out five. The senior hurler improved her record to 7-3.

*****

Massachusetts 8, St. Joseph's 5

The Minutewomen jumped out an early five-run lead and never looked back as they struggled to an 8-5 win over the Hawks. With the win UMass improves to 26-9 on the season and improves it's conference-leading record to a perfect 12-0. The loss drops St. Joe's to 14-19-1 with a mark of 5-7 in the A-10.

A three-run double by Cross in the bottom of the second gave the Maroon and White its biggest lead of the day.

Despite the early deficit the Hawks clawed back throughout the game closing the gap to 7-5 in the fifth inning, but that is as close as they would get as the Minutewomen plated another run bottom of the sixth for the games final tally.

The torrid hitting of the UMass aided a sub-par pitching performance in the victory.

Robustelli went two-for-four on the afternoon with a triple and two runs scored while Wheeler was two-for-three with a double and two runs scored.

Rooney's continued added another solid day at the plate with a single, RBI as well as two runs scored. Bakken also contributed a single and two RBI.

Hadley got the win I relief of Holtz. The junior pitched 2 1/3 innings striking out two batters.

*****

Yesterday the A-10 league office named Hadley Pitcher of the Week for the second time of the year.

The junior co-captain helped UMass earn two wins over rival Temple. In the opening game of a double-header she threw a complete game while striking out six and not allowing an earned run.

The following day she came into the game to relieve Jeffries and pitched five innings of one-hit ball.

For the week the Bristol, Conn. native allowed only a single run to cross the plate (unearned) and struck out 10 opposing batters.

With her two wins over St. Joe's Hadley's record now stands at an impressive 9-5.

*****

UMass will bring its winning streak into a doubleheader on Thursday against cross-state rival Harvard. The 26-9 Minutewomen will host the 14-16 Crimson at the UMass Softball Complex at 3 p.m. and 5 p.m.

Bryan Smith contributed to this article.

IDEAL MOVERS & STORAGE
Come be a part of a team dedicated to providing excellent service to the Pioneer Valley and beyond.
•Excellent Starting Pay
•Raises based on Performance
•Get Paid to get in Shape
•Learn usefull skills
•Fun Environment
•Potential to earn over $4,000 during summer
•Potential for Tips
•Flexible Hours
Call 584-4746
IDEAL MOVERS & STORAGE
584-4746
"Our Service Will Move You"

jiffy lube Signature Service
MORE THAN AN OIL CHANGE
$5 OFF
($27.99 Regular price plus tax)
plus 79 environmental charge
347 Russell St Hadley
Rt 9 Amherst next to Golden Pizzaria Carousel
Calder Plaza (King St.) Northampton

Commuter Students!
On behalf of the Commuter Area Government, you are entitled to materials or a workshop FOR FREE!
Be one of the first 75 commuter students to stop by The Craft Center in the Student Union and tell them you are a commuter student and you will receive up to $10 worth of free materials or a free instructional workshop.
Between now and April 22
Don't Miss Out!!!
Craft Center Hours: TUE,WED,THUR 11-5/ FRI 11-6/ SAT & SUN 1-6

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
A great place to get contact lenses
Convenient hours and location
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

The Black Sheep
THE BLACK SHEEP has been serving the UMass community for over 15 years.
We are a delicatessen, all butter scratch bakery, gourmet food purveyor and full service caterer.
THE BLACK SHEEP is renowned for providing the most memorable and best tasting GRADUATION PARTIES in the Valley.
Stop by for a cup of coffee, overstuffed sandwich, or homemade dessert and see what we have to offer.
THE BLACK SHEEP
79 MAIN ST. AMHERST
253-3442
OCMP, VISA/MASTERCARD ACCEPTED.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$200 Worth of Grocery Certificates towards groceries of your choice only $20, great Mother's Day gift. Mocha Emporium Hampshire Mall 587-9882

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

Take over our lease - Large 2 bedroom available June 1. heat & water. Call 256-2194

Summer Sublet June-Aug. 2 bedroom near Mike's Billiards on Rt. 9. 253-6731

Two Bedrooms third floor Brandywine Apartments furnished with balacony June 1st to August 31st 549-4110

Take over our lease 2 bedroom apt. Starting June 1st. Call 549-7053 for details.

Summer Sublet with fall option in Brandywine. Furniture included. 548-6991

2 Bedroom in Brandywine avail June 1st. Call 549-4003

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Female Wanted to share apt. @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

Take over my lease. 1 bedroom in Pufftonl Call 617-899-6606. Starting June 1.

Sleep in my Bed! $875 2 bedroom Brandywine available June 1 option for fall. 549-4888

2 Bedroom Apt. starting June 1st. Great location w/living room/bedroom furniture for sale. In excellent condition/cheap. Call 549-0453 ASAP

One Bedroom Efficency. Near UMass cernter, bus. $550, hear, hot water, inc. 586-0746

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts.com or 549-0600.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Renovated, Puffton Apartment. Available 6-1. 3 bedroom, $1155. 549-7465

AUTO FOR SALE

1995 Saturn SL2 Auto, loaded. Excellent condition. $4000. 537-0517

CHILDCARE

Get paid to have fun this summer taking care of 2 boys in Shutesbury. $8 per hr. 30hrs per week. Transportation, references required. 259-1118

EMPLOYMENT

Teachers, Counselors for summer day camp in Adams or residential camp in Charlton, MA. Call 800-433-8375

Attention International Company needs help part-time, full-time. 1-800-723-2896

EXCITING SALES OPPORTUNITY
Professional organization needs success-driven individuals for sales careers. All leads provided, flexible hours. Average 1st yr earnings of $65K, generous commissions & bonuses! A fun and exciting work environment. Send resume to: 228 Main Street, #423, Williamstown, MA 01267, an EOE

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.wantnetwealth.com

EMPLOYMENT

Make enough money to take the summer off. Have you had experience driving trucks. No special license required. Make $125-$155 per day for approximately 14 days in June and 12 days in Aug. One or both sessions available. Call 1-888-949-5089

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA
The Resort at Glacier St. Mary Lodge
Be a part of the team! Limited number of positions left!
For more informaiton call:
1-800-368-3689
Apply Online Today @
www.glacierparkjobs.com

Experienced Staff Needed: day and night shifts available for wait staff and bar staff. Night shifts available for door personel. Immediate openings. Must be here for the summer. Apply at Amherst Brewing Co.

Fraternities * Sororities
Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

Lost Chance Legal Assistants. April 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Fall, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Like Working Outdoors?
Want a great tan this summer?
Paint for Collegiate Entrepreneurs!
Hiring full-time summer posititions for Painters and Production Managers.
No experience necessary. Transportation and dependability a must. 35-40 hours/week Springfield Area.
Painter's: $8.25
Manager's: $10
Call Sam at 1-800-590-9516 (pager)

Lifeguards
Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

MISCELLANEOUS

Publish Your Work For $1,295 Textbooks, Novels, and More Call FirstPublish, Inc. at 888-707-7634 Or visit www.firstpublish.com

ROOM FOR RENT

2 Femeles looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

Summer Sublet/Fall Option 2 bdrm available in 4 bdrm house. Leverett call 548-4999

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. for summer sublet. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Looking for 1 or 2 Females to live at Mill Valley. Please call 546-6613 ask for Tracie

Summer Sublet Needed! 2bdrm apartment in Boulders. Some furniture available. $785/mo. Call 256-8012

ROOMMATE WANTED

Summer Sublet w/ lease option. 2bdr apartment in Brandywine. Available June 1. Call 548-6819

1 Bedroom Available in 3bdr Puffton. Move in after finals. Cheap Cheap Rent! Call 549-8517

Two fun girls looking to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine. Call Kathyleen 546-5948 or Laura 546-5525

Looking for 1 or 2 people, male or female to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting June 1st. Email: pa5tricia@hotmail.com

Two Female Roommates looking for 1 or 2 other females roommates for apt in Brandywine. Call 546-2738

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

Starting June 1. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Furnished Apt in Brandywine. 2 bedroom available June 1. Call 549-7259

One bedroom in 5 bedroom furnished house in Sunderland. June 1 with fall option. Call Mike B 665-7639. $200.month

Summer Sublet w/ lease option in Puffton Apartments. Room 2 to 3 people. Call 549-4706

Summer Sublet Puffton 3 bed. 2 bath heat/water inc. available June 1. Incentive offered. Call 549-5177

2 Bedroom 1 1/2 bathrooms fully furnished (TV, stereo, satellite, BBQ) Great location to compus. Front porch and backyard, parking available , washer + dryer. Call Dave 549-5893

Newly Renovated Puffton! Avail. ASAP-August. Call Judy at 549-4017

Salem Place Private room/bath furnished, bright, spacious. Call 253-5057

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 3 Hartford
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 61 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - CBS 30 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - FOX 61 Hartford
13 - NBC 40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMASS TV Academic Channel
16 - WTNH New Haven
17 - WGBH
18 - WNPX
19 - UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Closed to Cured
22 - Cspan
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - MTV
30 - VH1
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV2
42 - MTV3
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 18, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Mark Russell	Green		Mark Russell	American High (In Stereo)		Egg	Egg
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Best Friends	★★ "Fallen" (1997, Suspense) Denzel Washington, John Goodman. (In Stereo)					News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Best Friends	★★ "Fallen" (1997, Suspense) Denzel Washington, John Goodman. (In Stereo)					News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife-Kids	My Wife-Kids	Drew Carey	The Job (N)	Once and Again (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends	Nanny	Dawson s Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "Girlfight" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		West Wing (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Amends"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	7th Heaven		Blind Date	Blind Date	Dawson s Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "Girlfight" (In Stereo)		News	Change-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		West Wing (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Amends"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Grounded-Life	Boot Camp (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		West Wing (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Amends"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	General Auction						General Auction Continues
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Spin City	Frasier	My Wife-Kids	My Wife-Kids	Drew Carey	The Job (N)	Once and Again (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Special Unit 2 "The Pack"		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Mind Abt. You
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Friends	Fresh Prince	Ripley s Believe It or Not!		Superman (1978, Drama) Gene Hackman.				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Ltd Choice"		Biography: Burnett		American Justice		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Confession"
CNN	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N)			Crossfire		Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		Sports	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Dairy Show	Steio s Money	★★½ "Major League" (1989, Comedy) Tom Berenger.				South Park	That s My	Daily Show	Stein s Money
DISC	42	Wild Discovery: Midwey		Wild Discovery: Polar Bears		FBI Files "Unabomber"				FBI Files "Unabomber"		Deadline Discovery (N)	Justice Files "Serial Killers"
ESPN	33	Sportscenter		Stanley Cup Playoffs Conference Quarterfinals Game 4 - Teams to Be Announced. (Live)						Major League Baseball Teams to Be Announced. (Live)
LIFE	49	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "In the Deep Woods" (1992, Suspense) Rosanna Arquette.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	61	Teen People s	Tom Green	Tom Green	Tom Green	Tom Green	Tom Green	Tom Green "Cancer Special"		Tom Green "Uncensored"		MTV s 20th Anniversary
NICK	53	Pinky & Brain	Caidog	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3 s Company	3 s Company	All in Family	All in Family
SCIFI	63	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "A Distant Star"		Crusade (In Stereo)		★★★ "Heatseaker" (1987, Horror) Andrew Robinson. (In Stereo)				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Body Art		Beware! Bed Drivers		Monster Machines: Miners		Robotica (N)				Monster Machines: Miners
TNT	25	ER "Union Station" (In Stereo)		Pretender "End Game"		NBA Basketball Miami Heat at Orlando Magic. (In Stereo Live)						NBA Basketball Utah Jazz at Phoenix Suns.
USA	29	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "True Calling" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Hardball"		"No Code of Conduct" (1998, Action) Cherie Sheen. (In Stereo)				Merlin	Merlin
HBO	35	(5:30) "The Naked Gun" (1988)				★★ "Where the Heart Is" (2000, Drama) Natalie Portman. PG-13		Sex-and-City	Arliss	Sopranos "He Is Risen"		On the Record (N)
MAX	45	(5:50) ★★½ "Ghost in the Machine" (1993)				★½ "Anna and the King" (1999, Drama) Jodie Foster. (In Stereo) PG-13				"Proximity" (2000, Suspense) James Coburn.		"Secret Needs"
SHOW	55	★★★½ "Undercover Blues" (1993) Kathleen Turner. PG-13				★½ "Foolish" (1999) Eddie Griffin.			Extras-Croc	Soul Food		Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)	"Collectors"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

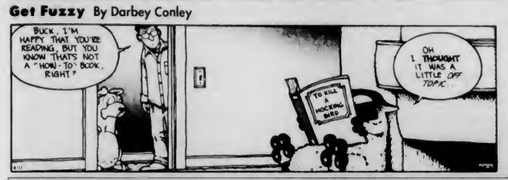
Masked Dropout By Bob Hewitt

HEY KIDS! THERE'S A NEW SUPER HERO ON CAMPUS, MEET... "ONE-WOMAN MAN"
YOU'RE THE ONLY GIRL FOR ME, BABY! I'M SUPER MONOGOMIS!!
TUNE IN NEXT TIME FOR THE FALL OF "ONE-WOMAN MAN"
THE AGONY!

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

JUST IN TIME FOR THE SHORTLESS ANTICS OF SPRING BREAK, I'VE DEVELOPED MY OWN MUSCLE-BUILDING MILKSHAKE RECIPE!
BEHOLD! 25,000 CALORIES OF CHOCOLATE-FLAVORED PROTEIN, VITAMINS AND IRON!
GLUG GLUG GLUG GLUG GLUG GLUG
DO YOU GET THE MUSCLES TRYING TO LIFT YOURSELF OFF THE FLOOR LIKE THAT?
TOO... (UP) MUCH... (UP) IRON...

Get Fuzzy By Darbey Conley



BUCK.. I'M HAPPY THAT YOU'RE READING, BUT YOU KNOW THAT'S NOT A "HOW-TO" BOOK, RIGHT?
TO KILL A MOCKING BIRD
OH. I THOUGHT IT WAS A LITTLE OFF TOPIC

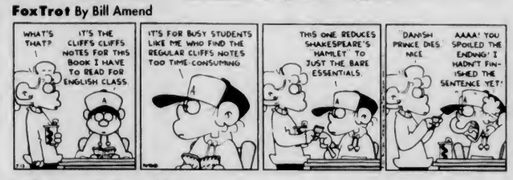
Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Nuclear atomic theory is purely metaphysical as it recurs in nature, as Angston's Law...
Shhh! Here comes an adult!
So, like, dude... I met this bangin' hottie at the mall...
Wicked

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

sigh! I CAN'T GET ANYTHING DONE... I CAN'T STOP THINKING ABOUT ERIN!
TRY DOING SOMETHING MENTALLY ENGAGING TO GET YOUR MIND OFF HER.
IT'S ONLY BEEN ONE DATE, MAN- YOU DON'T WANT TO SCARE HER OFF WITH WHAT ABOUT STARTING UP THAT COMIC YOU WERE TALKING ABOUT--
WAIT A MINUTE-- ARE YOU ACTUALLY GIVING ME FRIENDLY ADVICE RATHER THAN INSULTING ME?
OH. UM. YOUR MAM.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



WHAT'S THAT?
IT'S THE CLIFFS CLIFFS NOTES FOR THIS BOOK I HAVE TO READ FOR ENGLISH CLASS.
IT'S FOR BUSY STUDENTS LIKE ME WHO FIND THE REGULAR CLIFFS NOTES TOO TIME-CONSUMING.
THIS ONE REDUCES SHAKESPEARE'S HAMLET TO JUST THE BARE ESSENTIALS.
DANISH PRINCE DIES. NICE.
AAAA! YOU SPOILED THE ENDING! I HADN'T FINISHED THE SENTENCE YET!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

HEY, BUDDY SORRY I'M LATE SAYY WHAT HAPPENED TO YOU?
LOCO'S ART EXHIBIT MADE ME OUT TO BE AN OPPRESSIVE, WHITE-MALE PIG
I TRIED TO DEFEND MYSELF EXPLAIN MY SIDE OF THINGS, BUT THE CROWD ACCUSED ME OF TRYING TO SMOTHER HER SELF-EXPRESSION IN A PATRIARCHAL DIATRIBE
THEN SOMEONE KNEED ME IN A SENSITIVE AREA
BUMMER
SAY I DIDN'T KNOW YOU HAD AN EXTRA NIPPLE
THAT'S NOT MY BUDDY THAT'S A CIRCUS FREEK!

Quote of the Day

"All the girls are in love with me
I'm a teenage lobotomy"

–Ramones

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 38 LOW: 25	HIGH: 45 LOW: 23	HIGH: 63 LOW: 41

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Give advice only when asked today or you're likely to find that few are willing to listen, no matter how valid your views may be.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – There is no danger today in going out of your way to please others today. Indeed, you can enjoy great rewards for you extra efforts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec 21) – You should enjoy an inspired, invigorating day – but you must take care that you leave something left over for that special someone.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You'll be driven forward today by your own rich and complex objectives. You needn't explain yourself to your critics – just yet.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're more in the mood today for small, intimate gatherings than you are for a grand social event. Private talk results in a major discovery.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) – A challenge comes your way today, and you can embrace it with all the energy and passion you have. Seek a new method to achieve old ends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Don't be lazy today, especially when asked a favor by another Aries or a Taurus native. These individuals mean more to you than others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – It's a good day to unleash your creativity and to explore the more unusual options available to you at this time. Don't be timid!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – It's time for you to claim your rewards in an outright, honest and direct fashion. It's important that you not let others take advantage.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Make no decisions today without first consulting those closest to you. What you do is sure to affect them for some time to come.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You can successfully turn around a negative trend today, and those around you will be impressed with your ingenuity and show their gratitude.

VIRGO (Aug. 23- Sept. 22) – Your first impressions are sure to prove more important than usual today – but you must keep your temper carefully under control at all times.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBEJ
www.monkey-box.net
THE SUBMARINE'S NAVIGATOR CHECKED ALL THE COORDINATES AGAIN, BUT WAS ONLY PRETENDING BECAUSE HE COULDN'T READ.

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
★
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thurs. Karaoke w/Cloud Nine Productions $2 cover
Sat. Love Bomb '70s dance music $4 cover
Sun. Chris Kozak Quartet Jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst
413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

ACROSS
1 Had on
5 Deacon Jones was a famous one
10 Have in one's bonnet
14 Russian city
15 Put a pitcher first
16 Rod
17 Say that always seemed to be tied up?
19 "Zip-Doo-Dah"
20 Virgin product, sometimes
21 Botched
23 Bent and twisted
24 Buttermilk, for one
25 VCRs' companions
26 Title role for Sir Anthony
29 "Mott Flanders" penner
32 Great dogs
33 Interplanetary transport
34 Agricultural chemical
35 Mouthful, washing
36 Another, in Madrid
37 Dated actor Quiggin
38 "___ Cop" Reynolds film
39 England's Downs
40 Become familiar with gradually
42 Took a load off
43 Here, York
46 Alternative
48 Aging agent
47 Two-point score
49 International sporting event
51 Dr. Frankenstein's flunky
52 Exhibition for sculptors?
54 Run without pushing
55 Ripley's last words?
58 ___ take arms against ... (Hamlet")
57 Diving-bell developer
58 Physicist Bohr
59 "The Donna Show"

DOWN
1 "Barney Miller" character
2 High-stakes exams
3 Send, as payment
4 Type of rifle
5 Works hard
6 Schlieer penagger's middle name
7 Julie on screen
8 Advice-giving Landers
9 Cash for a crazed housewife?
10 Tennis great Ashe
11 What the stalled were said after the coming-out ball?
12 Part of a palindromic phrase
13 Got a load of 18 Start a match
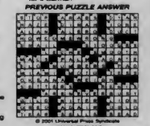
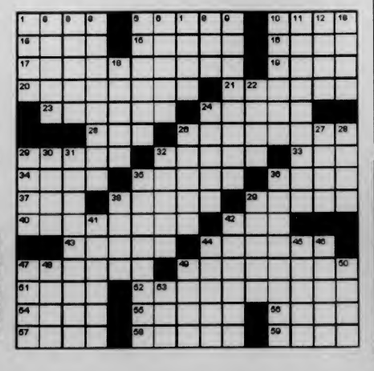
22 They're not free of charge
24 ___ ray
26 Mutt
27 Hairstyle of the Jackson Five
28 The good earth
30 Farm composed of music notes?
30 Planes or Grieco
31 Lunch here for a German
32 "Purgatorio" writer
36 "Marks of Arthur" Chase
36 Choose
36 Situation for water cannons
36 Former Yankee Combs
41 Critic and former German president
43 Walks like a rooster
44 Yuccalike plant
46 Fetter alarm
48 Hotel offering
49 Bank's business
46 Inicks tourist mecca
46 Drop off
50 Jab with an elbow
53 Pool prefix

PREVIOUS PUZZLE ANSWER



© 2001 Universal Press Syndicate www.uexpress.com



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH
Chicken Big Mamou (B, H, W)
Greek Style Tofu (vegan) (B, H, W)
Squash Bake (vegetarian) (B, H, W)
Taco Bar (Chicken) (Beef) (F)
Vegetable Taco (vegan) (F)

DINNER
Country BBQ Ribs (B, H, W)
Thai Seitan (vegan) (B, H, W)
Breaded Vegan Cutlet (vegan)
Baked Chicken (F)

Today's Staff
Night Editor — Bryan Smith
Photo Technician — Scott Eldridge
Copy Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor — Alan Basque
Production Staff — Augusto Laundaro, Kara Stokes

Inside: Men's lax looks to take down Harvard

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, April 18, 2001 | 12

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass trounces UConn

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Altieri and the baseball team made quick work of rival UConn yesterday with an impressive 11-3 win over the Huskies. With the win the Minutemen improve to 11-12 on the season.

Senior Clark fuels offense with grand slam; Loonie solid in return to mound

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

As we saw this weekend in Boston, when it comes to a team's rival, there is no such thing as a small game.

This was also obvious at Earl Lorden Field yesterday as the Massachusetts baseball team [11-12, 6-3 Atlantic 10] upended their rival UConn [18-17, 11-6 Big East] 11-3.

Senior Gavin Clark broke the game wide-open with a grand slam in the bottom of the seventh inning and senior David Loonie provided a solid effort on the mound to lead the Minutemen. Sophomore Sean Sarno also provided an offensive kick as he reached base four times in his five trips to the plate and scored on each occasion.

"UConn is our biggest rival out of the conference, so it was a big game," Sarno said.

Loonie provided by far his best effort of the season for the Maroon and White as he threw seven innings, allowing five hits and walking only two men while striking out three. Previously, his longest outing of the season had been a 4 1/3 inning outing in the team's loss at Siena two weeks ago.

"It feels great having a strong outing," Loonie said. "Anything I can do to help the team is good. I was trying to find myself and I think I did a little better today. I still have a lot of stuff to work out but I think I gave a pretty good effort."

"I thought [Loonie] did a great job today," Stone said. "We've been giving him some starts and waiting for him to have a solid performance. He's just had a hard time getting a feel and today he was on the verge of not staying in the ball game for a while, but he got through some innings. It was good for us and good for him too. We need some more people who can pitch."

UMass got on the board early as Sarno singled to lead off the game. He moved up to third on an error when Connecticut starter Paul Melzen threw the ball over first baseman Peter Soteropoulos's head. Next up was Connell Clark, who notched his 11th RBI of the season on a groundout to second base.

The third inning brought more good fortune for the Minutemen as Sarno again led off by drawing a walk. He then continued to torment Melzen by drawing a balk while dancing off first base. The younger of the Clark brothers again drove Sarno around by slamming a double to deep center field.

The strong baserunning continued as Clark stole third by getting a good jump off second base. Senior captain Nick Gorneault lined the next pitch to left field for a single to score Clark and drive the Minuteman lead to 3-0.

Meanwhile, on the other side of the field, Loonie was cruising, yielding three hits and a walk in his first three innings of work, allowing no men to get past second base.

Both pitchers had a solid fourth, as Melzen allowed only a Kulak single in the inning, and Loonie got his only 1-2-3 inning of the day, retiring all three on flyouts.

In the top of the fifth, the Huskies finally got on the board as designated hitter Mike Mocerino led off the inning with a homerun that just cleared the wall in left-center field, his second of the season. But after that, Loonie retired the next three Huskies in order to end the threat.

The Maroon and White responded in the bottom half of the inning as Sarno again led off, this time lining a double to the left-center gap. After Connell Clark was hit by a pitch, Gorneault again provided veteran leadership in the clutch by singling home Sarno for his 15th RBI of the season.

Despite playing in his first game since being sidelined by an ankle injury on Saturday, Sarno shook the rust off and led the Minutemen by example on the base

Turn to BASEBALL, page 5

Minutemen fall short in conference finals

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's tennis team learned that the old saying "It's not whether you win or lose but it's how you play the game" actually has some merit. It poured their hearts and souls into the Atlantic 10 Tournament this past weekend playing their most crucial matches of the season.

As the No.2 seed the Minutemen played Dayton University in the first round and defeated them 4-3 in what proved to be just the beginning of a long, hard-fought battle.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Bill Greener

"It was great beating Dayton 4-3," Rory Theis said. "They thought they had the advantage and we showed it in their face. Bill really came through in the clutch."

With a win under their belts, the Maroon and White met Xavier in another do or die match.

With a wide-open conference, the UMass men knew that they were evenly matched against the Musketeers. It basically came down to desire, as the Minutemen have been craving the NCAA bid that an A-10 champion receives. Again they took another vital step with a 4-3 bruising over rival Xavier.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Steve Prisco

No.1 player Steve Prisco breezed past Danny Sturdevan in two sets 6-4, 6-4. Senior captain Bill Greener played with experience, as the veteran just had more desire with a 5-7, 6-4, 6-4 victory over Xavier's Cameron Bell. Champeau came up big again as he fought to the end in a tiebreaker match against Ryan Potts and came up victorious 3-6, 6-4, 7-6.

"In the Xavier match Todd Champeau won in tiebreakers and really pulled through for us," Judy Dixon said. "So the two captains pulled out our first two matches."

Finally it all came down to Saturday as the Minutemen challenged St. Bonaventure, the No.1 seed and the favorite to win the tournament and, thus, gain an NCAA bid. The Minutemen had the talent and will to take it to the next stage but they unfortunately came up short losing 4-2 in an emotional match.

In fact, veterans Greener and Champeau recorded the only wins for the squad 7-5, 6-4 and 6-4, 6-0 respectively as their experience shined through once again.

The doubles point again loomed large as two of the three UMass tandems lost their matches and thus the vital point.

"We just fell short to St. Bonaventure," said Theis. "We played a great tournament for the first two matches. I think we would have beaten St. Bonaventure if we had won the doubles point."

With a 12-8 finish to end the season, the Minutemen are holding their heads up high as the first UMass men's tennis team to finish as high as second place in the conference.

"Coming from a senior perspective and being my last collegiate event it was a great way to finish my tennis career at UMass," Greener said. "I'm so proud of my teammates that we beat Xavier and Dayton while they had tons of fans screaming for them.

"We came together against adversity and gave them everything they could handle. I'm just so proud to be a member of the 2000-01 Massachusetts men's tennis team. I'm just so proud to be a part of that."

Softball rolling over Atlantic 10

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

While the rest of the nation is finally taking notice, the Massachusetts softball team continues to dominate its Atlantic 10 rivals. After beginning the season with a mediocre 5-8 record, the Minutewomen have become the dynamic team coach Elaine Sortino envisioned during the preseason. Twenty straight wins later UMass is the No. 25 team in the nation and looking to move even farther up the ladder with a 26-9 record and a perfect 12-0 in conference play.

UMass continued harassing its in-league foes over Easter weekend with six victories, three over both Temple and St. Joseph's.

*****

Massachusetts 3, Temple 1

The weekend began innocently enough when junior Cherra "Scooter" Wheeler broke a scoreless tie with a three-run home run in the bottom half of the third inning. The dinger was Wheeler's fourth of the season.

Senior outfielder Debbie Tomoguchi went a perfect two-for-two at the plate while classmate, first baseman Brandi Cross singled and scored on the Wheeler homer.

Junior right-hander Jen Hadley went the full seven innings on the mound. The hurler scattered four hits while striking out six. Hadley's record (6-5) finally improved past .500 after a rocky start and continued to sky rocked throughout the long weekend.

*****

Massachusetts 5, Temple 3

The momentum stayed on the Maroon and White's side as the home team jumped out to an early 4-0 lead after three innings.

The Lady Owls clawed their way back into the game, but sophomore hurler Kaila Holtz refused to give in to Temple's offensive pressure, earning her team-leading tenth victory of the season (10-1).

The North Vancouver, B.C. native smacked her second round-tripper of the season to help her own cause.

Sophomore shortstop Emily Robustelli led the way at the plate with a three-for-four performance, including two doubles and a triple while knocking in three runs.

Sophomore outfielder Anna Perey added a two-for-two performance, smacking a double and scoring two runs.

*****

Massachusetts 6, Temple 1

Game three on Sunday saw continued domination by the Minutewomen after a quick scare.

Temple jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the top of the first, but didn't hold on long.

The Lady Owl's only lead of the entire weekend lasted until Holtz, Tomoguchi, and junior Ashley Bakken hit consecutive RBI-singles and Wheeler added an RBI-double. By the end of the first, UMass held a 4-1 lead and refused to look back.

Robustelli stayed hot at the plate, going two-for-three with her second triple of the weekend and scored a run.

Hadley pitched five innings in relief of senior Carrie Jeffries to earn her seventh win on the season (7-5). The duo combined for six strikeouts while allowing five hits.

*****

Massachusetts 3, St. Joseph's 2

Patriot's Day began with a nail biter. Down 2-1 in the bottom of the seventh, Perey knocked freshman Aisha Franke home with a game-tying sacrifice fly. Junior co-captain Teri Rooney followed with a walk-off RBI-single to left center field.

Bakken scored on the reigning A-10 Player of the Week's game winner, her second run scored on the afternoon.

Hadley won her third game of the weekend, going the full seven innings while striking out eight.

The junior pitched tough with runners on base, giving up just three runs on eight hits.

*****

Massachusetts 8, St. Joseph's 2

Two of the Maroon and White's hottest hitters led

Turn to SOFTBALL, page8

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Carrie Jeffries improved her record to 10-1 on the mound the while the softball team extended its winning streak to 20 games.

Skribble's gonna rock UMass to the bone. See inside for more.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Shaun Skeffington shined in his third-base coaching debut, waving home the winning run for UMass.

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 119 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, April 19, 2001

DANIEL MARTYCOLLEGIAN

Stop and smell the flowers
Armond Prevost (left) and Brian H. Santos (right) are admiring what is growing in the Durfee Greenhouse.

Williams appoints three to administration

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams announced yesterday that three high-level administration positions have now been filled. In a University of Massachusetts statement, Williams outlined the three new administrators. Williams will serve as interim Chancellor following current Chancellor David K. Scott's departure on July 1. Williams is currently Deputy Chancellor. Her ascension, coupled with Provost Cora Marrett's resignation letter last week, left two holes in the upper tiers of Whitmore.

Charlena Seymour, presently Dean of the Graduate School, has been named to the Provost Office. Current Associate Vice Chancellor for Information Technologies and Chief Information Officer John Dubach has named to the Deputy Chancellor's position. Assistant Professor Rosio Alvarez, currently of the Management Science and Information Systems department at UMass-Boston, will succeed his title and office.

"I am pleased to announce these appointments," Williams said. "I hope the University community will join me in welcoming each to new positions of critical responsibilities and commit with me to working cooperatively and collaboratively to advance the many excellences that comprise UMass Amherst."

Seymour will serve as acting Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs from May 28, the effective date of Marrett's resignation, until July 1. After that date, Seymour will serve in an interim role. A professor in the Department of Communication Disorders, Seymour is completing her seventh year as Graduate Dean. She also was Graduate Program director for three years and chaired the Department of Communication Disorders for eight years.

Seymour, a graduate of Howard University, received the Distinguished Alumni Award from the School of Communication at Howard University. She also received a medal of recognition for intercultural and race relations from the Harvard Foundation of Harvard University. She has been the delegation leader for three People to People Ambassador delegations, one each to South Africa, China, and Australia.

Seymour is also the national chair of the Advisory Committee on Minorities in Graduate Education for the Council of Graduate Schools.

John Dubach will serve as Interim Deputy Chancellor effective July 1. Dubach joined the University in 1980 as a visiting assistant professor in the Department of Physics. He worked his way through the department, fin-

Turn to PROVOST page 3

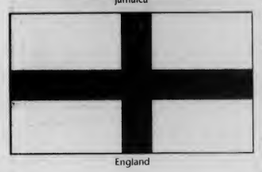
In the pursuit of happiness

Exploring student exchange at UMass

Jamaica



England

By Tom Frazer
Collegian Staff

What do Japan, Russia, Egypt and Colombia have in common? They all are very different socially, politically, economically and probably any other 'ally' you can think of, but this question does have an answer: UMass-Amherst offers study abroad programs in all of these countries. This week's feature is an exploration of the study abroad programs, with attention to both UMass students' experience abroad, and foreign students here in Amherst.

Patricia Vokbus, the Head Foreign Student Advisor estimates that "[T]here are around 2000 foreign students here, with a large percent of any graduating class having been abroad also." The issue of exchange programs and study opportunities in another country is obviously close to many hearts, whether it allows nostalgic recollections of forbidden kisses and enchanting cities, or provides a teaser for future travel.

Many students come to UMass to study. It may surprise you to read this, but UMass-Amherst has a very good international reputation. Added to this, the location - with relative geographic proximity to New York City and Boston - is the perfect place for foreign students to be based.

Of those 2000 foreign students here, 10 percent are on exchange for a year or just a semester. This means there is a rapid and relatively large turnover of new faces coming through the campus doors. Moreover though, the reciprocal nature of exchange programs obviously means that for every Norwegian or Ghanaian here at UMass there is an American studying in Scandinavia or Africa.

Vokbus sees this duality as a win-win situation for this institution: "Our aim is to provide UMass students with the opportunity to study abroad in a foreign environment, and to create a greater mixture of student here at UMA." While some UMass students get the opportunity to go away, many others have

United States

Bangladesh

Turn to EXCHANGE, page 2

Few show but motions pass

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association Senate was again short of quorum; this time after the University's Monday schedule prevented some Senators from making last night's meeting.

A motion calling for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts flag and the American flag to be displayed at every SGA Senate meeting caused much discussion at last nights meeting. Aside from the intense debate that followed, the Senate managed to take care of Special orders as well as pass one motion during the meeting.

The motion, 2001S-42 calling for flags to be displayed at every Senate meeting, caused much heated discussion involving patriotism and misrepresentation. Senators expressed their opinions on the matter in two rounds of debates over the motion.

"I wouldn't want to come into a Senate meeting and feel like the Senate is only tied to the American flag," Senator Rene Gonzalez said. "We're all Senators and here to represent inclusiveness and diversity and we need to ask ourselves if this is really necessary."

Other Senators argued in favor of Gonzalez, explaining that they would feel uncomfortable and not apart of the SGA Senate if the motion were to pass. Senators also explained that they felt that by displaying the American flag would not be equal representation to members of the Senate as well as the student body as a whole.

"We need to take the time and represent every student who goes to the University of Massachusetts," Gonzalez said. "We're supposed to represent Unity and inclusiveness and I think that there are greater issues to be discussed at this time."

However, other members of the Senate disagreed explaining that they felt that by having the flags present would offer a more professional appeal. Senators also expressed the fact that being the SGA, like any other governmental institution, should have the flags present.

"If you go to a town meeting or any governing bodies' meeting you will see the American flag as well as their states flag present," Senator Michel Whitehouse said. "The SGA is supposed to be a lower level form of government on this campus therefore being a governing body we should display these flags."

Whitehouse continued by explaining that he felt the American flag represents diversity and freedom all of which people stand for know matter ones background.

"The meaning of the flag is diversity and freedom and that is what the United States stands for," Whitehouse said. "This is America and the United States pays for the University which stands for diversity and equal opportunity."

Senators who were once in favor of the motion also changed their opinions on the matter once issues arose within the Senate. Senator Aaron Saunders explained that he voted for the motion, but due to the fact that Senators had issues with the motion he felt that it should not pass.

"If it's going to bother people we have a problem," Saunders said. "We're all here representing not only the United States of America, but the rest of the world as well and if people are going to feel alienated this should not happen."

Aside from all the commotion, the Senate was able to accomplish Special Orders as well as pass one motion last night.

One motion, which called for three year contracts to be given to two of four remaining English as a Second Language [ESL] program's professors also brought up discussion. Due to budget cuts two professors were left with unsigned contracts for the following semester.

"We claim that we want diversity on this campus and in order to do this we all need to stick together and sup-

Turn to SGA, page 2

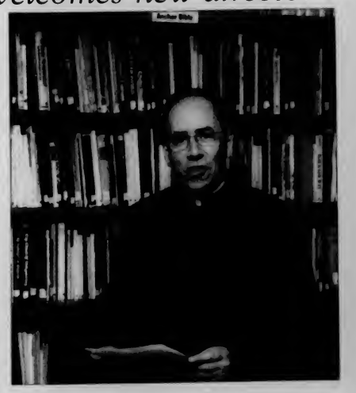
Newman welcomes new director

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff



When Rev. John "Sean" McDonagh was a student at the University of Massachusetts, he worked as a disciple under Father Quigley. He never anticipated that his commitment to the Newman Center would bring him back as acting director, the first University of Massachusetts graduate to hold that post.

Father McDonagh said his interest in the message the Newman Center carried caused him to develop an interest in canon law and helped him to realize one of his life-long dreams: "to encourage people to discover the surprise of God's presence in their lives."

An inspiring urban planner, Father said he was taken in to the Newman Center by the homilies of Father Quigley, Father Leo Leclerc, Father Michael Twardzik, Father Merle Lavoie, Catholic faculty and classmates.

"As a young person, I was wondering if the Catholic Church had anything to say to me as an undergraduate or not," Father McDonagh said.

Living a normal undergraduate student's life, he actively involved himself with activities and clubs on campus and would run during his spare time.

But he said there was always a part of him that wanted to explore what he was going to do in life and what friend-

Turn to NEWMAN, page 3

exchange

continued from page 1

their classroom experiences enriched by multicultural opinions and perspectives.

There are around 900 students from UMass away at any one time. Most chose to go in their junior year, but some sophomores and seniors also get the travel bug. On the whole students in good academic standing – with a B minus grade average – from any discipline.

There is a diverse array of reasons why students chose to go away, and the benefits of foreign study clearly varies from person to person as well. While some decide that lackadaisical European drinking laws or Australian beaches are the main attraction, others give greater thought to the enriching personal experience that comes with foreign study.

Marvelise S. Lamet, Director of Education Abroad, thinks more long-term. "Many understand that the 'global market place' is a reality. College is a perfect time to inject a global experience in to your life, in preparation for your career. It looks great on your resume."

The fact that employers, regardless of major, recognize that the problem-solving skills and maturity gained with foreign study is a huge positive. Added to this is the fact that many of the institutions that are offered are internationally renowned, foreign study is often a bargain not to be missed.

Students often go away to supplement their chosen discipline. Lamet exclaimed proudly, "We have nursing students in Ghana studying particular environmental diseases, business students in Derry looking at the rapid regional growth that has occurred since the peace process began, engineers in Australia and others in China, Japan and elsewhere."

Foreign language majors also find foreign study useful. The immersion in a culture, and the consequential impossibility of escape from native language conversation, acts as a catalyst for learning.

Senior Seth Presser, who spent a year at the University of Warwick in England, places less of an emphasis on the scholastic elements of exchange. He asserts, "it definitely helped academically, but I think this was the least important part." Presser offered a philosophical understanding of his exchange. "The experience of coming home is incredible, I did a huge amount of introspection."

While this might seem grandiose to some, it certainly fits with that old travel cliche "it changed my life." As not only the time away provides valuable experiences and memories, it also enables people to reconsider their lives at home in comparison to the lives they led on foreign soils.

While the experience of foreign study for many is life-changing at most and just good old-fashioned fun at least, others find the adaptation to foreign cultures, and leaving home for a long time more difficult.

The University Of Massachusetts International Department, located in Hills South, offers support to foreign study students. It begins with candidate selection. Lamet explains that, "There is a serious process of screening and acceptance in which we try to match people and what they do, to where they should go."

Vokbus adds, "Our goal for students is to help their integration, both social and academic. We help students to muddle their way through."

Next in the chain of events is the pre-exchange preparation. Students are advised to speak to those who have already been away, and to make sure they have a solid grasp of what they are getting themselves into. It goes without saying, but it is probably best not to go to Iceland if you don't like snow, or not go to Italy if you feel sick at the site of tomatoes.

UMass is very proud of its international department, which has been in existence for around 30 years. The department is well aware of the student demography here at UMass, and was very keen to point out that it focuses its activities on instate students. With most UMass undergraduates being from Massachusetts, the financial burdens of foreign study might scare some prospective explorers away. Lamet responded to this fear with this clear proclamation: "We run programs so they are affordable to in-state students." The conventional mechanics of the exchange process lead to students paying their home university fees and then simply swapping with their counterpart in the far of land.

Considering the educational experience in purely economic terms, foreign travel is a huge investment in a student's marketability and future. In Lamet's words, "Exchange is a highly value-added opportunity. It provides many students from within the state the chance to go away and get experiences that they might not have had by staying so close to home, but which are favored by employers."

"It definitely helped academically, but I think this was the least important part."
-Senior Seth Presser on his exchange.

Perhaps Seth Presser's put this most clearly, "Anyone who doesn't take advantage of the opportunities here at UMass for foreign study is blind."

While Presser might downplay the academic factors of exchange, it is important to note that most students who go away tend to do just as well or better than they had in previous years. Whether this is due to added conscientiousness or a developed understanding the requirements of university life is unclear.

American high school poorly prepares some students for the individual responsibilities of many foreign degrees, particularly ones based on the English higher educational system. By the time students have reached their third year they are usually acclimatized to university life, and understand better general collegiate expectations.

For foreign students here at UMass, the University offers a selection of options that facilitate a productive year, from English language courses, to national societies and international housing.

Lewis and Thatcher, both Northeast residence halls, offer language programs and housing for international students respectively. While some might argue that the segregation of international students detracts from their integration in to the wider campus community, others feel the sanctity of these areas provided a comfortable and secure base for wider social interaction. Indeed, many American students decide to live in Lewis in preparation for exchanges in years to come, and others chose simply to live in a multicultural atmosphere for its sheer intrinsic value.

Most foreign students at UMass clearly chose not to live in either of these two dorms. Junior Mashonn Choudhury from Dhaka in Bangladesh lives in Leach and considers living with an America roommate for a year integral to his experience and adjustment. "I think it is much better to live with an American, as it can really help you come to grips with the culture."

Robin Chong from Kingston in Jamaica also thinks that the balance between international and American friendships is vital. In his notoriously thick accent Robin proclaimed, "The orientation was good because it helped us all make some friendships with each other, before everyone else arrived." The orientation week held in August allowed the international students to construct some sort of sympathetic support network, which has for many been a de facto family.

Some students find the occasionally strange and often ridiculous American ethnic grouping incomprehensible. Others offer anecdotes about arguments that have had with professors over the spelling of words such as 'color', 'favor' and 'humor' (according to everyone else in the world there is a 'u' after the 'o'). One student wouldn't stop talking about his take on the indefatigable American patriotism that many international students are confronted with.

The fundamental principle that underwrites the whole international student experience is the primacy of the individual. If you ask the same open-ended question to any UMass foreign student, you will most likely get a different answer every time. This is not only testament to the diverse and varied experiences that each student has found; it is also an indicator of the standard of student that comes to UMass on exchange.

Barry Boyle from Loughborough in England perfectly encapsulated this when he interjected, "Listen, the fact of the matter is that people come away because they want a new experience, they want to explore and find out about things, even find out about themselves."

SGA

continued from page 1

port this program," Senator Luis Nieves said. "Right now we have two professors going to work everyday not knowing if there going to have a job their tomorrow."

Nieves also continued to explain that without the ESL program there would be a even more noticeable lack of ALANA [African, Latino, Asian, Native American] students at UMass.

"Enrollment is increasing, but if we don't have the teachers to teach these students there going to drop out," Nieves said. "That is why we need to have this program at this University."

The one main motion passed last night involved appointing former Speaker of the Senate Jim Eltringham to a Commuter Senator. The motion passed placing former Associate Speaker Mike McCarthy as the new Speaker of the Senate.

The meeting ended early once again due to a lack of quorum, leaving four motions untouched for next weeks Senate meeting.

"I was sad to see that we didn't make quorum, but due to the fact that we were on a Monday schedule we knew it would be tough to get quorum," Eltringham said.

President John Sheehan expressed his thoughts on the outcome of last night's meeting, explaining that he felt that it was a waste of time on behalf of the Senate.

"We wasted out time and there was no need to debate this, the motion was ill fought and there were more important things that we had to discuss," Sheehan said. "Our job is to represent students and not waste their time."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1918, and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Broussard Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Dave Troupes Arts & Living Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Tanya Mannes Diversity Editor
Adam Martignetti News Editor
Bryan Smith Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Maureen Maske Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager

Daniel Kirschner Promotions Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargania Assistant Business Manager
Katie Berth Assistant Advertising Manager

Dance
Saturday, April 21
8:30pm - 12:30am
in The Campus Center
The Blue Wall
Lead sponsors: the UMass Tzedek Group, Alpha Phi Omega and the Jewish Student Union. Co-Sponsor: AEPi
And funded by a grant from the Harold Grinspoon and DianeTroderman Tzedakah Fund
For more info, contact Sarah at sblument@umass.edu or Melissa at mbz@student.umass.edu

Massachusetts School of Law
AT ANDOVER
CLASSES START IN JANUARY
• LSAT NOT REQUIRED
• DAY AND EVENING PROGRAMS
• AFFORDABLE TUITION PLANS - 1/2 THE MEDIAN LAW SCHOOL TUITION IN NEW ENGLAND
• OUR PRACTICAL/THEORETICAL PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR THE PRACTICE OF LAW AS WELL AS NUMEROUS OTHER PROFESSIONS
THE LEADER OF REFORM IN LEGAL EDUCATION
500 FEDERAL STREET, ANDOVER, MA 01810
Phone: (978) 681-0800 • email: pcolby@mslaw.edu
www.mslaw.edu
CONTACT US NOW FOR YOUR COPY OF FEDERAL REPORTS
600+ THINGS YOU CAN DO WITH A LAW DEGREE

comedy CONNECTION
HU KE LAU
413•593•5222
JIM BREUER
Co-star in the movie "Half Baked"
April 28th
a.k.a. "Goat Boy"
May 12th
PAULY SHORE

ctnow.com Meadows MUSIC
EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES
Join us at Connecticut's Premier Amphitheater for the most exciting summer employment opportunities around! Ever wonder what it takes to throw a concert? Enjoy working with people? Looking to make extra money during the summer months? If you've said yes, then please join us during our up-coming Job Fairs!
SEASONAL POSITIONS ARE AVAILABLE IN THESE DEPARTMENTS
* Maintenance * Internships * Supervisory Positions * Security * Volunteers
* Aramark Food Services * Grounds-Keeping * Ushers * Ticket Takers
Apply Now at the ctnow.com Meadows Music Centre, ctnow.com Oakdale or by e-mail at:
www.meadowsmusic.com
There will be JOB FAIRS on APRIL 14th & APRIL 21st from 9:00AM to 2:00PM.
All applicants must have 2 forms of valid I.D. for employment. 1 must be a photo I.D.
Must be at least 16 years of age, with valid working papers if under 18 years of age.
Please Note: Residents of the City of Hartford possessing the necessary qualifications, will be given priority consideration in the selection process. AA/EOE
For Directions to our location, please call: 203-269-8721

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

Yom Hashoah tonight

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Staff

Tonight at 7:00 p.m. on the Campus Pond Lawn (in case of rain or cold, in the Cape Cod Lounge), students and members of the Five College community will gather to commemorate Yom Hashoah, or Holocaust Remembrance Day. The memorial service is the final event in a week-long series of lectures and films designed to confront a great atrocity of modern history.

UMass students Sasha Sendrovich and Dan Yagudin began planning the events for this week over a year ago, questioning what relationship can be had to the Holocaust for a generation who has no memory of it. With lectures by UMass Professors Aviva Ben-Ur and James Young, Sendrovich and Yagudin have attempted to capture what they consider to be "a tremendous amount of very recent scholarship." In addition to scheduling speakers and publicity, the biggest challenge, according to Sendrovich has been "to stay away from repeating what has been done many times over for various Holocaust commemorative events. We did not want to have another week of Schindler's List and Life Is Beautiful. it seems like as we get further away from the Holocaust, a great chunk of our knowledge about it comes from pop culture."

Although details about what exactly the service will involve are not being divulged, except to say that it will have an "unusual set-up," Sendrovich is concerned with the way in which the Holocaust is remembered for a generation whose experience with it has chiefly been through film and literature.

"Our memory will somehow fundamentally differ from that of our parents, and a lot of times we will be confronted by a question that we don't know exactly what and why we are remembering. These are some questions that we hope to also address in a Memorial Service on Yom Hashoah, Holocaust Memorial Day," she said.

Yellow armbands, representing those that the Jews and other groups such as homosexuals, Catholics, Poles and Communists had to wear during the Nazi occupation to be easily identified, will be available throughout the day on the Campus Center concourse. "Students will be able to engage themselves in this form of remembrance, luckily, acting out of their own will to put on the armband," said Sendrovich.

Holocaust Memorial Week at UMass is sponsored by Hillel House, the Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, the Office of Jewish Affairs, and the Jewish Student Union.

provost

continued from page 1

ishing as a full professor. He served as executive director of University Computing Services from 1989 to 1993, and headed up the Department of Physics and Astronomy from then until 1996. Dubach was named Associate Chancellor for the Office of Information Technologies in October of 1996.

His office will be filled, again effective July 1, by UMass-Boston's Rosio Alvarez. Alvarez, a UMass-Amherst alum, has held a number of positions on campus, starting in 1988 as a system and network analyst. From 1990 until 1992, she was manager of financial information systems, and until 1998, she was a management information systems consultant, serving as an assistant to the Chancellor on management and technology projects.

None of the new administrators were available for comment.

"This is a time of major transition on campus. Many significant changes have occurred since last November when Chancellor Scott announced he would be leaving at the end of June," Williams said, echoing Scott's announcement of Marrett's resignation. "I believe it is essential that we proceed to make appointments that will continue to advance the excellence of the University. I also believe it is best to make the appointments as expeditiously as possible."

Newman

continued from page 1

ships he'd embrace, and he turned to God for these answers.

"An exciting part of my life has been to show people the wonder of God in their life," McDonough said.

Sometimes it feels like an uphill battle, he said, to get students involved with the Newman Center during changing times and changing needs.

"I've been listening with students and faculty to discern how the Center can reinvent itself in the 21st Century as a Catholic presence in the university," Father said. "I need to listen to what everyone's hopes and dreams of the Newman Center are."

In order to be an effective presence at the university, McDonough is implementing outreach to students on a variety of levels. Father Quigley believes the long-term issue pervading students is loneliness.

"If we don't deal with loneliness as young adults, we develop excessive drinking habits or unhealthy relationships," McDonough said.

His goal as acting director includes developing more programs, adding staff and enabling students, faculty and administration to participate in the life of the Newman Center. Currently, he is working on bringing weekly films to the Center so students will get socially involved with one another.

"How can we provide the opportunity for students to meet other students in a safe environment?" McDonough asked. "Healthy relationships build when there is an opportunity for conversation and when we speak heart to heart with each other, we develop the ability to speak heart to heart with God."

Silver Fimo Beads Leather Silkpainting Copper . Tie-dye
Screenprinting Brass Photo marbling Stained Glass
AND MORE
STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER
WE OFFER: FREE MEMBERSHIP AND INSTRUCTION TO ALL UMASS STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF. MEMBERS FRO MTHE FOUR COLLEGES MUST PAY A SMALL FEE, $15/SEMESTER OR $25 FOR THE YEAR
AS A MEMEBER OF THE STUDENT UNION CRAFT CENTER YOU CAN USE THE FACILITIES ANY TIME DURING OUR DROP IN HOURS
MONDAY CLOSED
TUESDAY - THURSDAY 11:00 - 5:00
FRIDAY 11:00 - 6:00
SATURDAY - SUNDAY 1:00 - 6:00
WE OFFER: SMALL EVENING WORKSHOPS THROUGHOUT THE SEMESTER. THESES WORKSOPS ALLOW FOR INDIVIDUAL ATTENTION AS YOU LEARN NEW SKILLS AND TECHNIQUES.
PHONE 545-2096
www.umass.edu/rso/craftctr
THE CRAFT CENTER IS LOCATED INTHE BASEMENT OF THE STUDENT UNION
BEGINNERS WELCOME

Best! 2001
UMASS ★★★★★
Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Let Us Know Your Picks For the UMASS BEST ISSUE
Please fill this out & send your answers either via campus-mail, or stop by the Collegian in room 113 in the Campus Center Basement.

Goten
COOKING AT YOUR TABLE
413.665.3628 Call for RSVP

Best Food
Pizza Place:
Sub Shop:
Date Restaurant:
Place to go when parents are playing:
Ice Cream Shop:
Chinese:
Itailian:
Mexican:
Indian:
Japanese:
Breakfast (hangover cure):
Bagel Shop:
Vegetarian:
Best Wings:
Northampton Restaurant:
Coffee Shop:
Best Unique Umass Best
Reason not to Graduate:
Place to have sex:
Classroom:
D.C.:
D.C. Dish:
Spring Break Place:
Magazine:
Gain Freshman 15:
Apartment Complex:
Reason to miss class:
Reason to hand in a paper late:
Place to read the paper:
Place to study:
Best Shops & Services
Grocery store:
Florist:
Clothing stores:
Gas station:
Bike shop:
Hair Salon:
Place to Workout
Tanning Salon:
Candy Shop:
Liquor Store:
Car Repair Place:
Place to Work on Campus:
Tatoo & Piercing:
Best Arts & Entertainment
Place to hear live music:
Local band:
Radio Station:
Music Store:
Pool Hall:
Cheap Date Place:
Video Store:
Internet Site:
Best way to waste time
Amherst Bar:
Northampton Bar:
Beer:
Shot:
Drinking Game:
Bartender:
Off Campus Party Place:
Frat Party:
Nudie Bar:
Porn Shop:
Condom Brand:

Knowles Flower Shop
172 N. Pleasant St., Amherst
413-253-3805

Walk it! Bus it!
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Bike it! Drive it!

You Have Your Reasons For Living Off-Campus...
BRANDYWINE AMHERST
Su Do We.
Brandywine Apartments
549-0600
www.brandywine-apts.com
161 Brandywine Drive
Amherst, MA 01002

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer. Great Food. Great Service.
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and fixins.
Featuring Fabulous food and great live music!

THE HANGAR Pub and Grill
Delivering nothing but the best!
549-WING

Antonio's
31 North Pleasant, Downtown Amherst
413.253.0808

Thanks for voting for our wings. We appreciate your support.
The Ground Round

The Sub
featuring pizza, spaghetti dinners, calzones, subs & salads
OCMP & credit cards accepted
We Deliver
549-5700

Judie's
http://virtual-valley.com/judies
OCMP Welcome Here
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491

Salem Cross Inn

SUPER STOP & SHOP
All the ingredients needed to be voted UMass Best!

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Don't forget, UMass
Add/drop ends tomorrow!

Take heed, UMass: The finest of all our state school traditions, automated telephone add/drop, comes to a glorious and abrupt halt tomorrow.

Let this be a warning to you, students of UMass. Should you forget to engage in the add/drop ritual, you will be entering a boundless world of pain. Your chances of getting the classes that you so desperately want or need are utterly minimal. You will be at the mercy of professors and waiting lists, both equally cold, and your chances of success will be at the whim of chances which are not favorable to a happy ending. Add/drop anything, as long as you do it.

Now, to take it the next step, once you have decided to add/drop, take some time to plot out the courses which you want to take. Consider your major first: you do want to graduate sometime before you die or your parents decide that you are old enough to pay your own tuition. You have four years, so depending on how old you are you should base your decision on how many math classes you want to take, but don't forget; if you still have required classes in the second semester of your senior year and they are overbooked, you are screwed.

Once that is taken care of, consider your gen eds. Don't stress out – they certainly aren't going anywhere – but you should plan on getting at least (as a rule) one done a semester just so that they do not plague your consciousness when you are well along in your collegiate career. Also, remember that just because they are the constantly reviled gen ed requirements that they do not have to be so deathly boring or irrelevant that they numb your very soul. Ask around; see what's recommended.

Also, it doesn't hurt to ask around and see who already has the books that you can get used or even (sweet sweet glory) use for free. Gen ed books tend to be damned expensive.

After you have considered your major and your gen eds, it' s time to think about Number One. You. What are you interested in? What needs or aspirations would you like to fill? We all know that we are interested and enjoy what is encompassed by our majors; its what we want to base our lives' work around. Still, that does not mean that you must be limited by it.

Are you an engineering major who has always wanted to develop an inner longing to express yourself in verse? A journalism major curious about how religion and sociology interact? A history major who wants to understand Einstein's equations just as much as the man's life story? Now is the time to explore those alternate passions.

College exists for growth and exploration. It doesn't necessarily have to involved drugs and sex, either; the history of World War I or an overview of modern botany can expand the mind if the person is receptive. Know what you want, know what you need, and meet your inner needs.

The order of importance? The first is to add/drop. iPeriod. The second is to consider your major and your gen eds so you can get out of this university with your youth and your sanity intact. Third, utilize your time to grow as a person and to explore avenues that do not necessarily coincide with your major. This is your time; make the most of it. And do it all by the time your knee on add/drop ends tomorrow, or you will most definitely be regretting it, probably for the entirety of next semester.

Oh, and for seniors: You don't have to add/drop.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Remember the Holocaust

SASHA SENDEROVICH

In the last few weeks, a peculiar email message circulated to me several times from a number of people in a couple of different countries. It read: "Wait twenty seconds before you erase this. This message symbolizes six million Jewish lives lost in the Holocaust. Forward this message to everyone on your mailing list before Holocaust Memorial Day so that we can give back to G-d what he has given to us: Jewish people who are living today." Today is Holocaust Memorial Day, and judging from the fact that this message has struck my mailbox more than once, I assume that the goal it had postulated was achieved in the end.

But the message came at an interesting time in my life, after over a year of indulging myself in the study of the Holocaust in many different ways, ranging from giving Holocaust education tours at the Museum of Jewish Heritage – A Living Memorial to the Holocaust in New York, to getting ready for a class on this subject that I will teach in the summer, to organizing Holocaust Memorial Week events at UMass, and simply reading everything about the Holocaust I could get my hands on. When this peculiar message calling for remembrance of the Holocaust hit my mailbox, the Holocaust and contemplation over its remembrance was all that was on my mind. And then I thought, how can one even start symbolizing a life in a form of an email message, let alone an ambitious goal of symbolizing all of the six million Jewish lives that were lost in that way? What does one do to memory by such an action other than reducing the entire memorial process to a mere click of a button? And why a deadline? Why should our memorial process be completed before a particular date, why this pressure to offer a closure to remembrance? What will happen after we quit the process of memory, presumably having exhausted and finished it?

It is this need to find a closure, a conclusion to the Holocaust, which seems most frightening. Yet it seems that in the modern world, we cannot bear to be left puzzled, to be left without an end of a story, its redemptory conclusion. Schindler's List cannot end for us until Schindler's Jews walk across the screen from their doom of ravished Europe to their redemption in Israel. Life Is Beautiful cannot end until a little boy gets his dream-tank and declares victory over the forces of evil. We fill the void that the Holocaust has left with memorials, monuments, passionate speeches, often seeking a resolution in the very act of remembrance.

But do we build memorials, shout speeches and light candles because we are trying to remember the horror of the Holocaust, or are we doing so for our own collective healing? When we attend memorial services, what is our motivation? Do we go because doing our annual bit of remembrance is something almost automatic, something that we must do to somehow make us feel better about ourselves, or are we really trying to comprehend what it is that we are remembering? Having listened to the survivors, having read all the books, and having seen all the films, we tend to think that we know everything about the Holocaust, and that we no longer need to engage ourselves in the exploration of this subject matter. Yet, I can only think of a Holocaust survivor telling a group of fellow college students training to be tour guides at a Holocaust Memorial in New York, that we are not allowed to walk out of our training thinking that we know everything about the Holocaust. With an increased intensity in his voice, as if his message to us were a new commandment, he added, "After all these years, I can't say that I know anything myself."

"Surrounded by the world in which human behavior cannot easily be explained through logic, we must stop looking for an end to our remembrance, but rather challenge ourselves to open-ended questions."

And we don't know anything about the Holocaust. We can't know anything about it. As outstanding UMass Professor James E. Young puts it, we know the Holocaust only by how it was passed down to us, through stories, poems, survivors' testimonies and even pop culture. Otherwise, how else can we remember something that we have never experienced? Something of which we have no direct memories? Then, what is the Holocaust to us, a contemporary generation of young people, and what and why do we remember when we remember the Holocaust? Why does our fascination with mass murder and genocide that plagued the much-troubled last century, often use the Holocaust as an archetype of suffering, to voice our concerns about contemporary issues? By doing so, do we take too much attention away from the reflection on the meaning of the destruction of Europe's Jewry itself?

It seems that we have "remembered" too much, without enough contemplation; we have become, as late Israeli poet Yehuda Amichai puts it, "a generation of memory-veterans" much too preoccupied with remembering to search for remembrance's meaning. But it seems that a search for such meaning cannot be found in our passionate speeches and our redemptive movies. A search of such intensity can only begin at an individual level. What is our own connection to now distant events of the Holocaust? How do we see the world around us in light of what we think we know about this human tragedy? Of course, I can only hope that the answer we will begin searching for will not be found in email messages where an offered solution penetrates the virtual void of memory far too easily.

There is a saying that a war cannot end until the last victim is given a proper burial. In case of the Holocaust when human life was easily dealt away with in unidentified ravines and pits, and expunged through the chimneys of crematoria, we are only tricking ourselves it seems, trying to bring our memory to a sense of closure. Living in the world of hope that the tragedy of the Holocaust will not repeat itself, we can never forget, looking at the ash-stained clouds and sky above us, that we must look not for a redemptive answer, but for the absence of one. Surrounded by the world in which human behavior cannot easily be explained through logic, we must stop looking for an end to our remembrance, but rather challenge ourselves to open-ended questions. And then, we must hope that these unanswered questions will ensure that the work of our memory will not stop, but much like the Holocaust itself, will continue forever.

Sasha Senderovich is a Collegian Staff member.

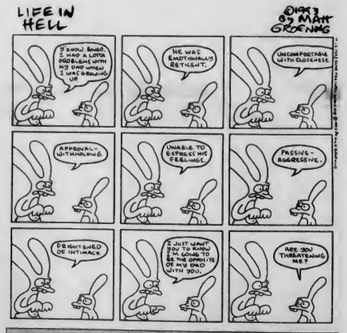
AL
A NEWSPAPER RECOUNT HAS FOUND THAT AL GORE WOULD, INDEED, HAVE WON FLORIDA—— IF ALL DIMPLED AND/OR UNDERCOUNTED BALLOTS CAST BY KLINGONS IN COUNTIES ENDING WITH A "T" HAD BEEN PHOTOCOPIED, EXPOSED TO HIGH LEVELS OF ARGON, PERFORATED WITH A GOLF SHOE AND COUNTED TWICE!!
CARSON



LIFE IN HELL
BY MATT GROENING
I KNOW SHRINK, I HAD A LOVE PROBLEM WITH MY DAD WHEN I WAS GROWING UP.
HE WAS EMOTIONALLY RETICENT.
UNCOMFORTABLE WITH CLOSENESS.
APPROVAL-WITHHOLDING.
UNABLE TO EXPRESS HIS FEELINGS.
PASSIVE-AGGRESSIVE.
I'D HOPED FOR INTIMACY.
I JUST WANT YOU TO KNOW I'M GOING TO BE THE OPPOSITE WITH YOU.
ARE YOU THERAPEUTICALLY NOT?

Come to the Campus Center concourse today to vote with your pennies in the Collegian Spring Break Photo Contest!

All proceeds go to charity!

The crazy days of summer hit Beantown: A lighter look at Red Sox past and present

BRIAN LOHNES

It's spring and the boys of summer are already banging away on diamonds across America. The Red Sox are off and running as well. Everyone knows that the Red Sox are a historic organization and have had many hallowed players in their history. Little do many people know that the Red Sox have also had their share of insane-manic players. Believe it or not, Carl Everett is actually on the tame end of the spectrum of "different" Red Sox players. Some of the guys had names that may have warned the rest of the guys to steer clear, how about "Oil Can" Boyd, or Bill "Spaceman" Lee? Even Babe Ruth was a real nut bag when he spent his few faithful years in Boston.

The first guy to look at, though, would be Wade Boggs. The man was one of the greatest hitters in the history of the game, and he also had a great ability to shoot himself in the foot off the field, but he had the even greater ability to ignore it and play even better on the field. Once, after being mugged by a guy with a knife, he is on record as saying that he willed himself invisible. He really believes that he made himself invisible to avoid being cut to ribbons by his assailant. During spring training one year, he fell out of the car he was traveling in with his family. His crowning moment had to have been when he told Barbara Walters that he was a sex addict after a long affair he was involved in was uncovered.

Next up is Babe Ruth. Believe it or not, Ruth was kind of a wild guy when he was living and playing in Boston. So wild, in fact, that for a while the Red Sox paid him by the day so he wouldn't spend all of his money on alcohol. In 1919 he got mad at team management and decided to go AWOL for a week, not telling anyone where he went. I figure he came back because he was out of booze money.

Mike Greenwell is the next guy to make the "all crazy" list. Greenwell used to cry when fans booed him, and he and Mo Vaughn got into a knock down, drag-out fist-flying donnybrook during batting practice. A fan painted a portrait of him to which Greenwell took a bat and thoroughly destroyed. The most telling fact about Greenwell is that he named his son Bo, reportedly because he had too much trouble trying to spell Bob.

Jose Canseco. The man slept with Madonna, was beaned off the head with a fly ball that became a home run when it bounced over the wall, blew out his elbow while pitching...yes pitching in a game against the Red Sox. He purposely crashed his car into his wife's car, and when it went to court his defense was that he had paid for both cars anyway, so what's the big deal?

Carl Everett. Oh sweet, sweet Carl. He has publicly denied the existence of dinosaurs on the basis that the Bible mentions nothing about them, and no one has really seen them, although he contests that "someone saw Adam and Eve." He has also gone on record saying that unearthed dinosaur bones are man-made. Everett has also denied the moon landing because he says that it was all made up. Here is a real gem of a quote from an old Sports Illustrated article written by Tom Verducci, "Everett has trouble, too, with the idea of man actually walking on the moon. After first rejecting the notion, he concedes, 'Yeah, that could have happened. It's possible. That is something you could prove. You can't prove dinosaurs ever existed. I feel it's far-fetched.'"

"Baseball was always considered a game of tradition, superstition, and bizarre history. Judging by the players of today, that hasn't changed a bit."

Don Buddin was a shortstop for the Sox years ago and because of his poor fielding ability, he was given the nickname E6 (that's how you score an error by the shortstop). Instead of talking his anger out like we do nowadays, Buddin went up to the press box, grabbed the writer by the ankles and held him out the window until he apologized. I bet he still believed in dinosaurs though.

"Oil Can" Boyd was one of the most unstable players to ever grace the Red Sox with his presence. Can was also one of the most lacking in intelligence, once telling a reporter that he thought Lake Erie was an ocean. He gained some more notoriety when he was late to return a porn flick during spring training one year. The incident was labeled, "Can's film festival."

Finally, Bill "Spaceman" Lee will round out the list. He has run for president on the ticket of the Rhinoceros Party...yes it is true. Lee always liked having fun with the media and it appears that he still gets his kicks that way. He told a Sports Illustrated reporter last year that he was a "Rastafarian-Buddhist-communist-Roman Catholic." Sounds like he could stand to spend some time with Daryl Strawberry down in sunny rehab.

Lord knows this list could go on and on. In fact, this really doesn't even begin to scratch the surface of the many players who have spent time on the Red Sox, as well as other planets, simultaneously. Baseball is the kind of game that allows guys like this to exist in their natural state; many other sports seem to squash guy's personalities, especially if they are, well, eccentric. For what It's worth, I don't care if Carl Everett thinks that the Earth is flat, electricity is black magic, or that the moon is made out of Sharp Cheddar cheese as long as he keeps playing like he does.

Baseball was always considered a game of tradition, superstition, and bizarre history. Judging by the players of today, that hasn't changed a bit.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

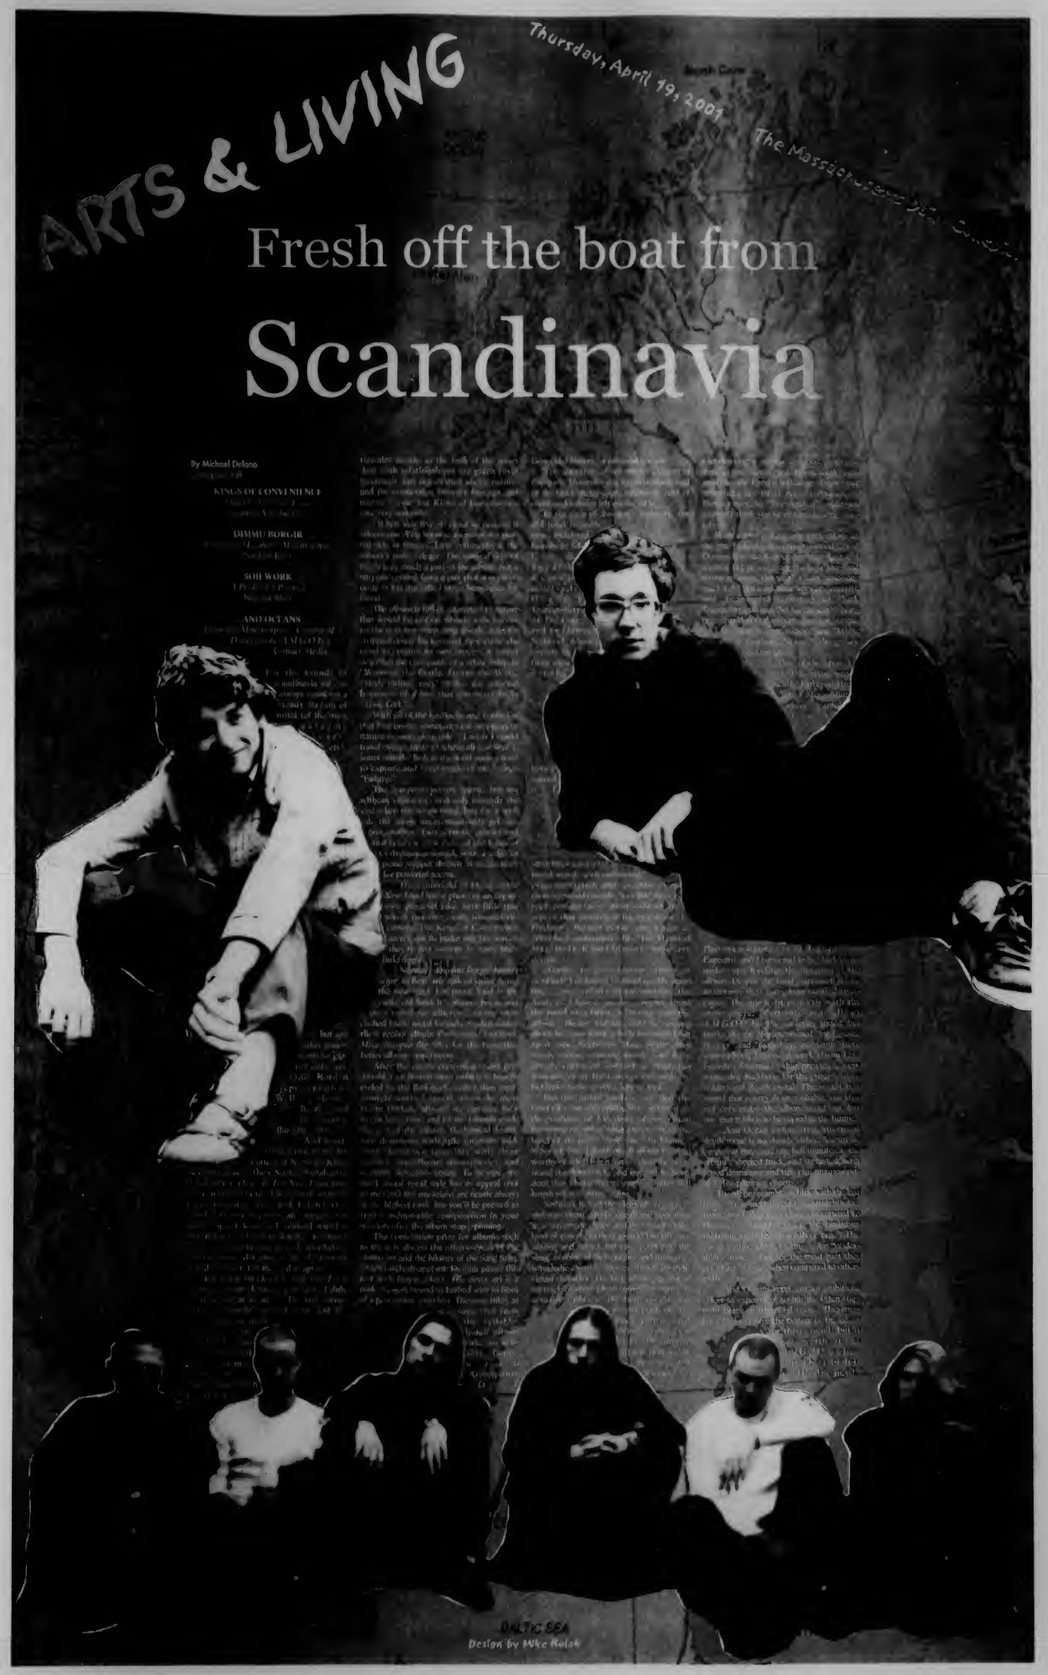
Information from the Boston Herald was used in this column.



The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian - Every Thursday!

FILM

UMASS – "Advertising and the End of the World" draws the connection between society's high consumption lifestyle and the coming environmental crisis. April 24 in Hetter, room 227, and April 25 in the Campus Center, room 803 at 7 p.m.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – "Christopher Wilmarth: Living Inside" presents a selection of sculptures, drawings, and prints by an artist best known for a sparely sensuous style that marries formal elements with mysterious reverie. On view from April 1 through May 18.

UMASS – "Patterns of Pleasure and Models of the Mind." Kate Teal uses paint, plastics and works on paper to focus on pleasure, sensuality of thought, memory, and communication. Hampden Gallery, April 2-April 26, with a gallery talk and closing reception on April 26, from 4 to 6 p.m.

UMASS – "Other Breaking Out of the Box." This exhibit combines texts with advertisements from the 1950s and 60s, to reveal a society in which difference is feared. It is an investigation of cultural identity, conformity, and the challenge of celebration diversity. On display through April 24, with a gallery talk on April 24 at 7 p.m. In the Augusta Savage Gallery.

UMASS – Clay, plaster and metal sculpture by students of Dorrance Hill. Augusta Savage Gallery, April 30 through May 4, with an opening reception April 30, from 5 to 7 p.m.

UMASS – "Ashley Fountain" A BFA thesis exhibition at the Student Union Art Gallery on display from April 16 to 20.

UMASS – "Natalie Alper: Recent Paintings." Alper is an abstract painter who uses thick loops and folds of paint, crisscrossed by lines made by removal rather than accretion, and uses both earthy and metallic pigments. University Gallery, April 1 through May 18.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Refugees." Two life sized sculptures by artist Judith Peck depicting refugees carrying a child and all their worldly possessions. Part of the Khan Institute's "Anatomy of Exile" project. Through May 28. For more information, call (413) 585-4292. Third floor, Neilson Library.

WILLIAMSTOWN – "Photography EXPOSED." Includes 45 examples of portraiture as part of the Williams College Museum of Art's 75th anniversary celebration. The exhibit will continue until September 3, 2001. The Museum is open Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – "Archipelago of Delight," a new musical with puppetry, in the style of Broadway's Lion King, in which puppeteers are visible as they manipulate puppets fitted to their bodies. April 26-28 and May 3-5 at 8 p.m. in the Rand Theater.

UMASS – "Culture Clash: Coast to Coast" is a pastiche of Culture Clash's past shows, and new material. It blends poetry, dance, music, and visual arts to present an anthology of Latino culture by a trio of performers. April 19, Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

UMASS – "Bugaku: Japanese Court Dance" is a demonstration of the ancient art form performed by Arawana Hayashi and the performance group Io Ha Kyu. April 19 at 8 p.m. in the Concert Hall, tickets may purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office.

UMASS – The Miami City Ballet, directed by Edward Villella, will perform excerpts from George Balanchine's ballet entitled "Jewels". April 26 at 7:30 p.m. in the Concert Hall.

UMASS – "Alive with Dance" is a student produced dance concert, featuring pieces of diverse artistic expression choreographed by UM senior Dance majors. April 27 and 28 at 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium.

SMITH COLLEGE – Student choreographers will present their modern dance works in the Senior Dance Concert, which will touch upon a range of topics, including genetic abnormality and rape. April 19-21 at 8 p.m. in the Scott Dance Studio. Call (413) 585-ARTS for reservations.

SMITH COLLEGE – "L'Orfeo" is Monteverdi's story from Greek mythology of the musician Orfeo who uses his talents to sway the forces of the underworld so that his beloved Eurdice can return to him, with a contemporary twist. Sweeney Concert Hall, May 2 at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the door or at the Fine Arts Center box office at UMass.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Gamelan Ensemble returns to present its Spring Concert of Javanese music and dance. Earle Recital Hall, April 28 at 7:30 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Journey into the Labyrinth" is an artful rendition of a labyrinth with several choreographed dances and live music. This event is free and open to the public. On the grounds of the Smith College athletic field, April 22 from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – The annual Emerging Choreographer Series will present UMass undergraduate dance students in a variety of new works. Main Dance Studio, April 19-21 at 8 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "The Good Person of Setzuan" by Bertolt Brecht, adapted by Tony Kushner, is the story of three gods who come to earth to find one good person. They find Shen Te, a prostitute, who is given money to improve her life, but instead, it leads to her downfall. At the Rooke Theatre on April 19 through 21 at 8 p.m. and April 21 and 22 at 2 p.m., call (413) 538-2406 for reservations.

AMHERST COLLEGE – "Traveler" is a full length ballet adaptation of Spenser's epic poem "The Faerie Queen". At the south side of the Keefe Campus Center, April 26, 27 and 29 at 8 p.m. Call 542-2277 for reservations.

EASTHAMPTON – "Requiem for an Egg" is an original rock opera with an all-puppet cast, an original score and timely political themes. At the Flywheel Community Arts Space at 2 Holyoke St., on April 29 at 8 p.m.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The UM Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band will perform under guest conductor Fran L. Battisti at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall April 22, at 3 p.m.

UMASS – The UMass Chamber Choir and Women's Choir will perform a program featuring a variety of composers and styles from the Baroque to the present. Bowker Auditorium, April 29, at 8 p.m.

UMASS – The String Orchestra will perform Professor Robert Stern's "Elegy I". Bezanson Recital Hall, April 30 at 8 p.m.

UMASS – Soprano Dawn Upshaw and pianist Richard Goode will present their unity of folk music and a variety of composers. Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, April 28 at 8 p.m.

UMASS – "Family Concert" will be performed by the University Concert Band, under the direction of George Parks. Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, April 29, 2 p.m.

HOLYOKE – Ensembles from the UMass Departments of Music and Dance will perform at Barnes and Noble. The store will donate a percentage of their sales to the department. April 26 between 5 and 9 p.m.

Turn to source page 8

Multicultural Film Festival Series Features Selena

Corpus: A Home Movie For Selena will be shown at 7:30 p.m. this Thursday in Herter 231 as part of the ongoing UMASS Multicultural Film Festival. The movie documents the life of Selena, a Latino pop icon, who was killed by the president of her fan club at the age of 23 as she was on the brink of international crossover fame. By using performance footage and interviews with friends, family, and Latino intellectuals, Academy Award nominated director Lourdes Portillo looks beyond the tabloids to better understand the cultural sensation that was Selena.

The film opens with footage of the police standoff with Selena's killer, Yolanda Saldivar, the very image that propelled her into the eye mainstream Americans. Interestingly, Portillo uses footage from the Spanish stations to contrast the scant image that the American stations provided. In Portillo's own words:

"She wasn't so well-known by most Americans, Spanish stations really focused on her (death); Americans glossed over it, were kind of cavalier about it."

Portillo herself knew little of Selena previous to the murder, but immediately recognized the significance of the event. The story certainly compliments Portillo's broad range of documentary topics, all of which seek to make the perspectives and culture of the Latino communities more accessible to people of other backgrounds. The award winning director's work stretches from 1979 and Corpus: A Home Movie for Selena is her most recent effort.

Mari Castaneda Paredes, Assistant Professor, will introduce Thursday's screening of the film to provide background for the movie. The film will also be shown with a few short animations from Cuba.

The UMASS Multicultural Film Festival brings movies on a weekly basis to the Five College community. Films previously shown in the series have been Dark Days, a documentary on the homeless community which were living in the Subway tunnels of New York City, and Hamburger and Dolma, which told the tale of five Armenians who were driven from their homes in Diaspora. Times and locations for the showings can be found in many local publications as well the film studies department.

– Ping Chu

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – "A Choral Tapestry: from Classical to Calypso" is the college's annual Spring Concert by the Concert Choir, and is partly in celebration on Earth Day, April 22, in Abbey Memorial Chapel at 2 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – The first annual W.A.M Festival (Women and Music) is the Pioneer Valley's only all women's music festival of the summer. It will be a day-long event on Mount Holyoke's South Hadley campus on April 28. Tickets are available at www.tickets.com or by calling 1-800-477-6859. The festival will take place rain or shine.

SMITH COLLEGE – "To a New World" in the spring concert of the Smith College Orchestra and Wind Ensemble. This event is free and open to the public. Sweeney Concert Hall, in Sage Hall, April 21 at 8 p.m.

Peter Pan/Greyhound's latest blockbuster feature leaves for New York City every hour. It's the most reliable escape route around. Some trips even feature movies on the way. Can't beat a getaway like that.

Call 800-343-9999 or visit Greyhound.com

Peter Pan GREYHOUND.

New Puffton Village. Great Apartments Minutes from Campus.
Now Accepting applications for Summer/Fall 2001

Rental Office
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410

Phone #:
(413) 549-0145

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Serving all of your Rental Needs

Post your resume and your ideal job could be right around the corner.

Post your personal profile and the search begins! The best place to find a great local job is on masslive.com. Our career site matches your individual skills and experience against thousands of actual career opportunities to find the right job for you. Great features include your own Personal Message Center and the option to easily upload your resume. Everybody's favorite local site for chat, sports, news, classifieds and weather is the best place to find a job. Advance your career today at masslive.com

masslive.com/careers

IN AFFILIATION WITH UNION – NEWS & SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

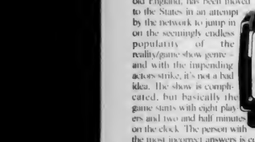
mass live.com

Keyword: masslive.com

The new British Invasion

Before I say anything else, FINALLY someone heard my cry of pain. We finally get the Red Sox on our Western Mass. television. Granted, we only have them when they play the Yankees (and one game against KC) and we have to watch them via Connecticut's WB which in turn receives the signal from FOX 5 in New York. So that unfortunately means that we have to put up with Tim McCarver and Joe Buck, who are so filled with the Yankee energy that they forget that there are other teams and players besides. El Duque, Roger Clemens and Derek Jeter. But at least we the faithful followers of the olde towne team, can watch a few games during this early part of the season.

Obviously this wouldn't be Tuberotes if I didn't mention the premiere of the new NBC game show they hope will be the answer to "Who Wants To be a Millionaire?" "The Weakest Link," the only show to derail "Millionaire" in jolly old England, has been moved to the States in an attempt by the network to jump in on the seemingly endless popularity of the reality/game-show genre and with the impending actors strike, it's not a bad idea. The show is complicated, but basically the game starts with eight players and two and half minutes on the clock. The person with the most incorrect answers is considered the weakest link, but it is up to the teammates to recognize whom they think the weakest link is, and that person is voted off the show. With the removal of each person, ten seconds is taken off the clock.



For each correct answer the contestants collect a certain amount of money, and that value increases with each correct answer and when a player feels that a respectable amount of money has been collected that person says "bank." That "bank" money is the only cash that is kept for the team. However, with the first wrong answer the team goes back to zero.

The host, Anne Robinson, is a former British tabloid reporter and TV journalist on a British version of "Dateline," who is reputed for her take-no-prisoners interviews with CEOs and corporate leaders. The focal point of the show is not the contestants, but Anne. She is known for her cold and unpleasant attitude toward the contestants, relying on her wit and quick interviewing tactics to embarrass and unnerve them.

In my opinion, the show is much better than current hit "Millionaire" and past failures "21" and "Greed" because they ask free-choice questions. Every game show from "Millionaire" on has used multiple-choice questions. "Link" does not utilize this format and probes the players' actual knowledge. The questions range from "Who is Homer Simpson's youngest daughter?" to "What Triple Crown race is held in New York?" Some are easier than others but the contestants don't have lifelines – they have one chance and one guess and in that it resembles the original "21" that aired on NBC in the fifties. Also, the contestants have the chance to fire back at the people who voted themselves, by stepping into the confessional. Although it holds the elements that current American television (trivia, voting people off, confessionals, and anger driven monologue), it may not be on long, because American audiences may not realize the humor that comes with Anne Robinson. It is without a doubt the best game show out there, even if the catch phrase is drilling a hole through my skull.

The last episode of Denis Leary's "The Job" aired last night. In my opinion it is one of the greatest shows since "Sports Night," and the show is not that obscure as "Sports Night." "The Job" is easy to follow and requires no knowledge of what goes on behind the scenes at a police precinct. If you've ever watched "Homicide," "NYPD Blue," or even "21 Jump Street," then you understand what "The Job" is making fun of. ABC needs a show like this, and a mid-season replacement that has gained remarkable reviews, both critically and from viewers, would be perfect to ad to their permanent line-up. Don't make the same mistake with "Cupid," "Wonderland," and "Sports Night" – keep "The Job."

And as the spring season comes to an end, we are promised the highlights in television. Starting tonight and running for the next five weeks there will be all new "Must See TV" on NBC. I've made it no secret that I believe the second best night of comedy (the first being Fox's two hour comedy block on Sunday) is the line-up NBC has made famous with its "Must See TV Thursday". Although it has suffered line-up changes and several failed shows since the departure of "Seinfeld," it still remains NBC's highest-rated night, starting with "Friends" and ending with "ER" and containing the popular "Just Shoot Me" and the Emmy winning "Will & Grace." We will now see just how popular it is, because these five new episodes will coincide with the final three episodes of "Survivor II." And on a closing thought, my pick to win the outback challenge is Elisabeth, which probably means that she'll be gone tonight.

Nicholas Pizzolato is a Collegian Columnist.

DJ Skribble to spin UMass around

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

DJ Skribble will be appearing at tonight's Funkenfashion show at 8:00p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Besides the popular DJ, the event will feature a fashion show presenting clothing from local Amherst stores D'arby's and the Growroom. The event will be sponsored by Black Russian Entertainment and is organized by University Productions and Concerts (UPC).

"This show will mirror our entire year, and we've had a very successful year," said Amanda Paolella, productions manager for UPC.

Paolella described her organization and said that she has the utmost confidence in their ability to continually bring quality shows to the UMass community. "I really don't think people give us enough credit," she said.

DJ Skribble was a recent guest star of MTV's Jock Jam. He also a DJ on the same network's House of Style. He has released three albums, each compilations of hip-hop beats and freestyle jams. He also worked on Blunted on Reality, the debut album of The Fugees.

UPC promotional representative Tin Fan said that the organization started with a desire to hold a fashion show. Originally they wanted to do something that combined the jam band music of Deep Banana Blackout and The Slip, with coordinating clothing. "We started with that," she said. "But then we realized how many people would rather come out to dance."

The initial idea of a fashion show stuck, but the music genre changed when they encountered local musician, DJ Big Phil. Big Phil, who has been a DJ for twelve years, is a University graduate student, working for his masters degree in social justice education.

He said the purpose of tonight's show is "mainly to entertain." Big Phil said that with the show brings low cost entertainment to the UMass population and five-college area. The cost of the event is $10 and open to the general public: there will also be a cash bar for patrons 21 and older.

Big Phil said that the music he intends to play, and usually plays is hip-hop, R&B and reggae. Ironically, Big Phil explained that he is not a big fan of some of the things he spins. "Some of the music has very negative messages that I don't agree with," he said. "Some of the messages are offensive and homophobic, but I still play them because it's what the public wants."

Big Phil's acknowledgement of the flaws in the music he spins comes from the intense amount of work he so diligently uses to give back to the community. He said he spends a lot of time working for an anti-smoking organization, teaching children the dangers of tobacco. He DJed and helped coordinate a youth anti-smoking conference in Springfield. He is also the director of the popular Not Ready for Bedtime Players, an informational organization on campus that spreads the message of practicing safe sex, and the dangers of sexually transmitted infections.

The combination between his music and his commitment to the community seems to creating a blurring effect. "The two jobs mix with very separate messages," he said.

COURTESY PHOTO/UMASS ARCHIVE

DJ Skribble

Besides delivering community service, DJ Big Phil plays a lot of fraternity parties and parties at Smith College. He is also a DJ at Atlantis and Club Kai. Big Phil said he has inspirational artists, one mainly being rapper Gangstarr. He said his favorite recent CD releases are creations from Talib Kweli and DJ Hi-Tek.

When Big Phil approached UPC with an idea to bring a DJ to the fashion show instead of jam bands, he told them that two hottest DJs around are DJ Skribble and DJ Clue.

DJ Big Phil said that he plans to discuss the night's arrangements with DJ Skribble before the show begins to make sure that there is no overlap in music. He said he would be very active in consulting DJ Skribble on what material to play. "He'll play what people will love," Big Phil said. "But I really know the crowd here."

Tonight's Funkenfashion show with DJ Skribble and DJ Big Phil takes place at the Student Union Ballroom. Doors open at 8:00p.m.

■ source

continued from page 6

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith Choir and Chorale and the University of Pennsylvania's Men's Glee Club will present a joint choral concert. This event is free and open to the public. Helen Hills Chapel, in Sage Hall, April 28 at 8 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Tea and Trumpets and Friends" is an afternoon of four Smith trumpeters and refreshments. Helen Hills Chapel on April 20, at 1 p.m.

SPRINGFIELD – A Benefit Concert for Amnesty International will feature local high school students and Emm Gryner, a singer, guitar and piano player, April 20 at 7 p.m. at the MacDuffie School in Springfield. Tickets are $9 at the door. Call 253-3631 for more information.

HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE – "Vexations" by Erik Satie will be performed in a marathon event by Five-College students, faculty, and others. The piece is said to be the first minimalist piece, which Satie instructed be played 840 times. The public is invited to attend for any amount of time. Presented by the Hampshire Experimental "Arts" Project, April 20 in the Music and Dance Building Recital Hall, beginning at 8 a.m. and concluding sometime between 6 p.m. and midnight.

AMHERST – "MusiConTema" is a series of formal chamber concerts and recitals. "Debussy followed by Ravel" will be presented at the First Congregational Church on April 27 at 7:30 p.m.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS – "Words She Spoke." Performance poets Staceyann Chin and Melinda Corazon Foley will read and perform their poetry. At the main floor of the W.E.B. DuBois Library, April 24, 6:30 p.m.

SOX OR YANKS ... WHO'S IN FIRST? NO QUESTION HERE, LIQUORS 44 WILL QUENCH YOUR THIRST!
LIQUORS 44
Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS COORS LIGHT, MICHELOB LIGHT $44.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB $45.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99 +DEP
1/2 KEGS BERKSHIRE BREWING CO. ALL FLAVORS $88.99 +DEP
LITE CASE OF 30-12OZ CANS 30 PACK $17.99 +DEP
KEYSTONE LIGHT CASE OF 30-12OZ CANS 30 PACK $11.49 +DEP
PETE'S SUMMER BREW 12PK BOTTLES 12 PACK $9.99 +DEP
BECK'S & BECK'S DARK 12PK BOTTLES 12 PACK $9.99 +DEP
NATURAL LIGHT & NATURAL ICE CASE $8.99 +DEP
Seagram's COOLERS 4 PACK $3.29 +DEP
WINES OF THE MONTH
BEAULIEU VINEYARDS COASTAL WINES 750ML (CABERNET SAUVIGNON, CHARDONNAY, MERLOT) $8.99
CARLO ROSSI 4 LTR $6.99
ROBERT MONDAVI WOODBRIDGE 1.5L (CABERNET SAUVIGNON, CHARDONNAY, MERLOT) $11.49
FOXHORN WINES (CABERNET SAUVIGNON, CHARDONNAY, MERLOT) 1.5L $5.49
CAVIT PINOT GRIGIO 1.5L $9.99
Arbor Mist 1.5L $5.99
SKYY VODKA 1.75L $20.99
BACARDI LIMON 750ML $9.99
BLACK VELVET 1.75L $12.99
SMIRNOFF RASPBERRY VODKA 1.5L $9.99
GILBEY'S GIN 1.75L $13.99
JOSE CUERVO GOLD TEQUILA 750ML $14.49
HADLEY 253-9344
NORTHAMPTON 586-3007
HOLYOKE 534-4555
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
The Holyoke store WILL REMAIN OPEN during renovation of the Stop & Shop Plaza
SALE PRICES THURS. 4/19/01 THRU WEDS. 4/25/01
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

new balance
Haigis Hoopla
Don't Miss Your Shot!
the action happens
April 28th & 29th
Drop off your team entry by
April 20th at 5:00pm
Stop by Curry Hicks, Room #5 to pick up a registration brochure or the Campus Center Concourse to register.
Call 545-5689 for more information. Or visit us at http://haigishoopla.zminutemen.com
presented by UMASS Sport Management Program
ACDelco PLAY the BEST PLAY SPALDING Coca-Cola InsideSTUFF Bueno Y Sano YOUR BEVERAGE PLAN KAPLAN 1-800-KAP-TEST

PRUDDY'S Tropical Dancebar & Grill
WE Are Back With Alcohol !
$4.50 PITCHERS $1.00 DRAFTS
BETTER Prices,
Bigger and Wilder Dance Floor
Than any place in town. Period.
Free Food Wendesdays & Thursdays 8:30 pm till 10:30 pm
No Cover Before 10:30pm, only $1.00 After 10:30 pm
Thursdays DIVAS NIGHT It's free for the ladies W/ Dj. Jay J
Fridays Hip Hop W/ Dj. Deuce
Saturdays South Beach Party The Music, the vibe & the attitude of Miami
Main st. Amherst 21+ Doors open @8:00pm wednesday thru saturday
Down The street from Newbury comics 253-3345

Soundgarden meets Monster Magnet

WELLWATER CONSPIRACY
The Scroll and Its Combinations
TVT Records

Seattle, known to most as a city of heated protests and the birthplace of modern grunge, is an unpredictable place. Perhaps it's the rainy weather or the steaming cups of Starbucks that keeps its inhabitants inside, brainstorming for the next big thing to hit popular culture. And maybe it's that reclusive nature that gave Matt Cameron, formerly of Soundgarden, and John McBain, founding member of Monster Magnet, their penchant for songwriting and home recording. Together the two make up Wellspring Conspiracy, whose new album The Scroll and Its Combinations will be released this month.

While the sounds of Cameron and McBain's former bands serve as a starting point for this project, it is also clear that the two are reaching towards something new. Alongside the album's power chords and pounding drums there is an apparent awareness of rock history and a fascination with guitar and studio effects that recall some of the psychedelic music produced in the 60s and 70s.

But the band switches gears often. Much of the album tends toward the quirky or surreal, with song titles like "What Becomes of the Clock" and "Now, Invisibly." At the same time the group is reluctant to give up its louder, rebellious rock influences. The gap between these approaches is never really filled in, and the album as a whole wanders but never really succeeds in fusing the two styles. For example, "C, Myself and Eye" is a straight-ahead rock song, full of the calculated sloppiness that might recall early Radiohead or Nirvana. But the next track, "Tick Tock 3 o'clock," has a bouncy British rock feel, with lyrics about elephants, motorcars, and toads. The attempt for variety is honorable, but the end result is disjointed.

The album does benefit from several cameo appearances by members of the Seattle scene, with appearances by Ben Shepard and Kim Thayil, former Soundgarden members, and even Pearl Jam's Eddie Vedder, thinly disguised in the credits as "Wes C. Addle." Vedder's vocals on "Felicity's Surprise," a catchy mix of thumping tom-toms, sitar-like guitar effects, and powerful pop choruses, make for what is probably the album's strongest track. The frontman's singing provides a moment of real energy in the record, even if it also exposes the weakness of the vocals on other songs, which tend to be low in the mix and almost always double-tracked.

Ultimately the biggest problem with The Scroll and Its Combinations isn't with the music itself, but the intent of its makers. Is the album supposed to be an intimate take on the studio experiments of two musicians known through their live bands? Or is it a straight-ahead rock album, meant to promote a real group of people that will make you nod your head and tap your foot? It's unclear, and a glance at the band's current schedule (just one New York City club appearance in early May), doesn't resolve the ambiguity either way. Wellspring Conspiracy doesn't seem to know if they want their new album to make a big splash or remain sunken treasure in the waters of independent rock music. The Scroll and Its Combinations is a varied, interesting, and noteworthy album, but it fails to make up its mind about itself. (David Piper)

PETE WEISS & THE ROCK BAND
We're An American Band
Section 304

Pete Weiss & The Rock band went out with a bang and nobody cared.

For a band that had no real significant success, they sure were wild. They had a girl drummer, they covered The Beatles "One After 909" in Polish, and they got banned from several clubs. How crazy is that?

Heck, their final CD, We're An American Band, is so crazy it has a cover of the Grand Funk Railroad classic "We're an American Band." It also has a Polish cover of "One After 909," a Frank Zappa Cover (anything by Zappa is crazy) and even a rap song. I couldn't believe it; three middle aged people with a rap song entitled "Pukin' Rap."

The band was crazy enough to be easily confused with Kid Rock. The classic rock covers (Kid Rock specifically used to open up his sets with "We're an American Band"), the girl drummer, and the rapping, are all just like Kid Rock. The only thing they were lacking was the wild sex. Maybe that's why they never had any billboard success. Pete Weiss & The Rock Band never sold out to the glossy corporate image of rock stars. Hell, they were three people out to have some fun with loud instruments and silly songs.

For example, "Boogie Me Timbers," is about pirates, for Jimmy Buffett's sake! I don't think you'd ever see Kid Rock with a song about pirates set to a 50's/beach/surfer riff. If this song isn't enough, We're An American Band contains the "Boogie Me Timbers" video, the one and only video the band ever shot. In case you were wondering, MTV never aired it (probably because it featured a clown and a pirate).

But despite their obvious love for silly classic songs they did get serious at times, as illustrated by the cover of the Cream song, "SWLABR." For those of you who don't know what SWLABR stands for, it literally means, "She Was Like A Bearded Rainbow."

Of course, I'm being facetious – they didn't really get serious, and that's what is great about We're An American Band. It's for a good time and it's cheap. For that reason alone everyone should go out and buy the CD giving Pete Weiss and his Rock Band a good reason to get back together, party and have a good time playing crazy songs. (Esteban Argüello)

Collegian Staff...VOTE——————>>>>>

Collegian Staff:
Don't forget to vote for a new...
...Editor-in-Chief.
Cast your ballots at the Collegian desk this Friday and next Monday!!

Win Free Airline Tickets

Only at:
MEDIATRIP.COM CAMPUSTRIP 2001
FILM • ANIMATION • MUSIC • PRIZES presented by Ford focus in film www.mediatrip.com/campustrip
Thursday, May 3rd
11:00am - 3:00pm Southside Lawn Student Union Games / Giveaways
7:30pm - 8:30pm Campus Center Room 163 Screenings / Prizes
Film & Animation Festival
games • free stuff • film screenings
Grand prize drawing at the screening.
Be part of it.
southwest.com a symbol of e-freedom
SUBWAY

UMASS
The UMass Index Yearbook
ABSOLUTE LAST CHANCE !!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
Beginning April 23rd
Make your appointment now by calling on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
you need to know the access number when you make the appointment
1-800-OUR-YEAR or log
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
$50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or
Call 1-800-929-1503
(service charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Bryan Smith
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen a perfect ten

No. 4 Lacrosse go to 10-0 after Harvard win

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE – The color of Crimson fit the description.

It any team was to spoil the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's best start since 1981, coach Greg Cannella thought Harvard had the best chance.

"We were real concerned and nervous about [this game]," the UMass skipper said. "I think anytime you have a mid-week game, regardless of what you do on Saturday, you're worried about it – especially against a team like Harvard and what they've done here at home."

A goal with 1:50 remaining sent the Crimson to victory over No. 12 Duke on March 31 on the turf of home Jordan Field. Behind the solid goaltending of freshman Jake McKenna, Harvard stuck around until the final minutes before completing the 6-5 upset.

The Crimson made a similar attempt to thwart UMass' perfect season on that same piece of artificial sod yesterday, but the Minutemen were quick to press the emergency assistance button on their faithful ammunition cache. And despite one of its worst shooting performance of the season, UMass topped Harvard 11-5 for its tenth straight victory.

With the win, the Minutemen (10-0, 4-0 Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) can now look to Saturday's key ECAC match up with Georgetown without any distractions. A win in this weekend's contest at Richard F. Garber Field pushes UMass one step further toward the conference crown.

"It was hard not to look forward to Saturday," junior Matt McFarland said. "But we came here and got the win. I knew we could be 10-0 going into Georgetown. We did it."

Harvard (6-5, 1-3 Ivy League) played a methodical offensive game in the first half to keep the game close through thirty minutes, but UMass' talent proved too tough in the end. Senior Dana Sprong's behind-the-back conversion with 1:16 left in the first half cut the Minuteman lead to 6-5, but that was the closest the Crimson got.

"[UMass] has a lot of spare parts," Harvard coach Scott Anderson said. "They have a lot of guys who can create, so it's very difficult in terms of matchups. If one guy has a bad enough day, then they start to feed off of each other."

Up 6-3 at the beginning of the third quarter, UMass soon fired the fatal cartridge. Just about four minutes in, junior Marc Morely skipped passed Harvard's Kenn Okike on the left goalline-extended and drilled a shot to the bottom left corner. Senior Rich Kunkel's wide-open tally with just under two minutes left in the quarter gave UMass some breathing room at 8-3.

Junior Don Little's patented blast from the left perimeter at the start of the final stanza upped the Minutemen lead to six. Harvard's Matt Primm added two in the quarter, but those were the only shots the Crimson put passed UMass' Chris Campoktanis in the second half. The senior made 14 saves on the day including a key stop late In the first half on Harvard's Roger Buttles.

McKenna made 20 saves for Harvard. His outstanding play between the pipes was the reason for UMass' frustration on the offensive end. His best save came at the 10:50 mark of the fourth quarter. Sprawled on the ground after the initial save, McKenna raised his stick and stole a rebound goal from sophomore Kevin Leveille.

"They've always had great goaltenders and they rely on those guys," Cannella said. "They give up a lot of shots and they kind of pack it in on you. Fortunately, we were able to shoot the ball in a couple spots where it went in, but he made six saves on his butt today. He was excellent and I really felt that he kept them in the game."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

John Madigan helped out UMass' cause in an 11-5 win at Harvard yesterday. The Minutemen are now 10-0 on the season

UMass found the net first when Leveille picked up a rebound in front of the goal and put it past McKenna for his 50th point of the season, joining Kunkel on that list. The Minutemen fielded only one 30-point man last season.

About three minutes later, Primm laced a turn around to the lower left portion of the UMass net to knot the game at 1-1, the only tie of the afternoon. Awoken by Primm's laser, the Maroon and White outscored the Crimson 4-1 during the remainder of the first quarter.

With one minute left in the opening stanza, senior John Madigan found junior Dan Paccione cutting to the middle from the left side. Paccione took the feed, faked high, and put it five-hole on McKenna for the 5-2 lead.

"It was good to get this game out of the way – especially the way we played," Kunkel said. "We could have done better. We won, so we're happy, but we still have to improve – especially for Georgetown."

Crimson shows strength in slowing UMass' guns

CAMBRIDGE – Godzilla would be proud of the high-powered offense of Massachusetts lacrosse. The Minutemen have fiercely defended their own version of Monster Island while laying ruin to three major cities. After quick-strike attack and balanced attack to sink Baltimore into the Chesapeake Bay, the Maroon and White headed north causing the poor citizens of Boston to duh: Oh no, UMass! It's UMass!

Luckily, the college town of Cambridge, on the outskirts of the city itself, was well-prepared and able to turn away the onslaught with minimal shockwave damage.

Word of a successful method for lessening the damage came from New Haven, by way of the Merritt Parkway. Yale University, who less than three days earlier had almost avoided the attack completely, sent word to its Ivy League counterpart.

Harvard obviously heeded the word of its friends in Connecticut as the Crimson held UMass to its second lowest offensive output of the season. But even with the stellar defensive performance by the whole of the Crimson squad, the superior skill and balance finally kicked in for the Minutemen in the form of an 11-5 win.

Yale and Harvard both showed signs of shutting down the vaunted UMass attack – Yale, with the two goals it allowed in the first quarter, and the Crimson, with the combined three markers they gave up in the middle thirty minutes.

The two Ivy League squads both seemingly held the elusive key to shutting the door on the UMass attack, but like any good thing, that key fell through the cracks and the Minutemen put up a total of 25 goals in the two games.

But just the chance that the now nationally recognized Massachusetts scoring juggernaut could somehow be slowed down has put the gears in motion in the mind of a certain Collegian writer.

So let us all take that final step into the catacombs of the lax Mass Attack and truly find out what makes this offense so lethal and what opponents can do, if anything, to stop it.

The first thing that opponents have done, or should try to do, is dictate the pace of the game. Harvard's coaching staff implemented a strategy on offense – which is very similar to the one implemented by the infamous Dean Smith – the four-corner strategy. By slowing the game down to a plodding pace, Harvard caused the Minutemen to make uncharacteristically sloppy plays and rush shots.

The second method of combating the deep and talented UMass attack is having a goalie that stands on his head. Freshman Jake McKenna played with the poise and experience of a fifth year senior, as he made 20 saves against the visiting Minutemen in Cambridge yesterday afternoon. McKenna's spectacular play forced the Maroon and White to pick corners, which made for many errant shots and missed opportunities.

The third key is to institute a physical defensive style that minimizes UMass' room for maneuvering. All skilled players hold space as a premium, especially the shooters on Canella's squad. But if these skilled players don't have room, then it causes frustration and urgency in the play of the offense. Neither are secrets to success.

The final, and easily the most important, solution to slowing down the UMass attack squad is prayer. With the 14-headed monster that is the Massachusetts offense, anything but divine intervention usually leads to a 15 spot on the scoreboard.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

Stojanowski drives baseball to .500

By Matt Despres
Collegian Staff

In a sense, for the Massachusetts baseball team, the 2001 season begins now.

The Minutemen (12-12, 6-3 Atlantic 10) stole a nail-biter from Northeastern University (8-19, 3-9 America East) yesterday afternoon with late game dramatics, taking the victory to reach the .500 mark for the first time this year.

Freshman shortstop Adam Stojanowski secured the win with a one-out single to right in the bottom of the ninth, sending home senior Gavin Clark for the win. Stojanowski, who has shared playing time with sophomore Matt Boulanger at short this season, was humble after the win, citing the work ethic of his teammates as the afternoon's determining factor.

"I knew what I had to do and just looked for a pitch I could hit," Stojanowski said. "We play well under pressure, and when we get the opportunity to play at home, we aren't going to lose the chance to win some games. The pitching staff has been doing a good job as well; it's all coming together."

The Minutemen got on the board first, scoring one run in the bottom of the second to take the early 1-0 lead. Clark led off the inning with a walk, and stole second with junior Mike Kulak at the plate. Clark moved to third on a Stojanowski fly out to right, and scored with the next at bat, brought home off the bat of catcher Tom Ellerbrook, who singled to right.

The lead would be short lived, however, as the Huskies scored two runs in the top of the fourth to take a 2-1 advantage, a lead they would hold on to until the bottom of the eighth.

Former UMass outfielder Todd Korchin took first on an error and was pushed to second when junior Ben Beck singled to left. The pair was driven home three batters later, as catcher Tim Troville ripped a two RBI single into center.

UMass pitcher Anthony Gallo responded well to his starting role, allowing seven hits in his 4 2/3 innings of work, the majority of which were infield groundballs. The Minuteman infield turned in an uncharacteristic performance, however, committing four errors behind the freshman that translated into runs for the Huskies. Head coach Mike Stone addressed those defensive shortcomings, as well as the sluggish nature of the offense, which took nearly eight innings to pick up some steam.

"We were struggling all day to get runs – it just wasn't a sharp game," Stone said. "We turned things up a notch in the eight and ninth, though, and made things happen the way we usually do throughout the whole game. It was a struggle, from the opening at-bat until the end, but it was a good win."

Stone also complimented his bullpen, which has, particularly over the past few weeks, put this team in a position to win big games on a number of occasions.

"When [Hourigan] came in and shut them down and had command of all his pitches, that makes a difference," Stone said. "He got the job done, and it was nice to come back at the end and get the win. That's how you're supposed to do it."

After tacking on a single run in the bottom of the fifth, UMass made its move in the eighth, collecting three runs to knot the game at five. Clark and sophomore Tim Klett led off the inning with back-to-back singles, and took second and third respectively as Stojanowski dropped a sacrifice bunt. Ellerbrook singled to score Clark, and second baseman Sean Sarno took first in the next at bat after being hit by a pitch. Facing a one out, bases loaded situation, Connell Clark showed patience at the plate, drawing a walk to force home Klett and bring UMass to within one.

Following a brief dispute over a Jeff Altieri check swing that resulted in Stone being ejected, Altieri took a high pitch to the body, forcing in Stojanowski to even things up at five.

Hourigan tossed a 1-2-3 top of the ninth, putting UMass in a position to steal the victory. Gavin Clark led things off by drawing his third walk of the afternoon, and took second on a Klett sacrifice bunt, setting up Stojanowski. With one out, the shortstop drilled a single to right, bringing home Clark and delivering UMass the win, their fourth in a row and seventh of their last ten.

"[Stojanowski] is a mentally tough kid, he doesn't play like a freshman," Stone said. "He was in a situation to win us the ballgame, and he did, so it was nice."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

There was plenty to celebrate after the Maroon and White's 6-5 triumph over Northeastern. The win over the regional foe brought the Minutemen to 12-12, their first time at .500 this season.

Skeffington keys triumph in pinch-coaching debut

Last week in a game against Sacred Heart, former Massachusetts shortstop Seth Kaplan made his return to Amherst as an assistant coach. Yesterday another previous Minuteman middle infielder made his coaching debut.

Although Shaun Skeffington has been an assistant under coach Mike Stone for the entire season, he had to step up his role as Stone was thrown out for arguing whether an attempt by Jeff Altieri was a swing. The call went in favor of Northeastern and Stone's subsequent descent toward the base umpire resulted in his ejection.

Just as they have all season, the comeback kids went to the well again – and responded. At the time of the ejection, the Maroon and White had the bases loaded and trailed by a single run, 5-4. The call on Altieri proved irrelevant as relief pitcher Matt Pileski's next pitch struck the sophomore in the back to force in the tying run.

Skeffington's role as first base coach was then changed to third when it mattered most – in the ninth inning. It was doubly important, as he would be called upon to make the most substantial decision of the game in the bottom of the ninth.

Now the stage was set for Skeffington to have his day in the sun again in a UMass uniform, albeit in a different function.

After Gavin Clark walked for

Turn to SKEFFINGTON, page 11

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Shaun Skeffington waved home the winning run in his coaching debut after coach Mike Stone was ejected after arguing a call.

■ Skeffington

continued from page 10

the third time on the afternoon and Tim Klett laid down a sacrifice bunt. Adam Stojanowski stepped to the plate.

With Clark on second, the freshman slapped a single to right field.

"I couldn't really see [Stojanowski's at bat]," Stone said. "It might have been a breaking ball, but where I was [outside the field of play] I couldn't see."

Without hesitation, the right arm of Skeffington moved in a circle to signify that he wanted Clark to attempt to score the game-winning run.

As the ball rolled into right field, former Minuteman Todd Korchin retrieved it. The senior took a crowhop and fired toward home plate.

The throw was right on line, but the play was going to be close as Clark had his eyes set on the prize – a win.

Korchin's throw was cut off by first baseman Coley O'Donnell. By this point Skeffington looked as if he was reliving his days on Earl Lorden Field, as he trailed his former teammate by only a few steps.

The relay to the plate was perfect, and catcher Tim Troville applied the tag a sliding Clark.

Through a cloud of dirt the home plate umpire's arms went perpendicular to his body – Clark had scored.

The senior was mobbed by the rest of the UMass squad, but what went unnoticed was what Skeffington did – gave his team an opportunity to win.

Usually late in games with less than two outs, trying to score from second on a single is put into question. Sending Clark might have been risky, as due up next was Tom Ellerbrook.

It was risky as Ellerbrook was three-for-three with a double and had knocked in two runs – but Skeffington did not forge the sophomore catcher an opportunity to win the game – he did what he did as a player: he took a chance.

This chance as well as many others that the Fall River native took over his four-plus years in Amherst paid off. It takes guts when you are given an opportunity such as this, but the first-year assistant already proved that he had those after coming back from a career-threatening injury in his junior campaign when he fractured the distal radius in his non-throwing arm.

This chance to make the most critical decision in a game should not be the last as Skeffington has all the tools to have a bright future in the coaching ranks.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Women's lax hosts Danes in non-conference game

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

These are the games that the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has to win.

With a 3-8 (2-2 Atlantic 10) record, UMass' young and inexperienced squad has been struggling for most of the year, but has also shown moments when it appears to be head shoulders above most of the competition.

This was especially shown last weekend, when the Maroon and White displayed flashes of brilliance against Duquesne and St. Bonaventure, while at other times, it had periods of ineptitude.

"In spurts of about 10 minutes, we go on scoring rampages where we have great offense and great traps," freshman attacker Angela McMahon said. "But in the next 10 minutes, we might only take one shot and not get any good looks. We need to become more consistent."

When Albany comes to town for today's 4 p.m. clash on Totman Field, the Minutewomen know that if they play their best, then the Great Danes should get walked right off the field. However, because of its inconsistencies, it will be which UMass team that shows up for the majority of the game that will be deciding the contest.

"We are coming off two tough games this past weekend," McMahon said. "But we have a positive attitude, and every single person on the team said that they want to win this game. Going in with this winning attitude should help us a lot."

So far, Albany has compiled a 5-6 record, most recently being ousted by Sacred Heart 13-7 two days ago. Despite the fact that they have a better record than the Minutewomen, the Great Danes have fared worse against the two squads that both teams matched up against earlier in the year, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Against the Catamounts, the Maroon and White crushed the competition 18-2, while the Great Danes struggled to a 13-11 win, and versus UNH, Massachusetts fell by only two scores while Albany lost by 12.

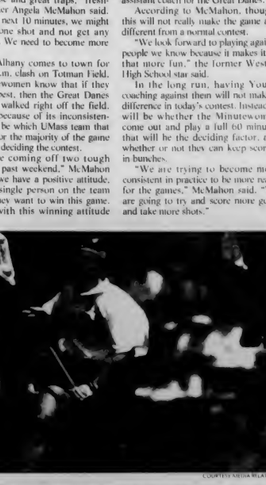
An interesting side note in today's contest will be that last season's UMass superstar, Lynne Young, will be patrolling the opposing sidelines as an assistant coach for the Great Danes.

According to McMahon, though, this will not really make the game any different from a normal contest.

"We look forward to playing against people we know because it makes it all that more fun," the former Weston High School star said.

In the long run, having Young coaching against them will not make a difference in today's contest. Instead, it will be whether the Minutewomen come out and play a full 60 minutes that will be the deciding factor, and whether or not they can keep scoring in bunches.

"We are trying to become more consistent in practice to be more ready for the games," McMahon said. "We are going to try and score more goals and take more shots."



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Kara DePaula hopes to help the women's lacrosse team gain some consistency as they play host to Albany today.

Softball looks for 21st

Minutewomen face Harvard in quest to keep streak alive

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

For one April afternoon, opposites will truly attract.

This afternoon's doubleheader at the UMass Softball Complex will be a date for a couple teams in very different situations going in polar opposite directions.

The No. 23 Massachusetts softball team (26-9 overall, 12-0 A-10) has been literally unbeatable for 20 games while its opponent, the Harvard Crimson (14-16, 5-3 Ivy), has split its last 16 games.

As dominating as coach Elaine Sortino's squad has been, there is anything but a feeling of complacency inside the dugout. A team meeting Wednesday afternoon helped remind the Minutewomen of their ability to perform even better.

"We really haven't been playing as well as we could be," freshman catcher Jamie Cahalan said. "We aren't playing like ourselves. We haven't been taking it to the teams lately; they've been coming at us. [Thursday's] games will be different."

After a disappointing 2-2 weekend at home against conference foes Columbia and Cornell, Harvard, the defending Ivy League Champions, needs losses by both Dartmouth and Cornell to get back into the hunt for a repeat championship.

Meanwhile, the Minutewomen's undefeated league play has granted them sole control of their own destiny in the race to first place in the Atlantic 10. UMass holds a four game lead over Dayton for first place and will take on the Flyers this weekend.

Don't expect the Maroon and White to be looking past the Crimson, however.

"Whoever is across the field, we are going to beat," Cahalan said. "It doesn't matter if it is a league game or not."

The Minutewomen are coming off an Easter weekend that saw them sweep two conference rivals, Temple and St. Joseph's. Sophomore shortstop Emily Robustelli was nasty at the plate, smacking three triples in six games, while the back-to-back punch of junior classmates first baseman Brandi Cross and third baseman Cherra "Scooter" Wheeler, continued to give opposing pitchers fits.

Junior hurler Jen Hadley posted wins in four of the team's six victories. The Bristol, Conn. native dominated the competition all weekend, striking out 19 batters en route to being named A-10 Pitcher of the Week for the second time this season.

The right-hander combined with senior Carrie Jeffries and sophomore Kaila Holtz to hold Easter weekend's opposition to just over two runs a game. In total, UMass outscored its opponents 35-14 over the six games.

Not that Harvard is any slouch in accruing individual awards. Crimson players were named the last two Ivy League Players of the Week. Senior hurler Chelsea Thoke is the reigning award winner and has appeared in 21 games this season.

The Crimson ace has compiled a 7-4 record while tossing six complete games. Thoke has an impressive 1.84 ERA and has struck out 84 batters in 76 innings. The right-hander reached the 500 strikeout milestone for her career this week end.

Harvard's top power hitter, Sarah Koppel, won the award the week before. The junior is just two home runs shy of the team record set in 1998, with eight. She has also posted a .356 batting average, good for second on the team.

None of this shakes the poise of the Maroon and White's young backstop, however.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Anna Perey and her teammates will host Harvard in a doubleheader today, as they try to win their 21st game in a row.

"We have a lot of confidence and we play knowing we are going to win each game," Cahalan said.

Harvard has not played a game since Saturday, in which time UMass has swept through four match-ups. While the Crimson may be well rested, Cahalan believes that more games make for a more solid team.

"I think over this long stretch of games we have had, we have just kept getting better and better," she said. "Having [Wednesday] off is nice, though."

The day off was especially vital considering the flu bug's recent presence in the Minutewomen's locker room.

"Something is getting passed around the team," said Cahalan after a couple of hearty coughs.

While the Massachusetts softball team's lax of rest may have come on a Wednesday instead of the usual Sunday, the team is ready and willing to put its 16 game home winning streak on the line at 3 p.m. and aren't planning on taking any prisoners.

"I feel bad for Harvard, I really do," Cahalan added.

No more shower sandals
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT•
Lincoln Real Estate
253-7879
Come check us out at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
liquor • beer • wine • lottery • phonecards • cigarettes
Pabst, Case 24 ..... $9.99+ dep.
Buzzard Bay Sampler, 6 pack ..... $5.99 + dep
Grolsch, 12 pack ..... $10.99 + dep.
Honey Brown, 12 pack ..... $7.99 + dep.
Napa Ridge Cab/Sauv. 750 ..... $9.99
Blackston Merlot 750 ..... $9.99
Columbia Crest Merlot/Cabiso $6.99
Sutter Home White Zin Case of 3 ..... $11.00
Mondavi Coastal Piont Noir 750 ..... $9.99
Rubinoff Vodka 1.75 ..... $9.99
Bacardi Light 1.75 ..... $16.99
Fighting Cock Bourbon 1liter $14.99
Crown Royal 750 ..... $19.99
visit our international beer center!

Thai Corner "Home Style Thai Food"
ไทยคอนเนอร์
Serving Lunch From 11:30-3:00
Monday- Saturday
Take-Out Available
• Curry Dishes
• Stir Fried
• Soups
• Salads
• Noodles
31 Boltwood Walk, Amherst MA 253-1639
located down the alley from Antonio's Pizza
Hours: Sun 5-9, Mon-Wed 11:30-9, Thurs-Sat 11:30-10

Sponsored by the Amherst Health Department
The only thing smokin' in Amherst is the atmosphere!
✸ See what you eat!
✸ See what you drink!
✸ See the entertainment!
You Are Here UMASS — See You There — DOWNTOWN AMHERST
North Pleasant
Experience Downtown Amherst and its Smoke-Free Establishments

Travel europe for as little as $279
• Europe's Best Travel Network
• Exclusively For Independent Travelers
• 14 Countries & 70 Cities, Towns & Villages
• Door to Door Hostel Booking and Drop Off Service
• Flexible Travel Pass
• Safe, Comfortable, Air-Conditioned & Smoke Free Coaches
• Fun, Informative On-Board Reps
For a FREE brochure and booking information visit your local Student Travel office
www.busabout.com
BUSABOUT Europe
Take control of your own adventure

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration – 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room
(43 Amity St – downtown Amherst)
MERCYhouse — It's a church! www.knowmercy.org

The Ultimate Graduation Gift
Say goodbye to student loan debt.
Sign up today! It's FREE! Win $500!
GradFree.com
A student loan "gift registry"
Let the people who care about you lighten the load.

IDEAL MOVERS & STORAGE
Come be a part of a team dedicated to providing excellent service to the Pioneer Valley and beyond.
•Excellent Starting Pay
•Raises based on Performance
•Get Paid to get in Shape
•Learn usefull skills
•Fun Environment
•Potential to earn over $4,000 during summer
•Potential for Tips
•Flexible Hours
Call 584-4746
IDEAL MOVERS & STORAGE
584-4746
"Our Service Will Move You"

tonight
McMurphy's
Smirnoff ice
promo night
9PM-10:30PM
Prizes and T-shirts

Commuter Students!
On behalf of the Commuter Area Government, you are entitled to materials or a workshop FOR FREE!
Be one of the first 75 commuter students to stop by The Craft Center in the Student Union and tell them you are a commuter student and you will receive up to $10 worth of free materials or a free instructional workshop.
Between now and April 22
Don't Miss Out!!!
Craft Center Hours: TUE,WED,THUR 11-5 FRI 11-6 SAT & SUN 1-6

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$200 Worth of Grocery Certificates toward groceries of your choice only $20, great Mother's Day gift. Mocha Emporium Hampshire Mall 587-9882

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Summer Sublet Fall Option. 1 bedroom on bus route. Call 665-6799

Take over our lease or summer sublet starting June 1. 2 bedroom apartment in Brandywine. Call 549-4483

Take over our lease - Large 2 bedroom available June 1. heat & water. Call 256-2194

Summer Sublet June-Aug. 2 bedroom near Mike's Billiards on Rt. 9. 253-6731

Two Bedrooms third floor Brandywine Apartments furnished with balacony June 1st to August 31st 549-4110

Female Wanted to share apt. @ Brandywine. ASAP 549-7279

Take over my lease. 1 bedroom in Puffton! Call 617-899-6606 Starting June 1.

Sleep in my Bed! $875 2 bedroom Brandywine available June 1 option for fall. 549-4888

2 Bedroom Apt. starting June 1st. Great location w/living room/bedroom furniture for sale. In excellent condition/cheap. Call 549-0453 ASAP

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Amherst Center 1,2 and 3 bedroom apartments. Gas heat, hardwood floors. Feb. showings for June and Sept, No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Condos 3 bedrooms. Gas heat, hardwood floors, study area in basement. On bus route. Feb showings for June and Sept. No fees. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. 2 bed. apt. available now. 1&2 bed apts. 1 yr leases beginning June, July, Aug. & Sept. 1/2 mile from campus. Don't miss out! www.brandywine-apts.com or 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

94 Toyota Camry Wagon 120000 runs good/needs some work. $4995. 413-549-1371

CHILDCARE

Get paid to have fun this summer taking care of 2 boys in Shutesbury. $8 per hr. 30hrs per week. Transportation, references required. 259-1118

EMPLOYMENT

Attention: Work from home using your computer. $1500/month - part-time $5000 - full-time. Free booklet. 800-742-5409

Lifeguards needed - Brandywine Apts. needs 2 full-time certified lifguards for the summer. Call 549-0600 or stop by.

Attention International Company needs help part-time, full-time. 1-800-723-2896

EMPLOYMENT

Receptionists Local Hadley office seeking several receptionists 20-30hrs/week. No experience necessary. Must enjoy people. Call now 1-800-688-7705 ext. 4857

Lifeguards Amherst apartment complex looking for swimming pool lifeguards. Must be 18yrs of age and have all certification papers. E.O.E apply at Rolling Green Apartments 253-3000

Synthetic Chemist Bachelors level chemist with 1-5 years experience in organic synthesis. Bench scale to 100 liter scale up. Ability to handle air and moisture sensitive compounds a plus. Send resume to: Oryza Laboratories, Inc., 200 Turnpike Road, Chelmsford, MA 01824

CAMP CANADENSIS, Pocono Mountains, PA. (2 hours form New York and Philadelphia), Premier residential coed summer camp. We are looking for an energetic, qualified and caring staff to teach all general athletics, WSI, waterfront activities, scuba, tennis, mountain bikes, golf, motorcycles, outdoor adventure, ropes, archery, gymnastics, fishing, arts and crafts, cooking and much more! Excellent facilities and great salary! 6/20-8/17. Call (800) 832-8228 or apply online: www.canadensis.com

Experienced Staff Needed: day and night shifts available for wait staff and bar staff. Night shifts available for door personel. Immediate openings. Must be here for the summer. Apply at Amherst Brewing Co.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA
The Resort at Glacier St. Mary Lodge
Be a part of the team!
Limited number of positions left!
For more informaiton call:
1-800-368-3689
Apply Online Today @
www.glacierparkjobs.com

TOP BOYS SPORTS CAMP IN MAINE! PLAY & COACH SPORTS - HAVE FUN - MAKE $$ CAMP COBBDSSEE - Positions available in: ALL TEAM & INDIVIDUAL SPORTS, ALL WATER SPORTS, PLUS: Camping & hiking, Ropes & Rock Climbing, Ice Hockey, Roller Hockey, Arts & Crafts, Martial Arts. Top Salaries, Excellent Facilities, FREE ROOM, BDARD, LAUNDRY. Travel Allowance. www.campcobbossee.com ON LINE APPLICATION or call: (800) 473-6104

Counselors Wanted Coed Jewish overnight camp in Maine offers competitive salary plus room and board. All positions available! For more information, contact Ava or Meridith at 617-244-5124 or via email at info@kingswood.org

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

EXCITING SALES OPPORTUNITY Professional organization needs success-driven individuals for sales careers. All leads provided, flexible hours. Average 1st yr earnings of $65K, generous commissions & bonuses! A fun and exciting work environment. Send resume to: 228 Main Street, #423, Williamstown, MA 01267, an EOE

Make enough money to take the summer off. Have you had experience driving trucks. No special license required. Make $125-$155 per day for approximately 14 days in June and 12 days in Aug. One or both sessions available. Call 1-888-949-5089

Last Chance Legal Assistents. April 24, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Fall, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Absolutely Free Info. Earn on line income. $500-$5000/month. www.wantnetwealth.com

Legal Assistents Wanted Fall 2001 Internships with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

ROOM FOR RENT

2 Females looking for 3rd roommate in the Boulders starting June 1st. Call 253-7919 ask for Molly

Summer Sublet/Fall Option 2 bdrm available in 4 bdrm house. Leverett call 548-4999

ROOM WANTED

I need a plece to share w/others or rent alone for FALL semester only. Call 256-0087 ask for Alison

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. for summer sublet. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

Two people to share large room, Nutting Ave attic apartment. $260/month. 1st, last & security. Starting June 1st. Josh 549-5154

Looking for 1 or 2 Femeles to live at Mill Valley. Please call 546-6613 ask for Tracie

Summer Sublet Needed! 2bdrm apartment in Boulders. Some furniture available. $785/mo. Call 256-8012

Summer Sublet w/ lease option. 2bdr apartment in Brandywine. Available June 1. Call 548-6819

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Bedroom Available in 3bdr Puffton. Move in after finals. Cheap Cheap Rent! Call 549-8517

Two fun girls looking to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine. Call Kathyleen 546-5948 or Laura 546-5525

Looking for 1 or 2 people, male or female to share 2 bedroom apt. in Brandywine starting June 1st. Email: pa5tricia@hotmail.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

2 Bedroom Apt. in Boulders. Price negotiable. Summer Sublet 253-6917

Starting June 1. 2 bedroom $785/month. All utilities included. Call (413) 665-8102

Brandywine Room For Rent Rent neg. Starts June 1st. Call Sheri 549-4275

2 Bdrm in Puffton. Available 6/1 or earlier if needed. Call for more info. 549-2824

Furnished Apt in Brandywine. 2 bedroom available June 1. Call 549-7259

Newly Renovated Puffton! Avail. ASAP-August. Call Judy at 549-4017

1 Bedroom Available in 2 bdr. Brandywine Apt. Starting June 1st. Call for info. 549-1988 CHEAP!!

SUMMER SUBLET

Summer Sublet w/ lease option in Puffton Apartments. Room 2 to 3 people. Call 549-4706

Summer Sublet Puffton 3 bed. 2 bath heat/water inc. available June 1. Incentive offered. Call 549-5177

2 Bedroom 1 1/2 bathrooms fully furnished (TV, stereo, satellite, BBQ) Great location to compus. Front porch and backyard, parking available , washer + dryer. Call Dave 549-5893

Summer Sublet with fall option. Beginning June 1st. 2 bedroom apt at Colonial Village. Call 253-3199

TICKETS FOR SALE

Dave Matthews Bend Tickets for sale. 3 seats in Sec. 112 $300 for all 3 or best offer. Call 549-2833

TRAVEL

FLY 4STANDBY...FLY 4 CHEAP! Europe $169 o/w (+tx) Lon, Fra, Mad, Ams, Par, & more 4STANDBY.COM or 800-326-2009

Need to Advertise?

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

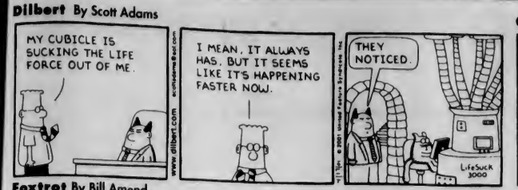
HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

8 HSCN Bulletin Board
9 CBS-3 Hartford
10 CBS-3 Boston
11 ABC-40 Springfield
12 NBC-30 Springfield
13 HSCN Movie Channel
14 UPN-20 Hartford
15 HSCN New Movie Channel
16 NBC-30 New Britain
17 Fox-61 Hartford
18 UPN-24 Hartford
19 NBC-30 Springfield
20 International Channel
21 CNN/TV Academic Channel
22 WB-56 New Haven
23 ESPN
24 ESPN2
25 Fox TV Boston Channel
26 Weather Channel
27 Dave's TV Channel
28 C-Span
29 CNN
30 CNN Headline News
31 Lifetime
32 USA
33 TBS
34 TNT
35 Nickelodeon
36 Discovery
37 Nesn
38 Cartoon Network
39 Nick at Nite
40 TV Land
41 Comedy Central
42 BET
43 Outdoors
44 Bloomberg Financial Network
45 College TV Network
46 MTV2
47 MTV
48 VH1
49 The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — APRIL 19, 2001

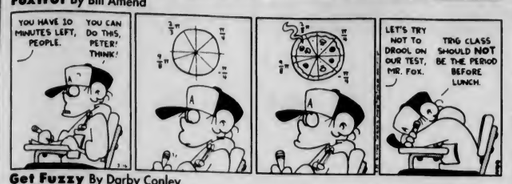
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH (2)	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		★★★★ "Schindler's List" (1993, Drama) Liam Neeson, Ben Kingsley (In Stereo)						Sculpture
WFSB (3)	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Invstgtn.		48 Hours "Sleep Tight" (N) (R)		News (N)	Late Show (R)
WBZ (4)	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor-Aust. Outback		CSI: Crime Scene Invstgtn.		48 Hours "Sleep Tight" (N) (R)		News (N)	Late Show (R)
WCVB (5)	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (R)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (R)		News (N)	Nightline (R)
WLVI (6)		Fresh Prince	Sabrina-Witch	Friends (R)	Nanny (R)	Gilmore Girls (In Stereo) (R)		Charmed "Sin Francisco" (N) (R)		News (R)		Friends (R)	Sudden Susan
WHDH (7)		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Friends (N) (R)	Weber (N) (R)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "April Showers" (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven (R)		Blind Date	Blind Date	Gilmore Girls (In Stereo) (R)		Charmed "Sin Francisco" (N) (R)		News	Charge-Heart	Street Smarts	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (R)	Hollywood	Friends (N) (R)	Weber (N) (R)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "April Showers" (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC (8)	11	Simpsons (R)	Frasier (R)	Seinfeld (R)	Friends (R)	★★★ "Set It Off" (1996, Drama)		Jada Pinkett. (In Stereo) (R)		News		Friends (R)	Frasier (R)
WWLP (9)	22	News (R)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Friends (N) (R)	Weber (N) (R)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "April Showers" (In Stereo)		News (R)	Tonight Show
WGBY (11)	6	General Auction						General Auction Continues
WGGB (12)	20	News (R)	ABC News	Spin City (R)	Frasier (R)	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N) (R)		News (R)	Nightline (R)
WSBK (1)		Judge Judy (R)	Judge Judy (R)	Frasier (R)	Frasier (R)	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo) (R)				Ent. Tonight	Arrest & Trial	Arrest & Trial	Mad Abt. You
WTBS (72)		Roseanne (R)	Roseanne (R)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★½ "The Running Man" (1987, Science Fiction) Arnold Schwarzenegger						★½ "A Low Down Dirty Shame" (1994, Comedy)
A&E (13)		Night Court	Newsradio (R)	Law & Order "Helpless" (R)		Biography: Genghis Khan		"Horatio Hornblower: Retribution" (2001, Adventure) Ioan Gruffudd				Law & Order "Performance" (R)
CNN (42)	23	Inside Politics	Moneyline Newshour (N) (R)		Crossfire (R)	Wolf Blitzer	The Point (R)	Larry King Live (R)		CNN Tonight	Spin Room (R)	Sports	Moneyline
COM (43)	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show (R)	★★★ "The Witches of Eastwick" (1987, Comedy) Jack Nicholson, Cher.					Sports Night	Sports Night	Daily Show (R)	Turn Ben
DISC (52)		Wild Discovery		Wild Discovery "Bear Attack"		Medical Mysteries: Giants		X-Creatures		Mysteries of the Unexplained		Justice Files "Why They Kill"
ESPN (26)		Sportscenter (R)		Drivers		Stanley Cup Playoffs. Conference Quarterfinals Game 5 — Teams to Be Announced. (Live) (R)					Baseball	Sportscenter (R)
LIFE (45)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Linda Evans"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Deceptions" (1990, Mystery) Harry Hamlin. (R)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV (53)		TRL All-Star	Downloaded	Warning Signs Cribs		TRL (In Stereo) (R)		Sex Club Preview (In Stereo)		Cribs (N)	Diary	True Life	MTV Moments
NICK (55)		Pinky & Brain	Caldog	Hey Arnold! (R)	Rugrats (R)	Thornberrys	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company	All In Family	All In Family
SCIFI (35)		Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.		Babylon 5 "The Long Dark" (R)		Crusade "Patterns of the Soul"		★★ "Hellbound: Hellraiser II" (1988, Horror) Clare Higgins (R)				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC (92)	28	Unusual People		Mazes & Labyrinths: Solving		Secrets of Forensic Science		Tornado Alley		Landslide (N)		Secrets of Forensic Science
TNT (54)		ER (In Stereo) (R)		Pretender "Jalapeños" (R)		"Nuremberg" (2000, Drama) Alec Baldwin (R)				"Nuremberg" (2000, Drama) Alec Baldwin (R)
USA (62)		Walker, Texas Ranger (R)		JAG "The Return" (In Stereo) (R)		Nash Bridges "Mystery Dance"		★★½ "Buried Alive" (1990, Suspense) Tim Matheson. (R)				Martin (R)
HBO (93)		★★☆ "Back to School" (1986) Rodney Dangerfield. PG-13				Real Sports (R)				★★½ "Light It Up" (1999) Usher Raymond, R (R)		Driven: First	G-String Divas
MAX (94)		(5:00)		★★☆ "Nixon" (1995, Drama) Anthony Hopkins, Joan Allen. (In Stereo) (R)								★★ "Extramarital" (1998) Traci Lords. (R)	Lake Placid
SHOW (95)		★★☆ "Star Trek: Insurrection" (1998) Patrick Stewart. PG (R)				★★ "Snow Day" (2000) Chris Elliott. PG			Extras-Croc			★★★½ "The Talented Mr. Ripley" (1999) Matt Damon. R (R)

Dilbert By Scott Adams



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



YOU HAVE 10 MINUTES LEFT, PEOPLE.
YOU CAN DO THIS, PETER! THINK!
LET'S TRY NOT TO DROOL ON OUR TEST, MR. FOX.
TRIG CLASS SHOULD NOT BE THE PERIOD BEFORE LUNCH.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I MUST KEEP IN MIND OUR COMPANY'S CORE VALUES OF TRUST, INTEGRITY AND TEAMWORK.
MAY I BORROW YOUR CHAIR?
OKAY
WHAT ARE YOU SELLING ON E-BAY?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I REMEMBER WHAT THIS TAPIOCA STUFF LOOKS LIKE! THE INSIDE OF THAT TAUNTAUN IN THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK AFTER IT WAS (CUT OPEN)
HA HA! YEAH! BIG. GOOEY. FAT CELLS!
PUSH

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Hey, Protester Pete. How's the angst business these days?
Bad... today I'm circulating a petition to save the llamas!
... We need a war.

Robotman By Jim Meddick

NO MATTER WHAT, YOU STILL INCOMPREHENSIBLE WARNING OUT AT AN EXHIBIT WITH SUCH AN UNFLATTERING PORTRAIT OF ME.
REALM... I'LL START IN PERFORMANCE PIECE SOON! AND EVERYONE WILL BE FOCUSED ON THAT.
HEY, THAT'S A PROP! THE SOONER IT STARTS, THE BETTER I'LL...
MY MANAGER IS WAITING SO I MUST OFFERING WOMEN TO COMPLIMENT FOR MY MISCHIEVIOUS!

Masked Dropout By Bob Hewitt

MASKED DROPOUT by Bob Hewitt
© 2001
MD, THAT GIRL KEEPS LOOKING OVER HERE!
IF YOU DON'T SAY SOMETHING TO HER I WILL!
COME ON!! DO YOU REALLY THINK A COCKROACH WITH A WITTY PICK-UP LINE IS GONNA GET LUCKY IN A CAMPUS BAR?!
2 MINUTES LATER...
DUMB QUESTION.

Quote of the Day

"So when ambition turns to competition
I'll never be the better man."

–Less Than Jake
Last Hour of the Last Day of Work

Horoscopes

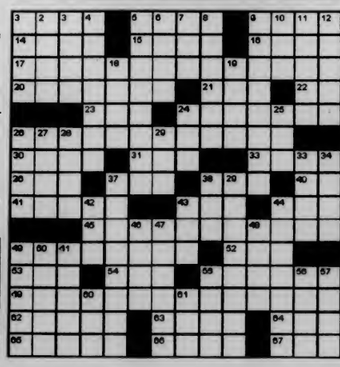
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You may be at the mercy of your own rather volatile emotions during the first part of the day. Concentrate on getting your job done, at any rate.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – The usual will take on some unusual aspects today – and vice versa. Be ready for an unexpected change to occur – with or without you.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Take care that you don't go around wounding other people's pride today – even unintentionally. Watch what you say and do at all times.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Where inspiration fails you today, you'll be able to come through, thanks to extra effort and the willingness to try again – and yet again.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You are feeling separate and aloof today, and someone you know well will work hard to get you to take part and open up with those in your circle.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may be more at risk today than you had supposed, and the proof will come when you least expect it – so you must, of course be prepared.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may have to work harder than usual today as an answer to a challenge that comes to you unexpectedly. Trust in experience to see you through.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You must work fast today in order to take full advantage of your own reserves of energy. One minor slip-up can threaten further progress.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You will be looking for something to make everything right today, but you may be distracted by someone who has a better idea.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Charm and tact can be combined today with remarkable results; take care, however, that you don't begin asking for more than you deserve.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Don't play games when the truth is at stake; be plain, honest and open about what you are feeling and thinking.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – If you're not going to take the lead today, you must be satisfied playing a supporting role. You can't have it both ways just now!

ACROSS
1 Shindig
5 Actress Guarino
9 Drive out of bed
14 The - legendary Fitzgerald
15 Sneaker problem
16 Bud Grace comic strip
17 From time to time
20 Short end of the stick
21 Quitters' gathering
22 "___ to Pieces"
23 Famous film computer
24 Chinese umbrella material
26 From time to time
30 Dig like a pig
31 "Runaround" hit
32 Winning
36 Kind of wrestling
37 Kind of promise
38 Filthy abode
40 Pitcher's stat
41 Hemsley with the hotels
43 McCartney title
44 Brownish songbird
45 From time to time
49 Red planeteers
52 Sputter and stall
53 Chicago to Washington dir.
54 Tax-form ID
56 High-dollar luxury car
59 From time to time
62 River embankment
63 Large land mass
64 Estuary in Bally-shannon
65 Curl up one's lip
66 Beckoned
67 Place for cowards?

DOWN
1 Happy-hour choice
2 Edison's middle name
3 Whole lot
4 Construction worker
5 "La Gioconda," familiarly
6 Object of blind devotion
7 Quarrel
8 Lawrence's land
9 Shuffle troops
10 Crumb
11 Not "with it"
12 Prolonged attack
13 Bocelli's pitch
18 Votes for
19 Actress Carter
24 Loneliest number
25 Nowster Rand
28 Spoken
27 Central part
28 Crooner Perry
29 Gone for the day
33 First name among the "Tootsies" cast
34 Pitcher Hershiser
35 Glauber's cutting
37 Countertop container
38 Sermon subject
39 Commerce imbalance
42 OR-
43 Bro counterpart
44 If or if not
46 Plastic alternative
47 Group of nine
48 Merlot or pinot
49 Whimpers
50 Drained of color
51 "Noises Off" actor
57 Fedora features
58 Capital of Belgium
59 Ironline river
60 Wedding-notice word
61 NATO member

PREVIOUS PUZZLE ANSWER

© 2001 Universal Press Syndicate
www.upspuzzles.com



MONKEY-BOX BY PBEJ

IN CART PRISON, FRATERNIZATION BETWEEN DELIQUENT CARTS AND GUARDS WAS OFFICIALLY FORBIDDEN. THAT DIDN'T STOP ROB AND SAL

© 2001

www.monkey-box.net

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 50 LOW: 29	HIGH: 58 LOW: 40	HIGH: 68 LOW: 48

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Teriyaki Beef

Jamaican 3-Bean Stew (vegan) (B, H, W)

Tofu with Snow Peas (vegan)

DINNER

TASTE OF UMASS

At Mullins Center

4:30 P.M. to 7:00 P.M.

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Shalini Mark
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	John Zawislak, Michele Meder

Coming Today!

UMASS

TASTE OF UMASS

FOOD ... B...ON 2001

Bigger and better than ever!

Thursday
April 19, 2001
4:30 pm to
7:00 pm
MULLINS
CENTER

Restaurants
Vendors
Prizes
Entertainment

Sponsored by:
Coca-Cola
THURSTON FOODS Inc.

Great Food, Great Fun!

Hosted by UMass Auxiliary Services

www.aux.umass.edu/diningservices

The New Year rocked the Middle East... 'nuff said!!!

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

UMass women's lacrosse blew out Albany yesterday... check out Sports for the unabridged version!

ARTS p. 6 SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVII Issue 120 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, April 20, 2001

Lecture commemorates Holocaust

By Erica Mattison
Collegian Staff

On Wednesday night, Professor James Young presented a lecture and slide show to an impressive crowd in commemoration of Holocaust Memorial Week.

Young is a Professor of English and Chair of the Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies. He began teaching at UMass in 1988. His goal for this memorial week is "to get people to ask themselves what is being remembered, how it is being remembered, and to what ends." He said that this week can make people aware of their capacity to rise up against injustice.

Young is an expert on Holocaust memorialization, despite the fact that he was born post-World War II. His books include The Texture of Memory and At Memory's Edge: After-Images of the Holocaust in Contemporary Art and Architecture. On the subject of the Berlin Holocaust memorial, Young has appeared on CBS, ABC, and CNN and has been interviewed many times on NPR's "All Things Considered" and "Morning Edition."

In his presentation, "After-Images of the Holocaust in Contemporary Art and Architecture," Young first talked about how his memory of the Holocaust was formed from a variety of sources: books, photographs, films, conversations with Holocaust survivors, and visits to memorials and museums. What we know about the Holocaust, he said, is dependent on the memories of others. "We cannot understand how history unfolded without understanding the unfolding of its representation," he said.

His talk focused on how the current generation remembers and represents the Holocaust, which it did not experience firsthand. Young discussed how individual cultures around the world have unique memories. "Everyplace [I went] I literally found a different Holocaust," commented Young.

The way Germany faces the Holocaust is especially complicated, said Young. While national pride is strong in Germany, many are conflicted by feelings of guilt and shame. The complex identity of Germans today carries over into the topic of building memorials. There has been a movement over the last few years to build a national memorial in Germany dedicated to the Holocaust.

In his slide presentation, Young displayed a variety of memorials around Germany. Many of them centered around the idea of absence – an underground, bookless library that is visible from street-level, representing the effects of the mass book-burning in 1938; a 12 meter tall, lead pillar on which people signed their names until it was lowered into the ground, leaving as "the memorial" just the people who had seen it. As demonstrated by the slide show, this type of symbolism is commonly used in Germany to memorialize the Holocaust.

Young noted that he is somewhat skeptical of memorials, because people look at them as solutions. There is a danger in memorials existing as "places where people go to forget, not to remember," said Young.

Despite his sentiments, Young accepted the offer to join the five-member Findungskommission responsible for choosing the design for Berlin's Holocaust memorial. An international competition was held in 1997 to

Turn to holocaust, page 3

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM / COLLEGIAN

Yahrtzeit candles were lit yesterday in remembrance of the Holocaust.

SGA looks to improve parking lots

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association (SGA) President John Sheehan has been working on one of the major campaign issues that got him elected. His constant battle to improve student parking on campus has landed him in what he considers a very good position.

According to Sheehan, he and Student Trustee John Laubinger have been working with Parking Services director Michael Brennan to instill a plan, effective for the fall 2001 semester, that will require students who purchase a purple lot sticker to choose the explicit residential area they live in. Instead of just entering an overall pool of applicants for a purple sticker, a number will specifically divide each lot, and there will be a new system of signing up.

"We'll have lot-specific parking next year in every area," Sheehan said. He explained that this would mean students would no longer feel the burden of desperately searching for a parking space. He also noted that a number of metered spaces would be added to the purple lots, allowing spaces for guests to park.

Sheehan said his desire to work with Parking Services came from his work in Orchard Hill area government. Students expressed a problem with parking in Orchard Hill last year, complaining of an over-crowded purple lot. To alleviate the problem, Sheehan (who was at the time Lieutenant Governor) and Governor Jefferson Smith worked with parking services to begin a lot specific plan. Orchard Hill purple lot became Lot 49. The color for the lot changed to orange. Besides changing the plan, they added an entire section of the parking lot, creating more spaces. "The main problem was that they lump-sold purple lot stickers," Sheehan said. "So Orchard Hill was changed to lot-specific and it worked."

Sheehan said that his desire to turn the Orchard Hill strategy campus wide was brought forth to Parking Services. "Michael [Brennan] was really receptive to it," he said.

One of the concerns that some students have faced in Orchard Hill after their new system was put in place was an abundance of parking spaces, possibly created by an under-sold lot. Sheehan said that Parking Services did sell all of the stickers and the lot is not undersold. What happened is that students brought their cars home and stopped parking there, creating a vast amount of extra spaces. "If that happens again, they'll periodically re-open the lots and sell more stickers," he said.

Sheehan also addressed a possible problem of having to prove to Parking Services that you live in a particular area. "If the whole system is implemented campus wide," he explained. "With addition of Peoplesoft which will be coming next year, parking services will be connected more to Housing that they have ever been in the past."

Sheehan is very happy about his and Laubinger's work with Parking Services and its Director. "We've got a very good working relationship [with Brennan] and are very confident that it will continue throughout," he said.

